"It required no extraordinary sagacity to perceive that you, in looking for the aid of Catholic bishops, sought not to support the Catholic religion, or to exalt its priesthood, but rather to buttress the tottering fabric of Protestant ascendancy. If you meant, as in policy as well as justice you should have done, to legislate on a principle of common fairness towards the Catholics, why not recognise in law those canonical rights and apostolical jurisdiction on which this penal law incontestably encroaches? Yet, with the attempt to injure and degrade, you, and a few hollow encomiasts, take credit to yourselves for acknowledging, for the first time, the rights and titles of the episcopacy in Ireland! Yes, you acknowledge to insult them; and even the honour you show has in it all the bitterness of scornful derision. How do you honour even those venerable prelates whom you have made members of your ministerial board? By giving them the titles of bishops, without sees, and emblazoning over their heads the sole and exclusively legitimate titles of others to the same sees which their sainted and heroic predecessors would never have consented to acknowledge. There cannot be two lawful bishops of the same see. The respective epithets of 'Catholic' and 'Protestant' might, if compromise could be at all admitted, mark the distinct sources of their apostolical or Parliamentary jurisdiction. But, instead of this, the Protestant prelates are blazoned forth as the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin, without any qualification, while, in insulting and subordinate contrast, the Catholic prelates are announced as archbishops of—nowhere. But you give them a precedence, a rank in society! Yes, you strip them of their rights, as far as in you lies. You amuse them with the shadow of ceremony, which is unmeaning but as far as it is significant of substantial rights and duties. And you humble them with the condescension of your insulting patronage, such as you would exhibit to some exiled and fallen dynasty, fixing on them more strongly the gaze of pity, by the mockery of a homage of which you disown the legitimate foundation. What would her Prime Minister think of the respect of any individual for Royalty who would allow Her Majesty the name of Queen, withholding her rightful titles of 'Great Britain and Ireland,' on which it is founded? Surely the recognition of her name could not disguise the want of fidelity necessarily included in any such omission of her rightful title. Of what inconsistency and confusion is not bigotry productive! You would fain confer on some of our bishops a Parliamentary jurisdiction which you are incompetent to give, and deprive others of their apostolical jurisdiction, which you are as incompetent to take away; and, by way of indemnifying the one for the indignity of master slaves, to which you labour to degrade them, you give them a ministerial licence of making a similar invasion on the apostolical rights of their brethren. You expect that they will do all this to prolong the existence of that anti-national and odious Establishment, some of whose prelates, their fellow-benchers, poured forth but the other day their usual contributions of orthodox hatred on the idolatry and tyranny of the Church of Rome."

He declares that the fear of a concordat with the Pope has blinded the people to the danger that is threatening them at home, and says, that instead of wasting their solicitude on distant and contingent dangers, they "should be alive to the imminent evils of the commission now established at home, and labour to close the breach which has been recently made in the bulwarks of its holy discipline." He concludes by calling upon Sir R. Peel to let his first recommendation to Parliament be the repeal of the Bequests Act.—A letter has also been published by Dr. Higgins, Catholic Bishop of Ardagh, in which he declines the honour suggested by the Pilot, to the effect that he should accompany the lay deputation to Rome. Bishop Higgins states, that if an episcopal deputation be sent out, it should by no means be confined to one bishop; and after some severe observations on the English Catholics at Rome, he says—"It is somewhat consoling, however, to reflect that with all their combined and wicked efforts, they have been able to extort nothing from Rome save the very harmless rescript. We receive that document with the profoundest respect, as coming from the Propaganda with the consent of our venerated Holy Father; but, being purely hypothetical, it leaves matters precisely as they stood before, and gives us, moreover, the benefit of knowing that intrigue and misrepresentation were the only difficulties we had to encounter at the Court of Rome. These difficulties can, as a mere matter of course, be most easily removed, by making his Holiness acquainted with the real conduct and condition of the clergy and people of Ireland, and leaving him to deal with our profligate slanderers as his own wisdom may suggest."—Another Catholic bishop, Dr. Kennedy, who was one of the first prelates who accepted office under the Bequests Act, but subsequently resigned, has published a letter on the subject of the prevailing differences. Bishop Kennedy admits that there are great defects in the Act, but shows that the people are in error on many points, and that the Act has by no means made the condition of the regular clergy worse than it was before.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday. Mr. Kelly, M.P., took the chair, and addressed the meeting at some length. He called the attention of the meeting to the exertions and sacrifices made by the leading members of the Association in the cause of Repeal, without any other hope of reward but that of seeing their country's independence established, and its industrious resources developed; denounced the Riband system, and expressed a belief that the spread of outrage and illegal combination might be traced to the dismissal by the Lord Chancellor of those magistrates upon whom the people were accustomed to rely as impartial dispensers of justice. Mr. Somers, M.P., handed in his subscription, together with that of Mr. M'Ternan, whom he described as an extensive landed proprietor in the county of Leitrim, and a recent convert from Federalism to simple Repeal. Mr. O'Connell seconded the motion for his admission as a member of the Association, and took occasion to observe that the feeling in favour of simple Repeal over Federalism was rapidly gaining ground, for people now saw that Federalism, instead of lessening, would increase the impediments to Repeal. Let them get Repeal first and they would think of Federalism after. The hon. gentleman then handed in various sums of money, including 1*l.* from a Catholic priest, who asked permission of his revered Liberator to call him Defender of the Faith. Mr. Grattan, M.P., addressed the meeting for an hour. In the course of his remarks, which were principally directed against the Union, and the payment of clergymen unless by those who believed in the doctrines they taught, he declared it to be his opinion that he ought not to go to Parliament, as he saw no use in attending the British House of Commons from the 4th February to the 6th August, merely for the purpose of assisting to pass an Arms Bill for Ireland. Mr. O'Connell next addressed the meeting. He began by apologising for not being prepared with the report of the Parliamentary committee on the question of whether the Irish Repeal members ought to attend in Parliament during the coming session. The question, must, therefore, remain in abeyance for another week. He then proceeded to develope the general principle which he has so often laid down, that nothing could be expected by Ireland from the British Parliament; that no Parliament in which Englishmen predominated would legislate properly for the Irish, to whom they would only fling the offal, while they secured the carcass for themselves. He then declaimed against the state prosecutions, alleging that there was no more legal authority for his imprisonment than if it had been discovered that he was not at all the person whom the Government wished to imprison. The Morning Chronicle of Saturday contained a strong, but not perfect, reason why the Irish members ought to take their seats in the House of Commons. If they did so, argued that paper, and successfully called for an inquiry into the enormous state trial, with all its iniquity, they would obtain a triumph over the Irish Government, and open a prospect of getting some of the parties who figured in that trial impeached and punished; while, on the other hand, if refused such an inquiry, they would carry back with them to Ireland an additional argument for Repeal of the Union. His answer to that was, that they were sure to fail; and that if the Chronicle and its Whig party thought the experiment a good one, they could make it as well in the absence as in the presence of the Irish members. In the same article, the same journal, in calling on the Irish members to go to London, said that it was absurd for them to expect a Repeal of the Union. Now, he thought the absurdity was all the other way. It was really absurd to suppose that the people of Ireland would ever cease agitating until they obtained Repeal. Indeed, a more degraded set of miscreants never debased a nation than the Irish people ought to be considered, if they ever relaxed until the legislative independence of their country was restored. Mr. O'Connell touched upon no other topic, and concluded by moving that the parliamentary committee be empowered to sit for another week to prepare the report already alluded to. The motion was agreed to, and the rent for the week announced to be 257*l.*

Law.

Court of Queen's Bench—(Sittings in Banco.)—The Baron de Bode v. The Queen.—This was a case in which the Baron de Bode appeared as a suppliant in a writ of right, and claimed to receive from the Crown a large sum of money paid to the Crown under the treaties of Paris, concluded in 1815, as compensation to British subjects whose estates had been forfeited by the authorities of France at the period of the French Revolution. There were several pleas denying the right of the Baron, and others alleging that the right, whatever it was, had not accrued within the reign of Her present Majesty. The case was tried in June last, when the jury gave a verdict for the suppliant upon the questions of his right to claim as a British subject upon his possession of an estate in Alsace at the moment of the Revolution, upon its confiscation by the Government, and upon the payment, under the treaties of 1814 and 1815, of the stipulated indemnity. The damages were assessed at 354,266*l.*, with interest. The verdict was for the Crown on two issues, namely, that the cause of action did not arise within six years, and that it did not arise during Her Majesty's reign. The cross rules had been obtained, one by the Crown, and the other by the Baron, each praying to enter judgment, notwithstanding the verdict on certain issues for the other side. Mr. M. D. Hill, Mr. Sergeant Manning, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Young, and Mr. Anstey appeared for Baron de Bode; the Solicitor-General, Mr. Kelly, and Mr. Waddington for the Crown.—Mr. Hill appeared to show cause against the rule obtained by the Solicitor-General. It was very difficult to deal with such a rule, for it seemed that it sought to enter the judgment of the Crown on the part of the issue. The suppliant prayed that the judgment should be for him on the whole record, and consequently on this issue as part of that record. He should now relate the course of the proceeding. In 1839 this petition of right was presented, and was put under the consideration of the Lord Chancellor. The suppliant moved in the Court of Chancery for a commission, a motion which was opposed by the then Attorney-General, who asked for a summary judgment. The Lord Chancellor thought the matter one of difficulty, and directed a search among the precedents. Twelve months afterwards he delivered judgment in favour of a commission, as he found in every one case that such a course had been pursued. The commission issued, an inquisition was taken upon it. The Jury found all the facts alleged to be true. The state of things at that time was this:—That the Crown, without admitting one of those facts, might then have raised the very question now raised. This course had been pursued in Lord Canterbury's case. The Lord Chancellor did in that case give judgment that the petition of right did not lie. The same course might have been pursued here. It was monstrous that the Crown, after this lapse of years, should now have put the suppliant to this expense and this trouble, and should now, for the first time, raise the question that might have been decided at an earlier period; and the more so, as the Crown did not at the trial dispute one of those facts, or at least did not call one witness. It would not, of course, be asserted, that a writ of right did not lie but for land. There could be no reason whatever to say, that there was no remedy against the Crown for unliquidated damages. There were numerous authorities the other way, the chief of which was, the bankers' case, in 14 Howell, State Trials, when judgment was given against Charles II., and an Act of Parliament was passed to provide the money to satisfy that judgment. The principle was clear, and the circumstances of the case were not such as to deprive the suppliant of his rights. It was said that the 59th Geo. III., c. 31, was an answer to the claim. He denied it, but if that opinion was sincerely entertained by the advisers of the Crown, why, he must repeat, had not the same course been pursued by them in this case as in that of Lord Canterbury? Why had not the whole question of the legal title of the Baron been raised and decided in the year 1839? But even supposing the Legislature had made certain encroachments, founded avowedly upon certain recitals of fact which were untrue, the Parliament and the subject were not bound thereby. There was a case in Plowden's Reports which was to that effect. He denied that the Crown could get rid of its duties by simply assigning its assent to an Act of Parliament to get rid of them, especially if that Act of Parliament was founded upon error of fact. Such an Act would not be a law but an abuse. There could be no doubt that the Baron de Bode was a British born subject. He would be entitled to sit in Parliament. His property had been unduly confiscated, and the compensation for it had been duly paid. Why was it now withheld from him? It was withheld because the Crown was powerful, and he was weak. The proceeding was little creditable to the Crown.—The Solicitor-General, in support of the rule, thought that this case ought not to be treated as a matter of feeling, but of law. He denied that the Baron de Bode had in law made out his title to maintain his demands. This claim appeared to be wholly without foundation. The first question for the Court to decide was, whether this was a case in which a petition of right could at all lie. By two treaties of 1814 and 1818, a sum of money was paid by the Government of France to the Government of England, for the purpose of satisfying claims for property of British subjects unduly confiscated during the French Revolution. The Act 59th G. III. was passed to declare the mode in which the money should be distributed. The 16th section of that Act declared, that after the distribution made, as thereby directed, the surplus, if any, should be paid over to the commissioners of the Treasury. If the Baron was a British subject, he was bound by that Act, and could not sue for any portion of a sum of money, which, under the orders of the commissioners, had been paid over to the Lords of the Treasury. How, then, could he maintain the petition of right? Besides, a petition of right was a remedy against the Crown; but it was doubtful whether it would be for a specific chattel in the possession of the Crown. It certainly did not lie for unliquidated damages. There was, therefore, no pretence for saying that such a petition as this was maintainable against the Crown for a mere debt. Nearly all the authorities were collected in the banker's case, 14 Howell's State Trials. There Charles II. had given certain bankers a charge upon the revenues of the Crown for moneys received from them, by which he was enabled to maintain the Dutch war without going to Parliament. He then closed the Exchequer, after having got one million of money. Proceedings were taken on this, and the King granted letters patent to the claimants to secure the arrears. After the Revolution, the holders of these letters patent applied, not by petition of right to the King, but to the Exchequer, to direct the moneys appropriated to be paid over to them. The Exchequer thought the application ought to be granted. A writ of error was brought, and then Lord Somes delivered that elaborate judgment in which he overruled the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber. His judgment, however, was afterwards overruled in the House of Lords. The banker's case was not a petition of right at all, nor anything in the least degree resembling a petition of right. It was proceeding in the ordinary course, and in the ordinary Courts of Justice. There was no authority for saying that a petition of right would be for any matter of personal contract with the King. An annuity by the King was not a personal contract; it could only be granted by letters patent, and if, therefore, a petition of right would be for an annuity, it would be because an annuity so created was a rent charge—was, in fact, something which partook of the realty, and consequently formed an exception to the rule he had already stated. That accounted for the decision of the banker's case. The difference between the present day and past times, when the Crown had a personal revenue, was considerable, and had become so in consequence of the revenues of the Crown being now managed by Parliament.—Lord Denman: Then is not the argument the same in all times?—The Solicitor-General said it was not.—Lord Denman: But the Barons of the Exchequer have always been officers inferior to the Chancellor and Treasurer. Is there any instance of a judgment in advertum in that Court?—The Solicitor-General answered that there was none. There was no precedent at all for any petition of right for what was strictly called chattels. In other cases the judgment was that the King's lands might be removed; but that related to real estate, and would not be applicable to personalities.—The Solicitor-General had not concluded when the Court rose, and on Tuesday he resumed his argument. He argued at first that the petition of right was not an applicable remedy to any case of this kind, and, next, that the circumstances here did not show him to have any title which he could claim to be enforced. The claim, if any, rested upon treaties. The mere fact of birth did not constitute a person a subject of the country where he was born. The law of domicile affected that question, the domicile of the father being that which governed the marriage and character of the child. Dalhousie v. Macdougal, and Munro and Munro, in T. Clark and Trunelly's Reports, were most important cases upon this matter. There, though natural children had been born in England and had remained here for years, yet their fathers, not having done anything to forfeit their Scotch domicile, the children were held to be Scotch, and succeeded to the estates of their respective fathers as heirs, being legitimated by the subsequent marriages of their parents. For the purpose of such a case as this, Scotland was as much a foreign country as France, and the authority of these cases was therefore directly in point. It did not seem, therefore, that the Baron de Bode could show that he was a British subject; and if he could not, then there was clearly an end of his claim; but if he could do so, then it was plain that he was, as such, bound by the provisions of the 59th George III., he not having duly complied with them, his claim was duly answered. So that, in either way, the ground of the claim being gone, the claim itself could not be supported. The rule, therefore, ought to be absolute for entering the verdict for the Crown.—Mr. Kelly, on the same side, declared his total inability to discover any national or legal ground on which the claim might be supported. In the first place, he denied that the claimant had made out his title to be considered a British subject; in the next, the claimant did not appear to have complied with the provisions of the Act of Parliament. The first of these matters was doubly important, since it affected not only the right to claim compensation under the treaties with this country, and under the Act of Parliament, but to claim any compensation at all; for if not a British subject, the question might arise, whether the French Government, for the time being, however harshly it might have acted, had not possessed full authority to do what it had done. The learned Counsel proceeded to review the circumstances and the law of the case. At 4 o'clock the Court intimated that the argument must be terminated for that day, but might be resumed on Monday week.

In Re Carus C. Wilson—Habeas Corpus.—Lord Denman yesterday pronounced the judgment of the Court in this case, which has been fully argued this week. His Lordship said that himself and his learned brethren were of opinion that the writ of habeas corpus issued by Mr. Baron Rolfe at Chambers was legal and valid; therefore the rule obtained against it must be discharged, and Mr. Wilson brought up to the court within ten days, when the return to the writ could be argued and disposed of.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS, Jan. 31.—(Before Mr. Serjeant Adams).—IMPORTANT DECISION.—Farden v. Tidd Pratt.—This was an appeal by the Parish of Chiswick against a certificate granted by Mr. Tidd Pratt to the Horticultural Society of London, declaring the Society to be exempt from all local and parochial taxes, under a recent Act of Parliament. The Act declares that all Societies formed for the improvement of Science, Literature, or the Fine Arts, and supported wholly or in part by voluntary subscriptions, shall be exempt from such payments, provided such Society makes no partition, bonus, or gift in money, to its members. After hearing the arguments of Mr. Clarkson, in support of the revising Barrister's Certificate, and of Mr. Bodkin, on the other side, the Chairman decided against the exemption claimed, upon the ground that although the Horticultural Society never has made, or contemplated making any partition, bonus, or gift in money, among the Members, yet that there is nothing in the bye-laws specially restraining them from doing so. This decision, if a good one, virtually repeals the Act of Parliament and is fatal to the claims of the greater part, if not all the scientific Societies in the kingdom.

Miscellaneous.

Harbours of Refuge.—Some months ago the Lords of the Treasury appointed a commission to inquire into the defences of the coast, and the propriety of forming harbours of refuge. The commission was composed of Admiral Sir B. Martin, Chairman, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Howard Douglas, Rear-Admiral Dundas, Capt. Sir William Symonds, R.N., Capt. Washington, R.N., Lieut.-Col. Colquhoun, R.A., Lieut.-Col. Alderson, R.E., Sir J. H. Pelly, Bart., Capt. Fisher, R.N., and Mr. James Walker, President of the Institution of Civil Engineers. The Commissioners have just published their report, which is a long but most interesting document, containing a full statement of their proceedings and inquiries on the important subject of their appointment. The following are their conclusions, which state concisely the chief points of the report:—"Proposed Breakwaters.—Having made such observations respecting the different ports as may be necessary to enable your Lordships to form a judgment on the proposals we have to submit, and having given to the subject referred to us all the attention which its importance demands, we recommend:—That a harbour be constructed in Dover Bay, according to plan No. 1, with an area of 520 acres up to low water mark, or 380 acres without the two-fathom edge; with an entrance 700 feet wide on the south front, and another of 150 at the east end. Entertaining the strong opinion we have expressed of the necessity of providing, without delay, a sheltered anchorage in Dover Bay, we venture to urge upon your Lordships' attention the advantage of immediately beginning the work by carrying out that portion which is to commence at Cheesman's Head. Whatever may be finally decided upon as to the form and extent of the works in Dover Bay, the pier from Cheesman's Head, run out into seven fathoms water, appears to be indispensable as a commencement, and it will afford both facility and shelter to the works to be subsequently carried on for their completion. This will give sheltered access to the present harbour during south-west gales, and protect it from the entrance of shingle from the westward; it will afford time also for observation on the movement of the shingle within the bay, and for further inquiry as to the tendency which harbours of large area, on this part of the coast, may have to silt up. These inquiries the commission consider to be of essential importance, and the results will afford the means of determining on the greater or less width that should be given to the entrances of the proposed harbour. 2. We propose that a breakwater be constructed in Seaford-road, in a depth of about seven fathoms of water, one mile in extent, and sheltering an area of 300 acres, as shown in plan No. 2. 3. That a breakwater be constructed in Portland Bay, to extend a mile and a quarter in a north-eastern direction, from near the northern point of the island, in about seven fathoms of water, having an opening of 150 feet at a quarter of a mile from the shore, and sheltering an area of nearly 1200 acres, as shown in plan No. 3. If only one work is to be undertaken at a time, we give the preference to Dover, next to Portland, and 3dly, to Seaford. Mode of Construction.—Various plans for constructing breakwaters have been laid before us by highly intelligent individuals, whose projects are noted in the Appendix, and fully explained in the evidence. We are directed by your Lordships to report on the expense to be incurred by the completion of the works which we recommend; but as no approximate estimate of this can be made without determining the general principles and modes of construction, we have examined the engineers who have come before us, and other authorities upon these important points. The various opinions have been considered by the commission, who prefer for the construction of breakwaters, and for the security of the works of defence upon them, the erection of walls of masonry. The commission do not offer any opinion as to the profile or degree of slope necessary to insure to the structure the requisite stability. They consider that this will be best decided by the Government, under professional advice, when the works shall be finally determined on. The cost of either mode of construction having been stated to be nearly the same, whether it be masonry or a long slope of rough stone similar to that of Plymouth Breakwater, the commission beg to lay before your Lordships an approximate estimate of the works at the several places, viz.—Dover, 2,500,000*l.*; Seaford, 1,250,000*l.*; Portland, 500,000*l.*; Harwich, 50,000*l.* Military Defences.—The military members of the commission are of opinion that there will be no difficulty in providing for the defence of the proposed harbours. They recommend that casemated batteries be constructed on the breakwaters themselves, and that these should be supported by works and defences on the shore, flanking the approach to them and to the entrances of the harbours. At Dover and Seaford there already exist works of defence contiguous to the site of the proposed breakwaters, capable of being adapted to this object. The island of Portland possesses great natural advantages for defence, and for the formation of a Naval and Military depot, during war, to any extent that may be required. The Military Officers are further of opinion that the position and construction of the works necessary for the defence of the proposed harbours cannot be decided on until the exact site and relation of the latter to the shore shall have been finally determined.—Conclusion.—The commission cannot close their report without expressing in the strongest terms their unanimous opinion and entire conviction that measures are indispensably necessary to give to the south-eastern frontier of the kingdom means and facilities which it does not now possess for powerful naval protection. Without any, except tidal harbours along the whole coast between Portsmouth and the Thames, and none accessible to large steamers, there is now, when steam points to such great changes in maritime affairs, an imperative necessity for supplying, by artificial means, the want of harbours throughout the narrow part of the channel. The distance chart which accompanies this report, shows the positions where, if our recommendations are carried ont, harbours of refuge or well-protected roadsteads will afford shelter to our commerce. By these means, and with the advantages of steam by sea, and of railroads and telegraphic communication by land, the naval and military force of the country may be thrown in great strength upon any point of the coast in a few hours. The several recommendations we have thought it our duty to lay before your Lordships must, if adopted, occasion a large outlay of the public money; but when life, property, and national security are the interests at stake, we do not believe that pecuniary considerations will be allowed to impede the accomplishment of objects of such vast importance." This is signed by all the commissioners except Sir W. Symonds, who adds as follows:—"I dissent from this report, because I consider the mass of evidence to be in favour of Dungeness, and because I cannot recommend a large close harbour at Dover, where the pilots consider the holding ground indifferent, and the engineers say it will silt up.

BIRTHS.—On the 23d ult., at Ickworth, LADY A. HERVEY, of a daughter—27th ult., at Woodcote, LADY L. CORRY, of a daughter—25th ult., in St. George's place, LADY E. BRUCE, of a son—26th ult., at 7, Codrington-place, Brighton, the lady of J. LAINSON, Esq., of a son and heir—26th ult., at Grove-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, Mrs. P. BOULLY, of a son.

DEATHS.—On the 26th Dec., 1844, at Madeira, J. BAYLY, Esq., the eldest and only surviving son of John Bayly, Esq., of Pythouse, in the county of Wilts, M.P. for the southern division of that county—12th ult., at Villa Corsi, near Florence, of intermittent fever, FLORENCE C. LAMBERT, eldest child of A. Lambert, Esq.—24th ult., W. KERL, Esq., of Harpenden, aged 73—25th ult., at his residence, Mount-street, Grosvenor-sq., Mr. S. SANDELL, aged 54—25th ult., at Calverley Park, Tunbridge Wells, Mrs. LINDLEY, of the Adelphi-terrace—25th ult., at Newington, Mr. W. MAULDEN, of Her Majesty's Customs, aged 61—25th ult., ANNE HAIGH, wife of Mr. Haigh, of Welfield-place, Toxteth-park, Liverpool, and elder daughter of the late Thomas Bladon, Esq., of Uttoxeter, aged 37.

WANTED, AS GARDENER.—A young intelligent Man who from experience is capable of attending to a small stove, greenhouse, and vegetable garden. Every encouragement and all facilities for improvement will be afforded by the advertiser, who is a clergyman of considerable theoretical knowledge. Wages not exceeding One Guinea per week.—Direct to A.B., Post-office, Clapham, Surrey.

WANTED in a respectable Family 24 miles from London, a single Man not less than 26 years of age, who has lived in the country as THOROUGH IN-DOOR SERVANT in Livery. None need apply who cannot obtain a most excellent character of two years' standing. Also in the same family a young woman as Housemaid, who thoroughly understands her business, and can have an excellent character. Wages to be named.—Direct to A. B., Post-Office, Bletchingley, Surrey.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 28, without incumbrance, who possesses a good practical knowledge of his profession in all its branches, and can be highly recommended by his employer.—For particulars apply to Messrs. WM. WOOD and SON, Nurserymen, Marcefield-near Uckfield, Sussex.

AS GARDENER.—A Married Man, aged 38, without incumbrance; he has a thorough knowledge of his profession in all its branches, and has also an undeniable character from the situation he has just left. His Wife could superintend the Dairy, if required.—Direct to D. O., Mr. Clark's Seedsman, 25, Bishopsgate-street, Within.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable single Man, aged 35, who perfectly understands his profession, and can have an unexceptionable character from the gentleman he has lived with 14 years, who is removing to a distance.—Direct to G. C., Mr. Wild's Horticultural Agency Office, Ipswich.

AS GARDENER.—A Young Man who has had first-rate instruction. Any Nobleman or Gentleman wanting a person in that capacity will find him worthy their attention; an unexceptionable character will be given.—Direct to Mr. M'INTOSH, Dalkeith-place; Mr. M'INTOSH, Drumbanns Castle; or to Mr. TURRELL, Royal Gardens, Hampton Court—(this not inserted without his knowledge.)

AS GARDENER in a Nobleman or Gentleman's Family.—A respectable middle-aged married Man who has had considerable experience in forcing Melons, Cucumbers, Vineries, &c., and possesses a good knowledge of Stove and Greenhouse Plants, Flower and Pleasure Grounds. Unexceptionable references can be given as to character and ability from a family of distinction whom he successfully served for many years.—Direct to W. B., Mr. White, Nurseryman, Swansea, Wales.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, aged 25, who is practically conversant with the general routine of Forcing, Kitchen, Flower Gardening, &c. Unexceptionable references as to character, abilities, &c.—Direct to A.B. at Mrs. Cleeve's, 13, Edward's place, Balls pond, Islington.

AS FARM BAILIFF.—A young Man, 30 years of age, who has had 10 years' experience in stock and arable farming in the Lothians of Scotland; is thoroughly acquainted with the laying out and general cropping of farms, buying and selling of stock, &c.; and has studied two years at the Veterinary College of Edinburgh, under Professor Dick. The most unexceptionable reference will be given as to character and qualifications, by applying to C. Murdoch, Esq., Mansion House, with whom the Advertiser is at present [illegible] as Bailiff.—Direct to Mr. JAMES LESLIE, C. Murdoch, Esq., Mansion House, near Tourquay, Devonshire.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1845.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.

Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Thomas Farncomb, Esq. Alderman, Chairman.

William Leaf, Esq. Deputy Chairman.

Richard E. Arden, Esq.	J. Humphery, Esq. Ald. M.P.
William Banbury, Esq.	Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq.	Thomas Kelly, Esq. Ald.
Thomas Camplin, Esq.	Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
James Clift, Esq.	Lewis Pocock, Esq.

Physician—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.

Surgeon—W. Coulson, Esq. 2, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry.

Consulting Actuary—Professor Hall, of King's College.

Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.

Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l.* the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l.* per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l.*

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term.
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured.

A Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.

A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

News of the Week.

THE Session of Parliament was opened on Tuesday by the Queen in person. The Speech from the Throne embraced a variety of topics, and has already directed attention to many matters of stirring interest, which give promise of an unusually busy session. After referring with satisfaction to the increased extension of trade and commerce during the past year, the Speech adverts to the recent visits of the Emperor of Russia and the King of the French, touching lightly on the late discussions with the French Government, and expressing a conviction that the maintenance of the good understanding which those discussions might have impaired is essential to the best interests of both countries. The naval paragraph relating to the Estimates contains an important announcement in reference to the navy, and points out the necessity of an increase in the naval estimates for the purpose of creating a steam fleet, to protect our extended commerce and our coasts. The affairs of Ireland occupy the next place in the Speech. The improvement manifest in that part of the empire is mentioned with satisfaction, and to the decrease of political agitation and excitement is attributed the salutary application of private capital to the railroads and other useful public enterprises which now occupy attention in that country. A brief allusion is made to the Charitable Bequests Act, and the report of the Land Commission is mentioned as nearly prepared. An important indication of the policy of Ministers in regard to Ireland is contained in the paragraph which recommends the propriety of improving and extending the opportunities for academical education,—an allusion to Sir R. Peel's pledge that he will establish new colleges in various parts of Ireland for the education of Roman Catholics, and propose a large increase of the grant to Maynooth. The Speech then announces another part of the Ministerial policy which is likely to excite much interest in Scotland, as it shows that the system of banking which has so long prevailed in that part of the empire will be brought under revision this Session. After referring to the Commission on the health of large towns, and promising that the report thereon shall immediately be submitted to the House, the Speech directs attention to the Income-Tax, and suggests in cautious terms the expediency of continuing its operation for a further period, in order to provide adequately for the public service, and at the same time give Parliament the means of effecting reductions on other taxes. The Speech concludes by emphatically expressing a hope that these important matters may be considered in such a manner as to strengthen the feelings of mutual confidence and good-will between all classes, and improve the condition of the people. The debate on the Address in answer to the Speech will be read with interest. Lord Lansdowne and Lord Normanby in the House of Lords, and Lord J. Russell and Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons, were the leading speakers on the Opposition side, but they moved no amendment, confining their observations chiefly to the affairs of Ireland and to the Ministerial policy in regard to Tahiti. The Duke of Richmond and Lord Malmesbury regretted that the Speech contained no mention of the Agricultural Interests, more especially as the distressed condition of the farmers was inconsistent with the prominent allusion to the improved condition of the country. Lord J. Russell, in his speech, expressed his conviction that protection was not the support, but the bane of agriculture; upon which Mr. Miles asked why his lordship had proposed a fixed duty, if such were his opinions of protection? In the Commons, on Thursday, the subject of Agriculture was again brought under notice by a speech from Mr. Cobden, who suggested that the agriculturists should join him in asking for a Committee of Inquiry into the effect of protective duties on the interests of the farmers and tenant-labourers. Mr. Miles stated, in reply, that the agriculturists had no intention of asking for a Committee. He acknowledged, however, the courtesy of Mr. Cobden, but rather distrusted the concert which he offered to establish on the subject between the two sides of the House. Mr. Bankes protested against the Committee, and expressed his hope that Government would do something better for the agriculturists than a mere Committee of Inquiry. After an animated discussion, in which Mr. Gibson, Mr. Bright, and Mr. S. O'Brien took part, Sir R. Peel deprecated any discussion on the Corn-laws, and said that the agricultural members who had risen so hastily to protest against the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry, would have acted wiser if they had taken a fortnight to consider of it. As to his own intentions he said he was under no pledge or condition opposed to the principles he had laid down in 1842. He would not deny the existence of agricultural distress, but he disbelieved that it was universal, or that it could be fairly attributed to the operation of the law he had introduced three years ago. "I do not believe," said Sir R. Peel, "that the change of the Corn-laws has been the cause of agricultural distress, and I feel bound to state that I cannot look to Parliament for a remedy for that distress in further legislation in that respect. I think the restoration of protection is impossible; and, even if it were possible, I should not sanction the re-establishment of increased protection as a remedy for that distress which, I admit, prevails in some parts of the country, but which I attribute to natural causes."

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, left Windsor Castle on Monday for Buckingham Palace, travelling to town by a special train on the Great Western Railway. The Queen held a Privy Council shortly after her arrival; and after pricking the list of Sheriffs for the present year, the Queen's Speech on opening Parliament was agreed upon. After the Council, Her Majesty paid a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz.—On Tuesday, the Queen went in state to open the session of Parliament with a speech from the throne, and was loudly cheered by the crowds of people who had assembled to witness the procession. In the evening, Her Majesty and the Prince honoured the Haymarket theatre with their presence.—On Wednesday, Her Majesty held a Privy Council, at which various matters relating to the recent Ministerial changes were arranged. On the same day, Prince Albert transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall.—On Thursday, the Queen held a court for the purpose of receiving the Addresses of both Houses of Parliament. In the evening, Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the St. James's theatre with their presence.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales, left town yesterday for Brighton, by a special train on the Brighton Railway.—It is stated that it is the intention of Her Majesty and Prince Albert to honour the Earl and Countess of Warwick with a visit at Warwick Castle during the ensuing Easter recess.—The Countess of Gainsborough has succeeded the Marchioness of Douro as the Lady in Waiting. Colonel Buckley has succeeded Maj.-Gen. Wemyss as Equerry in Waiting on Her Majesty; and Colonel Wylde has succeeded Colonel Bouverie as Equerry in Waiting on Prince Albert. It is ordered in last night's Gazette that the Court go into mourning to-morrow for the Grand Duchess of Nassau, until the 17th inst.

Ministerial Changes.—There is no longer any doubt of the Ministerial appointments to which we referred last week, writs having been moved in Parliament for the new elections which they have rendered necessary. Sir T. Fremantle has been appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. The Hon. Sidney Herbert has been appointed Secretary-at-War, and was sworn on Monday as a Privy Councillor. Sir George Clerk, Bart., was sworn as a Privy Councillor on Wednesday, and appointed Vice-President of the Board of Trade and Master of the Mint, in the room of Mr. Gladstone. The Right Hon. Lowry Corry has succeeded Mr. Herbert as Secretary to the Admiralty, and it is stated that Lord Jocelyn will succeed Mr. Corry as a Lord of the Admiralty. It is believed that Mr. Cardwell will succeed Sir G. Clerk as one of the Secretaries of the Treasury, and a rumour prevails that the continued ill-health of the Earl of Ripon will, at no distant period, occasion another vacancy in the Cabinet.

Parliamentary Movements.—The candidates for East Cornwall are Mr. W. H. Pole Carew, of Anthony, near Liskeard, and Sir W. L. S. Trelawney, of Harewood, Bart., the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, Mr. Robartes, who was mentioned as the Conservative candidate, having declined to come forward on this occasion.

Slave Trade Commission.—Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint Edmund Gabriel, jun., Esq., in the room of C. F. Fynes Clinton, Esq., deceased, to be Arbitrator, on the part of Her Majesty, in the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission, established at Loanda, in the province of Angola, under the treaty concluded at Lisbon on the 3d July, 1842, between Great Britain and Portugal, for the suppression of the slave-trade.

Colonial Expenditure.—A return procured by Mr. Hume was printed last week, showing the total amount of revenue received by the Colonies, and the expenditure for the same in the year 1842: as also a general abstract of the military and naval expenditure by Great Britain for the Colonies in the year 1843. The return extends to 58 pages, and shows the revenue and expenditure of each of the Colonies under separate heads, with the exception of that of New Zealand, which appeared in a Parliamentary document printed some months back. The revenue of Gibraltar was 31,454*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, and the expenditure, 31,445*l.* 7*s.* 7½*d.*; showing a surplus revenue of 8*l.* 19*s.* 8½*d.* Of Malta the revenue was 120,852*l.* 1*s.* 0½*d.*, and the expenditure, 110,759*l.* 0*s.* 6½*d.*; surplus revenue, 10,093*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* Of Canada the expenditure was 476,304*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.*, and the revenue, 465,141*l.* 4*s.* 2½*d.*; excess of expenditure, 11,163*l.* 7*s.* 8½*d.* Of Nova Scotia the expenditure was 95,899*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.*, and the revenue, 84,869*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*; showing an excess of expenditure of 11,030*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* Of New Brunswick the expenditure was 81,920*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*, and the revenue, 55,792*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*; excess of expenditure, 26,127*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* Of Prince Edward's Island the expenditure was 19,626*l.* 7*s.* 2½*d.*, and the revenue, 13,411*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*; excess of expenditure, 6214*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* Of Newfoundland the revenue was 56,686*l.* 12*s.* 0½*d.*, and the expenditure, 40,787*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*; surplus revenue, 15,898*l.* 14*s.* 4½*d.* Of Bermuda the revenue was 19,342*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, and the expenditure, 17,435*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*; surplus revenue, 1907*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Of Honduras the expenditure was 13,459*l.* 8*s.* 10 4-5*d.*, and the revenue, 12,515*l.* 7*s.* 10 4-5*d.*; excess of expenditure, 944*l.* 1*s.* Of St. Helena, the expenditure was 17,756*l.* 13*s.* 1½*d.*, and the revenue, 17,643*l.* 5*s.* 11½*d.*; excess of expenditure, 113*l.* 7*s.* 11½*d.* Of Ceylon, it appears that the expenditure was 301,791*l.*; but, after the estimated expenditure of an agent in London, &c., the excess of expenditure would amount to 28,204*l.* Of the Cape of Good Hope the revenue was 226,261*l.* 4*s.* 10⅜*d.*, and the expenditure 226,025*l.* 17*s.* 6¼*d.*; surplus revenue, 235*l.* 7. 4½*d.* Of Sierra Leone, the expenditure was 26,209*l.* 2*s.* 5½*d.*, and the revenue, 24,165*l.* 7*s.*; showing an excess of expenditure of 2043*l.* 15*s.* 5½*d.* Of Bathurst and its dependencies (River Gambia), the revenue was 9592*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, and the expenditure, 7472*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*; surplus revenue, 2119*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* Of New South Wales, the revenue was 844,265*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, and the expenditure, 804,982*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*; surplus revenue, 39,282*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* Of Van Dieman's Land the expenditure was 182,622*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, and the revenue, 160,003*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*; excess of expenditure, 22,618*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Of Western Australia the expenditure was 18,334*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, and the revenue, 17,031*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*; excess of expenditure, 1302*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* And of South Australia, the expenditure was 84,531*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, and the revenue, 81,813*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*; showing an excess of expenditure of 2717*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*

New Sheriffs.—The following are the Sheriffs appointed by Her Majesty in Council for 1845. ENGLAND.—Bedfordshire—W. B. Higgins, of Turvey, Esq. Berks.—J. B. Monck, of Coley-park, Esq. Bucks.—E. F. Dayrell, of Lillingstone Dayrell, Esq. Camb. and Hunt.—J. B. Rooper, of Abbotts Ripton, Esq. Cumberland—T. Featherstonhaugh, of the College, Kirkoswald, Esq. Cheshire—Sir W. T. S. Massey Stanley, of Hooton, Bart. Derbyshire—T. Pares, of Hopwell, Esq. Devon—E. S. Drewe, of the Grange, Esq. Dorset—E. Balston, of Corfe-hill, Esq. Durham—J. W. Williamson, of Whicklam, Esq. Essex—G. Round, of Colchester, Esq. Gloucestershire—E. Hopkinson, of Edgworth House, Esq. Herefordshire—J. K. King, of Staunton-park, Esq. Herts.—Sir H. Meux, of Theobald's-park, Bart. Kent—Sir Moses Montefiore, of East-cliff, Saint Lawrence, Knt. Leicestershire—W. C. Smith, of Bitteswell, Esq. Lincolnshire—T. Coltman, of Hagnaby Priory, Esq. Monmouthshire—W. Phillips, of Whitston House, Esq. Norfolk—T. R. Buckworth, of Cockley Cley, Esq. Northamptonshire—Hon. R. Watson, of Rockingham Castle. Northumberland—R. Carr, of Hedgley, Esq. Nottinghamshire—W. H. Barrow, of Southwell, Esq. Rut-Oxon—J. S. North, of Wroxton Abbey, Esq. Rutlandshire—H. B. Pierrepont, of Ryhall, Esq. Shropshire—St. John C. Charlton, of Appley Castle, Esq. Somerset—J. Lee Lee, of Dillington House, Esq. Staffordshire—C. S. Forster, of Hampstead Hall, Esq. County of Southampton—Sir R. G. Simeon, of Swainstone, Isle of Wight, Bart. Suffolk—H. Wilson, of Stowlangtoft, Esq. Surrey—R. Fuller, of the Rookery, Dorking, Esq. Sussex—J. B. Daubuz, of Offington, Esq. Warwickshire—J. Roberts West, of Alscote, Esq. Wilts.—Wade Brown, of Monkton Farleigh, Esq. Worcestershire—T. S. Lea, of Astley Hall, Esq. Yorkshire—Sir W. B. Cooke, of Wheatley, Bart. WALES.—Anglesey—R. J. Hughes, of Plas Llangoed, Esq. Brecknockshire—W. Williams, of Aberpergwm, Esq. Carnarvonshire—Postponed. Carmarthenshire—D. Jones, of Glanbrane-park, Llandovery, Esq. Cardiganshire—J. L. Davies, Altyrodin, Esq. Den- Inghshire — C. Wynne, of Garthmeilio, near Cerrigydrudion, Esq. Flintshire — R. Richardson, of Greenfield Hall, Esq. Glamorganshire—R. Savours, of Trecastle, Esq. Merionethshire—R. Watkin Price, of Rhiwlas, Esq. Montgomeryshire—J. W. Lyon Winder, of Vaynor-park, Esq. Pembrokeshire—A. L. Gower, of Caslemalgwynne, Esq. Radnorshire—J. Davies, of Colva, Esq. IRELAND.—The following are the Sheriffs appointed by the Lord-Lieutenant for the present year:—Antrim—J. White, Esq., of Whitehall. Armagh—T. M. Jones, Esq., of Jonesborough. Carlow—R. S. Doyne, jun., Esq., Tallow Lodge. Carrickfergus—S. Dunn, Esq., Carrickfergus. Cavan—A. O'Reilly, Esq., Baltrasna. Clare—H. P. Hickman, Esq., Finloe. Cork—Hon. H. St. Leger, Doneraile House. Cork City—J. Morrogh, Esq., Glanmire, Cork. Donegal—Lord G. A. Hill, Ballygar. Down—H. Montgomery, Esq., Rosemount. Drogheda Town—W. Cairnes, Esq., Drogheda. Dublin—Hon. E. Preston, Gormanstown Castle. Dublin City—T. Crosthwaite, 9, Fitzwilliam-square, East. Fermanagh—W. Archdall, Esq., Dromard. Galway—D. Kirwan, Esq., Castlehacket. Galway Town—P. M. Lynch, Esq., Renmore Park. Kerry—C. Galwey, Esq., Killarney. Kildare—Lord W. Fitzgerald, Carton. Kilkenny—C. Hely, Esq., Foulks Court. Kilkenny City—J. M'Grath, Esq., Kilkenny. King's County—R. Warburton, Esq., Garryhinch. Leitrim—E. K. Tennisson, Esq., Kilronan Castle. Limerick—E. C. Tilliers, Esq., Kilpeacon. Limerick City—H. Watson, Esq., Limerick. Londonderry City and County—Sir H. H. Bruce, Bart., Downhill. Longford—G. Lefroy, Esq., Carrickglass. Louth—F. J. Foster, Esq., Castle Ring. Mayo—H. W. Knox, Esq., Netley. Meath—Lord Killeen, Killeen Castle. Monaghan—A. A. Murray, Lough Owna. Queen's County—H. Rochfort, Esq., Cloghrenan. Roscommon—G. O'Moore, Cloghan Castle. Sligo—P. Perceval, Esq., Temple House. Tipperary—J. Bayley, Esq., Debsborough. Tyrone—W. D'Arcy, Esq., Necairn Castle. Waterford—J. B. Gumbleton, Esq., Fortwilliam. Waterford City—J. Penrose, Esq., Waterford. Westmeath—Hon. L H. K. Harman, Newcastle. Wexford—P. W. Redmond, Esq., Newtown. Wicklow—W. W. Fitzwilliam Hume, Esq., Humewood.

New Commission.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, appointing the Right Hon. H. T. Lowry Corry, Joseph Hume, Aaron Chapman, E. R. Rice, and T. Baring, Esqrs., Captain F. Beaufort, R.N., or the Hydrographer of the Admiralty for the time being; G. B. Airy, Esq., or the Astronomer Royal for the time being; Captain J. Washington, R.N.; and H. J. Shepherd, Esq., or the Counsel for the Admiralty and Navy for the time being, Her Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring into the state of the harbours, shores, and rivers of the United Kingdom.

Death of the Marquis of Sligo.—We have to announce the death of the Marquis of Sligo, which took place at Tunbridge Wells, on the 26th ult. His Lordship was Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Mayo, a Knight of the Order of St. Patrick, and Colonel of the South Mayo Militia. He was born on the 18th May, 1788, and was, consequently, in his 57th year. The Marquis was for some time Governor of Jamaica. He married, in 1816, Lady Hester de Burgh, eldest daughter of the Earl of Clanricarde, by whom he had a numerous family. His Lordship is succeeded by his eldest son, George John, Earl of Altamont, now Marquis of Sligo, who was born in 1820.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Ministerial crisis continues to be the leading topic of controversy in the Paris papers, all of which agree that the dangers of the Cabinet have by no means been surmounted. The Opposition prints assail the Ministry with great violence, and describe its fall as inevitable. They represent the Conservative demonstration, which we mentioned last week, as a complete failure, and are the more vehement in their language because the Cabinet, instead of submitting to the overthrow of the previous week, has shown fresh signs of life and energy, by appointing M. de Salvandy Minister of Public Instruction. The accession to office of this gentleman, who had but recently expressed in very harsh terms his hostility to the Administration he has joined, would alone have sufficed to provoke the parties who have combined against M. Guizot; but they are further incensed by two blows which that minister has, with his wonted firmness, ventured to strike at refractory functionaries of Government. The Count de Saint Priest, Minister Plenipotentiary at Copenhagen, and M. Drouin de L'Huys, Chief of the Commercial Direction of the Foreign-office, have both been dismissed from their offices. The former vehemently opposed the Cabinet in the Chamber of Peers, in the late debate on the Address, and the latter openly voted in the Chamber of Deputies against the paragraph relative to Tahiti and the indemnity conceded to Mr. Pritchard. These dismissals are most bitterly and unanimously resented by the Opposition press. The Chamber of Deputies sat on Toursday and Friday, but their proceedings were of no interest to the English reader. The attention of the Members was too intensely engaged by the precarious situation of the Ministry, and the intrigues which always take place under such circumstances, to be attracted to the various bills of mere local interest submitted to their consideration. On the previous day the Chambers presented their Address to the King, who returned the following reply, which is considered by all parties as an important declaration in favour of Ministers:—

"Gentlemen,—I thank you for your loyal Address. It will contribute, with that power which belongs to everything that emanates from you, to preserve our country in future from the dangers which the blindness of passions too often entails on nations. A mutual respect for justice and peace presides over our relations with all foreign Powers, and the accord, so fortunately and so honourably re-established between France and England, attests the spirit of wisdom and conciliation that animates the two Governments. Thanks to your co-operation—to the support you have afforded my Government—thanks to the stability which the union of the powers of the state has given to our institutions, our country, protected by Divine Providence, enjoys that constantly increasing happiness which constitutes the glory of my reign, and, if I may be permitted to add, my personal consolation; and, instead of seeing neighbouring nations apprehensive that the force and power of France will be employed in carrying devastation abroad, or propagating revolutionary anarchy, we have inspired them with the just confidence that our force and our power are, for them as well as for us, a guarantee of peace and security. (The King was here interrupted by an expression of general assent.) I am greatly affected by the sentiments which you have manifested towards my family and myself. Ever devoted to our country my sons are happy when they can serve it, and their devotion as well as mine, shall have no other limit than that of our existence." The last words of the King, pronounced with emotion, were received with loud and prolonged acclamations. His Majesty then advanced towards the deputies, who had formed into a circle, and who appeared much affected by the reply they had just heard, and added—"I feel very grateful for these acclamations, and the sentiments you have evinced. Mine sprang from my heart, and yours shall remain engraved on it."

There is no longer any doubt of His Majesty's attachment to the Ministry, but still it is believed that an appeal to the constituencies will be rendered necessary by the result of the next division. According to the last accounts Ministers were to present the annual Secret Service Money Bill on Thursday, and make it, as usual of late years, a Cabinet question. As they were not likely to obtain a very satisfactory majority on the occasion, it was expected that they will dissolve the Chamber of Deputies immediately after the session, and that the general elections will take place in November. The unsatisfactory result of the debate on the Secret Service Bill will be produced, it is said, by an unexpected stratagem of the Opposition, which may, if successful, derange the plan of a dissolution, or at least hasten it on sooner than Ministers desire. It is stated that the Opposition, unwilling that the Cabinet should have a majority on the Bill, have resolved to refrain from voting at all, and that they thus hope to defeat the Bill. At present, however, there is nothing but party rumours upon which a judgment can be formed; and after the late events it is hardly possible, even for Ministers themselves, to foresee the course which circumstances may compel them to adopt. In the meantime it appears doubtful who would be their successors, in the event of their being driven from office; for the Globe says, that—"M. Molé, having witnessed the violence displayed by M. Billault, the menaces he had dared to address to the Chamber, and the refusal of the Opposition to concur in the vote on Monday, had felt that such men could not be his colleagues, and left the field open to M. Thiers." According to that journal, M. Molé had, through a common friend, notified to M. Billault that all alliance with him and his party was out of the question. M. Billault had explained, and partly retracted his virulent attack on the Conservatives, of whom M. Molé is one of the most eminent chiefs; but the latter persisted in his determination, and said that any alliance was impracticable. On Wednesday a ballot took place in the Chamber of Deputies for the election of a Vice-President in lieu of the new Minister of Public Instruction, M. de Salvandy. It did not, however, prove another trial of strength, as the Opposition and Ministerial party had determined to vote for M. Lepelletier d'Aulnay, the latter because he was a "Conservative," and the former in consideration of his being a dissenting one.—"Letters from Capt. Bruat, governor of Tahiti," says the Revue de Paris, "were received on Monday by the Government. He writes word that he had taken the necessary measures for operating, without any awkward complications, the transition from the state of absolute possession to that of simple protectorate. What has transpired of the contents of those despatches does not enable us to say if M. Bruat has completely succeeded in the accomplishment of his moderate and pacific intentions; but we fear that this is not the case, for the report runs that fresh scenes of revolt and opposition took place at Tahiti, after the arrival of the despatches requiring the restoration of Queen Pomaré." The National, and several other Opposition prints, publish the report of a meeting of the committee of subscribers for presenting Admiral Dupetit-Thouars with a "sword of honour." It states that they have waited on the Admiral, and informed him that the object of the subscribers was "to honour in his person the whole navy, which had participated in a struggle wherein the French flag had to face the insolent pretensions of England, and to protest, above all, against the act of cowardice committed by the Ministry in disavowing a general officer who had done his duty." On being asked whether he would accept the sword, or whether the committee should make a different use of the money thus raised, the Admiral replied that he was most sensible of the honour done him, but that the duty imposed on him by discipline did not permit him either to explain himself as to a political manifestation, or to accept without the permission of his superiors a testimony of public approbation. Placed as he was in the naval service, he could not, without violating the regulations, depart from the reserve which was imposed on him either to censure or laud an act of the Government. The Admiral concluded by requesting that the proceeds of the subscriptions be applied to the relief of the sailors wounded, or the wives and children of those killed in the Tahiti expedition. With this demand the committee have complied. According to this report, above 175,000 persons have subscribed for the sword, and when all the subscriptions are collected they will exceed 30,000 francs. As may be remembered, no person was permitted to give above ten sous.—The statement that the Wallis and Gambier Islands were taken under the protectorate of France is confirmed by the following letter from M. Dudoit, French consul at the Sandwich Islands, dated 12th July, 1844, to the Minister of Foreign Affairs—"I have the honour to inform you that official despatches authorise my announcing that the Government of His most Christian Majesty has just granted, in principle, the protection demanded by Lavelua, King of the Wallis Islands, and Pileto, King of the Island of Fortuna; and moreover, that in consequence of a convention between the commander of the frigate La Charte, and the King of the Gambier Islands, the protectorate of France is equally established in this last archipelago, subject to the approbation of His Majesty the King of the French."

SPAIN.—We have accounts from Madrid to the 29th ult. The Senate had passed the bill for the conversion of various descriptions of debt into Three per cent stock. In the Deputies, the clauses of the bill making provision for the nuns were agreed to. The debate on the penal law against slave trading was then commenced, and after a violent attack from M. Isturitz upon the new law and upon the treaty which gave rise to it, and a reply from M. Martinez de la Rosa, who contented himself with saying that the treaty was a fait accompli, and the penal law now proposed a mere necessary consequence of that treaty, the debate was adjourned. A combination, or rather conspiracy, has been just discovered by Narvaez, in which nearly all the Captain Generals of Spain are more or less implicated. The names of the most remarkable are—the Baron de Meer, Breton of Aragon, Balboa of Galicia, Camenero, Pavia, and Roncali. They, it seems, had agreed amongst themselves, acting under secret instructions from Maria Christina, and in connection with the Marquis of Viluma, to induce the troops under their command to proclaim Donna Isabella as absolute Queen of Spain, and to demand her marriage with the son of Don Carlos. On the 24th, the young Queen reviewed the troops quartered at Madrid, for the first time on horseback, in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators. General Prim was liberated at Cadiz on the 24th ult.

PORTUGAL.—We have accounts from Lisbon to the 29th ult. Monday, the 27th, having been the third anniversary of the restoration of the Charter, the event was celebrated by Senor Costa Cabral giving a grand ball and supper, at which were present upwards of 1400 persons. The Opposition journals are full of bitterness and invective against the Minister for this proceeding, and furnish a detail of the arbitrary measures which he has had recourse to, and which the entertainment given was meant, they state, to commemorate. M. Liszt, the pianist, is at Lisbon, and has succeeded in diverting the public mind from the turmoils of party politics. It is said that Viscount de Sa had implored the attention of the Government to the fact of the slave-trade being in full operation at Angola. He moved on the 25th that the project for the abolition of slavery in the Portuguese possessions in Asia be made the order of the day during the ensuing week.

SWITZERLAND.—The impending extraordinary convocation of the Diet is said to excite considerable ferment in Switzerland. According to the Constitutionnel, the Government of Lucerne is making preparations to meet whatever may happen, and a courier has been despatched to Naples to recall immediately the regiment of the Canton, which is in the service of the King of the Two Sicilies.

ITALY.—Accounts from Florence state that the inhabitants of that city had been greatly alarmed in the night of the 20th ult. from the Arno rising again to a fearful height. Fortunately the rain, which fell all that day, ceased, and the river soon sunk to its ordinary level. The preparatory steps for the formation of a railroad to connect Vienna with the line between Florence and Leghorn are in a great state of forwardness.—Letters from Rome announce the death of Cardinal Grimaldi, a descendant of one of the most noble Roman families. From 1837 to 1839, his Eminence was Apostolic Legate at Forli, since which period he retired from public business and resided at Rome, where he was greatly revered and respected for his learning and benevolence.

RUSSIA.—The Imperial family have suffered another affliction in the death of the Grand Duchess of Nassau, daughter of the Grand Duke Michael of Russia. The Duchess, after having been delivered of a dead child, died on the 28th ult. She was born on the 26th May, 1826, and was married on the 31st January, 1844, the day on which the late Grand Duchess Alexandrina was also married.—Rubini, Tamburini, and other Italian celebrities have been performing with great applause at St. Petersburgh. All, however, have not been equally successful. The son of Tamburini, in the very presence of his father, whose talent could not save him, was hissed with a desperate unanimity, and obliged to quit the stage in tears. Several other Italian artists have, it is said, experienced the same fate.—Letters from Posen, dated 22d ult., mention the death of the celebrated savant Count Edward Raczynski, who committed suicide on the 20th ult. at his residence on his estates near Santomyri. The Count was the founder of the Polish National Library, containing above 24,000 volumes, which, with the Palace Raczynski, he presented to the city of Posen. He had also placed in the Cathedral two statues by Rauch, of Mieceslaw and Boleslaus, the first Christian rulers in Poland. The Count caused aqueducts to be constructed at his own expense to provide the city of Reustadt with water; and shortly before his death he had expressed his intention of devoting 3000*l.* towards the erecting of a school. Count Raczynski had for some time been thought to labour under some mental derangement, and was about to proceed to Italy by the advice of his physicians. He was the brother of Count A. Raczynski, Prussian Minister at the Court of Lisbon, and leaves a colossal fortune, which reverts to his son.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople of the 15th ult. state, that on the 13th the Minister for Foreign Affairs had notified to Sir Stratford Canning that the Porte acceded fully and unconditionally to all his demands respecting the claims of British subjects, the reform of certain abuses in the administration, and the execution of the commercial treaty.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The overland mail arrived yesterday with news from Bombay to Jan. 1, and from China to Nov. 19. The campaign in the Southern Mahratta country is supposed to be nearly over; five forts have been captured since Dec. 1, and Col. Ovans, the political agent, has been liberated by the enemy, and returned in safety to his friends. In Scinde everything is tranquil, but sickness, however, still continues, and nearly three thousand men are still in hospital. Col. Moseley's trial has ended in his being cashiered from the service. A fearful pestilence is said to have broken out in Cabul, and the living are said to be unable to provide burial for the dead. Serious disputes had occurred in China between the new Governor and the merchants, in reference to a poll tax and other measures, which the Governor ultimately withdrew. The treaty of commerce between France and China was signed on the 24th October at Whampoa.

UNITED STATES.—By a sailing packet which arrived from New York on Saturday, we have later accounts than those brought last week. The annexation question continued to form the chief subject of discussion in the House of Representatives; the proceedings still, however, being of the same uninteresting character. The feeling that annexation would not receive even the sanction of the House seemed to be gaining ground; and the extraordinary want of unanimity amongst those favourable to the measure, upon which this belief was founded, had induced the publication of a private letter written by General Jackson, in which he says, that "unless Congress acts upon this subject promptly, Texas will be beyond their grasp, and lost to the United States for ever, unless regained by the sword."—Accounts from South America state that H.M.'s steam-ship Gorgon, Capt. Hotham, was got afloat without straining her the least, and on the 30th October made a signal to the senior officer in the Rio Plate that she was moored; upon which Sir T. Pasley signalised the squadron to man the rigging, and gave the crew three hearty cheers. This proves what perseverance, science, and labour can effect after a ship of 1100 tons burden had been five months on shore, high and dry.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday.—This being the day to which Parliament stood prorogued, Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, and attended by the several officers of state, opened the session in person. The House was crowded from a very early hour, and an unusual number of peeresses and ladies was present, attracted probably by a report which had very generally obtained for some days previous, though it proved to be without foundation, that the infant Prince of Wales would, on this occasion, accompany his royal parents, and take his seat in the House of Peers for the first time, in the chair on the right hand of the Throne, which shortly after his birth was prepared for him. Her Majesty took her seat on the Throne soon after 2 o'clock, amidst the usual ceremonies, and the Commons having made their appearance at the bar, accompanied by the Speaker, the Lord Chancellor presented to Her Majesty the following speech, which Her Majesty read in the most clear and distinct manner.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—I rejoice that I am enabled on again meeting you in Parliament to congratulate you on the improved condition of the country.

"Increased activity pervades almost every branch of manufacture. Trade and commerce have been extended at home and abroad, and among all classes of my people there is generally prevalent a spirit of loyal and cheerful obedience to the law.

"I continue to receive from all Foreign Powers and States assurances of their friendly disposition.

"I have had much satisfaction in receiving at my Court the Sovereigns who, in the course o the last year, visited this country.

"The journey of the Emperor of Russia, undertaken at a great sacrifice of private convenience, was a proof of the friendship of His Imperial Majesty most acceptable to my feelings.

"The opportunity of personal intercourse thus afforded to me may, I hope, be the means of still further improving those amicable relations which have long existed between Great Britain and Russia.

"The visit of the King of the French was rendered especially welcome to me, inasmuch as it had been preceded by discussions which might have impaired the good understanding happily established between the two countries.

"I regard the maintenance of this good understanding as essential to the best interests of both, and I rejoice to witness that the sentiments so cordially expressed by all classes of my subjects on the occasion of His Majesty's visit were entirely in unison with my own.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—The estimates for the ensuing year have been prepared, and will be laid before you.

"The progress of steam-navigation and the demands for protection to the extended commerce of the country will occasion an increase in the estimates connected with the naval service.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—I have observed with sincere satisfaction that the improvement which is manifest in other parts of the country has extended to Ireland.

"The political agitation and excitement, which I have had heretofore occasion to lament, appear to have gradually abated, and as a natural result, private capital has been more freely applied to useful public enterprises, undertaken through the friendly co-operation of individuals interested in the welfare of Ireland.

"I have carried into effect, in the spirit in which it was [illegible]

"I recommend to your favourable consideration the policy of improving and extending the opportunities for academical education in Ireland.

"The report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the law and practice in respect to the occupation of land, is nearly prepared, and shall be communicated to you immediately after its presentation.

"The state of the law in regard to the privileges of the Bank of Ireland, and to other banking establishments in that country and in Scotland, will no doubt occupy your attention.

"The health of the inhabitants of large towns and populous districts in this part of the United Kingdom has been the subject of recent inquiry before a Commission, the report of which shall be immediately laid before you.

"It will be highly gratifying to me if the information and suggestions contained in that report shall enable you to devise the means of promoting the health and comfort of the poorer classes of my subjects.

"I congratulate you on the success of the measures which, three years since, were adopted by Parliament for the purpose of supplying the deficiency in the public revenue, and arresting the accumulation of debt in the time of peace.

"The act which was passed at that time for imposing a tax upon income will shortly expire.

"It will be for you in your wisdom to determine whether it may not be expedient to continue its operation for a further period, and thus to obtain the means of adequate'y providing for the public service, and at the same time of making a reduction in other taxation.

"Whatever may be the result of your deliberations in this respect, I feel assured that it will be your determination to maintain an amount of revenue amply sufficient to meet the necessary expenditure of the country, and firmly to uphold that public credit, which is indispensable to the national welfare.

"The prospect of continued peace, and the general state of domestic prosperity and tranquillity, afford a favourable opportunity for the consideration of the important matters to which I have directed your attention, and I commit them to your deliberation, with the earnest prayer that you may be enabled, under the superintending care and protection of Divine Providence, to strengthen the feelings of mutual confidence and good-will between different classes of my subjects, and to improve the condition of my people."

Her Majesty having concluded, the Speaker of the House of Commons bowed and left the bar with the members. The Royal Procession then left the House in the same order in which it had entered, and their lordships adjourned during pleasure.—The Lord Chancellor took his seat on the Woolsack shortly after half-past four.—Lord Ellenborough took the oaths and his seat on the Earl's bench with the usual ceremonies.—The LORD CHANCELLOR having read Her Majesty's Speech, the Marquis CAMDEN lightly touched on all the topics introduced into the speech from the throne, and moved an Address in answer to it, which was, as usual, an echo of the Royal Speech itself.—Lord GLENLYON, who appeared in full Highland costume, seconded the Address. He touched in the course of his speech, on the manifestations of attachment exhibited towards Her Majesty's person by her Highland subjects during her late visit to Scotland, as well as by all her other subjects, on whatever occasion she appears amongst them.—The proposed Address having been read,—The Marquis of NORMANBY, said that, so far from moving any Amendment upon the Address, he approved all that he had yet heard of the measures to be proposed by Government; and promised that he, at least, would not taunt Ministers with the inconsistency of their present proposals with their former professions. Previous attempts at the conciliation of Ireland had failed, principally in consequence of the indiscreet declarations with which they were accompanied; and the operation of the Bequests Act of last session had been clogged by objections which might easily have been obviated, while the appointment of Roman Catholic prelates upon the Commission recently constituted was scarcely in accordance with the Act of Emancipation, and the recognition of their episcopal titles would expose the Government to the imputation of injustice if that compliment were now in any case refused. He had always regarded the inquiry which had been in progress as to the tenure of land in Ireland as an unmixed evil, and he regretted to find that the result had justified his anticipations. The amount of agrarian outrage was also greater than it had been for many years, but he should not for the present bring forward any motion upon the subject.—The Duke of RICHMOND expressed his deep regret at one omission in the speech from the throne. Her Majesty congratulated them on the improved condition of the country: but he would ask Her Majesty's Ministers was not agriculture a part of the industry of the country? Would any one venture to say that the tenantry of the country were not in great distress? Would any one deny that, during the last year, they had lost a considerable portion of their capital? He did not blame the Government in particular for that, for no Government cared for agriculture. The moment they got into office, however much they might have thought of it before, from that moment they appeared altogether to forget the existence of agriculture. Upon the question of an Income-tax his Grace said, that if the tax should be continued, he trusted it would be re-enacted in an amended form as regarded the agriculturists. At present the farmer was called upon to pay it on the value of the land, although no tradesman was obliged to pay it except on his profits.—The Duke of MONTROSE expressed his regret that any interference with the Scotch system of banking was contemplated. He deprecated any change in a system practically so successful, and threatened the unanimous opposition of the Scotch constituencies to such an invasion of their interests.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE explained that the reason why agriculture was left out of the royal speech was because it was not in a flourishing condition. His lordship, in answer to the Duke of Montrose, stated that the English banking alone, and not currency, was what was threatened for Scotland.—Lord BROUGHAM expressed his satisfaction in strong but general terms with the several paragraphs of the Speech, and dwelt especially upon the happy effects which had been produced in both countries by the visit of the King of the French, and the improved state of public feeling towards England in that country.—Lord HARDWICKE did not at all sympathise with the regret that had been expressed that the agricultural interest had not been more explicitly mentioned in the Address from the throne. He believed, that if freed from all legislative enactments, it would ultimately share in the general prosperity, as it was now suffering from the late general depression; and he was convinced that if measures for its relief could be devised, they would be well received and anxiously considered.—The Earl of MALMESBURY suggested that a few words, if not in the speech, at least from the President of the Council, might be some consolation to the agricultural body, who were more depressed and more out of spirits at the present time than ever they were before. It would not have been the first time that the distress of a great class had been regretted in the Royal Speech.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, after guarding himself from the impression that because he moved no amendment, he agreed in all the opinions that had been expressed, and remarking especially upon the occurrences connected with the State Trials of last year, proceeded in reference to the subjects of difference which had been adjusted between this country and France, to inculcate the necessity in every instance of entering at the earliest period upon a full and explicit explanation. Without this, every insignificant island would become a plague-spot, and any unimportant transaction might be sufficient to disturb the peace of Europe. He objected altogether to the system of protectorates, which, as now established, he considered to be entirely unnatural, [illegible] reply to the observations of the noble marquis on the subject of mutual explanations, declared that the satisfactory adjustment of the questions respecting Tahiti had in this very manner been accomplished. The question of protectorates had not been in any degree involved. A subordinate officer, without instructions and without authority, had exceeded his duty; a representation of the circumstances, founded upon justice and urged with moderation, was made to the French Government; and thus a settlement was arrived at, of which neither party had any reason, or felt any disposition, to complain. He had asked nothing which he should not himself, in a similar case, have conceded, and upon this principle the negotiation had throughout proceeded.—Lord CAMPBELL then introduced the subject of law reform, and drew from the Lord Chancellor an explanation of the course he meant to adopt in the present session; and after a few words from Lord BROUGHAM, the Address was unanimously voted.—The LORD CHANCELLOR read a letter from Major-General Sir C. Napier, acknowledging the receipt of the vote of thanks passed by their Lordships for his services in Scinde.—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY was re-appointed Chairman of Committees for the 35th time.

Thursday.—The House met at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding with the Address to Her Majesty, after doing which they adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday.—On the Speaker taking the chair, Mr. CLIFTON took his seat for North Lancashire, and Mr. SOMES took his seat for Dartmouth. The SPEAKER read a letter from Sir C. Napier, acknowledging the vote of thanks passed by the House for the services of the army in Scinde.—Writs were ordered for South Wilts, the seat being vacant by the acceptance of the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert of the office of Secretary at War. Also for the borough of Buckingham, vacant by the acceptance of the Right Hon. Sir T. Fremantle of the office of Chief Secretary of Ireland. Also for the borough of Stamford, vacant by the acceptance of the Right Hon. Sir G. Clerk of the office of Master of the Mint. A writ was also ordered for the county of Tipperary, vacant by the decease of the Right Hon. Otway Cave.—Mr. YOUNG gave notice, on the part of Sir R. Peel, that it was his intention to make his financial statement to the House on Friday, February 14.—The Queen's Speech having been read, Mr. CHARTERIS moved, and Mr. T. BARING seconded, the Address, which was, as usual, a mere echo of the Speech, both speakers confining themselves to the topics suggested in the Speech, and contenting themselves, as they passed each paragraph severally in review, with declaring their perfect accordance in the sentiments expressed, and recommending them for the adoption of the House.—Lord J. RUSSELL could readily concur in the terms of the Address proposed on this occasion; but there were topics in the speech of Her Majesty, and in the address in reply to it, which called for remark. That the visits of foreign Sovereigns to this country might be a fresh guarantee for the continuance of peace must be the anxious wish and sanguine expectation of every man who heard him; but it was something singular, that though the mover and seconder of the address were both expressing hopes of peace, Ministers were themselves taking precautions against the contingency of war. He congratulated the House that our amicable relations with France were not broken; but said that he could not participate in those phrases of satisfaction which Ministers used in their own praise at the conclusion of the last session. He saw no cause for admiring either their wisdom or their moderation. What was the case? Pritchard had been put under arrest, and had been committed to solitary confinement by the French Commandant at Tahiti, on suspicion of encouraging insurrection among the natives; and it was communicated to him, that if insurrection took place, he should be held responsible for all the bloodshed which might ensue. Another French Commandant arrived, who thought that there was no ground for such severity, but who also thought that it was unsafe that Pritchard should remain at Tahiti, and therefore desired him to leave the island. It was impossible not to admit that if Captain Bruat thought the conduct of Pritchard to be a cause of danger, he had a right to remove him; but to place him in solitary confinement, and to say that he should be responsible with his life for any insurrection, was a gross outrage, and demanded reparation. He was of opinion that if there had been that cordial understanding between the two Governments of which their partisans boasted so loudly, a satisfactory arrangement might have been made without th delay of two months, and without any danger of war. The cloud which menaced the duration of peace had, however, blown away, and he now trusted that Ministers on both sides of the Channel would feel that it was for the interest of their respective nations and for the peace of the world, that they should remain united, and that they should not suffer their subordinate officers at a distance of three or four thousand leagues to disturb their common tranquillity. The present state of Spain had been produced by the cordial understanding between England and France, two of the most free nations of the earth; and that was a result which no man could be proud of. Whilst he hoped that that cordial understanding would yet ripen into friendship, he hoped that it would in future be employed in the promotion of commerce, in the propagation of intelligence, in the increase of freedom, in the destruction of slavery, and not for the substitution of a tyrannical Government for mild and constitutional sway. He was not satisfied with the revival of the Commission for the revision of the treaties on the slave-trade; yet, if they thought that the exercise of the right of search would interrupt peace, Ministers ought to tell the public what substitute they intended to propose for it. He referred to the paragraph in the Address relating to the abatement of agitation in Ireland, and said that, nevertheless, the accounts which he had received from that country referred to many symptoms which were highly menacing. No man said that there was fear of insurrection or increase of agitation; but no man could say that there was that love and affection for the Imperial Legislature which ought to exist in the inhabitants of a free country. He attributed that want of love and affection to the very injudicious proceedings which had been taken against several leading persons in that country. He then referred at great length to the O'Connell trial, and to the reversal of the judgment in the House of Lords. On the question of academical education in Ireland, he did not know whether it was a wise one or not; but as it had led Mr. Gladstone, whose talents he eulogised highly, to leave the Ministry of which he was so valuable a member, he hoped that some explanation would be given of a measure which had created such dissension, and appeared so objectionable to the right hon. gentleman. Every measure of that kind was calculated to excite suspicion, not only in England, but in Ireland also. He quoted the Charitable Bequests Bill as a proof of that position, and imputed the unpopularity of its reception in Ireland to the want of confidence in the sincerity of the party which proffered it, felt by the population of that country. That party had inflamed religious prejudices for years; and now, when its leaders adopted a better policy, could they wonder that the agitators should throw back upon them the phrases of "surpliced ruffians," and "demon priesthood," which they themselves once used? Such was the retribution which always fell on men who, instead of appealing to sound opinion, appealed to popular prejudice, and founded their power on deluding their countrymen. He expressed great satisfaction in seeing that the Government were now adopting several measures which they had condemned when proposed by their predecessors. He rejoiced in the present gratifying state of commercial and manufacturing industry, but reminded the House that the prosperity of 1836 had been followed by the distress of 1837, 1839, 1840. We might prevent such occurrences in future, not by interfering with the dispensations of Providence, but [illegible] manufacturers of this coun-nations. He implored the House to endeavour to ward off the mischief which other deficient harvests might bring upon us, by giving a freer inlet to the productions of other countries. He was convinced that protection was not the support, but the bane of agriculture. That the present duties on foreign corn should be diminished, he had no doubt, neither had the Government. He, therefore, insisted that they ought to reduce them—he would not now say to what amount—whilst we were as now in a state of calm, and not hastily under popular uproar, when it would be said that we could not refuse what we appeared to grant.—Mr. MILES wished to know why Lord John had proposed a fixed duty, if he was so convinced that protection was the bane of agriculture? Had his lordship found it convenient to make a compact alliance with the Corn Law League? If the income-tax were continued, he should claim that in the reduction of taxation the agricultural interest should not be forgotten.—Mr. GLADSTONE entered into an explanation of the reasons which had induced him to retire from the Government of which he had been a member. After thanking Lord John Russell for the kind terms in which he had spoken of his services, he observed that in the statement which he was about to make, he had no blame to cast upon any of his colleagues for any dereliction of their principles or their professions. He had not resigned on account of any matter connected with that department of the Government with which his services had long been connected. He had not resigned on account of any difference of opinion on the intentions, as far as he knew of them, of his late colleagues towards the Church either of England or of Ireland. He had stated to the world formerly, not in haste, but with great deliberation, the relations which a Christian State ought to have with respect to religion. At the close of last session Sir R. Peel mentioned his intention to inquire into the state of education in Ireland, and the spirit with which that education was conducted. He was not in possession of the measures which Government were about to bring forward; but as to Maynooth College, he must say that the views which Government took on that subject differed from those which he thought ought to be taken on such a question. The spirit of their measure with respect to the endowment of the College of Maynooth differed much from the spirit of that which he had deliberately recommended in the work alluded to. He had, therefore, taken a course which had caused him much pain, and which had separated him from men with whom he had acted in public life, and of whom he was bound to say he continued to regard them with unaltered sentiments of public regard and private attachment. The discussion of an increased grant to Maynooth was connected with excitable topics in this country; but he was not prepared to take part in any religious warfare against Sir R. Peel's measure—such as he anticipated it might be—nor to draw distinctions between the Roman Catholics of Ireland and others of his fellow-countrymen, so far as regarded their religious creed.—Sir R. PEEL commenced by referring to the subject of Mr. Gladstone, for whose talents he felt an admiration which could only be equalled by the attachment he felt for his private character. It was not on account of any difference on the commercial policy of the country that his right hon. friend had resigned—on such points there was, and always had been, the most complete unanimity between them—but it was one of such a subject, which he might be permitted to mention to the House, though his right hon. friend had declined to do so. On the motion of Mr. Wyse last year, he, as the organ of Government, had declared that it was their intention during the recess to apply themselves to the question of academical education in Ireland. He had then admitted that there were not the same facilities for academical education in that country that there were in Great Britain; and he was now prepared at an early period of the session to propose an increase of facilities for academical education in Ireland, open to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects. Among other institutions which would be benefited by that increased vote, the College of Maynooth would be one. Government intended to propose a liberal increase in the grant to that college, unaccompanied by any restrictions or regulations as to religious doctrines which would diminish its grace and favour. The sincerity with which Government was acting on this subject was evident from the fact that it had persevered in its intention with a full knowledge that it would lead to the resignation of so valuable a colleague as Mr. Gladstone; and yet the noble lord had taken a party advantage of the liberal policy adopted by Government, and had condescended to make a little insinuation against it, in order to persuade the people of Ireland to reject the proposal, because the Government were the authors of it. He then proceeded to defend the conduct of Government in respect to the Charitable Bequests Bill, which they had proposed as a matter of justice to Ireland. The noble Lord had thought it decorous to neutralise the benefit of that measure by again ripping up phrases which had been used in the heat of party contest; but who could wonder that the agitators used them, when the noble Lord forgot his dignity and followed their bad example? The words which the noble Lord had quoted were not used by him or by his friends, and he denied that he had ever used words of insult to the people of Ireland. He considered the speech of the noble Lord as a bitter party speech, and thought that his equanimity had been disturbed by the contrast which existed between the speech from the throne this year and those speeches which had been made when he was Minister. He then proceeded to justify the proceedings of the Government in the late negotiations with France on the subject of the treatment of Mr. Pritchard. He had never asked more of the French Government than that which he ultimately got—a fair and reasonable reparation. He should have felt that he was pursuing a course inconsistent with good policy if he had asked for a reparation humiliating to France. There was not one reparation made to us which he would not have made to France if the circumstances had been reversed. He thought it better to refrain from any discussion on the right of search until the papers connected with that subject were on the table of the House; the House would then be able to decide whether Government had made any compromise in the suppression of the detestable traffic in slaves. He wished the noble Lord would take the sense of the House on the question, whether the Government had dishonoured the fair fame of their country by their course, either with respect to Mr. Pritchard or to the right of search. He wished the House to declare whether the conduct of Government, in accepting a reparation which was honourable to both countries, was not a course dictated by wisdom, and justified by sound policy.—Sir C. NAPIER complained of the conduct of the French officers at Tahiti, and expressed his satisfaction at heart, that a considerable addition was going to be made to our naval force. If it had been made some time ago, we should have heard nothing of these outrages towards Mr. Pritchard.—Mr. PLUMPTRE was surprised that Sir R. Peel, after all his experience, was not convinced that conciliation to the Irish Roman Catholics was an inexpedient course.—Mr. WYSE thought Sir R. Peel had redeemed his promise of last session, but wished to know whether Trinity College, Dublin, was to be thrown open.—Mr. BELLEW approved of the grant to Maynooth, and Mr. VILLIERS said that he rejoiced in the declaration of Lord J. Russell, that protection was the bane, and not the support of agriculture, and called upon the House to watch with the closest attention the new financial measures of Government—to support them, if they abandoned, and to oppose them if they were based on, the protective principle.—Mr. SHEIL alluded, in a complimentary strain, to the resignation of Mr. Gladstone. He thought that Sir R. Peel would think it unfortunate that his right hon. friend should have determined to sacrifice the statesman to the author, and would have reason to exclaim, "Oh, that my friend had not written a book!" He gave Sir R. Peel high praise for [illegible]

the manner in which he made it. He also wished to know whether the University of Dublin was to be thrown open, as it was a point of honour with every Irish Roman Catholic to have its scholarships and fellowships thrown open, as they were not on an equality with their Protestant subjects so long as they were debarred from them. He concluded by asking Sir J. Graham if he was still prepared to bring in his Irish Registration Bill, and to repeat his pledge that conciliation had now reached its utmost limit?—Sir J. GRAHAM stated that it was the determination of Government to propose an Irish Registration Bill this session. He could not hold out any hope that Government would alter the main principle of the Charitable Bequests Bill, relative to the holding of land in perpetuity; but as it was not the intention of Government to place the regular clergy in a worse position than that they occupied before the Bill was introduced, they would have no objection to propose an alteration in it, if it should be found that the regular clergy were damnified by the 16th clause and another clause which had relation to it.—Mr. SHAW said, that the scholarships and fellowships of Trinity College, Dublin, could not be thrown open to Roman Catholics, as they were part and parcel of the Protestant Church of Ireland.—Lord PALMERSTON concurred in the satisfaction so generally expressed by the House at the late visit of foreign sovereigns to this country. He was not, however sanguine in his anticipations as to the real benefits to be derived from it. The effect of a good understanding between two countries was best seen when casual circumstances rose up which were calculated to disturb it. He thought that the cordial understanding so much boasted of last year had failed on the very first occasion on which it might have been useful. He denied the position laid down in France and acquiesced in here, that Mr. Pritchard was not a Consul when arrested at Tahiti. He had suspended his functions, quoad the intrusive French officers, who had seized on the island and deposed Queen Pomaré; but he was still in the performance of consular functions to all British subjects frequenting that island as merchants. If there had been any charge against Mr. Pritchard for endangering the tranquillity of the island, then he admitted that the French authorities in the island had a right to require him to depart; but it was incumbent on them, before they called on him to withdraw, to have placed their charge against him clearly under his view. No such charge had been laid before the French Chamber, and there was nothing to justify his removal from Tahiti, even in the most courteous manner. The French officer removed him, because he suspected that Mr. Pritchard had done something worthy of suspicion. Here then was a gross outrage committed; and it was the fault of the two Governments that it had been committed, for the protectorship of Tahiti never ought to have been allowed. That change in the Government of Tahiti could not be made without incurring the risk of a collision, which might bring the two Governments into a very awkward condition. If we had had a stout frigate or two on that station things would have passed in a manner more decorous, and less likely to have brought the two nations into collision. He would not say that there was great ground for the country to complain, as things turned out at last; still he could not say that the result justified those ardent expressions of satisfaction communicated to the French Government, but not repeated to Parliament at the close of the last session. He maintained that our Government had not acted altogether in a way satisfactory to this country. The right hon. baronet had described the outrage on Mr. Pritchard as a gross outrage, for which he had no doubt that reparation would be given by the French Government, and yet no formal reparation for it had ever been demanded by the British Government. He felt it necessary to say something on the new Commission appointed to examine the treaties of 1841. If that Commission were merely appointed to inquire whether any measures could be substituted effectually for the right of search it was a mere farce, and he was sorry that two such eminent men should be employed upon it. He was afraid that out of complaisance to the present Ministers of France, Government were about to sacrifice the great principles of a measure for which the British Parliament had always evinced the warmest interest. He was convinced that without a maritime police it would be quite impossible to keep down the slave trade. The clamour against that police had been raised in France, as it had been raised in Portugal, by slave-owners and slave-dealers, and that clique was now in possession of a considerable portion of the French press.—Sir R. INGLIS regretted that Lord Palmerston had taken the course he had done on the Tahiti question. For his own part, deeply interested as his feelings were against the slave-trade, he would not say or do anything to disturb the arrangement which had been made and accepted assatisfactory. After having heard from Mr. Sheil that he would make it a "point of honour" to insist on the University of Dublin being destroyed, he would warn all persons who might be disposed to countenance the measures of conciliation intimated by the Government, not to support any measures which they were told would not satisfy the people of Ireland, unless accompanied by others that would have the effect of injuring the Protestant Establishment in Ireland.—Lord SANDON was not prepared to join in the objection to the increased grant to the College of Maynooth.—Lord HOWICK said, that nobody had been more anxious than himself to suppress the slave-trade; but what had been the result of all the efforts made for that purpose by this country? Many valuable lives of our officers and seamen had been sacrificed; and we had not only failed in our object, but had even aggravated the horrors of the slave-trade. We had no right to exercise the police of the sea unless it were clear that in so doing we were promoting the interests of humanity. He was aware that such sentiments would not find favour with the House and the Government; but he was of opinion that if we abandoned our right of search, other nations would be compelled by a joint feeling of honour and humanity to prohibit the exercise of the slave-trade by their subjects.—The Address was then put from the chair, and carried unanimously.

Wednesday.—The business of the House this evening was confined to matters of preliminary detail. Mr. WALLACE put a question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, which was answered by Mr. GLADSTONE, who stated that the Railway Act of last session was applicable to nearly all the main lines, and that nearly all the companies had complied with the provisions respecting the conveyance of third-class passengers at the rate of one penny per mile. They had also complied with the suggestions of the Board of Trade, in furnishing seats to third-class carriages, and providing for the protection of passengers from the weather.—The moving of the usual sessional orders raised a somewhat desultory conversation. On that which related to the interference of peers in elections, Mr. WILLIAMS expressed his opinion that the resolution should either be enforced stringently or abandoned altogether.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied that this sessional order was their only security or safeguard against the undue interference of peers at elections, and he should regret its abolition.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE ridiculed the gravity with which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had made this statement. He seemed quite horrified at the bare idea of the interference of peers, knowing, at the same time, that there was not a county or a borough member behind him or before him who did not consult peers, even to going down on their knees, in order to obtain their influence and interference at elections. At the present time, but for a noble duke, there might be no Secretary for Ireland. Let them abolish the order altogether, and enable peers openly to appear on the hustings, for the more they mingled with the people the more they would learn of their true interests.—Mr. HUME took the same view of the question, and on the order being put to the vote, the gallery was cleared for a division, but the order was agreed to.—On another of the petitions in favour of private bills, a discussion arose on the allowance of a longer time in the case of railway bills than for ordinary private bills, which, on the suggestion of Sir R. Peel, was adjourned. The Address to her Majesty was then brought up.—Sir R. PEEL stated that the report on harbours of refuge had not yet received the deliberate consideration of Government, and he was not prepared lightly to recommend the expenditure of 2,500,000*l.* or 3,000,000*l.*, without a more thorough consideration. It was in contemplation to improve the harbour of Holyhead, with a view to the communication between England and Ireland; but the other recommendations in the report, which were of great importance, were referred to the Admiralty, who would cause farther investigations to be made.—Sir J. GRAHAM stated that on this day se'nnight he would introduce a bill to alter and amend the law of settlement.—Mr. HUME made some observations on the propriety of large reductions of taxation, and praised the Government for their moderation and firmness in maintaining the honour of our flag, the credit of the country, and the maintenance of peace, in the affair of Tahiti.—Mr. WILLIAMS dwelt on similar topics; and Mr. S. CRAWFORD pressed on the consideration of Sir R. Peel the alarming condition of Ireland, and hoped that the present session would not pass over without the introduction of a measure on the security of tenure, by which the poor man might have a lien on the land.—Mr. WALLACE asked if he would be pledged to support the renewal of the income-tax by voting for the Address?—Sir R. PEEL replied that the Address was very cautiously worded, and would not necessarily pledge any Member.—Mr. WAKLEY remarked on the essential distinction between a property and an income-tax; and cautioned the House from being led away by the prosperous passages of the Royal Speech, into the conclusion that there was no existing distress. The fact was that the majority of the House were utterly ignorant of the appalling misery at present endured by the unskilled labourers. He would much rather that the law of settlement were altogether abolished than amended, unless it were dealt with so as to remove evils which it inflicted on the labouring poor, such as the forcible removal of a widow to the place of her husband's settlement where she might have no relations, and be quite unknown. He also cited an instance of the suffering endured, and the distances walked (sometimes 21 miles), in large unions, by poor and diseased paupers, when applying for relief. The continuance of such a system was alienating the affections of the working classes, and endangering the security of the property of the rich; and he hoped that Sir J. Graham would see the propriety, as well as safety, of still further mitigating the Poor-law. He then adverted to the resolution of the Irish Members not to attend this session in their places in Parliament. The Irish Members had never fairly tested the good disposition of the Legislature; instead of absenting themselves from Parliament, they should come with a regular series of matured and judicious measures for the benefit of Ireland; and if those measures had been regularly refused, he believed that the people of England, who were characteristically fond of justice, would ere this have joined them in demanding Repeal.—The Report was then agreed to, and the Address ordered to be presented by the whole House.

Thursday.—The House met at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding with the Address to the Queen. On their return, the SPEAKER read Her Majesty's gracious answer.—Mr. MACAULAY asked for some information relative to the course contemplated by Government with regard to banking in Scotland.—Sir R. PEEL declined to give any intimation on the subject; but "hoped no inference would be drawn as to the intentions of Government from the explanations he had given."—Sir G. GREY asked for the production of the correspondence which had taken place between the British and French Governments on the question of Tahiti.—Sir R. PEEL declined to make public the entire correspondence, on the ground that it contained communications between naval officers of both countries, of an irritating character. The whole affair had been brought to an amicable termination, and it was not necessary for the vindication of the character of Mr. Pritchard, appointed as he had been to other consular duties, to incur the risk of reviving irritating topics. He had no objection to give the results of the negotiations—that is, the letter of M. Guizot and the answer of Lord Aberdeen.—In reply to Sir G. GREY, Sir J. GRAHAM announced that he had no hope of bringing in any Bill for the regulation of Ecclesiastical Courts which would be satisfactory to the present Parliament.—Sir R. PEEL, in reply to Mr. EWART, expressed a hope that the joint mediation of France and England (and he trusted that Brazil would join them) would be effectual in putting an end to the shocking and lamentable war between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video.—Lord G. SOMERSET moved for leave to bring in the first of six bills relative to the arrangements for the private business of the House, which brought about a revival of the question respecting the time to be allowed for the presentation of petitions in favour of railways, which was discussed and adjourned on the previous day. The proposal of Government, which Lord Howick considered quite satisfactory, was stated, first by Lord G. Somerset, and afterwards by Sir R. Peel. The promoters of railways which have been unfavourably reported on by the Board of Trade are not to be restrained as to the time when they may present petitions, and it will not be obligatory on them to do so until 14 days after the presentation of those reports from the Board which relate to their projects.—Colonel SIBTHORP, and afterwards Mr. WARLEY, revived the topic which Lord Howick had adverted to on the previous day, as to the rumours which implicate the Board of Trade in collusive proceedings with parties who were enabled to purchase largely in the lines favourably reported on before the reports appeared.—Mr. WARLEY said that one gentleman had made 40,000*l.* by the sale of his shares on Saturday week. He also strongly censured the mode in which private business was managed before committees of the House. He had been informed that some barristers, during last session, had made 6000 or 8000 guineas by conducting business before committees. He did not wish to come in collision with the profession, or to impute motives; but they were paid for their time, instead of by the job; and the seniors were constantly in the habit of getting the committees adjourned from time to time, detaining witnesses, and incurring an enormous expense, in order to suit their own convenience, while the proceedings were protracted by enormously prolix speeches. If Sir R. Peel paid a doctor 10 guineas a day so long as he was ill, when did he think he would get well? If he hired a cab by the hour, leaving it to the cabman to search for the Mansion House, when did he think he would have an interview with the Lord Mayor? The whole system of managing private business before committees required reform.—Mr. GLADSTONE remarked that if the deliberations of the Board of Trade were open, as serious inconveniences would be produced as those arising from the mode in which business was managed before committees. He did not deny that rumours were abroad, impeaching the Board. It was not surprising that such should be the case. But he was satisfied that the public generally reposed confidence in its decisions. It was easy for acute individuals, acquainted with the circumstances and the probabilities, to anticipate the particular lines of railways which were favourably reported on; in the Board itself every precaution was taken to insure entire secrecy, and its members had no interest to warp their decisions. As to shortening the addresses of counsel before committees, the matter would be found one of great difficulty. When arrangements were made last session to curtail proceedings before select committees they were immediately met by the complaint that they were depriving parties the opportunity of making a sufficient and satisfactory statement of their cases. After some further conversation, the of the bills to regulate the proceedings in private business relating to companies and railways.—Lord CLEMENTS moved for, and obtained, after some conversation, returns relative to the Irish constabulary, &c. Some other business, of a merely routine nature, was transacted.—On the order of the day for taking into consideration the Queen's speech, Mr. COBDEN complained of the omission of all reference to agricultural distress in the speech. He believed that legislation was at the bottom of that distress; and therefore he proposed that on this occasion, as on all former occasions, there should be a committee to inquire into the cause of it. If the hon. Member for Somersetshire, to whom he had communicated his intention of proposing such a committee, would agree to support his proposition, they would compel the Government to grant it, as the gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House who had voted for such a committee last year would, if joined by the hon. Member for Somersetshire and his Parliamentary friends of the Protection Society, be too strong for the right hon. Baronet opposite to resist them; all he wanted was the fullest, the fairest, and the most impartial inquiry. He would give the hon. Member a week or a fortnight to consider of his offer; and if the hon. Member should refuse it, he should feel it his duty at the end of that time to renew his motion of last year.—Mr. MILES acknowledged the courtesy of Mr. Cobden, but feared the kind concert which he proffered, and therefore must be permitted to decline it. His agricultural friends had no intention to apply for such a committee. For himself, personally, he had no objection to it, but he hoped that the hon. gentleman would not put him upon it, as well for private reasons as for this, that he had been formerly a member of the committee which sat for two years on the subject of agricultural distress, and, at the end of that time, made no report.—Mr. M. GIBSON said, it would be remarkable if the House, after all its experience, should reject this proposition for a committee. A Corn-law was not a Corn-law without a committee on agricultural distress. There was at present a new Corn-law. There was distress consequent on it. Why was there not, as on all former occasions, a committee on agricultural distress? He called on the right hon. Member for Tamworth to contradict the statement that he had given an assurance to the Protection Society that he was prepared to maintain at all events the present system of Corn-laws.—Mr. G. BANKES declined the coalition with the Anti-Corn-law League which had just been proffered to him by its founder, Mr. Cobden, and assured him that he would oppose the appointment of such a committee as he had proposed. He denied the truth of Lord J. Russell's declaration that protection was not the support, but the bane of agriculture, and asked that noble lord whether, if such were his conscientious opinion, he had not been guilty of something very like a fraud upon the farmers when he proposed, a few years ago, a fixed duty for their protection? In reference to the observation that if Her Majesty asked the Emperor of Russia, on account of his visit to his country, to make some relaxation in his dominions of the restrictive duties imposed upon the importation of English produce, his Imperial Majesty might ask her in return to take some steps for the freer introduction of corn and timber the produce of Russia, he remarked, that the step which we had already taken was a great stride, and that other Powers should make concessions to us before we ventured on any further concessions to them. He admitted the existence of distress at present among the agricultural classes, but attributed it partly to the deficiency of all other crops save that of wheat in the late harvest, but chiefly to the recent alterations made in our protective system.—Mr. BRIGHT asserted that the speeches made by those gentlemen who called themselves the defenders of the agricultural interest must convince every one that they were but hollow supporters of that interest which they undertook to defend. They said that our recent legislation was the cause of agricultural distress. They were themselves, however, parties to that legislation which had produced that distress. They ought, therefore, either to enter upon inquiry and retrace their steps, or else go home to their estates for the purpose of reducing their rents to meet the distress which had resulted from their own unwise legislation. He was aware that they considered the appointment of a committee on agricultural distress an unsafe measure at present; for such a committee could neither recommend a return to higher protection, nor a repeal of those taxes which pressed exclusively on the farmer. A return to the protective system in the present temper of the country was impossible; and to gain rent they had already repealed all the taxes on the farmers which formerly went into the Exchequer, but now went into their own pockets. After a bitter attack on the conduct pursued by the landlords, he proceeded to attribute to our present restrictive laws the wretched and impoverished condition of our peasantry, and the wild and uncultivated condition of the land in many parts of the country. In his recent visit to Buckinghamshire, the first thing which met his view was land on which you could not employ a scythe for the number of ant-hills, and the next was the multitudinous chimneys of the union workhouse at Aylesbury. All classes of agriculturists were coming to a condition in which they would soon spontaneously come forward to demand a repeal of the Corn-laws. The farmers were scarcely able to pay their rents, and the labouring population was increasing so fast, that employment could not be afforded them. Even now there was a fierce competition for that employment at scanty wages; and, though the landlords would do nothing to protect the labourers against that competition, they came forward in that house, and asked for protection for themselves against the competition of foreigners. He warned them not to deceive themselves with the notion that the agitation for the repeal of the Corn-laws would be put down by years of prosperity among the manufacturing classes. No; it had gone on increasing in times of difficulty, and now that the manufacturing population was flourishing, there was no knowing what sums might be raised for the purpose of getting rid of the Corn-laws, if the Council of the League thought proper to ask for it. All the protective measures which the landlords once possessed had slipped from their grasp: all, or nearly all the measures of free trade which they had opposed had been carried in spite of them; and even the Conservative Ministry, which they had brought into power, were leaving them and coming over to the advocates of free trade. He, therefore, called upon them to be wise in time and to give up freely, and with a show of virtue, that system of law which had inflicted such tremendous evils upon the country.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN observed that he was prepared not only to vote for such a committee as Mr. Cobden had recommended, but also to serve upon it, if it were appointed. He reminded the hon. Member for Durham, that to get into a passion, and to employ a bullying tone, was not the mode to convince the gentlemen of England of the truth of his doctrines. If Mr. Bright thought, that by such language as he had used that night, he could set the labourers and tenantry of England against their landlords, he would soon find that he was lamentably mistaken.—Mr. VILLIERS expressed his surprise that the gentlemen opposite should have refused the option which had been given them that evening. He contended that it was owing to the intervention of Providence, and not to any relaxation of the restrictive system, that we were now safe from the dangerous consequences which that system always produced. It had been said that prices had fallen because there had been a plentiful Wheat harvest; and the agriculturists now complained of those prices, and consequently of the plentiful harvest which had produced them.—Sir R. PEEL declared that he would not be drawn into this discussion upon the Corn Laws, which had been brought on without any regular notice. He made several pleasant allusions to Mr. Cobden's proposal, for a coalition between himself and his friends on the one side, and Mr. Miles and the supporters of the agricultural interest on the other, for the purpose of forcing the Government into conceding a Committee on agricultural distress. Mr. Cobden had offered Mr. Miles and his party a week or a fortnight for the consideration of his project; and he (Sir R. Peel) thought that his hon. friends would have acted more prudently had they taken advantage of the delay which was offered them, and had so saved the House from a long and unexpected debate. They had, however, committed themselves, and must now take the consequences of their own candour and frankness. The conduct of Mr. Cobden, and of the gentleman who followed him, was full of courtesy, and therefore he listened with the more regret to the vituperations and taunts which Mr. Bright had thrown out against the landlords of England. He assured Mr. Gibson that he had not had any communication with the Protection Society, and that he had not given to any person assurances on the subject of the Corn-laws contrary to those which he had publicly made in that house. It could not be stated with truth that the agricultural interest generally was suffering distress. Different districts in England, Scotland, and Ireland might be in different degrees of comfort; but, even where there was distress, it was not occasioned by the recent alterations either in the Corn-law or in the tariff. That distress could not be relieved by legislative interference. A return to the protective system would not cure it, and even if it would for a time, he would not be the man to re-introduce it.—Lord J. MANNERS remarked that if the farmers and labourers were suffering under competition, how much would it be increased if foreign competition were added to it? The tone and temper evinced by Mr. Cobden and Mr. Gibson led him to indulge in the hope that the time was not far distant when there might be a union of all parties in that House on behalf of the labouring poor.—Mr. BROTHERTON contended that we had now an increasing population—that that population must be fed—and that it could not be fed much longer without the removal of our restrictions on commerce.—The Queen's Speech was then taken into consideration, and some business of mere form was gone through.

Friday.—Sir R. PEEL gave notice, that when he made his financial statement in Committee of Ways and Means, on Friday next, he shou'd propose that the Income Tax in England, and the Stamp Duties in Ireland, should be continued for a further limited period.—The House went into a Committee of Supply pro formâ.—Mr. HUME said he should take an early opportunity of asking the right honourable Baronet some question respecting the finances of the country.—Lord J. RUSSELL said, as the right hon. Baronet proposed to make a financial statement at an unusually early period of the session, he thought it would be inexpedient to ask any questions. He did not understand that the right honourable Baronet intended to add any new principle in respect to the finance of the country.—Sir R. PEEL: Certainly not; he was taking a special course under special circumstances.—After a short conversation the House resumed. Several motions for returns and notices of motion were made. Writs were ordered to issue for East Cornwall, in the room of Lord St. Germains, and for Buckinghamshire, in the room of Mr. C. S. Murray, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. The House then adopted a series of resolutions respecting the receipt of new railway bills, and adjourned at an early hour to Monday.

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols closed at 99¾ and 99⅞; Reduced Three per Cents., 100⅛; Exchequer Bills, 56 to 62 prem. Bank Stock, 213½; India, 282; and India Bonds, 72 pm.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—J. B. RAYNER and T. S. CARTER, Coleman street, City, lamp manufacturers—C. S. HAWARD, Colchester, Essex, grocer—S. HUMM, late of 146, Brick lane, Bethnal Green, silk hat manufacturer—J. MILLER, Southampton, boot maker—T. WESTON, Southampton, plumber—J. ASHBARRY, Holm Lacy, Herefordshire, farmer—W. ASTON, sen., Aston juxta Birmingham, victualler—J. WHITLOW, Manchester, laceman—J. HEGGINBOTHAM and G. PECK, Manchester, machina makers—J. BEARD, Deptford, builder—G. HAYWOOD, Luton, Bedfordshire, bricklayer—W. H. COLT, Long Melford, Suffolk, grocer—S. RUGG, Chamberlaine towne, Southampton, carpenter—J. BRADSHAW, High-street, Camden Town, coal merchant—S. TAVENER, Sovereign mews, Paddington, bricklayer—J. RICHARDSON, Fish street-hill, City, boot and shoe maker.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Royal Exchange.—The memorial signed by Messrs. Rothschild, Baring, and several other merchants and brokers, proposing that the whole of the open area of this building should be covered in, was considered at the Gresham Committee on Friday. It prayed that the area should be covered with a skylight, and that some provision should be made to check the currents of air from the arched doorway in stormy weather. The memorial was discussed at great length, and it was resolved to direct the clerk to communicate to the memorialists, that in September, 1838, before the Gresham Committee took any steps for erecting a new building, they applied by circular to most of the leading merchants and brokers, requesting their opinion whether the new Exchange should be a covered hall or partially open, as in the original Exchange of Sir T. Gresham, and in the one recently destroyed; that the Committee took every opportunity by personal inquiry of ascertaining the wishes of their fellow-citizens on the subject; that the result of the circular and of these inquiries was that a large majority wished the Exchange to be partially open, as heretofore, alleging the great noise in the Bourse at Paris, and the necessity for ventilation of the most free kind, as their reasons for the decision; that in consequence of this determination they directed a part of the merchants' area to be left uncovered as before, but that for greater shelter they further directed that the covered space should be increased from one-half (the proportion of the space covered in the late building) to two-thirds, and that the architect of the present edifice had strictly followed out these instructions; and that for these reasons the Committee could not comply with the wishes of the merchants; that with regard to currents of air, the Committee had directed such inner doors to be put up at the north and south entrances as might check the draughts, at the same time providing that such doors should not interfere with the extensive uses of the area of the Exchange as a thoroughfare to all the neighbouring streets, the Bank, Stock Exchange, and other important public and private buildings of the neighbourhood.

New Houses of Parliament.—The Lords Committee have made the following report on the progress of the building:—"That the Committee have met and considered the subject matter to them referred, and examined witnesses in relation thereto; and it appears to the Committee that an understanding was entered into when the arrangements for the existing accommodation of the Houses of Parliament was determined upon, that the new House of Lords, with its necessary appurtenances, should be proceeded with more speedily than other parts of the building. That there is no record of any orders having been officially given, and no steps have been taken in accordance with such an undertaking. That the Committee appointed last session, in their report to the House recommended that the architect should so conduct his operation as to secure the occupation of the new House of Lords, with temporary fittings, at the commencement of the session of 1844; and that if he should find that more time would be required, that he should report the same to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests, in order that such report might be communicated in due time to the House. That instead of the new House of Lords being covered in by Christmas last, as was stated to be practicable by Mr. Barry, in his evidence of last year, it is now only in course of erection. That Mr. Barry now states that, if great exertions are made, the House of Lords, the lobbies at each end of it, the corridors connecting the same with the front building and the libraries, the committee and other rooms belonging to the House of Lords, may be covered in before winter; and the committee having examined the building, with the clerk of the works and one of the contractors, are of opinion that the whole of these apartments may be prepared for the use of the House of Lords by April next. That the Committee do not recommend that any temporary fittings should be prepared, but that all the works connected with the buildings above mentioned should be advanced with the greatest possible speed. And the Committee have examined Mr. Barry with respect to the style of internal fitting and decoration, and he has distinguished those parts of the building to which he considers the more costly and elaborate style should be applied. In respect to the remaining portions of the internal arrangements, the Committee entertain the strongest opinion, both in reference to economy and despatch, that the committee-rooms and secondary apartments should be completed in the most simple and solid manner consistent with the character of the general building, but not involving any extraordinary expense. In respect to the deviations from the original plan it has been satisfactory to learn that they have not been of a character to vary or affect the builder's contract; and that no future deviations are to be allowed, without the previous sanction and authority of the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests. And the Committee have directed the minutes of evidence taken before them to be laid before your Lordships.

Agricultural Protection Society.—The first anniversary dinner of this Society took place on Monday, at Freemasons' Hall, and was, perhaps, the largest dinner ever known in that building. From 800 to 900 persons were present, including a great number of noblemen and members of Parliament, in addition to landed proprietors, farmers, and agriculturists, from all parts of the country. It is said that there was not a single county which had not several representatives present; and, notwithstanding the large attendance, it was found impossible to accommodate within the walls of the tavern one-third of those who applied for admission. The Duke of Richmond officiated as President, and the Duke of Buckingham as Vice-President. After the usual loyal toasts, the chairman proposed the "Army and Navy," which was acknowledged by Lord Ingestre for the navy, and by Sir John Trollope, M.P., for the army. Lord Beaumont then proposed "The Protection Society," and alluded to the disappointment of the agriculturists in finding that what they all considered would be an agricultural Parliament had sanctioned the Corn Bill and Tariff of the present Ministry, and had afterwards allowed them to carry the Canada Corn Bill, and the Bill for grinding Corn in Bond. His lordship concluded a long speech by expressing his fears that some measure was now contemplated by Government having for its object the diminution of protection. Mr. Baker, of Writtle, acknowledged the toast at the request of the Chairman. Mr. Hobbs, of Mark's Hall, Essex, then proposed "Success to Agriculture," to which Mr. Buck, M.P., responded. Mr. Miles, M.P., proposed the next toast, "Trade and Commerce," which was acknowledged by Mr. Newdigate, M.P., in the absence of Mr. Spooner, M.P. for Birmingham. Mr. Mills, of Enford, Wilts, proposed "The Landlords," which was acknowledged by the Earl of Malmesbury. Mr. Sotheron, M.P., proposed "The Tenant Farmers," as "the influential body from whom that Society emanated, who were, in fact, the mainstay of it, and who, in his judgment, were the marrow and pith of Old England." Mr. Jonas, of Ickleton, Cambridgeshire, returned thanks on behalf of the farmers, and said that nothing could induce the tenant farmers to continue improvements unless they were secure, not only of long leases, but of being able to look to the Government, be they who they might, not only to continue the present inadequate protection, but also, if necessary, to retrace the steps which had proved so injurious. Mr. S. O'Brien, M.P., proposed "The Labourers," and expressed his satisfaction in offering that toast to the company, as it showed that in such meetings as the present they recognised the claims of a body of men not the least numerous, and not the least interested in the protection of agriculture. The Duke of Buckingham then proposed the health of their chairman the Duke of Richmond, and after paying a high compliment to his Grace for his staunch support of the agricultural interest, congratulated the farmers that they had such a friend at the head of their ranks. The Duke of Richmond in acknowledging the toast, declared his belief that if agricultural protection was diminished one iota more than at present, landlords, tenantry, and labourers would cease to exist as a class in this country. He should think it the brightest jewel in his coronet to have it to say that he was a friend to the labourer, and in regard to the tenant farmers, there could not be a doubt that the landlords of England could trust their tenants; he knew it from his knowledge of the tenantry, and he declared that he would rather lose every acre he possessed than let his farms by tender. This was no new opinion of his; he had expressed it three or four years ago; he maintained it then, and he would maintain it to the last day of his life. He would resign the chair whenever they found a better man to fill it, but as long as he was their chairman he would follow them through every conflict they might be engaged in. Mr. Pusey, M.P. for Berkshire, proposed the health of "Their Vice-President." The Duke of Buckingham, in acknowledging the toast, said that he had for many years, to the utmost of his power, endeavoured to fight the battles of the farmer in both houses. His services might be of little value, but they were honestly rendered; and though he had met with difficulties, and seen hopes and expectations blighted, still he had not been deterred; but he was prepared to stand up again and again to fight their battles. However, he had no professions or promises to make; what he had done was on record and before the country: as he had ever been, unaltered he stood before them; he would go along with his noble friend opposite in defending what remained to the farmer of protection. He would only add, that had this meeting taken place some time ago, no Ministry would have proposed those late measures the effects of which they had to deplore so much. "The Committee of the Central Society," was the last toast. It was proposed by Mr. G. Bankes, M.P. for Dorsetshire, and acknowledged by Mr. Ellman, of Glynde, Sussex.

Meeting in honour of Mr. Duncombe.—About 300 persons assembled at a public soirée on Monday evening at White Conduit House, in honour of Mr. T. S. Duncombe, M.P. Dr. Wade took the chair, supported by Mr. Duncombe and Mr. Feargus O'Connor; Mr. Robarts, a delegate from the Miners' Association, &c., all of whom addressed the meeting on various topics of the day.

The Window-Tax.—The Marylebone Vestry on Saturday held its weekly meeting, when, upon the requisition of a large number of the parishioners, the question as to the propriety of petitioning Parliament for an immediate repeal of the window-tax was brought under discussion. The Rev. Dr. Spry presided. The vestry was attended by Sir C. Napier, M.P.; Mr. Hume, M.P.; Sir J. M'Taggart, M.P., and several other influential persons. The vestry having been addressed by several gentlemen, resolutions in favour of a repeal of the tax were unanimously adopted.

The Great Britain Steam-ship.—During the week the neighbourhood of Blackwall has been in a continued state of excitement, owing to the thousands of persons that have gone down to the banks of the river, in order to view this stupendous vessel. In the course of Sunday alone it is calculated that upwards of 60,000 persons visited this part of the metropolis. In consequence of the great anxiety manifested to inspect this monster steam-ship, the fee of 3*s.* 6*d.* is demanded to view the engines, saloons, &c.

The Royal Society.—The invitations issued for the President, Lord Northampton's soirées, date the first for Saturday the 22d inst., to be followed by three others.

Post-office.—On Thursday an order was issued by the Postmaster-General, in pursuance of a communication from the Home Secretary, for the abolition of the board appointed to open the letters of persons suspected of having treasonable intentions against this and foreign governments. This board (which was presided over by Mr. Beade, of the foreign letter department, who had under him a few confidential clerks) was established by a patent during the Pitt Administration.

Launch of the Terrible.—This magnificent steam-ship, the first of a fleet of war-steamers which Government intend to equip, was launched at Deptford on Thursday, in the presence of 10,000 persons. She is 1847 tons, and will have engines of 800 horse-power, and carry 28 guns.

Murder and Suicide in Finsbury.—On Friday Mr. Joseph Barry, an old and respectable parishioner of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, a surgeons' instrument maker, residing in Luke-street, Finsbury, murdered his wife and destroyed himself, by cutting their throats. Mr. Barry was 63, and his wife 52 years of age; and they had a family of five sons and a daughter, grown up, and well provided for. It appeared at the inquest that Mr. Barry had been for some time in an excited state of mind in consequence of not being able to execute a contract for some instruments, owing to the negligence of his workmen. He had borne an excellent character, and was a good husband. The jury returned a verdict of temporary insanity.

The late Murder at Bethnal Green.—The coroner's inquest and the inquiry before the magistrates respecting this murder, have terminated in the committal of the prisoner, James Tapping, on the capital charge.

Fires in Churches.—On Sunday morning, shortly before divine service, a fire broke out in the spire of Chiswick church, which is composed principally of wood and lead. There was a good supply of water, and the flames were confined to that portion of the steeple where they originated, but they were not entirely extinguished until considerable damage had been done; the spire being much burnt and injured by the molten lead. The ceiling was also damaged down to the ground-floor with water. —On Monday morning a fire was discovered in one of the flues of the vestry of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, where the parish documents are preserved. It was discovered so early that but little damage was done, except the injury to the books and furniture by the escape of the soot.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Feb. 1:—West Districts, 142; Northern, 189; Central, 195; Eastern, 221; Southern, 264; Total, 1011; males, 507; females, 504. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1236; males, 626; females, 610.

Provincial.

Aylesbury.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of this town and its vicinity was held in the County-hall on Monday, for the purpose of adopting a petition to Parliament in favour of a repeal of the Game Laws. The meeting was numerously and respectably attended. Dr. Lee, of Hartwell-house, presided. The petition was unanimously adopted after a long discussion of the general subject, in which Mr. Bright, M.P., took part.

Badminton.—On Saturday this place was the scene of great festivities in honour of the Marquis of Worcester, eldest son of the Duke of Beaufort, who attained his 21st year on that day. The Duke of Cambridge honoured the Marquis with his company, and the whole of the Duke of Beaufort's tenantry, with the inhabitants of the district for miles around were invited to partake of the rejoicings and hospitalities on the occasion.

Basingbourne.—An application was made about a fortnight since, to the Court of Queen's Bench, for a peremptory mandamus to issue to the vicar of Basingbourne, to command him to bury the body of Jane Rumbell, a child which had remained unburied since September, 1840, the date of its death. It appeared from the statement made by Counsel that on the 17th Sept., 1840, a demand had been made on the vicar to bury the child, and he refused to do so on the ground that the child had not been baptised by a minister of the Church of England, but only by a Dissenting minister. This request and a similar refusal had been repeated on the 26th May, 1841, and the parties therefore determined to apply to the Court. The judges thought that there was no proof of the sufficient warning given to the vicar upon which a mandamus could rest, and suggested that a formal notice should be served upon him. This was done on Wednesday week, informing him that the body would be brought for interment at four o'clock the next day. The vicar, having obtained the services of the Rev. W. Coulcher, vicar of Whaddon, the interment took place at the appointed time, in the presence of some hundreds of spectators. This case has often been before the public, and argued repeatedly in the Ecclesiastical Court.

Crediton.—The Devonport Independent states, that Mr. J. H. Hippisley, has given directions that all the game in his extensive preserves at Postbury, near Crediton, shall be destroyed, seeing the great injury that arises to farmers from the preservation of game, and accordingly many hundred hares, pheasants, rabbits, &c., have been shot during the last few days, and their nests given to the neighbouring farmers and labourers.

Eton.—On Saturday four paupers in the workhouse of Eton Union were charged before the magistrates with creating a disturbance in the house on the preceding day, with assaulting the master and his assistant, and with having broken 500 panes of glass in the building. One of the prisoners was a woman. They were all convicted of breaking the windows, and were sentenced to be imprisoned.

Exeter.—We gave in our last the letter of the Bishop to the Rev. F. Courtenay, which led to that gentleman's abandonment of the surplice in preaching. The correspondence which passed between his lordship and the Mayor of Exeter, Mr. Woolmer, has since been published; but it adds little to what is already known to our readers. The local papers give the particulars of several meetings which have been held lately at West Teignmouth, to consider several communications which have passed between the parishioners, the Bishop, and the incumbent, the Rev. Mr. Gwynne, in reference to that gentleman's use of the surplice in preaching. At the last meeting on the 28th Jan., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"1. That the continued use of the surplice in the pulpit by the Rev. L. Gwynne is highly offensive to the parishioners, and most injurious to the interests of the Church, and can only tend to perpetuate that discord and hostility which now unhappily exist between him and his flock, whose spiritual welfare he appears to treat as a secondary consideration. 2. That Mr. Gwynne's letter to the senior churchwarden, which has just been read, is exceedingly uncourteous and most disrespectful to his parishioners, and is more likely to increase than allay the dissatisfaction which his former conduct has occasioned. 3. That Mr. Gwynne's conduct has lamentably promoted the cause of dissent in this parish, and upon him will rest the awful responsibility of alienating from his ministry the affections of his parishioners, and the consequent inutility of his clerical ministrations. 4. That the relinquishment of the surplice in many parishes in Exeter and elsewhere in this diocese with the sanction of the Bishop, proves clearly that the continued use of it by our incumbent is not now in compliance with any direction from his Lordship, or of any law of the Church, and appears to arise from an unbending disposition, peculiarly unbefitting a minister of the gospel of peace. But if the incumbent feels that he cannot conscientiously comply with the wishes of his parishioners, then it is the opinion of this meeting that the spiritual interests of his congregation require that he should forthwith resign his incumbency."

Guernsey.—The Report of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council on the affairs of Guernsey and Jersey has been presented to the Queen, and ordered by Her Majesty to be registered in the usual course. The Lords report as follows on the several questions arising out of the petitions of the Royal Court against Major-Gen. Napier the lieut.-governor:—In respect to the first question,—"Residents having acquired such domicile in Guernsey as hereinbefore stated, are not subject to be deported but in such manner as the captain, with the advice of the bailiff and jurats, shall order and appoint in this respect." Their lordships are of opinion, that the advice of the bailiff and jurats is not necessary for the purpose of authorising the captain to exercise the power mentioned in the said question. That under the term "captain" their lordships consider that the governor, and in his absence, or in case there should be no governor, the lieut.-governor, or the person exercising the powers of governor or lieut.-governor for the time being, are included. In respect of the second question —"That the bailiff and jurats of the Royal Court are individually entitled to take part and speak in all conferences with his excellency the lieut.-governor."—Their lordships are of opinion, that the lieut.-governor has the sole authority of appointing the time and place of conference, and that the bailiff and jurats of the Royal Court are individually entitled to take part and speak in all conferences with his excellency the lieut.-governor. In respect to the third question—"That the aforesaid writ of pardon ought to have been verified and registered by the Royal Court before it was executed," their lordships are of opinion, that the writ of pardon in the petitions mentioned did not require to have been verified and registered by the Royal Court before it was executed. In respect to the fourth question—"That the lieut.-governor was not warranted in enforcing obedience to the said writ of pardon by a threat of military force," their lordships are of opinion, that it was the duty of the Portier immediately to have discharged the prisoner on the production to him of the pardon under the sign manual. But the Portier not being the servant of the lieut.-governor for the purpose of the custody of the prisoner, their lordships are of opinion, that the lieut.-governor was not warranted in enforcing obedience to the writ of pardon by the threat of military or other force. Her Majesty, having taken the said report into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to approve the same. Whereof the lieut.-governor or commander-in-chief for the time being, the bailiff and jurats of the Royal Court, and all other Her Majesty's officers and persons concerned within the said island are to pay due obedience and govern themselves accordingly.

Isle of Man.—The storm which we mentioned last week as having prevailed very generally in St. George's Channel, was severely felt in this island, and several vessels were wrecked with loss of life. The Scotch papers mention numerous disasters which occurred near Dumfries and other places, and the storm appears to have been as severe in its effects on the eastern coast of England, and particularly at Cromer.

Manchester.—The inquest on the bodies of three men killed by the explosion of the locomotive engine, mentioned in our last, has terminated in a verdict that the accident occurred from accumulated pressure, with a deodand of 500*l.* on the engine.

Newbury.—Two children have died from poison in the parish of Thatcham, near this town, since Christmas. They both died suddenly, and suspicions having been excited on the death of the second child, the body was examined and found to contain arsenic. The body of the other was then exhumed, and arsenic found in the stomach. The father has been apprehended, and is now in custody to await the result of the inquest.

Norwich.—The Norwich Mercury states that Sir Thomas Hare has given directions that the game on his estate at Stowe, near Downham, should be shot down as close as possible, in consequence of the numerous complaints he has received of the injury done to the crops of his tenants. The same paper states that a gentleman near this city, who hired an estate last year in this county for sporting, and where he had reared a large head of game, had last week an account of 200*l.* presented to him for payment for damage done by the hares and rabbits to the tenants' crops.

Nottingham.—On Sunday morning the lace factory of Mr. Coxon, at Lenton, about a mile from this town, was destroyed by fire. The building was three stories high, with machinery on each floor for the manufacture of lace, and had only been completed 12 months. The machinery alone was valued at 1500*l.*, of which only 550*l.* was insured. The new iron factory of Mr. Pegg, of Lenton, adjoined the premises, but escaped without damage.

Oxford.—The requisition to the Hebdomadal Board for a formal condemnation of the 90th tract, was presented to that board on Monday, signed by the Bishops of Chichester and Lincoln, and 440 other members of convocation. The Principal of Brasenose proposed, and the Rector of Exeter College seconded an amendment, that the requisition be taken into consideration that day six months, upon which the meeting was adjourned to Thursday, when the board resolved, by a majority of 16 to 8, to comply with the requisition, and propose a condemnation of Tract 90 on Thursday next. The mover and seconder of the amendment are the same heads of houses who, together with the two proctors, opposed the measures relative to Mr. Ward. These four gentlemen, of course, voted against the Thursday. Dr. Williams, Warden of New College, and Dr. Cardwell, Principal of St. Alban's Hall, also voted in the minority.

Ruislip.—A numerous meeting of the farmers and other inhabitant ratepayers of this part of Middlesex, convened by public notice, was held last week in the vestry-room of Ruislip church, "to consider (as the requisition stated) the cruelty, injustice, and ruinous consequences of the Game Laws, with a view to petition Parliament for the repeal or modification of the same." Mr. W. Somes, a large landed proprietor in the parish, was called to the chair, and several resolutions were proposed condemning the game laws, and mentioning the temptation which they created in the minds of the "poor, destitute, ill-paid, and ill-fed labourers." This expression gave rise to a long discussion; but, ultimately, the resolutions were adopted, together with a petition to Parliament, stating that the farmers "were much oppressed by reason of the great quantity of game reared and preserved in the parish for the purposes of sporting," and praying for a revision of the Game Laws.

Reading.—The election of a coroner for Berkshire took place in this town on Monday, the office having become vacant by the death of Mr. J. May. There were five candidates, but four of them resigned in favour of Mr. Rupert Clarke, who was consequently elected without opposition.

Slough.—No further particulars relative to the supposed murder of Sarah Hart have transpired since the committal of Mr. Tawell, but some facts have appeared relative to the prisoner which deserve mention. It is said that he has received a remittance from New South Wales, to the amount of 700*l.*, since his incarceration in Aylesbury gaol. Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, who has been specially retained, in conjunction with Mr. M. Chambers, for his defence, has, it is stated, received a retaining fee of 300 guineas. It is also stated that the whole of the property possessed by the prisoner is in the course of being assigned over to trustees, for the benefit of his wife. The trial will take place at Aylesbury on the 11th March, before Mr. Justice Patteson.

Tamworth.—Sir Robert Peel is adding to his mansion at Drayton Manor a picture gallery, 100 feet in length, for the reception chiefly of portraits of the most eminent men of the present day. His present collection of pictures at the manor is already among the largest of modern date in this country, and is constantly being extended. The new gallery will be fitted up in the richest manner with carved oak and polished marble.

Railways.

The following are the returns for the past week:—Birmingham and Gloucester, 2028*l.*; Bristol and Gloucester, 1017*l.*; Eastern Counties, 3945*l.*; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 1933*l.*; Great Western, 3,945*l.*; Grand Junction, 7481*l.*; Glasgow, Paisley, and Ayr, 1366*l.*; Great North of England, 1591*l.*; London and Birmingham, 14,484*l.*; South Western, 4935*l.*; Blackwall, 785*l.*; Brighton, 3111*l.*; Croydon, 392*l.*; Liverpool and Manchester, 4713*l.*; Manchester, Leeds, and Hull, 6180*l.*; Midland 8754*l.*; Manchester and Birmingham, 3096*l.*; Newcastle and Carlisle, 1498*l.*; Newcastle and Darlington, 1070*l.*; South Eastern and Dover, 4476*l.*; Sheffield and Manchester, 623*l.*; Yarmouth and Norwich, 201*l.*; York and North Midland, with Leeds and Selby, 2054*l.*—The Gazette of Friday contained an announcement from the Board of Trade, in reference to projected railways in Ireland and in the Manchester and Leeds district, &c. The Board states that having had under consideration schemes for extending railway communication in the south and south-west of Ireland, they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Cork and London, Great Southern and Western—Cork Extension only, Waterford and Limerick, subject, as regards the portion of the line between Limerick and the Junction with the Great Southern and Western Extension line, to equitable arrangements for securing to the Great Southern and Western Company full accommodation for the purposes of the Limerick traffic going in the direction of Dublin and Cork. Against the Great South West Ireland) Direct, and recommending the postponement until a future period of the Dublin, Carlow, and Wexford; Dublin, Wexford, Waterford, and Carlow; Dublin and Wicklow, Kilkenny Junction.—And the Board having further had under their consideration schemes for extending railway communication in the Manchester and Leeds district, have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Barnsley Junction, Leeds and Bradford Extension to Skipton and Colne, Leeds and West Riding Junction, Manchester and Leeds—Heywood and Oldham Extensions, Manchester and Leeds—Burnley Branch, and against the Leeds, Dewsbury, and Manchester, Manchester, Bury, and Rossendale—Heywood Branch, West Yorkshire. And the Board having further had under consideration the Churnet Valley Railway scheme (from Macclesfield to Tamworth and Derby, with a branch to the Potteries), have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the said scheme. Another announcement appeared in the Gazette of Tuesday, stating that the Board having had under consideration 5 railway schemes in the Worcester and Wolverhampton district, and in the district between the London and Birmingham and Great Western Railways, have decided on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Birmingham and Gloucester—Deviation Line; the London, Worcester, Rugby, and Oxford Railway, with an extension from Worcester to Dudley (narrow gauge); and against the Birmingham and Gloucester—Wolverhampton Line, Oxford and Rugby (wide gauge); Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton (wide gauge). It is important to observe, that the Board has rejected all the schemes embraced in this notice projected by the Great Western Company, thus deciding, so far as their opinion goes, against the the further extension of the wide gauge to the north. The decision seems founded on a consideration of facilitating railroad travelling from the west and south-west of England to the northern districts, and is so far favourable to the interests of the Birmingham line. Had the Board allowed the extensions north, proposed by the Great Western projects, which have in this notice been rejected, the wide gauge would have clashed with the narrow gauge system, which is universal in the north, and thus have occasioned great delay, besides inconvenience in travelling, by occasioning constant shifting from one set of carriages to another, and exposing the passengers to loss of time. The Gazette of last night contains another announcement that the Board have decided on reporting to Parliament in favour of the South Wales Railway, Monmouth and Hereford (Great Western), Newport and Pontypool: against the Gloucester and Dean Forest Railway: in favour of the Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, Dudley, and Birmingham; against the Shrewsbury and Wolverhampton (Grand Junction), Shrewsbury and Stafford; and in favour of the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway.—We mentioned in our last that the Birmingham and Gloucester and Bristol and Gloucester Companies have agreed to amalgamate. It appears from the details since published that the united undertaking is to be called the Bristol and Birmingham Railway; its capital is to be 1,800,000*l.*, of which the Birmingham and Gloucester are to be responsible for 1,142,125*l.*, and the Bristol and Gloucester for 657,875*l.*, exclusive of the new stock authorised to be raised in accordance with the terms of the resolutions passed. Each shareholder is to have the option of accepting his proportion of these allotments, or 50*l.* in the consolidated stock for every share he may hold in either of the Companies. Dividends are at once to be made payable on the entire stock, interest being deducted from the portion of the Bristol and Gloucester not yet paid up, and which is not to be called for till the 1st January, 1847. The proposal of a guarantee of 5 per cent. to the Worcester and Wolverhampton line, creating additional capital for new works, and authorising powers to apply next session for their construction, was also adopted; and the Bristol and Gloucester Company at their meeting authorised the subscription of 25,000*l.* to the Plymouth and Falmouth Railway.—At the Liverpool and Manchester meeting last week the dividend declared was 4*l.* 10*s.*, leaving a reserve of 15,099*l.* to be carried to the credit of the next half-year's account. The workings of the line show receipts to the amount of 141,552*l.*, and expenses, inclusive of interest, to 64,885*l.* The reduction of fares, though not at present lucrative, it is said, will no doubt ultimately prove beneficial to the railway. The 2*l.* call on the new 40*l.* shares is to be deducted from the dividend.—The Newcastle and North Shields Company at their meeting have declared a dividend of three per cent. The total receipts for the half-year were 19,152*l.*, leaving a balance of 5127*l.*, from which this payment will be made. The prospect of an amalgamation with the Newcastle and Berwick was mentioned as likely to improve the traffic of this company. The charge for interest on the company's debt was 70,000*l.* an amount within about 1000*l.* of the actual cost of working the railway. The directors, however, are doing all in their power to reduce this encumbrance, having lately replaced their floating bills by loans, which they secured at the somewhat lower rate of 4 per cent.—The Chester and Birkenhead Company have declared a dividend of 10*s.* on each 50*l.* share, and 5*s.* on each 25*l.* share, deducting from the larger dividend 4*s.* 3*d.* per share interest for calls unpaid. The amount thus disbursed would be 5906*l.* 5*s.*, leaving a balance of 1926*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* from the general surplus, for the payment of income-tax and other purposes. The expenses in the half-year had been 8238*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, against receipts to the amount of 15,109*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* The reduction of fares on this line appears to have greatly increased accommodation to the public, while it has, at the same time, benefited the revenue of the company.—At a special meeting of the Manchester and Birmingham Company last week, the sum of 700,000*l.* to be raised by new quarter shares, was voted unanimously, for the purpose of enabling the directors to complete their advance to the Trent-valley line, amounting to 77,000*l.*; to apply to Parliament, in the next session, for power to make a branch railway, at the estimated cost of 65,000*l.*, from the main line of the Manchester and Birmingham in the township of Heaton Norris, to the Sheffield, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Manchester Railway, at or near Guidebridge, at Ashton-under-Lyne: to extend the line of the branch railway, known as the Macclesfield branch of the Manchester and Birmingham, from the terminus thereof at Beech-bridge, in the town of Macclesfield, to Cockshut-lane, in the same town, at the cost of 28,000*l.*; and to subscribe 180,000*l.* to the capital of the proposed Manchester South Junction and Altrincham Railway, and to enter into agreement with that company in reference to their proposed undertaking, or the management, working, purchasing, or leasing of their projected line, &c., as might be deemed fit.—The Great Western and South Western Companies have entered into an arrangement, by which the South Western withdraws the Basingstoke, Didcot, and Swindon Junction; the London and South Western—Salisbury to Yeovil; the London and South Western—Hook-pit Deviation; and the Salisbury, Dorchester, and Weymouth Railway, (against all which the Board of Trade reported in December last); and also abandons all connection with the Cornwall and Devon Central. The South Western also agrees to offer no opposition to any bills for the undermentioned lines approved by the Board of Trade, viz.:—the Reading, Basingstoke, and Hungerford; the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth; the Durston and Yeovil Branch—Bristol and Exeter; the Cornwall—Plymouth to Falmouth. By the same arrangement, to which the Southampton and Dorchester Company are parties, the projected coast line, between those towns, favourably reported upon by the Board of Trade, will be leased to the South Western, instead of to the Great Western, for which purpose clauses are to be introduced into the Act of Parliament, under the sanction of the Board of Trade.—The Nottingham papers mention that Mr. Roberts, commercial traveller, whose leg was amputated in consequence of the injuries he received in the late melancholy occurrence on the Midland Railway, and who yet lies in a very precarious state, has received the sum of 1100*l.* in compensation; and the company have agreed to pay all surgical bills to the 1st March next. They also state that Mr. Lightfoot has commenced actions for libels against two of the jurors, who issued the letter to Mr. Justice Patteson, for statements which it contains reflecting upon and injurious to his character.—At the special meeting of the Grand Junction Company last week, a dividend of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share was declared. The report stated that the receipts were much larger than usual, and that the company was in so favourable a position, that after paying the dividend, there would be enough surplus to raise the "rest" to 30,277. The differences with the Birmingham Company were not yet arranged, but the directors hoped to obtain a fair settlement of the matters at issue. It was also resolved to join the Liverpool and Manchester Company in erecting a statue to Mr. George Stephenson for his services to the railway interests in general, the statue to be placed in St. George's Hall, opposite the railway terminus.—At the meeting of the Brighton and Chichester last week, it was resolved to open negotiations for an amalgamation with the London and Brighton Railway.—The Eastern Counties, following the example of some other lines, are now running inclosed second-class carriages from Hertford to London.—Messrs. Grissel and Peto, the contractors on the Brandon line, have presented every workman with a Bible and other books. Five railway missionaries are also employed between Norwich and Brandon, who specially devote themselves to the religious instruction of the men both on Sunday and during the week. Two buildings (one at Wymondham, and another at Brandon) have been provided by Mr. Peto, as temporary places of worship, and opened for that purpose during the last fortnight.—The electric telegraph laid down on the south-western line at the joint expense of the Admiralty and the Company was opened last week, and is now in active operation. On Tuesday, in the presence of most of the authorities of the Portsmouth Dockyard, Her Majesty's Speech was received at Gosport by means of the electric telegraph. The Speech contained about 3600 letters, and was printed off as it arrived, and occupied about two hours in the transmission, being at the rate of about 300 letters per minute. The distance is 88 miles. The telegraph will be immediately employed for Government purposes by the Admiralty.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Irish papers announce, on what they state to be the best authority, that the Queen and Prince Albert have determined on visiting Ireland early in the ensuing summer.—A meeting of noblemen and gentlemen was held last week in Dublin, for the purpose of considering the subject of National Education. The Earl of Roden took the chair, and after several resolutions had been passed, an Address to the Archbishop of Armagh was adopted, expressing the concurrence of the meeting in the recent declaration of his Grace and the other prelates against the national system of education. The Address was signed by 17 Peers and 28 Members of Parliament.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Mr. O'Neil Daunt in the chair.

Mr. O'Connell said, that his object was to bring before them a subject of the most vital importance to the people of Ireland—the report of the committee appointed to consider whether it would be advisable for the Irish representatives to attend in their places during the ensuing session of Parliament. The report, which he had the pleasure of submitting to the Association, had been agreed to unanimously, after the most mature deliberation. He then read the following document, which he stated he intended to move as a report, but that others would move the two clauses separately, as resolutions:—"That however desirable it may be that a discussion should take place in the House of Commons, with a view to expose the injustice of the proceedings connected with the late State Trials, this Association is so deeply impressed with a sense of the hopelessness of obtaining redress for the wrongs of Ireland from the Imperial Parliament, that we cannot recommend that the Irish members should be called upon to attend such discussion. That the attendance of the Irish Repeal members in the Conciliation Hall would be most conducive to the great object of the Association, the restoration of our domestic legislature." Now, he thought this report ought to be adopted; he was decidedly of opinion that they could do no good by going to England. Before '29, the Protestants were alone represented in Parliament; yet the Catholics extorted their emancipation from Parliament. It was the fears of England, created by the loud tone of Ireland, that yielded emancipation to the Catholics. Since '29 the Reform Bill was introduced; there was a British majority against it; but the Irish Members turned the scale in its favour. The motion to abolish the slave-trade failed till it acquired the support of Irish Members; and the Irish Members carried both the Parliamentary and Municipal Reform

Bills. What was the gratitude they experienced from England? Why, the most abominable Coercion Bill! He was tired of trying to get anything for Ireland from a British Parliament, and he would go there no more to be laughed at and trampled on, unless an attempt were made to bring in any measure injurious to this country. If that were attempted, he would feel it to be his duty to go over and to die on the floor of the House in carrying out a vexatious opposition against it. He would divide the House on every letter and every line of any Bill that might be brought in which he should consider inconsistent with the principles of civil and religious liberty. He would then come back to Ireland, and ask his countrymen—"Are you for Repeal now?" After alluding to the failure of his motion in Parliament in 1834, on the subject of Repeal, and his subsequent abandonment of the agitation when justice to Ireland was promised, the hon. gentleman proceeded to designate that promise as a gross lie. In consequence of that promise he had given up the agitation of Repeal for two dreary years, and had established the Precursor Society, but the atrocious misrepresentations of the English press had biassed the minds of their legislators against the people and the clergy of Ireland, and nothing could be obtained for her from these former Parliaments. As to the present Parliament, it was admitted to be constituted by the foul exercise of bribery. It was calculated that it cost the members of the present House of Commons a million and a half of money for bribery; and was it to this bribed and bigoted assembly he was to go, with "lowly 'haviour and humble countenance," to ask for justice? After the State Trials he was most anxious to have some inquiry into them brought before Parliament, and he intended to have gone from town to town through England to explain the injustice which had been practised, and to claim the sympathy of the people, but he was dissuaded from such a proceeding in consequence of the opinion entertained by others that it would be unbecoming in Irish representatives to go on a begging march of that description. He then indulged the hope that the English would of themselves have taken up the call for an inquiry into proceedings which were as dangerous to their liberties as to those of the people of Ireland; but both Whig and Tory newspapers in England had joined in vilifying and misrepresenting him, and he was disappointed in his hope. He then proceeded to canvass the chances of obtaining Repeal, which he assured the meeting was quite certain, if England were obliged to go to war with her right arm tied up—with her press assailing the people and clergy of Ireland—in a word, with the people of Ireland averse from entering the ranks of her army, or at least thinking that it might be as well for them not to be fighting at that time. The very heart and soul of Ireland was bent on obtaining Repeal; religious feuds were becoming extinct, and the very means taken to extend were lessening them. It might be thought that the Charitable Bequests Act had sown the seeds of dissension among the people of Ireland, but though it had produced a schism, it could not avail to divert them from Repeal, and the very differences which existed among Catholics would tend to lessen the jealousies and prejudices of Protestants. He might be told that measures of importance to Ireland would be brought on this session, and, of course, if circumstances required, the Irish representatives would go over, ready there as here, to die at their posts. It was clear that some deception would be practised by Peel, who had brought himself to believe that words were things, and that when he was using plausible words about Ireland, he was acting kindly towards her. The speech of the Queen's Ministers would in all probability contain many fair promises to Ireland. Peel would echo them, but, notwithstanding, no reliance was to be placed on his Administration. Mr. O'Connell then enumerated, and in strong terms expressed his disapproval of, the noblemen and gentlemen whom report had named as successors to Lord Eliot. At length they had got Sir Thomas Fremantle, who was a very nice gentleman for a tea party. Certainly a very civil and courteous gentleman, but the friend of Peel, and the slave of the Duke of Buckingham, whose representative he was. Having inveighed at considerable length against the Riband confederacy, he ended by stating his conviction that no useful purpose could be answered by the removal of the Irish members to Parliament at present, and moved the adoption of the report. The first clause of the report was then moved in the shape of a resolution, by Mr. W. S. O'Brien, M.P., and seconded by Mr. J. Kelly, M.P. Messrs. Barry and M'Nevin moved and seconded the other resolution. Mr. O'Connell stated that that was the opening day of the Registry Sessions for Dublin city, and that the Conservatives had a majority of 13 on the day. That was most disgraceful to Dublin, and should be remedied. The rent for the week was 387*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*

Leitrim.—On Wednesday night, the 29th ult., Capt. M'Leod, of the Royal Marines, resident magistrate at Ballinamore, was shot dead at Mr. Percy's gatehouse at Garadice, where he had been dining. The ball passed direct through his heart, lodging in the back bone. A coroner's inquest was held the next day, and a verdict of wilful murder returned against some person or persons unknown. The assassin concealed himself amongst some laurel bushes inside Mr. Percy's gatehouse, and as Capt. M'Leod's servant went off his car to open the gate the murderer committed the deed. The muzzle of the gun could not have been more than 2 feet from the Captain's breast. The servant, thinking it was some of Capt. M'Leod's own pistols which went off, returned and asked him what he fired at, when he made no answer, life being quite extinct. About six weeks ago, Capt. M'Leod was selected by Government to proceed to Ballinamore from Enniskillen, in consequence of the many agrarian outrages committed in this and the neighbouring county of Cavan. He attended the petty sessions on the day of his death, when some tenants of Mr. Percy were charged with ribbonism. The other magistrates on the bench were disposed to allow the accused to give bail, but Capt. M'Leod opposed this course, and bail was refused. It is, therefore, supposed that his murder is attributable to this cause.

Shinrone.—Last week a party of men made a forcible entry into the house of Mr. James, of this place, ordered Mrs. James and her children into the school-room, and fired at the husband, wounding him so severely in the head, that his life is despaired of. He made, however, a strong resistance, and defended himself so successfully with a dirk, that one of his assailants, called Costello, was found dead on the following morning, in an upright position against the door of a cottage at Cronbroone. On the same day three brothers, named Ryan, who were known to be companions of the deceased, were apprehended, identified, and committed for trial.

Limerick.—The local papers state that the O'Grady and his family, in consequence of the late threat of a violent death, and a shot fired into his domestic circle, has quitted his seat at Killballyowen, for another part of Ireland. The hall is to be shut up, and the beautiful demesne, upon which so many agricultural labourers found daily employment all the year round, is to be let out in pasture and grazing.—A meeting of the clergy of this diocese met in the Chapter House last week, for the purpose of passing a resolution of thanks to the Lord Primate, and the other prelates, who signed the recent declaration against the national system of education. A letter was read from the Dean elect, Dr. Higgins, stating that he was a steadfast friend of the national system, and that as he did not concur in the object of the meeting, he should withhold the use of the cathedral. The clergy then moved to another place in the city, where the meeting was held. Archdeacon Maunsell was in the chair, and an address of thanks to the Lord Primate, and the other prelates, was unanimously adopted.

Cork.—The clergy of the united dioceses of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross assembled at the Chapter House of the Cathedral last week, and adopted resolutions in favour of the document which recently emanated from the Lord Primate and the majority of the bishops upon the subject of national education.—The Baptist missionaries at Tahiti, Messrs. Howe and Jesson, with their families and the widow and children of Mr. M'Kean, who was killed accidentally by a ball from a French musket, arrived in this port last week.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—On Sunday, the 19th ult., a fire broke out in the Old Greyfriars Church in this city, and from a deficient supply of water the whole of the eastern end of the building was in flames before the engines was brought into action. The fire spread to the New Greyfriars Church adjoining, and was not subdued until both churches were entirely destroyed. The accident was caused by the overheating of the flues. Neither building was very ornamental, but the old church witnessed the signing of the Covenant, and is connected with many other historical recollections.

Law.

Arches Court.—Faulkner v. Litchfield and Stearn.—The Stone Altar Case.—On Friday, Sir H. Jenner Fust gave judgment in this case, which was an appeal from a decree of the Chancellor of the Diocese of Ely, respecting the stone altar erected by the Cambridge Camden Society in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Cambridge. The facts of the case are well known. Sir H. Jenner, in a very long and elaborate judgment, which it is impossible to condense, cited numerous authorities, and decided that according to the true construction of the Rubric the altar erected in the church at Cambridge is not a communion-table within the intent and meaning of the Rubric, which meant a wooden table, capable of being removed, and not an immoveable stone altar. He, therefore, reversed the sentence of the Court of Ely on that point. In regard to the credence table, he said it must fall under the same principle as the other, as it is immediately connected with the stone altar, and does not appear to be required, or sanctioned by any law, canon, or constitution. He therefore reversed the sentence of the Court below, and condemned the churchwardens in the costs of the proceedings on the appeal.

Bail Court.—The Queen v. Pelham.—The particulars of this case were noticed in this Paper at the time, and the details excited a good deal of attention. Mr. Watson stated the case. The prosecution had been instituted by the parish officers of St. Luke's, Chelsea. The defendant resided in Princes-street, Chelsea, and was between 50 and 60 years of age, and had two children, her conduct towards the eldest of whom formed the ground of the present inquiry. His name was Brent Spencer, and he was an illegitimate son of defendant by the late General Sir Brent Spencer. Brent Spencer was between 30 and 40 years of age. In the course of last year some noises were heard in defendant's house, which attracted the attention of her neighbours, who proceeded to the magistrate at Queen-square police-office, and having stated all they knew on the subject, solicited the interference of the police, which was allowed. After some general remarks on the case, the learned counsel called several witnesses. From their evidence it appeared that on the 17th May the police paid a visit to defendant's house. The first person they saw was defendant: they afterwards proceeded to a room, where they found the object of their inquiries lying on a bed that was rotted completely through, and surrounded with filth and vermin. His beard was extremely long, and his hair matted with filth. The window of the room was guarded with stout iron bars, and a strong wire guard within. It appeared as if there had not been a fire in the room for a considerable period. The defendant brought down a portmanteau, in which were some clothes, and which the wretched being having been assisted to put on he was conveyed to the workhouse. The defendant and her son, Wilson Pelham, were subsequently taken before the magistrate at Queen-square, where she was held to bail to answer any charge that might be preferred against her at the sessions, and Mr. Wilson Pelham was discharged from custody. The parish-officers felt it their duty to indict defendant at the sessions, and that indictment was subsequently removed into this Court by writ of certiorari. One of the witnesses compared the place in which the unfortunate man was found to a pigstye that had not been cleaned out for eight or ten years. The defendant had resided in her present house about eight years, the front door of which was seldom opened, and any provisions that were brought there were lowered into the area by means of a string. It further appeared that the house had never been cleaned since it was occupied by defendant, who herself was a very eccentric person. After the poor man had been removed to the workhouse he was provided with proper clothing. About 17 years ago the lunatic was in a sound state of mind, and kept a public-house in Windmill-street, and at that time was in the habit of associating with members of the prize ring. The medical man by whom he was examined after his release from the incarceration which he had so long undergone, described his bodily health as good, but said that the mode of his confinement was not what it ought to have been, even for a person in his unfortunate situation. When he questioned him respecting the defendant, and asked if he would like to see her, he said, yes, he should, and that she was a very nice woman. He was a decided lunatic, but had he been kept short of food he would not have been in the state of bodily health in which he was found. It further appeared that the defendant received a quarterly allowance of 49*l.*, through Messrs. Coutts and Co., the bankers, for the support of the lunatic, under the will of the late Sir Brent Spencer. The case for the prosecution having closed, Mr. James addressed the Jury on the part of the defendant. He complained that the facts of the case had been greatly exaggerated, and said that, although it was impossible not to say that the place in which the lunatic was found was in a most filthy and dirty state, the rest of the house was not in a much better condition, owing to the eccentric habits of the defendant, who was in fact on the verge of insanity herself. The Learned Counsel, in conclusion, contended that there was no evidence to justify the Jury in convicting the defendant, and did not call any witnesses. Mr. Justice Williams summed up the evidence at considerable length, and after a short consultation, the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty on those counts only of the indictment which charged the defendant with having neglected to provide for the proper comfort, &c., of the lunatic.

Police, Queen Square.—A great deal of excitement has been occasioned in the neighbourhood of Brompton this week by the apprehension of Miss Osborne, daughter of Sir [illegible] Osborne, Bart., of Earl's Court, on the charge of stealing some potted meat from a grocer's shop at Brompton. The [illegible] on Saturday, when the case first came before the Magistrate, Mr. Burrell, induced him to remand Miss Osborne until Monday, stating at the same time that it was a very painful case, but he had no alternative, and was obliged to send her to Tothill Fields Prison. On Thursday the case was again brought before the Magistrate, who, after a long inquiry, consented to take bail, the accused lady in 500*l.*, and Sir John Osborne and the Hon. Mr. Byng in 250*l.* each, for her appearance on this day week.

BIRTHS.—On the 31st ult., at Wollaston House, Dorsetshire, the lady of Arthur H. Dyke Acland, Esq., of a son—30th ult., at Dartrey, in the county of Monaghan, Lady Cremorne, of a son—3d inst., at the Earl of Bradford's, Viscountess Newport, of a son—1st inst., at Beaulands, Hants, the lady of S. Smith, Esq., of a daughter—3d inst., in Hyde Park-square, the lady of W. Martin, Esq., of a son—4th inst., in Langham-place, the lady of C. Barrow Young, Esq., of a daughter—4th inst., the lady of Mr. J. Whitmore, surgeon, of Oxford-street, of a daughter—4th inst., Mrs. W. Dilke, of a daughter, still-born.

DEATHS.—On the 1st inst., at Bury Luton, deeply lamented, John Burgess, the youngest son of the Rev. H. Burgess—Recently, at Paris, the Dowager Countess of Aldborough—2d inst., Lady M. Bagot, eldest daughter of the Earl and Countess of Mornington, and widow of the late Right Hon. Sir Charles Bagot, the late Governor-General of Canada—On 1st inst., at his seat, Festwood House, near Southampton, the Right Hon. W. S. Bourne, aged 76—1st inst., at Wareston House, Dorchester, Edw. A. Acland, the infant son of A. H. D. Acland, Esq.—2d inst., J. F. Whitaker, Esq., of Reading, Berkshire, aged 41—3d ult., D. Stanton, son of the Rev. C. C. Stanton, aged 13 months—3d inst., at Stoke next Guildford, J. P. Shrubb, Esq., aged 83—4th inst., at the house of her brother, Bishop Stortford, Ann Lloyd, the widow of T. P. Lloyd, Esq., deeply regretted—4th inst., of inflammation of the lungs, Rose Wilson, third daughter of A. Wilson, Esq., of Stamford-hill, aged 5 years—3d inst., at Killerton, Lucy M. Acland, the infant daughter of T. D. Acland, Esq., M.P.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A middle-aged single Man is desirous of obtaining a Situation in the above capacity, who has had several years' Practical Experience in the Cultivation of Pines, Vines, and Peaches; together with every kind of Early Forcing: also the Propagation and Cultivation of Stove, Greenhouse, and Orchideous Plants. Can have the highest testimonials from his late employers.—Direct to N. K., Post-office, Richmond, Surrey.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A Married Man, who thoroughly understands his business in all its branches, has lately left an excellent place, where he had all sorts of early forcing to manage, and is a very successful grower of all kinds of plants; and can have a good character from the gentleman he has lately left. No single-handed place will suit. Wages not so much an object if a comfortable place. Direct A. B., Mr. Chapman, Grape grower, Bedford-lane, Chapman, Surrey.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A Married Man without encumbrance, who has had first-rate practice in all the various departments of his profession, and can have an unexceptionable character of 2½ years from his last situation; understands the management of Meadow Land if required.—Direct to A. G., at Mr. Cuthill's, Florist, Denmark Hill, Camberwell, London.

AS GARDENER.—Mr. Malleson, Royal Gardens, Claremont, Esher, can with confidence recommend to the notice of any Nobleman or Gentleman in want of a Gardener a Single Man, aged 29. He is practically acquainted with all departments of the profession. The most satisfactory reference can be given.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 32, without incumbrance, who has had considerable experience in all the branches of his profession, particularly the Forcing Department; at present has charge of a full establishment, viz., Pines, Vines, Stove and Greenhouse, Frames, &c. His character will bear the strictest investigation. His Wife is a professed Cook.—Direct to A. M., Rogers and Co.'s, 45½, Strand.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable married Man, without family, aged 28, who thoroughly understands his business, and can have an excellent character from the last he has just left.—Direct to H. A., Post-office, Machynlleth, Montgomeryshire.

AS GARDENER.—D. Ferguson, Stowe, near Buckingham, recommends to the notice of any noblemen or gentleman in want of a Gardener, Isaac Passfield, an honest, steady, active young Man, in his opinion worthy their attention.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable married Man, 30 years of age, wishes to obtain a Situation in a Nobleman or Gentleman's employment; has had good practice in designing, and managing Forcing, Flower, and Kitchen Gardens, Profitable and Ornamental Planting, &c., and will act as Land-steward also, if required. Unexceptionable references given.—Direct, 1,916, Post-office, Hereford.

AS GARDENER.—A Young Man who has had first-rate instruction. Any Nobleman or Gentleman wanting a person in that capacity will find him worthy their attention; an unexceptionable character will be given.—Direct to Mr. M'Intosh, Dalkeith Palace; Mr. M'Intosh, Drumanard Castle, or to Mr. Turrell, Royal Gardens, Hampton Court—(not to be inserted without his knowledge.)

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN

AN EXPERIENCED GARDENER, in the highest branches of Horticulture, having a few months since left an excellent place, with a prospect of entering into a Nursery business, but not having succeeded therein, wishes again for a situation in a Nobleman's or Gentleman's family, where forcing in all its branches is carried on. The Advertiser will stand the test of his ability in any way desired, and a character of the best sort can be obtained. No single-handed place will suit. Direct R. L., care of Messrs. Child, Seedsmen, Thames-street, London.

AS LAND STEWARD OR OVERSEER.—A Gentleman compelled by loss of health to resign the civil service of the H.E.I.C., and who has devoted several years to Agricultural pursuits, is now desirous of obtaining such a situation. The Advertiser is 33 years of age and unmarried. References of the highest respectability will be given.—Direct to M. M., 228 Piccadilly.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1845.

BRITISH MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 17, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS.

The British Mutual Life Assurance Society rejects the system of giving Bonuses at short periods, as contrary to the provident principles of Life Assurance, and adopts the lowest rates which the value of life can afford—thus giving to the Assured a sum annually, equal to bonuses every 2, 3, 4, and 5 years. The adjustment of the rates in the British Mutual to the several ages of life is worthy of attention, at middle life being between 20 and 25 per cent. lower than in most Offices, and at advanced life maintaining a favourable comparison with any, and gives the advantage of the Tontine to survivors of more than average life.

Prospectuses and every information may be obtained on application at the Office, 17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

SPECIMEN OF TABLES.

Age	Ann. Premium	Age	Ann. Premium	Age	Ann. Premium
	£ s. d.		£ s. d.		£ s. d.
15	1 11 2	30	2 1 6	50	4 1 7
20	1 15 8	40	2 14 9	60	6 6 7

CHARLES JAMES THICKE, Resident Secretary.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.

The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l*.

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

News of the Week.

SIR R. PEEL last night brought before Parliament his financial statement, which has caused such general anxiety for some days past. At the hour when our Paper was put to press, the Premier had not concluded his statement, but the leading feature of his scheme is the continuance of the Income tax for the purpose of allowing the reduction of other taxes which press upon the public. The duties on sugars are to be considerably reduced (a preference being given to Colonial sugars), so that the alteration of the duties will reduce the price to the consumer 1½*d*. per lb. The results of the last experiment on the Tariff will lead to still further changes; on 813 articles the duty is to be abolished altogether with the duty on the export of coals. The debates which have taken place in both Houses of Parliament this week, on the subject of Railways, will be read with interest by all classes. The vast amount of capital now devoted to railways, and the extensive interests involved in them, have opened a new field for legislation; and more than ordinary importance has been given to the opinions of public men upon the subject by the large number of new projects which will be submitted to Parliament during the present session. Sir R. Peel stated, in reference to the Board of Trade, that their decisions were not binding on the House; and expressed himself strongly in favour of free competition, and against Government interference, which had been suggested by Lord Howick as the best means of overcoming the difficulties of the existing system.—The Convocation at Oxford took place on Thursday. The proposition for censuring Mr. Ward's book was carried by a majority of 777 to 386, and that for depriving him of his degrees was also carried by a majority of 569 to 511; but the proposition for the condemnation of Tract 90 was negatived by the veto of the Proctors.

The news from India which arrived on Friday by the Overland Mail was noticed briefly in our last, and the details which have since been published add little to the main facts which were then mentioned. India is tranquil, with the exception of some trifling disturbances in the small state of Sawunt Warree, on the Malabar coast, where an insurrection has been got up in the jungles by an old freebooter, who has caused great confusion and alarm in that part of the country. The Kolapore disturbances have been nearly subdued, and the two celebrated fortresses of Punella and Pownaghur have been captured by our troops, in addition to those whose fall had been already announced. In Scinde everything is quiet, but though disease is decreasing there are still nearly 3000 men in hospital. The trial of Col. Moseley, and his dismissal from the service after having been 39 years in India, had caused a great sensation among all classes; but it was generally admitted that the mutiny in his regiment called for exemplary punishment, more especially as 6 men had been executed and others punished for his errors. The accounts from Affghanistan refer to the fearful pestilence now raging in Cabul, and express surprise that it has not more speedily followed the devastation of 1842. The living are said to be unable to bury their dead; and Dost Mahommed is reported to have fled for safety from his capital. From China we learn that some disputes respecting various unimportant ordinances had created a disturbance between the new Governor and the merchants, which was only settled by the withdrawal of the edicts. The death of the Emperor of China had been currently reported at Hong Kong, but it was not confirmed by the last advices from the interior.—From France we have no news of any interest, excepting the introduction of the Secret Service Bill preparatory to the great trial of strength which will take place next week, and decide the fate of the Cabinet. The Queen's Speech on opening Parliament had caused much disappointment in Paris, but the comments of the different journals present few points which call for notice beyond the statement that the paragraph relating to France is not so satisfactory to Ministers as they had anticipated.—From the United States we learn that the Texas question is still the absorbing topic of the day, and it is not expected that annexation can be delayed beyond the present session. In Mexico the revolution has terminated in the complete triumph of the popular party, and Santa Anna, the late President, is now a prisoner in their hands.

Home News.

COURT.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales, left Buckingham Palace on Friday for the Pavilion at Brighton, travelling from town by a special train on the Brighton railway. A large concourse of people had assembled at Brighton to witness the arrival of the Queen, who was loudly cheered on her way to the Pavilion. Her Majesty's reception was loyal in the extreme, but on the following morning the Queen and Prince, on their return from an early walk on the Chain Pier, were followed and annoyed by a crowd of people. Her Majesty retreated as speedily as possible and entered the Pavilion by the porter's lodge. As a similar annoyance took place on the occasion of the Queen's former visit to Brighton, an official communication was made by the Equerry in Waiting to the magistrates of the town, who directed the police to endeavour to prevent a repetition of such conduct. On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince took a carriage airing on the cliffs, and afterwards attended Divine service in the Pavilion. On Monday the weather being unfavourable for an airing Her Majesty took equestrian exercise in the riding-school. On Tuesday Her Majesty and Prince Albert took a carriage airing, and walked on the chain pier. On coming from the pier Her Majesty took a drive along the King's-road, and near the battery Her Majesty and the Prince alighted, and walked on the esplanade and beach as far as Hove, where they again got into their carriage and returned to the Palace. In the afternoon the Queen took an airing in the new sledge as far as Patcham. On Wednesday, Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Princess-Royal, drove upon the sledge to the south end of Clayton Tunnel; Prince Albert driving a pair of ponies, attached to the sledge by means of morocco harness covered with small bells. The Queen and Prince drove out in the afternoon in an open carriage for an airing on the cliffs. On Thursday, Her Majesty and Prince Albert paid a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk at Arundel Castle, returning to the Pavilion to dinner. The Prince of Wales and the rest of the Royal family have taken daily airings during the week. It is stated by the daily papers that a rumour is current, that the title of King-Consort is about to be conferred upon His Royal Highness Prince Albert. The Countess of Mount Edgecumbe has succeeded the Countess of Gainsborough as Lady-in-Waiting; and the Hon. Miss Bagot has succeeded the Hon. Miss Murray, as Maid-of-Honour to the Queen.

Ministerial Changes.—The Hon. Henry Fitzroy, M.P. for Lewes, has been appointed to the vacant Lordship of the Admiralty; and Lord Jocelyn, who was mentioned in connection with that post, will not take office at present. It is said that Sir Edward Knatchbull will shortly be raised to the Peerage.

Parliamentary Movements.—Sir G. Clerk has been returned for Stamford, and Sir T. Fremantle for Buckingham, without opposition. Sir W. Trelawney has retired from the contest for East Cornwall, so that there is now no opposition to Mr. Carew. Mr. C. S. Murray having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, there is a vacancy in the representation of Buckinghamshire, for which Mr. Towers, of Huntsmoor Park, is a candidate on the Conservative interest. It is expected that Sir W. Molesworth will come forward as a candidate for Southwark on the resignation of Mr. B. Wood.

Official Appointments.—The appointment of Counsel to the Admiralty, vacated by Mr. Shepherd, has been conferred on Mr. Godson, M.P. for Kidderminster. Sir Francis Doyle has been appointed Assistant-Solicitor of the Excise, with a salary of 1000*l*. a year.

Colonial Bishoprics.—It has been determined to separate the island of Ceylon from the episcopal jurisdiction of the Bishop of Madras, and to constitute it an independent diocese. The Rev. James Chapman, M.A., Rector of Dunton, Essex, lately a Master at Eton College, and Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, has been nominated to this new bishopric, which is the eleventh that has been founded within the last nine years.

Spring Assizes.—The following are the days appointed for holding the ensuing assizes:—Home Circuit.—(Before Lord Denman and Mr. Baron Alderson.)—Hertfordshire, Feb. 28, at Hertford; Essex, March, 5, at Chelmsford; Kent, March 10, at Maidstone; Sussex, March 17, at Lewes, Surrey; March 24, at Kingston-upon-Thames. Midland Circuit. — (Before Sir N. C. Tindal, Lord Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Maule.) — Northamptonshire, March 3, at Northampton; Rutlandshire, March 7, at Oakham; Lincolnshire, March 8, at Lincoln; City of Lincoln, same day; Nottinghamshire, March 13, at Nottingham; same day; Nottingham, same day; Derbyshire, March 17, at Derby; Leicestershire, March 22, at Leicester; Borough of Leicester, same day; Warwickshire, Coventry Division, March 26, at Coventry; Warwick Division, March 29, at Warwick. Oxford Circuit.—(Before Sir Frederick Pollock, Lord Chief Baron, and Mr. Baron Platt.) — Berkshire, March 1, at Reading; Oxfordshire, March 5, at Oxford; Worcestershire, March 8, at Worcester; City of Worcester, same day. Staffordshire, March 14, at Stafford; Shropshire, March 22, at Shrewsbury; Herefordshire, March 27, at Hereford; Monmouthshire, March 29, at Monmouth; Gloucestershire, April 2, at Gloucester; City of Gloucester, same day. Norfolk Circuit.—(Before Mr. Baron Parke, and Mr. Justice Patteson.)—Buckinghamshire, March 10, at Aylesbury; Bedfordshire, March 13, at Bedford; Huntingdonshire, March 19, at Huntingdon; Cambridgeshire, March 20, at the County Courts; Suffolk, March 27, at Bury St. Edmund's; Norfolk, April 2, at Norwich; City of Norwich, same day. SOUTH WALES.—(Before Mr. Justice Creswell.)—Glamorganshire, Feb. 27, at Swansea; Pembrokeshire, March 8, at Haverfordwest; Town of Haverfordwest, same day; Cardiganshire, March 12, at Cardigan; Carmarthenshire, March 15, at Carmarthen; Borough of Carmarthen, same day; Brecknockshire, March 22, at Brecon; Radnorshire, March 26, at Presteign. NORTH WALES.—(Before Mr. Justice Williams.)—Montgomeryshire, March 8, at Welchpool; Merionethshire, March 13, at Bala; Carnarvonshire, March 15, at Carnarvon; Anglesea, March 19, at Beaumaris; Denbighshire, March 22, at Ruthin; Flintshire, March 26, at Mold; Cheshire, March 29, at Chester. Western Circuit. — (Before Mr. Justice Coltman and Mr. Justice Erle.)—Southampton, Feb. 27, at Winchester; Wilts, March 5, at New Sarum; Dorset, March 12, at Dorchester; Devon, March 17, at Exeter; City of Exeter, same day; Cornwall, March 24, at Bodmin; Somerset, March 31, at Taunton. Northern Circuit.—(Before Mr. Justice Coltman and Mr. Justice Wightman.) North Lancashire, Feb. 17, at Lancaster, Westmoreland, Feb. 20, at Appleby; Cumberland, Feb. 22, at Carlisle; Northumberland, Feb. 26, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, same day; Durham, March 3, at Durham; Yorkshire, March 8, at York; City of York, same day; South Lancashire, March 22, at Liverpool.

New Queen's Counsel.—The following gentlemen have been appointed:—Messrs. Lee, Parry and Wood, of the Chancery Bar; Messrs. Batt and Hayward, of the Western Circuit; Messrs. Gurney and Chambers, of the Home; and Mr. Humfrey, of the Midland.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Queen's Speech, which was looked forward to with more than ordinary interest by the French Ministry, as a source of support and strength in the present doubtful state of the Cabinet, appears upon the whole to have disappointed expectation. The Opposition papers say, that "Count de Jarnac and Count St. Aulaire did all in their power to get an explicit and strong declaration inserted in the Speech, upon which the French Cabinet could lean, but all they were able to get was a hard, dry, and very general phrase, which cannot give the slightest satisfaction, and which can add no strength to a Cabinet already shaken by the Pritchard division." They also contend that, in speaking of the visit of Louis-Philippe to England, the words of congratulation, "inasmuch as it had been preceded by discussions which might have impaired the good understanding happily established between the two countries," implies a censure on the French Ministry, as the difficulties in Tahiti originated entirely in the blunders committed by the French Ministry themselves. The Opposition papers also take great offence at the mention of the Emperor of Russia's visit in terms as complimentary in their opinion as those bestowed on the visit of Louis-Philippe. The Ministerial organs, however, express their satisfaction with the speech, and profess to excuse the simultaneous mention of the two sovereigns as a state necessity, regarding the Emperor as simply the guest of the English Court, and Louis-Philippe as equally the guest of the Queen and the Nation. The debates in Parliament on the Address supply another topic of discussion. The Opposition papers approve cordially of the conduct of the English Opposition in showing so much moderation towards France, and argue, from the omission of all reference to Morocco, that the French Government might have made more of the recent conquests, without incurring any risk of hostilities with this country. The Ministerial papers, on the other hand, are dissatisfied with the speeches of our Opposition leaders, declaring that the Opposition on both sides of the Channel are equally unjust and equally blinded. The proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies have again presented two additional examples of those inconsistent votes which are so common in that Assembly. On Thursday a Bill, regulating the promotion of public functionaries, was thrown out by a majority of only one, after all its clauses had been successively adopted; and on Saturday, a Bill for establishing a uniform rate of postage throughout France, was thrown out by the President's casting vote, the numbers on both sides being equal. This result is regarded by the Opposition papers as a striking proof of the weakness of the Ministry; but it does not appear that the division was made a party question. Many of the supporters of the Ministry are warm supporters of a reform in the Post-office arrangements. On Monday, M. Duchatel, the Minister of the Interior, introduced the Bill relative to the secret service funds. This question will be the decisive one as to the fate of the Guizot Ministry. The speech of the Minister created a great sensation in the Chamber, and the leaders of the Opposition met immediately afterwards to concoct their plans in the approaching engagement. It is expected that the public debate will commence next Monday; but in the first place a warm discussion was expected in the bureaux, which were to hold their first meeting on Tuesday. M. Duchatel, in the course of his speech, alluded with satisfaction to the English alliance, and then referred to the late division on the Address, stating that this Bill is to be decisive of the Ministry. "If the men," he said, "who compose the Cabinet had followed their inclination, and listened to their personal interest, they would have left to others the burden of affairs. But they consulted, before everything, their duty towards the King and the country, and the interests of the policy of order and Conservatism, to the success of which they have devoted their efforts. One of the most firm defenders of this policy has comprehended the situation like us, and the Cabinet, the ranks of which are at present complete, presents itself before you with the confidence which the sentiment of a duty properly accomplished gives to all its members. We firmly believe that there exists in this Chamber a majority resolved to support the moderate, truly liberal, dignified, and pacific policy which has prevailed for the last four years. Your suffrages will soon inform us if this confidence is justified or contradicted." In a few days a violent debate will take place, in which the whole policy of the Government will be reviewed, and the division will be the best criterion of the strength of the respective parties. The general feeling in Paris appears to be, that the Ministerial majority, though still a small one, will be considerably greater than that on the Tahiti question. Should this be the case the Cabinet will certainly be able to survive the session, after which it is understood that the present Chamber will be dissolved, and that the new elections will take place in October. On Monday, Marshal Soult, at the earnest request of M. Villemain, withdrew the Bill for granting a pension of 15 000 francs a year to that ex-Minister of Public Instruction and his family; and the Chamber almost unanimously consented to the taking into consideration a motion of M. Duvergier de Hauranne for substituting open voting instead of the "scrutin secret" or ballot, which has of late yielded such strange decisions. —The French Government continue to display vigour in pursuit of the hordes of miscreants, murderers, and thieves with which Paris is notoriously overrun. On Saturday a considerable military force, placed under the direction of three commissaries of police, surrounded two public establishments on the Boulevard du Temple—the Café du Puy-de-Dôme and the Caveau—the haunts of malefactors and receivers of stolen goods. Upwards of 200 individuals were arrested and marched to the Prefecture of Police, in bands of 20 and 30 at a time, after the commissaries had taken down their names and abodes.—In the Chamber of Peers on Monday Count Daru gave notice of a proposition to repress the unlimited speculation which has for some length of time been carried on in railroad shares. It is intended that henceforward no subscription shall be opened for the construction of any railroad which has not been authorised by the Chambers.—The Duke de Broglie, says the Constitutionnel, will leave Paris for London towards the end of the week, when the Duke and Dr. Lushington will immediately commence their labours, as commissioners on the right of search.—According to the Revue de Paris, the following are the heads of the treaty concluded by M. de Lagrenée with the Chinese Commissioners, at Macao, on the 24th of October last: —1. France is to be placed on a footing of equality with the most favoured nations as respects customs' duties. 2. She is never to be subjected to the payment of any periodical tribute to the Sovereign of the Celestial Empire. 3. She may establish a factory at Canton on the plan of those possessed by the English, Dutch, Danes, Swedes, and Spaniards. 4. She will be permitted to trade at Tchang-tcheou, reserving the right of the Crown of Spain, which enjoys a privilege in that city. 5. She may establish factories at Hiamen, Tchao-hing, and Ningpo. 6. Finally, she will have the right of trading in every place that may hereafter be opened to the most favoured nations."—The quantity of snow which fell in Paris on Monday rendered it extremely difficult for carriages to proceed through the streets. A number of blacksmiths were to be seen during the day offering their services to prepare the shoes of the horses, which found it impossible to avoid falling in consequence of the frozen snow.—Letters from Strasburgh notice the arrival there within the two preceding days of a great number of prisoners escaped from Siberia. 32 had succeeded in eluding the vigilance of their keepers. They had travelled on foot under favour of the night, concealing themselves in the daytime in the forests, suffering of course every privation, and exposed to inconceivable hardships. It was only after a journey of five months' continuance that they reached a place of refuge. Among the miserable beings were two superior officers, who were made prisoners at the retreat of Moscow.

Spain.—We have accounts from Madrid to the 5th inst. The ex-Captain-General of Catalonia, the Baron de Meer, had at length arrived at Madrid. A grand ball was given on the evening of the 2d, by General Narvaez, which the two Queens and the Infantas honoured with their presence. M. Castello, the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires at the Court of Rome, has returned suddenly to Madrid, much to the surprise of every one. He had not succeeded in making a convention with the Holy See, but he brought the assurance of his Holiness of his anxiety to renew his amicable relations with Spain. One of the first conditions insisted on by the Pope is the immediate and unqualified restoration to the clergy of the national property not already sold. The discussion on the penal law against those engaged in the slave-trade, was continued in the Chamber of Deputies on the 1st, and the opportunity was taken by the Opposition to urge upon the Government the propriety of abolishing the Right of Search.—The proceedings in the Chamber were interrupted on the 3d by an incident which has ended in the ignominous expulsion of one of its members. It appears that at one of the recent balls given by General Narvaez several articles of plate were missing, which the servants were suspected of having taken, but the thief remained undiscovered. At the subsequent ball a strict watch was kept, and information was soon given to General Narvaez's aide-de-camp that one of the guests had been seen secreting some valuable articles. This person, who turned out to be M. Quintanilla y Montoya, the deputy for Seville, was immediately taken into custody and searched, and the plate in question was found upon his person. So scandalous an affair having become public, could hardly be passed over by the Chamber. A secret sitting was accordingly held on the 3d, at which the whole of the facts of the case were set forth, and a letter was read from M. Quintanilla himself, in which, while he admitted having unaccountably the plate in his possession, he said that he was utterly incapable of taking it from the unworthy motives attributed to him. A long discussion ensued, in which some of M. Quintanilla's friends endeavoured to make out that the whole affair was the effect of mental alienation, or a morbid passion for appropriation; but the Chamber took a different view of the case, and by a majority of 105 to 18, it decreed that M. Quintanilla y Montoya should be forthwith expelled. It appears that the culprit is a person of good family and fortune.—Some sensation had been produced by accounts from Gibraltar, of another Spanish vessel having been fired on by the guns of the fortress, but the matter was understood to have been amicably settled by the suspension of the English officer. —Immense quantities of snow had fallen on the road between Madrid and the French frontier.

Portugal.—Accounts from Lisbon of the 4th state that the accouchement of the Queen was hourly expected. From the Azores, we learn that the coccus hesperidum made its appearance some months back on the island of St. Michael's, and is now committing great devastation. Entire plantations have been ruined in its fatal progress, so that the most serious apprehensions are entertained by the orange proprietors of their being utterly ruined if the pest be not promptly checked. Individual efforts having proved unavailing for the eradication of the insect, the Legislature is now going to interfere, by introducing some general measures for that end, although it is not stated what these are to be. A project of law has, however, been discussed by the Deputies, authorising an export duty being levied on all oranges shipped at St. Michael's, and the product applied to defraying the charge of whatever expedients may be adopted. The tax proposed is of 30 reis per large case, and 20 reis per small, and is estimated to amount to, annually, 2,400,000 reis; it is to continue for the space of three years from the publication of the law. The annual export of oranges from St. Michael's is stated to be 80,000 cases, valued at 600 contos, or about 140,000*l*.

Germany.—The papers state that the report of the King of Prussia being about to give a constitution and states-general to his kingdom, is confirmed, or that at all events it has not been officially contradicted. The provincial assemblies were about to present petitions to His Majesty for the establishment of a national representation, for the liberty of the press, and for a change in the electoral law. The Bremen Gazette informs us that the different German States are at this moment occupied with a plan for the establishment of a uniform postal system for the whole of Germany. Accounts from Silesia mention the daily-increasing religious excitement in that province. Travellers who have lately passed through Silesia heard the peasants openly declare that they waited only for a signal immediately to accede to a German church, reformed in a manner suitable to the times. Above all, the Silesian peasants wish for the confession of faith of the congregation at Schneidemulde. As the restrictions on the press and the different manner of exercising the censorship have hindered its being published in several journals, Messrs. Ronge, Milde, and a person from Breulas, the chief of the Breulas German Reformed Society, have lately sent an energetic remonstrance to the chief board of censorship at Berlin, which it is hoped will lead to a favourable result.

Italy.—Letters from Rome state that the Pope's new treasurer finds the revenue of his Holiness in a state of the greatest confusion. The former treasurer has been recently dismissed, and it is found that he is a defaulter to an immense amount.—The city of Florence is to be lit with gas on the 1st of next month. The preliminary experiments have been made, and everything is ready for beginning. The Italians have shown some disinclination to allow this innovation, and unfortunately the death of two workmen, in trying the gasometer, has not contributed to reconcile them to it. The railway intended to connect Vienna with the rail established between the former city and Leghorn, and a junction with which is to be effected near the little town of Empoli, will probably be very speedily put in execution. The preparatory measures are so far advanced, that an estimate of the expense has been made, and a list of subscriptions for shares opened. This new rail road will traverse a distance of 33 Italian miles, and it is to bear the name of the Strada Centrale Toscana. The cost is placed at ten million livres. To raise this sum, it is proposed to issue ten thousand shares. It is further stated, that in the duchy of Lucca the Government has authorised a private capitalist to construct a railroad from the capital to the frontier of Tuscany, taking the direction of the valley of Nievole. If this railway should be established it may, it is observed, be continued to Florence by the way of Pistoja and Prato. A company, under the guarantee of the Austrian government, is now constructing a railway from Milan to Venice, through Verona, from the terminus of which, at Milan, lines are to be carried, under the direction of Mr. Brunel, to Genoa and Turin; and when this line from Verona to Ancona, and those in connection with it are completed, it will form part of a great trunk line to Rome.—Letters from Rome, dated the 22d ult., state that the Pope had just annulled an edict issued by the Bishop of Sinigaglia, which prohibited young men visiting families where there are marriageable daughters, under pain of imprisonment and excommunication, unless they presented and declared themselves as suitors, and then the nuptial ceremonies were to be performed within three months after such declaration. The inhabitants of Sinigaglia loudly protested against that decree, and petitioned the Pope, who, in an autograph letter, testified to the Bishop his disapprobation of the edict, copies of which have been bought up by numerous foreigners at two Napoleons each.—H.M.'s steamer Alecto, dispatched to Naples to convey Sir William Follett to England, during a gale of wind whilst lying in the bay, was driven on shore near the lighthouse, damaged her rudder, had one of her boats stove, and lost an anchor. H.M.S. Snake, at anchor in Naples harbour, also lost an anchor in the same gale. On the 27th the commander-in-chief at Malta dispatched the Volcano to Naples, for the double object of replacing these losses, and thanking the Authorities of the place for the assistance rendered, by which, and the exertions of the officers and crews of the two vessels, very little damage was suffered. The Alecto was to proceed to England with Sir W. Follett about the 26th ult.

Switzerland.—Accounts from the Simplon announce that this route had been for several days obstructed with snow. From the 13th to the 17th January the weather is described as having been very dreadful. It had snowed without intermission in a whirlwind of extraordinary violence. On the 14th the despatches from Switzerland were still uninterrupted, though it was necessary to place the letter-bags on the shoulders of men on foot, but those from Italy no longer came to hand. On the 15th not a creature could obtain access to the hospice, which was in a complete state of blockade. At 7 in the evening an awful avalanche, which was detached from the head of Schœnhorn, descended upon the back, and on the two lateral fronts of the hospice, dashing in 13 windows and one of the doors. At Rottilch considerable damage had been done by the avalanche. From the 20th the snow had been falling in the plain, which had thus far remained uncovered.

Greece.—Letters from Athens of the 20th inst. state that a note addressed by Prince Metternich to the Austrian Ambassador at Paris on the late change of Government in Greece, had caused considerable sensation in the Greek capital. The Greek press in general criticise the desire expressed by Austria to force herself into the protectorship of Greece.

Russia.—A letter from St. Petersburgh, Jan. 21, says, "Yesterday the Emperor passed in review, on the Square of the Admiralty, all the garrison of the capital, and the troops quartered in the neighbourhood. The weather was exceedingly fine and mild for the winter season. He was accompanied by the Grand Duke, his eldest son, the Grand Duke Constantine, his second one, the Grand Duke Michael, and the Duke de Leuchtenberg. Notwithstanding the traces of suffering visible in his features, the Emperor's health appeared to be in no way affected. He often testified his satisfaction to the Generals and soldiers, approaching several of them under the pretext of correcting their carriage, but in reality for the purpose of addressing them with a few kind words. It was remarked that the Emperor often chatted with his son-in-law, and showed him many marks of affection."

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—By the arrival of the new mail steam-ship Cambria, in 11½ days from Boston, we have accounts from New York to the 31st Jan., and Boston, Feb. 1. The news from Mexico confirms the fall of Santa Anna, who, at the last accounts, had been captured, and was a prisoner where once he held unlimited power. One report states that he had been shot; but the report requires confirmation. The New York Herald, in summing up the news carried home by the Cambria, says—"It embraces a confirmation of the defeat and capture of Santa Anna by Bravo and Paredes. We first received the news of his defeat viá Tampico and New Orleans. We now have it viá Galveston and New Orleans."—The accounts from Washington, both public and private, are of the most interesting character, as regards the new direction which the present Government has given to the foreign policy of this country. The re-annexation of Texas and the occupation of Oregon are the great questions on which this new policy is indicated, and the feeling in Congress on this subject is rising every day, and probably will end in the accomplishment of both these measures, if not at this session, certainly within the compass of a year, should not the new President call an extra session to dispose of these questions at once.—A short time since, a gang of slaves of eight or nine burned a house in Florida, or that vicinity, and after murdering the family, escaped to Bermuda. They were indicted by a Grand Jury for arson and murder, and a demand made by a former Secretary of State for their delivery to the American authorities for punishment. This was refused by the courts of Bermuda, and the slaves still remain there. A most positive despatch has been issued to the American Minister, Mr. Everett, to demand the immediate action of the British government before the adjournment of Congress. The creditors of Pennsylvania, it is said, will not be paid the Feb. dividend, and the movements in the legislature of that state have caused great excitement in New York.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday.—The Earl of POWIS presented several petitions against the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph, and gave notice that, on an early day after Easter, he should submit the question again to their Lordships' consideration.—The LORD CHANCELLOR communicated to the House Her Majesty's answer to their Address, which was ordered to be entered on the minutes.—The Earl of ABERDEEN laid on the table the correspondence relative to the right of search, and the postal convention between Her Majesty and the King of the Belgians.—The Marquis of NORMANBY called the attention of Government to the delay which occurred last session in sending up Bills to their Lordships' House, whereby due consideration was not given them; and the Duke of WELLINGTON promised to use his influence to have it rectified this year.—In reply to Lord CAMPBELL, the LORD CHANCELLOR stated that it was his intention to bring in a Bill immediately with the intent of admitting bail in error in criminal cases. As it was not his opinion that the common law right of challenge to the array was taken away by any alteration lately made in the jury law, he did not at present propose to bring forward any Bill on the subject, but he promised to look attentively into the subject.—Lord MONTEAGLE moved for returns relative to the financial affairs of the country, and made several statements connected therewith. He said that but for the Income-tax there would at this moment be a deficiency, of revenue to expenditure, of between two and three millions, just the same as when the late Government left office. He gave it as his opinion that it would be expedient to continue the tax temporarily, though to make it a permanent part of the ways and means would be a question requiring much deliberation. He recommended the abolition of the duties payable on 585 articles which at present yielded to the revenue only 42,000*l*. He reviewed the effect of the late free trade measures of the Government, which, generally speaking, he said were productive of public good, and urged them to go forward in the same direction. The returns were ordered.

Tuesday.—The LORD CHANCELLOR announced his intention to introduce a Bill on the subject of charitable trusts in a few days.—The Duke of WELLINGTON, in reply to the question put by the Marquis of Normanby on Monday night, said that most of the measures then referred to were such as could only originate in the House of Commons, but promised that the Government should bring forward in their Lordships' House such Bills as could originate there at as early a period of the session as possible.—Lord BROUGHAM, at the request of the LORD CHANCELLOR, postponed the presentation of the petition of which he had given notice, complaining of the defective attendance of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy of the London district in their Court.—The LORD CHANCELLOR explained the reason of his request, which was that the learned Commissioners whose conduct was impugned by the petition should have an opportunity of hearing and explaining the charges made against them.

Thursday.—Lord CAMPBELL brought in two Bills to render liable to process, judgment, and execution, persons resident in foreign countries. One Bill was intended to apply to England, and the other to Ireland. They were read a first time.—Lord HATHERTON called the attention of Government to the great difference that exists between the rates of charges for passengers and for traffic on railroads, and suggested the propriety of an equalisation of rates.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE laid on the table the Report of the Railway Board upon the South-Eastern district lines, and took that occasion to enter into a statement of the constitution of the Board, to define its intent and powers, to relate the precautions which had been taken to insure secrecy to its decisions, and to detail the course of its proceedings. It had never been contemplated, he said, to give to five gentlemen so constituted as this Board was, so monstrous a power as that of absolutely checking or interfering with the application of an amount of money far exceeding that disposed of by all the Judges in all the Courts taken together. It had never been imagined by Government that the reports of this Board were to be final, or that Government were to be bound to sustain them in Parliament. The Board, by its very constitution, was precluded from considering the claims of private interests, which Parliament had studiously reserved for itself, and the reports issued were only designed to be aids and evidence to be used by Parliament as it might deem fit. Having defended the Board from many of the charges brought against them, Lord Dalhousie came to that which implied self-interested motives. He said, with regard to himself, he was not now, and never was possessed of any railway shares; and Mr. Porter, General Pasley, and Mr. Laing, had never had any railway shares. With respect to Captain O'Brien, he did at one time possess some railway shares, but he did not possess them now, nor had he possessed them since he was called upon to dispossess himself of them. In explanation of the decision come to on the South Eastern Company's lines, he said, that independent of the merits of the schemes themselves, the company had offered to reduce the rates of fares on the old as well as the new line, to give improved accommodation for the third class passengers, to lay down the electric telegraph on both lines for the use of the public and Government, to have a central terminus at the Surrey side of Hungerford Bridge, which they would be willing to make available as a terminus for all the railways on that side of the water, and to provide a link in the chain of railroads which would give a line of coast road from the metropolis to within 8 or 9 miles of the Land's End.—Lord BROUGHAM ridiculed the idea of supposing that the reports made by the Railway Board would not be ratified by Parliament. He did not like to prophesy, he said, but his own firm and unalterable opinion was, that just as certain was it that the railways reported on favourably by the Board of Trade would be sanctioned by Parliament as if Acts to authorise their formation had already passed both Houses. Not a doubt had he upon his mind that nine out of every ten—that ninety-nine out of every hundred—perhaps one hundred out of every hundred—would, having received the recommendation of the Railway Board, receive as a matter of course the sanction of Parliament. Why, he asked, if the decision of the Board was of no consequence—if it was never meant to be final—why all this secresy?—why these Cabinet boxes?—why this invocation of the genius of all the Bramahs to invent an inimitable key, in order to keep sacred the secrets of an unopenable box? If the reports of the Board were really and truly only to be auxiliary, why all this secresy? The noble and learned lord gave notice of his intention to move at the end of the session for a return of the Railway Bills reported on, and the Railway Bills passed.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE suggested the propriety of making the reports of the Board in full, if they made any report at all.—Lord STANLEY said that though it was extremely probable that the majority of the decisions of the Board would be affirmed by the Legislature, it should not be supposed that they would be affirmed because of the support of Government. It was perfectly well known that in former railway bills, neither directly nor indirectly did Government, as a Government, seek to influence the vote of even a single member of Parliament on any railway question—that they had, as a Government, expressed no opinion on these subjects—that they had sedulously avoided all interference with the projects brought before Parliament in their capacity as Ministers—and that they had, on more than one occasion, in their individual capacities as members of Parliament, voted against one another in divisions on railway bills.—The report was then laid on the table.

Friday.—The Marquis of NORMANBY presented a petition agreed to at a meeting held in Exeter Hall, in favour of the Health of Towns Bill. The petitioners expressed their opinion that no delay ought to take place in the application of a remedy for the evils which now prevailed. He wished to call the attention of their lordships to the evil arising from the abuse of burial clubs, and the great mortality amongst infants, occasioned by the frequent use of noxious drugs, such as Godfrey's Cordial, and other opiates. He thought that no individual ought to be connected with more than one burial-club. The system had latterly extended to adults, but the evil prevailed to the greatest extent amongst infants. He wished to ask, if Government intended to introduce any measure on the subject during the present session?—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH believed these clubs, when properly conducted, were productive of great benefit; but it was probable that a measure would be introduced into the other House on the subject.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday.—A new writ was ordered for the borough of Lewes, in the room of the Hon. H. Fitzroy, who has accepted the office of Lord of the Admiralty.—Lord DUNCAN gave notice to move, on the 20th inst., for a committee of the whole House to consider the repeal of the window-tax, unless anticipated by the Government.—In reply to Mr. HUME, Mr. B. BARING declined, on the part of the Government, to produce the correspondence between the Board of Control and the Board of Directors of the East India Company, relative to Lord Ellenborough's recall.—In answer to a question from Sir R. INGLIS, Mr. BARING stated that measures had been taken to render unnecessary the annual tribute of the Government of India to the temple of Juggernaut. A large estate, which had previously belonged to the temple had been restored, and now the tribute was reduced to 36,000 rupees.—Lord EBRINGTON presented a petition from the Rev. Dr. Carwithen, Rector of Stoke Climsland, complaining of the confusion into which the diocese of Exeter had been thrown by recent pastoral letters from the Bishop. The petitioner stated that he felt himself bound by his ordination oath and the canon law not to commit the slightest deviation from the rubric, and that, if he did so deviate, he was liable to prosecution on the information of any layman. He prayed that the House might procure a calm and temperate review of the Book of Common Prayer, Rubrics, and Canons of the Church of England.

Tuesday.—Sir T. FREMANTLE took his seat for Buckingham.—In reply to Lord DALMENY, Sir J. GRAHAM stated that though the inclination of his judgment at present was that some legislative alteration of the Poor Law in Scotland was necessary, yet he was unable to say when the Government would be prepared to submit any measure on the subject to the House.—Mr. WALLACE called attention to the general subject of railways, under the heads of monopoly, construction, privilege, and travelling, involving an entire reform of the existing system. He claimed for the inhabitants of the United Kingdom an inherent and constitutional right of travelling through their own country by the nearest way and at the cheapest rate, on the best roads which may be provided for them by the voluntary investment of private capital, and denying that the principle of railway construction involved anything so novel or peculiar as to warrant Parliament in bestowing on railways any peculiar or exclusive privileges. He argued for greater accommodation, additional speed, and lower rates, all of which experience was demonstrating could be afforded without injury to the companies. One great means of attaining this was by fair and open competition; yet the select committee on railways, on whose series of reports the general Railway Act of last session was founded, was composed of railway directors and others, and was a one-sided body, on whose opinions it was unsafe to legislate. No less than 248 new projects were announced as about to claim the attention of Parliament; and of these 82 were new lines, the remainder being for branches, amalgamations, and junctions. But the Board of Trade, instead of favouring the new lines, and thereby giving the community at large the benefit of additional competition, proceeded on the opposite principle, thus, so far as in its members lay, obstructing free trade in railways, and making themselves the humble slaves of the directors of existing lines. Illustrating his subject by statistical evidence, drawn from the returns, more especially of the Scotch railways, he enforced not merely the utility of farther reductions, but the positive right of the people at large to the enjoyment of it, railways being now constructed at one-half the original expense, and the experiment under the Railway Act, of a reduction of from 30 to 50 per cent., showing how much farther the public accommodation might be carried, in the shape of additional facilities and augmented comfort. In order, therefore, to get rid of any legislation which would have the effect of settling railway fares at a defined rate for a lengthened period, he moved that "leave be given to bring in a Bill to repeal the act of last session, the 7th and 8th Vic., c. 85, commonly called the Railway Act."—Mr. EWART pointed out the necessity of improving the constitution of parliamentary railway committees.—Viscount HOWICK would not support the motion of Mr. Wallace; but he felt the importance of securing to the public a greater amount of benefit from railways. This was the more incumbent on them, seeing that during the present session so great an increase to the existing lines was, in all probability about to be made. In France the first thing settled was the particular line most conducive to the public convenience, and when that was settled capitalists were invited to send in their tenders indicating the best terms on which the line could be constructed. The example, modified, might be imitated here with advantage. With so enormous an amount of capital as was involved in, for instance, the new competing northern lines, it was not to be wondered at that Parliament should be besieged by contending applications and interests; and this evil was aggravated by another, that of gambling in shares, which, at the present moment, was carried on in London, Manchester, and other places, to an extent frightful and demoralising. In the early stage of railway enterprise, when everything was unknown and uncertain, private capital required the encouragement and stimulus of legislative favour. But now, when the whole country was covering with a net-work of railways, and there was an absolute mania in the public mind for railway investment, we ought rather to check than to stimulate. He was aware of the difficulties attendant on interference; but the course adopted last session, by a committee, of which he was chairman, might be followed on a larger scale. They had to decide between two competing lines; and having required from the promoters of each tables of intended fares, they were mainly influenced by the lowest table, taking care that the company producing it should be bound to their terms by certain clauses in their Act. But whatever difficulties might lie in their way, railway legislation could no longer be deferred—the time was come when they must deal with the subject on general principles.—Colonel SIBTHORP, as a totally disinterested person, never having had, nor intending to possess, a single railway share, considered that a single session was too short to decide on the merits of some 240 new projects.—Mr. GISBORNE could not go the length of Mr. Wallace's motion, though he had voted against the Railway Bill last year. That Bill had been agreed to as a compromise, and if it had not done much good it had not effected any great harm. His opinion was, that the only security the public had was in the competing interests of the companies.—Mr. S. WORTLEY questioned the propriety of the publication of the decisions of the Board of Trade prior to its reports to Parliament. The proposition made by Lord Howick would involve an entire revolution of the system on which railways had hitherto been constructed in this country; and postponement of consideration would be injurious. Though desirous of seeing some satisfactory tribunal, he thought their best course, in the emergency, was to devise, through the investigation of a committee, the best mode of expediting the mass of business pressing on them.—Mr. WARBURTON regarded Lord Howick's scheme as simply impracticable. His own proposition was, that the only rule to be adopted was the rule of common sense—namely, that they should enter into no obligations, and give no exclusive rights to any company. He would advise them to keep their hands perfectly free, to grant new lines to any company whenever new circumstances should arise. He had heard them talk of the amalgamation of companies; but it was generally found that when two companies amalgamated they charged high rates. This evil was abated by the formation of new companies.—Mr. BANKES instanced the decision of the railway committee in favour of the line proposed through his county by the Great Western Company, and against that proposed by the South Western Company, as one which was against the interests of the public, and also as one which had been pretty generally known before it was duly announced.—Sir R. PEEL hoped that the debate would not be converted into a controversy on the merits of particular lines. They were proceeding somewhat hastily in condemning the decisions of the Board of Trade, which acted on the delegated authority of the House, and to which its reports must be referred on their merits. He thought that the Board had done wisely in immediately publishing its decisions; the difficulty of keeping some hundred and fifty of them secret would not only have been great, but might have been productive of much mischief. It was urged that 240 new projects were about to be pressed on their attention: and fears were expressed that Parliament would be unable to meet the task. He did not think that it was insurmountable, and it would be much more for their own credit if they resolutely put their shoulder to the wheel, and discharged the duties devolving on them, instead of transferring them to others. A general committee properly constituted would carry weight with it; and limiting the committees on particular lines to selected members of five or seven, bound to attend, and to investigate patiently and impartially, he was satisfied that the difficulty of legislating would disappear. As to Lord Howick's plan, he doubted if the country would now have been so well furnished with railways, if, instead of leaving the matter to private enterprise, Government had undertaken it ab initio. He could not forget all the benefits which had been derived from free competition, and was doubtful of the utility of Government interference. Let them, by the appointment of a general committee to investigate the best mode of managing the business pressing on their consideration, at once address themselves to the important task before them.—Mr. WAKLEY remarked that nothing had been said as to what was to be done with the barristers and their long speeches before committees. Lawyers would only bow to members of their own profession; they made light of the authority of the makers of the law. The Morning Chronicle, in an article on the subject, admitted that the object of counsel was to "overmaster the committee" before whom he was pleading: and this admission was the more noticeable, as the article was written by a lawyer of great intellectual attainments. True, the article rather sneered at "crowner's quest law;" but it should not do that, for the law was administered by lawyers long before medical men; and they had got it into such disrepute and degradation that it required all the efforts of their successors to rescue it from contempt. He had found in the Economist a statement affecting one of the members of the Board of Trade (Mr. O'Brien, Sir James Graham's Private Secretary) with respect to railway transactions; and if the imputation thus cast on it were not removed, its credit as an impartial tribunal was utterly gone. Returning to the subject of the barristers and their speeches, he declared it to be monstrous that the procuring of a Railway Bill should cost 50,000*l*., 80,000*l*., and even 100,000*l*. If anybody paid him by the hour to speak, he did not know when he would stop. The wig carried enormous influence with a committee; and it was of importance that there should be some power to control the barristers.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he had never himself, during all the time he had sat in that House, possessed any interest, direct or indirect, in railways. Mr. O'Brien, as his private secretary, had acquitted himself as a man of the highest honour, intelligence, and integrity; and on his removal to the Board of Trade, had parted with whatever interest he had possessed in two railroads, though his name still appeared in the projects which were coming before Parliament. His brother had succeeded him in the post of private secretary; and it was his name which the Economist had mistaken as speculating in railroad shares. But he was assured, and he placed full confidence in it, as both were gentlemen of the highest honour, that between the two brothers there never had been the slightest communication whatever on railway business. He concluded by reiterating the general arguments which had been urged by Sir R. Peel.—After remarks from Mr. BROTHERTON and Mr. DARBY, Mr. WALLACE withdrew his motion. On the motion of Mr. WAKLEY, a return was ordered, containing a description of the diplomas, licences, or other letters testimonial, that are admitted and sanctioned by the Poor Law Commissioners as legal qualifications which entitle medical practioners to be appointed medical officers of Poor Law Unions in England and Wales.—Capt. PECHELL moved for the return of all Union workhouses under the Poor Law Amendment Act, in which the pauper inmates thereof are, or have been, employed in grinding or crushing bones by means of mills or other machinery, or otherwise.—Sir J. GRAHAM apologised for the delay in producing the return, which, however, was now ready, and would be produced in a few days. The continuance of this species of unwholesome employment was an evidence, not of the supposed absolute power of the three "Kings" in Somerset House, but resulted from their want of authority in all cases over the discretion of Boards of Guardians.—Lord EBRINGTON said it was a new doctrine that work not too offensive for the independent labourer—not unwholesome when performed in the open air—should be thought too bad to be performed by paupers. He, for one, rejoiced to learn that the guardians had the power to continue the practice if they thought fit, and he hoped they would not remove such work from paupers as long as it was considered good enough for the independent labourer.—Mr. WARLEY said if the commissioners had not the power he would be glad if the right hon. gentleman would take measures to confer it on them before the next 48 hours, to put an end to this poisoning, filthy, odious, and abominable occupation, defended as a workhouse labour by the noble lord.—Mr. ROEBUCK hoped that this admission would be balanced against the vituperation that had been poured out against the "three tyrants" and "pinch paupers" of Somerset House, for supporting whom the finger of scorn had often been pointed against himself and others. He trusted that it would render those more modest, who had hitherto made use of this topic in order to gain popular applause.—Sir C. LEMON said that the grinding of bones was not more disagreeable than the breaking of stones, and before it was abolished, some other source of employment should be provided.—Mr. WARLEY disclaimed acting with reference to "popular applause."—Mr. HENLEY and Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD added some remarks, and the returns were ordered.—Sir J. GRAHAM then moved for leave to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to parochial settlement and to the removal of the poor. Since he had introduced the Bill of last session, he had received many suggestions, which had enabled him to improve the measure, and to meet many serious and grave objections which had been started. The magnitude of the subject might be inferred from the facts, that one-tenth of our population, or 1,500,000 persons, received parochial relief, and that since 1815 no less a sum than two hundred millions, or one-fourth of the capital of the national debt, had been levied in poor-rates—a sum wholly irrespective of all private charity. This expenditure was mainly based on the existing law of settlement, and in framing any measure for its re-adjustment, great and important changes would be requisite. Discussing several of the objections which had been raised against some of the provisions of the Bill of last session, such as the temptation which would be held out to "clear estates," the danger of great and sweeping changes, and so forth, he proceeded to describe the measure as modified and amended by suggestion and reflection. The Registration Act, with its machinery, now supplied a great desideratum in affording ample facilities for proof of birth; which he would make the only condition of settlement; but being of opinion, with Adam Smith, that the poor man, whose only capital was his labour, should no longer be confined to the narrow circle of parochial settlement, he would reduce the restraints on the poor. There were 14,500 of these parochial circles. Henceforth he would propose a Union settlement, by which a larger sphere would be afforded, the 14,500 places of settlement be reduced to 620, and labour would thus be enabled to circulate more freely. This proposition of a Union settlement was not a novel principle, nor did that of parochial settlement boast of a high antiquity, not being of a higher origin than the reign of Charles II. He would not adhere to his former proposition of making five years of industrial residence a ground of irremoveable settlement in the particular locality, as that would press unequally on the towns, as compared with the rural districts, but he would guard removals by many limitations, which he stated in detail, which he trusted would have the effect of ameliorating the condition of the poor, removing many evils to which they were exposed, and diminishing litigation. Contingent on the adoption of the main principle of a Union settlement are many minor details, for the purpose of equalising the rating on the respective parishes, and providing for anomalous incidents.—After a short discussion, in which Mr. CLIVE, Mr. BRIGHT, Mr. HENLEY, Mr. BROTHERTON, Mr. DENISON, Lord EBRINGTON, and Mr. WAKLEY took part, leave was given to bring in the Bill.—Lord EBRINGTON moved for leave to bring in a Bill "to limit the exemption from turnpike tolls enjoyed by all conveyances working any part of Her Majesty's mails;" but the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER objecting to it, it was withdrawn.

Wednesday.—The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and stated that an action of trespass having been commenced against him on the 19th of January in the previous year, by Mr. Thomas Howard, he had now to state that a declaration disclosing the cause of action was filed against him on the 23d Dec. last. Under the advice of the law officers of the Crown, an application was made to a judge in chambers on the 24th Dec., and two months' further time to plead obtained. He now awaited the instructions of the House.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL proposed to have the paper printed with the votes, and gave notice of a motion on the subject of those proceedings for this day.—Mr. ROEBUCK questioned the Government as to whether or not a statement he had heard was true, that the thanks of her Majesty had been given to the returning officer of Montreal, at a time when his conduct during the late election was under the consideration of the House of Assembly.—Mr. G. W. HOPE explained the circumstance alluded to, and assured the hon. member that no thanks had been made beyond the expression of the approbation of the Executive Goverment here to the executive officers in Montreal, for their exertions during the election proceedings referred to.—Mr. CHRISTOPHER called the attention of the Government to the defective state of the law with regard to wanton acts of destruction, as instanced in the case of the Portland Vase; and asked if any measure to remedy it was in contemplation?—Sir R. PEEL replied that as the trustees of the British Museum purposed to hold a meeting next Saturday to consider the subject, he would prefer to await the result of their deliberation before giving an opinion.—Sir R. PEEL, in answer to Mr. Bouverie replied that there were no negotiations pending with the Brazils relative to any alteration in its tariff, those actually under discussion having reference only to the usual treaties of navigation and commerce.—Mr. RICARDO and Mr. M. GIBSON hoped that Government would abandon their fruitless policy with respect to differential duties, especially on sugar.—Sir R. PEEL, in reply to Lord J. Russell, said that he would not press for a decision on the resolution he will propose on Friday, after making his financial statement; but he trusted that no long delay would take place between the statement of his plans and the decision of the House upon them.—Lord J. RUSSELL had adverted to it, because, without a knowledge of the nature of Sir R. Peel's intentions, it was impossible to give intimation of the course he would himself adopt. If a decision were pressed for on Friday, he hoped that he would not be accused of taking the House by surprise by any amendment he might propose.—Sir R. PEEL repeated that he would not ask for a decision on Friday, though, from the importance of the interests involved, he would postpone all other public business until the opinions of the House were expressed and defined on the financial propositions of the Government.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, in answer to Mr. F. Baring, gave some explanations respecting the arrangements for paying the dividends, consequent on the reduction of the Three and a-Half per Cents.; and also stated that the whole of the opium compensation had been paid, with the exception of some fifteen thousand pounds.—A formal vote of Exchequer bills was taken, in a committee of supply.

Thursday.—On the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, leave was given to Sir William Gossett, Sergeant-at-Arms, to appear and plead to the action brought against him by Mr. Howard.—Sir C. NAPIER, in moving for "a select committee to inquire into the manner in which the money voted since 1835 for the construction of ships had been expended, and if the ships constructed were an improvement of the old system," observed, that his only object in bringing his motion forward was to ascertain, whether the reports now prevalent as to the ships recently constructed were true or false; because, if they were true, the system ought to be stopped, and, if they were false, the reputation of the officers, which those reports impugned, ought to be cleared. He then took a rapid review of the defective mode in which our ships of war from first-rates down to gun-brigs were constructed, repaired, altered, and cut down, from the year 1800, when he first entered into the navy, to the close of the last American war, when we took to a new system of construction under Sir R. Seppings, and laid down 60 or 70 frigates of 46 guns, which we had upon our hands at present and did not know what to do with. Sir R. Seppings was the first to lay down broad sterns, with galleries, which were carried into every ship, rendering them very unsightly for very little or scarcely any advantage. At that time several builders recommended and built ships with round sterns without galleries; and after 20 years' experience, we at last adopted that recommendation. The error in our system of ship-building was rendered so manifest by the Yacht Club, to which we were much indebted for the improvements made in our naval architecture, that the Admiralty and the Navy Board were at length obliged to give way. In 1827 he had himself written a letter to the Lord High Admiral, in which he had proposed the amalgamation of the Admiralty with the Naval Board, on the ground that the latter believed that all the naval science of the country was concentrated in itself. When Sir J. Graham came into office as First Lord of the Admiralty, he had followed up his letter by a pamphlet on the same subject; and shortly afterwards, though he had not the vanity to suppose that he had caused it, the Navy Board was broken up. It was a great advantage, but the substitute proposed for it had not answered. The great defect in that substitute was the immense quantity of work thrown by it on the First Lord of the Admiralty, who had already more work before him every day than it was possible for any man to get through. He thought it right that Sir W. Symonds, who had built a very fine corvette, should have an opportunity of constructing a 50-gun frigate, of 2082 tons. Sir W. Symonds built the Vernon, which he (Sir C. Napier) admitted to be a good ship, and the First Lord of the Admiralty then thought fit that Sir W. Symonds should be appointed Surveyor of the Navy. Now, though a good seaman, Sir W. Symonds had never been brought up in a dockyard, and was not in consequence practically acquainted with the strain and pressure of timber, and various other matters of a similar character. The gallant commodore then proceeded to criticise, in detail, the different vessels built by Sir W. Symonds, pointing out in strong terms the defects of the Vanguard, the Pique, and the Queen. He complained that, though the Pique had been a complete failure, 6 frigates had been laid down like her; and though the Queen was not a fast ship, steered badly by the wind, pitched dreadfully, and had many other defects, 6 three-deckers had been laid down upon the same model. The late Board of Admiralty had acted very culpably in allowing the commencement of those vessels; but the present Board had scarcely acted less blameably in permitting their construction to proceed after they came into office. He next made some animadversions on the expense incurred in building the Albion, the Rodney, the Nile, and some other ships, of whose sailing qualities he spoke in not very favourable terms, and proceeded to contend that the very defective construction of our steam-vessels rendered them quite unfit for war. Our steam-corvettes were so improperly constructed, that a shot fired at them would injure their boilers and blow them up, and this, too, when it was quite possible to build them of such a depth as to have both their engines and their boilers under water. Our larger steam-vessels were not constructed on better principles. The Gorgon, built at an expense of 58,000*l.* was a complete failure, if she were intended to carry guns. So were the Cyclops, the Driver, and the Retribution. The Terrible of 1849 tons, which had recently been launched, was better than the other vessels; but even the Terrible had not one gun in her stern. As to the steam-vessels which were at present on the stocks, he thought that Government would do better in pulling them to pieces at once, than in going on with them on their present model, and at the present rate of expense. He implored the House, now that we are going to lay down a numerous fleet of steam-boats, not to grant one shilling for them before an inquiry was instituted into the alleged faults of our present system of construction. He had made several very strong statements, which he was prepared to substantiate if a committee should be granted to him; and he thought that, if such a committee were not granted to him, the House would do great injustice both to Sir W. Symonds, the Surveyor of the Navy, and to the Board of Admiralty which employed him.—Mr. HUME seconded the motion on the ground that the details into which Sir C. Napier had entered might be disputed, and ought, therefore, to be inquired into. He wished, however, that the inquiry should begin at an earlier period than 1835. Our ships ought to be the best constructed in the world; but, though we had wasted millions on their construction, they had never been so, because we had never applied science to ship-building. He should be happy to see the restoration of the Naval College, which Sir J. Graham had destroyed; for he was convinced that advantage had been derived from the elements of naval architecture which were taught there. It was important that we should test by inquiry the best mode of ship-building, to be prepared, not with a fleet of steamers, which could not bear a shot, but with a fleet which could effectually protect the shores and commerce of the country.—Sir G. COCKBURN would not extend his defence of the proceedings of the Board of Admiralty to the year 1800, when his gallant friend first entered into the navy, but would confine it to the period when the present Ministers first entered upon office. The House remembered the feeling which then existed regarding Captain, or rather Sir W. Symonds, who had then been recently appointed Surveyor of the Navy. The present Board of Admiralty was charged with building ships on his plan without a sufficient proof of its advantage. Now, would it not have been considered as a mere party attack upon Sir W. Symonds, if the Board, on entering upon office, had suddenly stopped all the ships which were then building upon his plan? He contended that his gallant friend was mistaken in alleging that they had laid down six three-deckers like the Queen, without waiting for a report on her sea-going qualities. The fact was, that the Admiralty had received several reports on that subject, and every one of them was satisfactory. If, on her next cruise, the report on the Queen should not be satisfactory, the other vessels which were at present on the ships on her model could and should be altered. He then detailed the measures recently taken by the Admiralty, in calling for a report from the master-shipwrights in the different naval yards on the best mode of constructing and arming ships, to obtain a superior class of vessels. That report had been laid before the Surveyor of the Navy, and it was only fair to say that he did not concur in its opinions. If he (Sir G. Cockburn) might judge by recent trials, the scientific men who had been employed to build different ships had not displayed any great superiority in practice. He thought that either a Committee of that House, or a Commission appointed by the Crown would be an unfit tribunal to inquire into this subject. He felt that it was the duty of the Lords of the Admiralty to act as they had done with respect to the construction of ships; and to retire from office if the House of Commons should declare, by agreeing to this motion, that they were incompetent to discharge the duties which they had undertaken. He was as anxious as the gallant commodore could be on the subject of steamers of war. When the present Government came into office they found all our steamers "underpowered," and they had since been actively employed in giving them greater power. The advantage of a steamer of war was not so much in having a number of guns to fire on its main deck, as in having a gun of long range and great weight to enable it from a distance to destroy with impunity a man-of-war with guns of less weight. It would be very unwise, he thought, to send a steamer to fight alongside another vessel. The Government were now constructing two steamers which would be enabled to fire two very heavy guns forward and as many aft. He knew the comparative force of France and England in steam vessels; that of England was the larger force of the two, but on that subject he considered it impolitic to go into any details at present.—Capt ROUS said that both the House and the country were indebted to Sir C. Napier for bringing this subject forward. In his opinion the surveyor of the navy ought not to be allowed to build ships, nor should be the judge of the plans offered for the construction of ships by scientific men, who should be invited by the offer of a premium to send in plans, whenever the Government determined to build a new vessel. The question involved in the present motion was whether the ships built since 1815 were superior to those built before that period. He thought that no doubt could exist on that point. He had himself gone to sea in the old corvettes in the 10-gun brigs, and also in the "dockyard" frigates; and he had no hesitation in declaring the ships constructed by Sir W. Symonds to be superior to them all. Still, he must say, that, when he was in the command of the Pique frigate built by Sir W. Symonds, he found the Admiralty so identified with that officer, that any attack made on the qualities of his vessel was considered an attack on themselves. He thought that, if he had been sent out to make a trial of the Queen with the Formidable, and had stayed in Malta harbour for three years, instead of going out to meet a good fresh breeze, he should not have been Captain Rous, but plain Mr. Rous at that moment: for he should have been broke for disobedience of the orders of the Admiralty. Though more than a million had been expended on the construction of inefficient steamers, he did not find fault with Sir W. Symonds, for he was not a scientific man, but with the Board of Admiralty which employed him. He hoped that the Surveyor's office would be done away with, and that the House would no longer allow that officer to lay down ships on his own lines, but would confine his duties to that of a judge of the ships laid down on the lines of others.—Mr. C. WOOD adduced at some length documentary evidence in favour of the professional merits of Sir W. Symonds, and the superiority of the ships constructed by him. He expressed his satisfaction that the Admiralty were directing their attention to the improvement of our steam marine.—Admiral BOWLES exculpated himself from the charge of being over-fond of gentle airs, by stating, that when he went to sea to try the Queen, he expected to find little else than gales of wind, but as the fair weather came on before he had an opportunity of trying the ship, he did not feel himself justified in going in quest of a storm, and bringing the men home sick, and the vessel damaged to the amount of 5000*l.* or 10,000*l.* The allegations as to the excessive rolling of the Albion, and her incapability of fighting her lower tier guns would be found, when she was next tried, not to be warranted by the fact. He admitted that our old system of naval architecture was very defective. Before he sat down he would allude to a subject in which he felt some interest, namely, the gratitude that was due to those noblemen and gentlemen who attached themselves so much to yacht sailing, and who, from their position and influence in society, had a great share in the improvement of naval architecture. There were two noblemen connected with the Yacht Club who deserved to be named in that House with honour and respect, which he for one should always entertain for them. One of the noblemen to whom he had alluded was the late Lord Vernon, who, unhappily, had not survived to see the success of those improvements to which he had contributed. Perhaps it should be mentioned that that nobleman gave his personal guarantee to the amount of 10,000*l.* to the Admiralty, before Sir W. Symonds was allowed to build his first ship, the Columbine, that, in the event of his failure, he would forfeit that sum of money. The Duke of Portland equipped the Pantaloon, at a cost of 8790*l.*, for no other object than the advancement of the science of naval architecture. Sir J. Graham, when he was First Lord of the Admiralty, never did a greater service to the country than in the appointment of the present Surveyor of the Navy, who, whatever calumny might pursue him now, would, whenever he retired from office, carry with him the esteem of all competent judges of his great merits.—Capt. PECHELL supported the motion for inquiry.—Mr. CORRY (new Secretary to the Admiralty) quoted the testimony of professional men, naval officers, and others, in favour of the capabilities of the recently-built ships the Vanguard, the Queen, and others. During the three years they had been in office, they had ordered to be built 55 vessels, of which 29 were by the Surveyor of the Navy, and 29 by other constructors. Of this latter class there were four ships, six large frigates, six smaller vessels, and 23 steam-vessels. This was a proof that they were not exclusive, and were desirous of adopting every improvement. The subject of the effective construction of our ships of war would be best left in the hands of those who were officially responsible for it.—Captain HARRIS said he did not think that the Admiralty, with its other duties, had sufficient time efficiently to survey the Navy, which he would refer to a commission, composed of scientific men, practical mechanics, engineers, and others competent to undertake the task.—Mr. WARLEY thought that that good ship, the Admiralty, had received many damaging shots in her hull on this occasion. But, important as was the subject, he did not think that a committee of the House was sufficient for the emergency. It was one which the majority of the House did not understand; and if it were referred to a committee of naval officers, their jealousy of each other would lead to broadsides across the table. But the neglect of the navy was not a matter of surprise, when he found naval officers in that House insinuating that Junior Lords of the Admiralty scarcely knew a three-decker from a Newcastle collier. Was there, however, to be no inquiry? A commission, to be issued by the Crown, was the proper tribunal; and he hoped that Sir C. Napier would withdraw his motion for a committee, for there were many members who, however desirous of an investigation, could not support it.—Sir C. NAPIER replied by reiterating some of his former complaints against the defective construction of our steam-vessels, and among other instances pointed to that of Her Majesty's yacht, which, exclusive of her machinery, had cost 40,000*l.* That yacht was entirely unsafe. She could not steer within eight points. If you set her machinery going, she would turn round in 8 or 10 minutes without making any progress at all. During Her Majesty's recent visit to Scotland she could not go beyond six knots an hour by night, for fear of her steerage.—Sir G. COCKBURN observed that that was not so. In consequence of that sea being covered with a multitude of colliers, it was thought advisable by the Admiralty that she should not go on a dark night at a greater rate than eight knots an hour.—Sir C. NAPIER replied that the Admiralty ought not to allow Her Majesty to [illegible] yacht again until it was ascertained that she was [illegible] nd seaworthy. He intimated a wish to withdraw his motion, but in consequence of a call for the question from some Members on the Opposition benches, he agreed to submit it to a division. The numbers were, for the motion, 32; against it, 93; majority, 61.—After some further unimportant business, and a short conversation between Mr. AGLIONBY and Lord G. SOMERSET, the Companies' Clauses Bill was considered in committee; and, the House having resumed, the Chairman reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Wednesday.

Friday.—The House having gone into a Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Greene in the Chair, Sir R PEEL rose amidst the most profound silence, to bring forward his Financial statement, and first moved the following resolution:—"That it is the opinion of this Committee, that, towards raising the supply granted to Her Majesty, the respective duties on property, professions, trades, and offices, and the stamp duties in Ireland, granted by two several Acts, passed in the fifth year of Her present Majesty, be continued and further granted to Her Majesty for a time to be limited. The resolution having been read, the right hon. bart. proceeded to address the house in a speech of great length and abounding necessarily in calculations and details. He commenced by saying that Government were of opinion that it would be expedient to continue the Income-tax for a time, in order to allow a reduction of other taxes which pressed upon the public. He then proceeded to remark on the receipts and expenditure of the country for the past year. On the 5th January last there was a balance of surplus revenue amounting to upwards of 3,357,000*l.* After enumerating the different items of revenue and expenditure, and remarking upon them, the right hon. bart. said he thought he should be perfectly safe in stating, that on the 5th April next the revenue would show a clear surplus revenue of at least five millions. He then took a review of the different branches of the public revenue, and stated that the estimated revenue for the ensuing year would in the whole amount to 47,900,000*l.* permanent revenue, without the Property Tax. If the Income Tax was withdrawn, and the casual payment from China taken into consideration, at the end of the year 1846, it was probable the Revenue might show a deficiency, and it was most desirable that such an event should not take place. It might be said that a reduction of expenditure could be made. Now upon that subject there appeared to be most erroneous opinions. The expenditure of next year would, at the lowest estimate, amount to 48,243,000*l.*, which, after the payment of the interest on the National Debt, left only about 18,000,000*l.* for the ordinary expenses of government. It should be borne in mind, when Her present Majesty ascended the throne, there was a change made in the civil list; since that period she had married, and God had blessed the union with four children; yet no application had been made for any increase of income to Her Majesty. It should also be recollected that two of the greatest monarchs of Europe had been the guests of Her Majesty, and they were entertained, he could say, in a style of splendour and magnificence worthy of this great country. Yet, notwithstanding the vast expense of these entertainments, he could inform the House that it was not Her Majesty's intention, or the intention of the Government, to ask Parliament for any increased grant (loud cheers from both sides of the House). It was not intended to ask for one extra shilling. The infantry force of the country amounted to 95,500 men, but if Government could see that it could be reduced with safety, they would have no hesitation in doing so; but they were convinced that the number was not too large, since forty-five colonies were protected by the infantry. It was not intended to increase the military force, but it was not intended to reduce it, and the estimate for the ensuing year would be of the same amount as last year, viz., 6,600,000*l.* With respect to the navy, it was intended to increase the number of men to the amount of 4000 above the number of last year, and this was necessary in consequence of the increased and increasing magnitude of our colonial empire. This increase was not for the purposes of war, but to protect British commerce and colonies. He therefore proposed an increase in the navy of 4000 men, the cost of whom would amount to about 184,000*l.* He did not believe that this increase in the navy would cause any jealousy to foreign Governments. The increase was not proposed with any view of aggression; but it was politic that this country should have at command a surplus number of ships-of-the-line. With regard to steam navigation, he should propose an advance in the expenditure of 187,000*l.* above last year. In the Ordnance and Navy estimates there would, therefore, be an increase this year of nearly 100,000*l.* The total estimate of the expenses of the country for the ensuing year, he calculated, would amount to 49,690,000*l.*; without the income tax it was reasonable to suppose that the ordinary revenue would leave, on the 5th April, 1846, a surplus of 1,000,000*l.* He had stated to the House the increased expenditure which he proposed should be adopted, and it was therefore now necessary that he should state how it was to be provided for. It was the opinion of Government that it would not be advisable to abandon the Income Tax for the present. By continuing that Tax, the revenue of next year, on the 5th April, 1846, would show a surplus of 3,409,000*l.* He calculated the revenue of next year would amount to 53,100,000*l.*, and the expenditure to 49,690,000*l.*, leaving a surplus of income over expenditure, as long as the Property Tax continued in operation of 3,409,000*l.* Now it was most important for Government and the House to consider how this surplus revenue could be applied most beneficially to the public at large, by the reduction of those taxes which pressed most heavily on the community. In the first place he would call attention to the duties on sugar, for he intended to adhere with respect to the duty on sugar to the same principle as last year, viz., giving a preference to colonial sugars. Sir R. Peel, when our Paper went to press, was still speaking, but the following is understood to be a summary of the scheme he proceeded to propose:—The Income Tax is to be continued, and it is proposed to reduce the duty on brown Muscovado sugar from 25s. 2d. to 14s.; and on British India sugar to 11s. 8d. The same reduction applies to Mauritius and West India sugar. It is proposed to impose a duty of 14s. on refined sugars, and of 21s. on double refined sugars. The duty on molasses is to remain unaltered. The reduction of the duty on sugar would reduce the price to the consumer 1½*d.* per lb. Clayed sugars are to be reduced from 25s. 3*d.* to 16s. 4*d.*; the duty on sugar imported from India will be 21s. 9*d.*, and the duty on free-labour foreign sugar will be 23s. The duty on the export of coal is to be taken off altogether, and on 813 articles in the tariff the duty is to be abolished.

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols closed at 99⅝; Reduced Three per Cents., 100; New Three and a Quarter, 103¾; Bank Stock, 212½; India Bonds, 70; Exchequer Bills, 54 to 56 pm.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—J. CHALLENOR, 45, White-street, Southwark, grocer—J. PETERS, Gidstone, Surrey, innkeeper—W. COTTRELL, Southampton, tea dealer—J. BURRELL and T. HALL, Thetford, Norfolk, iron-founders—H. F. BELLENGER, 10, Great Pulteney street, but late of 303, Oxford street, licensed victualler—W. C. PAUL, Romford, Essex, sheep salesman—S. W. TYLER, Walcot-place, Lambeth, carpenter—H. P. GRAY, Caroline-street, Eaton square, horse dealer—R. STRADMAN and W. APPS, Birmingham, button makers—A. and F. ATKINSON, Newcastle upon Tyne, colour manufacturers—A. L. FLINT, Aldermanbury, warehouseman—W. A. CHRISTIAN, Newcastle street, Strand, innkeeper—J. WHITE, Great St. Andrew-street, Seven Dials, leather seller—R. M. HARBERT, Reading, tea dealer—J. TURNER and S. WEEKS, Southampton, stonemasons—J. OLDHAM, Kingston-upon-Hull, ironfounder—W. HOWELL, jun., Liverpool, bookseller—J. SANDERSON, Liverpool, merchant—F. J. RAWLINGS, Cheltenham, cabinet maker—S. WATSON, Highbridge, Somersetshire, stonemason—R. HILL, Exeter, currier—J. M'WILLIAM, Gloucester, hosier—J. WICKS, Bristol, grocer.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Agricultural Deputation.—A number of noblemen, gentlemen, and farmers, representing the agriculturists of this country, waited upon Sir Robert Peel, by appointment, on Saturday, and laid before him the present depressed state of the agricultural interest, urging its claim upon the Government for a share in any remission of taxation. Among those present were the Duke of Richmond, Marquess of Salisbury, Earl of Essex, Earl of March, Lord Beaumont, Mr. Bankes, M.P.; Mr. Bramston, M.P.; Mr. Darby, M.P.; Mr. Denison, M.P.; Mr. Du Pré, M.P.; Mr. Miles, M.P.; Mr. Newdegate, M.P.; Mr. Stafford O'Brien, M.P.; Mr. Pusey, M.P.; Col. Rushbrooke, M.P.; Sir John Trollope, Bart, M.P.; Sir John Tyrrell, Bart, M.P.; Mr. Wodehouse, M.P.; Mr. H. G. Andrews, Somerset; Mr. R. Baker and Mr. Fisher Hobbs, Essex; Mr. Brickwell, Bucks; Mr. Blandford, Somerset; Mr. Brown, North Wilts; Mr. Cramp, Kent; Mr. I. Clarke, Lincolnshire; Mr. Hilditch, Salop; Mr. Hudson, Norfolk; Mr. S. Jonas, Cambridgeshire; Mr. S. Mills, South Wilts; Mr. Moseley, East Suffolk; Mr. Rodwell, West Suffolk; Mr. Oakley, Herts; Mr. Pain and Mr. W. Bennett, Bedfordshire; Mr. G. Shackell and Mr. J. Allnutt, Berkshire; Mr. R. Smith, Rutland; Mr. Stevenson, Lincolnshire; Mr. Turner, Devon; Mr. Warsop, Huntingdon; Mr. Weall, Surrey; Mr. Edward Wyatt and Mr. J. Ellman, Sussex.—The Duke of Richmond having explained the object of the deputation, stated that the Duke of Buckingham fully concurred in the objects and sentiments of the deputation, and would have attended had he not been prevented by unavoidable circumstances. Sir R. Peel then said that he should readily receive any communications that the deputation had to make. Mr. Baker, of Writtle, having been appointed by the committee to open the proceedings, commenced by showing, that from the year 1842, prices of agricultural produce had fallen to an alarming extent, and that in consequence the farmers were unable to contend with the expenses that they found imposed upon them—the greatest of which was the maintenance of the labouring classes, to which public attention had of late been mainly directed; that by the operation of the new poor law labourers thrown out of employment and seeking relief at the parish expense, obtained it at a far greater increase of expenditure than would be the case if actually employed; and in instances when a labourer and family would incur expense to the amount of 17*s.* 6*d.* by the operation of the poor law by way of relief, he would, if actually employed, receive but 10*s.*, and thus the tenant-farmers had found it their policy to employ them rather than suffer them to be relieved ordinarily through the medium of the parish rates; that in the parish in which he resided, six men at least to each 100 acres of arable land were to be employed, producing a direct charge of upwards of 180*l.* to each 100 acres; that other taxes and imposts had increased to a great extent, and whilst these things were operating against their interest, the gross proceeds of farming produce had diminished 25 to 30 per cent.; and that as rent formed so small an item in the actual expenditure of the tenant, no beneficial or extensive relief could be obtained from that source, for at present, such was the diminished prices of produce, that no rent whatever could be obtained from the poorer descriptions of soil, and so long as the burden existed, unless some increase of prices followed, the whole farming classes would be involved in ruin. Mr. Baker proceeded to explain the actual position of the farmers, and to show how little of the expenditure could be reduced, and therefore begged on behalf of his brother agriculturists that in case of any remittance of taxes being made, that they had the first and greatest claim. Mr. Ellman, of Sussex, followed, and stated that he fully concurred in the statement of Mr. Baker, both as to the extent and amount of the pressure upon the agriculturists. Mr. Allnutt, of Berkshire, made a full statement to the same effect, and showed that, upon highly cultivated lands, labour to a larger amount than that stated by Mr. Baker actually went into the cultivation of land farmed by himself and others. This was confirmed by Mr. Shackell, of Berks, who stated that for several weeks he had been unable to sell his Barley because the maltsters obtained a better article of foreign produce at 33*s.* per quarter, and the price had for several weeks been declining. Sir R. Peel having asked the question as to whether any particular remission of tax was sought by the farmers, Mr. Baker stated that being prohibited the use of malt for fattening purposes brought them unfairly into competition with the foreigner, who had all these advantages, and therefore they were unable, under the effect of the tariff, to compete with him in the English market. Mr. Hudson said he could bear testimony to the facts stated by his brother farmers, that considerable agricultural distress prevailed, and although in the county of Norfolk the rents had been paid up, it was from the tenants' capital, and not from the profits of the farms. The farmers were labouring under great disadvantage by the alteration of the tariff, in proof of which he had a number of very good cattle in Smithfield market last Monday, and when he inquired of his salesmen the reason they could not be sold at a fair price, he was requested to look across the market, and would there see a hundred head of Dutch cattle. The county of Norfolk consisted of a great deal of poor land, which could only be made to produce good crops of corn by a large number of stock kept upon the farm, and fed with oil-cakes, which certainly produced a considerable quantity of fat, but not so much flesh or lean as was required by the consumers; and he was convinced, from his own experience, and also of others who had tried it, that if the farmers were allowed to convert their own Barley into malt, duty free, for the purpose of feeding cattle and sheep, they would be able to produce better meat, as the malt would create flesh as well as fat, and would enable them to meet the foreign cattle in this market. Sir R. Peel having asked whether English wool had risen in this country upon the repeal of the tax, Mr. Darby, M.P., for Sussex, replied that wool had risen in value, by reason of the demand of foreigners for long wool of a peculiar character, and of a demand in this country for wool of a contrary description, and consequently an advance had arisen from both causes; in which Mr. Baker agreed, by stating that the farmers did not object to the introduction of raw materials, embracing the labour of this country; but they objected to the introduction of any article in which a large amount of labour was involved in the production or manufacture, inasmuch as it had the effect of displacing the labour of the English producers. In reply to another question of Sir R. Peel, as to the price of barley, it was stated that the short amount of produce was the consequence of the increase of price, which was far from remunerating. Mr. Turner, of Uppington, near Exeter, followed by stating that he should not have come twice from Devonshire in the same week unless he felt the importance of the subject, and the wish he had to inform the right hon. baronet of the distress existing among the farmers of that county. He was sorry to inform him that nearly one-half of the small occupiers, as tenant farmers, were in a state of insolvency; and the remainder, with many of those who hold large occupations, would very soon be in the same state, unless some measures were taken to avert the distress complained of. And, from his own observation, he was sorry to observe many farmers, who were not attached to their farms by the ties of a large family, or other circumstances, were quietly slipping out of their occupations, to live upon the remnants of their property; whilst others, who had large families to employ, continued to farm on by lessening their live stock, and increasing the quantity of grain annually grown, but lessening their resources, which effect was further increased by a discharge of their labourers, from an inability to pay them. For his own part, he had been bred from his cradle a farmer, and had farmed extensively for 25 years; and he could, with truth, say that for the last three years his returns had been 100*l.* per annum less for every 100 acres of fair land he occupied than for the three preceding ones. His only hope was that the right hon. baronet would take these matters into his serious consideration, and give the farmers the full benefit of any remission of taxation, or any other way that the Government could benefit them. Mr. Smith, of Rutland, corroborated the statements of other speakers, by adverting to the distressed state of the grazier, from the low price of meat, effected by foreign competition. Mr. Bennett, of Bedfordshire, concurred in the statements made, and entered largely into explanations of the different burthens the agriculturists had to contend with, and of the importance of a repeal of the malt tax, &c. Several other gentlemen addressed Sir Robert Peel on the subject, and the meeting separated, after the Duke of Richmond had conveyed to him the thanks of the meeting for the courtesy with which he had received the deputation.

Wilful Destruction of the celebrated Portland Vase.—Our readers and the public generally will be grieved to learn that the well-known specimen of Greek art known as the Portland vase, which adorned the centre of the ante-room in the British Museum, adjoining the apartments containing the collection of Sir W. Hamilton, was broken to pieces on Friday by a young man who visited the Museum on that day. It appears that about 4 o'clock, several persons were in the room, viewing the collections, when their attention was attracted by a loud crash, and on hastening to ascertain the cause, they found the vase scattered in fragments about the floor. The consternation was great, every one fearing lest he might be considered a participator in the act. No one attempted to leave the apartments; and if they had, they would have been frustrated, for no sooner was the sound heard on the outside of the rooms than the doors were immediately closed. Mr. Hawkins, who has the superintendence of that department, questioned the persons in the apartments, all of whom gave satisfactory answers until the delinquent himself was taxed, when he at once acknowledged that he had done the mischief. He was immediately given into custody, and conveyed to Bow-street station, and afterwards underwent a partial examination before Mr. Jardine. He refused to give his name, or any account of himself; but a few minutes after he had been removed from the bar, the landlady of a coffee-shop in Long Acre entered the court, and informed the magistrate that the prisoner, whose name was Wm. Lloyd, came to lodge at her house about two months back, representing that he was a scene-painter, connected with Covent-garden and other theatres, and came from Dublin, where his mother and sister resided, his father being dead. The landlady heard accidentally of his being in custody, her brother having met him in charge of the police; and but for this circumstance no information respecting the prisoner could have been obtained. It appears, however, that he has been passing under an assumed name, for on Tuesday at his re-examination he refused to give his real name, as it might involve others in his disgrace. Mr. Bodkin then stated the case on behalf of the trustees of the Museum, upon whom the duty devolved of prosecuting in the case on the part of the Duke of Portland, who had kindly permitted the property in question to be placed in the Museum for the inspection of the public. It was deemed necessary, he said, since the last examination, that a medical gentleman should see the prisoner, for the purpose of examining into the state of his mind, and the report made left no doubt of the prisoner's sanity. It was much to be regretted that such was the defective state of the law with regard to such offences, that it was difficult to meet the present charge by anything like an adequate punishment; however, it was provided by the 24th section of the "Wilful Damage Act," that "If any person shall unlawfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatever, either of a public or private nature, for which no remedy or punishment was therein before provided, every person being convicted thereof before a justice of the peace, should forfeit and pay such a sum of money as should appear to the justice to be reasonable compensation for the damage, injury, or spoil so committed, not exceeding the sum of 5*l*.," and it would be for the Court to consider whether such words referred to the full extent of the property injured, or to the amount of fine which the justice had the power to inflict for such offence. He submitted that whatever the intention of the legislature might be, it clearly referred to the power invested in the magistrate, since the small amount might be more agreeable to the parties concerned than to have an action brought for the amount of the damage done, which in this case would be no remedy. It was conceded that the infliction of such a fine was inadequate upon a subject that had deservedly caused such a general sensation, particularly as the public were now admitted to such exhibitions without the least restraint. As an instance of the defect of the law, he referred to a case brought before Mr. Maltby, at Marlborough-street, some time since, against a person for maliciously thrusting his stick through a valuable picture in the National Gallery, and the case being made out, in the absence of any other mode of punishment, the delinquent was fined in the penalty of 5*l*., or three months' imprisonment. He therefore trusted that the Court would adopt a similar course, although the damage was irreparable, in a case which was analogous, and put the law in force against the prisoner to the full extent. The magistrate, Mr. Jardine, then questioned the prisoner, who said that he had been drinking for several days, from the effect of which he had only partially recovered when he entered the Museum, and being in a state of nervous excitement, he was afraid of everything he met with, and under such impression he acted in the manner he had done; but he did not commit the act from design or evil intention whatever towards any person. Whatever punishment, he said, the magistrate inflicted, he should feel that it was richly deserved. Mr. Jardine said he agreed with the learned counsel as to the inefficient provision made in the act for such an offence; and as he had great doubt that he had the power to adjudicate upon the subject, he would take time to consider, and direct the prisoner to be brought up on a future day. Mr. Bodkin said, that, as the Court had a doubt upon the subject, he would relieve the magistrate upon the point; for since the last examination it had been ascertained that the glass shade with which the vase was covered belonged to the trustees, and was valued at about 3*l*. Mr. Hawkins proved that the shade, which was worth about 3*l*., the fragments of which were lying on the floor with the fragments of the vase, was the property of the trustees of the Museum. Mr. Jardine said that was the most perfect and legitimate course for the trustees to pursue, and called upon the prisoner to pay the amount of the glass shade, having wilfully and maliciously destroyed it. Prisoner: I assure you, sir, that it was not done maliciously. Mr. Jardine: In the eye of the law it was a malicious act on your part, and I cannot help, in my humble capacity, observing with the learned counsel that the Act of Parliament providing for such offences is very inefficient, which prevents my entertaining the case respecting the destruction of the vase against you for the present; but for the destruction of the glass shade I shall put the law in full force, and order you to pay the sum of 3*l*. forthwith, and in default be committed to hard labour in the House of Correction for two calendar months. The money was not paid and the prisoner was therefore sent to the House of Correction, where he remained until Thursday, when the money was sent by post by some one unknown, and the prisoner was liberated. It appears that the prisoner destroyed the vase by dashing it to pieces with a mass of granite which he had taken from one of the shelves. The vase was found scattered in so many fragments upon the floor that it was at first supposed to be impossible to restore it. We are happy however to add that it is now in the hands of the skilful restorer attached to the Museum, and there is little doubt that he will succeed in its restoration. The vase when placed in the Museum had been broken in several places, and carefully restored. Nearly the whole of the base is now perfect so that the restorer has a good foundation to proceed upon. One subject of regret, in addition to the injury of this rare specimen of ancient art, is the effect which the outrage may have on the free admission of the public to national collections. Hitherto, it has been the boast of the Museum that no case of wilful damage had ever been known, and indeed accidental injuries were almost unknown, even during the most crowded days of admission. The Barberini vase, better known as the Portland, from its having been purchased by the Duke of Portland for the sum of 2000 guineas, was deposited by his grace in the British Museum for security, as well as to gratify the public with a splendid example of ancient art. The Portland vase was discovered about the middle of the sixteenth century, inclosed in a sarcophagus, within the monument of the Emperor Alexander Severus and his mother, commonly called the Monte del Grano, about two miles and a half from Rome, on the Frascati road. The sarcophagus itself still remains in the capitol at Rome, and the vase also remained for more than two centuries in the palace of the Barberini family, of which it was the chief ornament. It was ultimately possessed by Sir W. Hamilton, who, about 50 years since, sold it to the Duke of Portland. Its dimensions were small, being only 10 inches high; its diameter, at the broadest part, only 6 inches. The shape was extremely elegant. The material is a dark but transparent blue substance, undoubtedly a vitrified paste or glass. Upon this the figures, formed of a delicate opaque white substance, are laid in bas-relief, and so firmly united to the groundwork, that they seem rather to be part of itself than to be fastened on by art. Of the scene represented no satisfactory explanation has yet been given; but we may say, in general, that the figures were fashioned with admirable grace and animation, and were full of expression. It is due to the Duke of Portland to add that on receiving from the officers of the Museum an intimation of the destruction of the vase, his grace replied by expressing his belief that the trustees had adopted every precaution to protect the vase, and that the injury was one which nobody could have foreseen. The Duke stated his opinion that the perpetrator of such an act must be a lunatic, and added that he considered it fortunate that his madness had been directed against such an object rather than against human life.

Deputation on the Window-Tax.—On Wednesday a numerous deputation of delegates, appointed by the various metropolitan parishes, waited on Sir R. Peel, by appointment, at his official residence in Downing-street, on the subject of the window-tax. Mr. G. Daniell, of Marylebone, said the gentlemen who formed the deputation represented a large number of vestries and committees delegated by many thousand rate-payers, who were anxious to preserve the integrity and stability of the empire. Understanding that it was the intention of the Minister, in consequence of his possessing at the present time a large surplus revenue, to abolish some portion of the existing taxation upon the country, their object was to call upon the Minister to remove a tax which was of a most obnoxious and oppressive character. The Window-tax, they considered, ought to be taken off before any other—first, because, when some years ago half the tax was taken off, it was not only promised that no charge should be made for any new windows that might be opened, but that the other half should eventually be taken off. This promise had, up to the present moment, been broken; for, not only had a new assessment been made, but 10 per cent. additional had been added to the impost. The repeal of the window-tax would be a general boon to all, and particularly conducive to the health and comfort of the poorer classes. He believed that the revenue would not suffer by a repeal of the window-duties, as an increased consumption of window glass would be the result. In conclusion, Mr. Daniell urged upon Sir R. Peel the fact, that the window-tax was not only impolitic, but impious, and he prayed him, therefore, to take steps for its removal. Mr. H. C. Wilson called the attention of the Premier to the great inequality of the tax, and, in illustration, instanced some of the older houses in Marylebone, formerly inhabited by a richer class, but which now paid upon rentals of 30*l*. or 35*l*. upwards of 6*l*. per annum to the window-duties. He also called the attention of the Minister to the fact, that it was not necessary, under the new survey, that the opening must be glazed to be taxed, but that iron-gratings or any opening for ventilation, however small, was chargeable. This, he contended, made the tax a tax on light and air, to the detriment of the health and comfort of the people. Several other gentlemen stated their views and experience of the inequality of the tax, and Sir R. Peel, who listened to the remarks of the deputation throughout with the deepest attention, said, that the whole of the statements which had been made should have his best consideration; but he must tell the gentlemen, as he had told other deputations which had waited upon him with respect to the subject of taxation, that he must decline giving any promise until after he had made to Parliament his financial statement on Friday.

Custom-House Frauds.—In the Court of Exchequer last week, after two days' trial, the Crown recovered 1176*l*., the single value of the goods, in an action brought against Mr. Porter, of the firm of Porter and Foster, silk importers, Wood-street, Cheapside, for having landed and passed at the Custom-house three cases of goods from Boulogne, containing silks, &c., which cases were entered as containing so small a quantity of goods, and of so little value, that the total amount of duty paid to the Crown was only 157*l*. On Tuesday the Crown recovered 896*l*. from Mr. Foster, the other partner in the same firm, for a case of silk goods which was valued at a sum which only produced 36*l*. duty; whilst, from its dimensions, if it had been filled with silk, it must have contained goods to the amount of 896*l*., the sum recovered by the Crown.

The Library of the Duke of Sussex.—On Tuesday the sale of the fourth part of the library of the Duke of Sussex was brought to a close at Messrs. Evans's, in Pall-mall. The total number of lots disposed of during the eleven days' sale were 2643. This portion of the sale has realised a sum of from 1500*l*. to 2000*l*.

Repeal of the Soap Duty.—On Saturday a meeting was held at the London Tavern for the purpose of petitioning Parliament for a remission of the duty on soap. About 200 persons were present. Mr. W. Hawes presided, and was supported by Mr. Patteson, M.P., Mr. Hume, M.P., Mr. Forster, M.P., and Mr. Hawes, M.P. A series of resolutions were proposed, and unanimously agreed to, in favour of a repeal of the duty on soap. The speakers dwelt on the injurious effect which that impost has on the working classes, and adverted to the increased trade which would follow its remission. The present was deemed a peculiarly favourable time for pressing on the Minister the abolition of this tax, for he not only had a surplus revenue at his disposal, but there was a general impression in favour of baths, for the working classes, to which the repeal of the soap tax would be an appropriate accompaniment. A form of petition to Parliament was then agreed to, which was signed by nearly all present.

Royal Academy.—On Monday the 10th inst., a general meeting of the Royal Academy, was held in Trafalgar-square, when Charles Landseer, Esq., was duly elected a Royal Academician, in the room of H. P. Briggs, Esq., deceased.

Hunterian Oration.—In consequence of the Council of the College of Surgeons having determined not to deliver the Hunterian Oration this year, the committee of the Medical Protection Assembly on Tuesday appointed Dr. Lynch, who is a member of that body, to deliver the Hunterian Oration for 1845, at Exeter Hall.

St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell.—This celebrated ecclesiastical remain, the only one of the kind in the metropolis, is threatened with destruction, under the provisions of the new Building Act, complaints having been made to the overseers of the parish that it is in a state of insecurity, threatening the safety of passengers. For some time past, this lodge entrance to the old monastery has been tenanted as a public-house, and it is apparently in a very dilapidated state from want of proper repairs and attention. A strong desire exists on the part of many antiquaries and the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, to restore this interesting part of the ancient building, and to convert it to a literary and scientific institution for the crowded district of Clerkenwell, in the same way as Crosby Hall for the city, and it is intended shortly to convene a public meeting on the subject. The old gate, under which, according to history, the last abbot, ere his ejectment by Henry VIII., dropped dead suddenly, having broken his heart, has been rendered familiar by Sylvanus Urban, as forming the frontispiece of the "Gentleman's Magazine" ever since its establishment.

Destruction of a Ship by Fire.—On Monday afternoon, the barque Henry, of 500 tons, which was taking in a cargo of coals near the West India Docks, from a collier alongside, was destroyed by fire. The crew immediately scuttled her, but as the tow-ropes burnt away, it was found necessary to run the vessel ashore off Blackwall. The flames were not completely extinguished until Tuesday, when the hull was floated into dock, for the purpose of being broken up. The damage is estimated at 10,000*l*., and it is said that the vessel was not insured.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Feb. 8:—West Districts, 160; Northern, 189; Central, 150; Eastern, 234; Southern, 255; Total, 1018; males, 510; females, 508. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1289; males, 689; females, 600.

Provincial.

Barking.—A hatch-boat belonging to this place was struck by a sea and capsized last week, while on her voyage up the river to Billingsgate-market, with a cargo of fish. Three men, called Byford, fishermen of Barking, and the owner of the fish, were drowned. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Blackburn.—On Sunday week, during the violent storm which prevailed on that day, the new and unfinished mill at Bank Top, belonging to Mr. Dickinson, ironfounder, was blown down, part only of the walls remaining. The mill was four stories high. The damage done is estimated at 2000*l*.

Cambridge.—The case of the stone table erected in the Round Church by the Camden Society, and disputed by the Rev. Mr. Faulkner, incumbent of the parish, is not, it would appear, set at rest. Our readers are aware that the Chancellor of the Diocese, before whom it was argued in the first instance, gave judgment in favour of the Camden Society last year; and Sir Herbert Jenner Fust has now reversed the judgment. It is confidently stated that the Society are determined to bring the matter before the Privy Council, and a Cambridge paper adds that funds for the purpose have been offered by Mr. Hope, M.P., who contributed not long since to the rebuilding of the front of Trinity Lodge. The same paper states, that this litigation is much regretted in the neighbourhood, and has been the cause of the withdrawal of his name from the Camden Society by the Duke of Northumberland, Chancellor of the University.

Chatham.—On Tuesday morning, a few minutes before 2 o'clock, a destructive fire broke out in Chatham Dockyard. A smell of fire had been for some time previously very strong, causing the police on duty to examine every place minutely. They at length perceived a light between the palings of the gate which incloses the joiner's pound, filled with timber. An alarm was immediately given, and the dockyard bells sounded for assistance. Before any engines could be brought into play the fire burst forth, and owing to the combustible materials on the premises the flames spread with such rapidity that they extended from one end of the buildings to the other, nearly 200 feet lengthways and about 100 in depth.

The whole of the dockyard engines, twelve in number, were soon manned, but although they threw tuns of water into the building the destructive element bid them defiance, and burnt itself out. The buildings, which are brick, are three stories high, and are completely gutted, nothing but the bare walls standing. For nearly an hour and a half the interior of the place had the appearance of a furnace, and as the flames ascended to a considerable height, the heavens appeared illuminated for miles round. The wind blew strongly from the north-east, carrying large flakes of fire all over the dockyard, and the extensive shed. The Queen, of 110 guns, in dock, being close to the scene of destruction, fears were entertained for her safety, and engines were stationed to pour copious streams of water upon her. The joiner's shop, which is entirely consumed, contained 350 different frames, which had been made for the Raleigh, Active, Bulldog steam-frigate, Eclipse, and Janus. There were upwards of 100 chests of tools, the property of the carpenters, valued at 25*l.* each, which are totally consumed. At present no account can be given how the fire originated. The workmen leave the dockyard at 5 in the evening, and as neither fire or candle is allowed, it is surprising that the fire should have remained smouldering so many hours undiscovered. The water which supplies the dockyard is from a reservoir at Brompton; and it is calculated that the engines poured 14,000 tuns of water on the flames. The dockyard school, with other small buildings, are destroyed, and about 60*l.* worth of books belonging to the school are lost. The total loss is estimated from 15,000*l.* to 20,000*l.*

Chester.—The cathedral of this city is about to undergo a thorough restoration, for which purpose a liberal subscription has been entered into. The cost of the works already contracted for is 2504*l.*, but the sum required will be 5000*l.* Amongst the contributors are the Prince of Wales, the Dean and Chapter, the Dean of Chester, Marquis of Westminster, Earl of Stamford, and the Bishop of Chester, for 100*l.* each.

Ely.—The Bishop of Ely, we learn from the local papers, is suffering from an attack of apoplexy. It appears that his lordship a few days since was found by a domestic stretched on the floor of his bed-room seemingly lifeless; and medical aid being called in, he was in some measure restored to sensation. Up to Friday night he remained in a very precarious state. Hopes are, however, entertained that, notwithstanding his lordship's advanced age, he may survive the effect of the attack.

Exeter.—It has been determined to erect a monument in this city to the memory of one of the brightest ornaments of the Church of England, "the judicious Hooker." The spot selected is the centre of St. Mary's Yard, the consent of the Dean and Chapter having been already obtained. This site seems peculiarly appropriate, inasmuch as there is every reason to believe that Hooker himself was born in the parish of St. Mary Major. The memorial will be in the form of a monumental cross, 50 feet in height, with a figure of Hooker under a richly ornamented canopy. Mr. Frank Wills, of this city, is the architect, and Mr. Stephens the sculptor.

Falmouth.—The local papers state that there is every probability that the Admiralty will sanction the proposed plans for rendering the Penryn river a floating harbour, with all necessary conveniences for warehousing goods, &c. Mr. Walker, the engineer, having made a report in favour of the project.

Jersey.—The States met twice last week, and discussed, with closed doors, the subject of Mr. Wilson and the habeas corpus. It was decided, after a stormy debate, that the writ should be obeyed under protest; and Mr. Lempriére, the solicitor-general, and Mr. Godfray, constable of St. Saviour's, were directed to proceed to London to represent the interests of the States and the Royal Court. They left the island on the 7th, and Mr. Wilson, also in the same vessel. On Thursday the officers of the Royal Court brought Mr. Wilson before the Queen's Bench, in obedience to the writ. On the application of Mr. Roebuck, who had undertaken the case in the absence of Mr. Kelly and Mr. Peacock, who had hitherto had charge of it, Lord Denman consented to accept Mr. Wilson's recognizances to appear next term, and named 22d April for the argument.

Maidstone.—The local papers mention the death of Mr. Ellis, of Barming, in his 76th year, which occurred on Sunday last, after a few weeks' illness. Mr. Ellis was the largest hop-grower in the world—his plantations during at one period extended over as many as 1200 acres, although of late they were somewhat reduced in extent. They state that his career as an agriculturist is, perhaps, rarely, if ever, been equalled. The son of a small farmer at Burwash, Sussex, he began life in a comparatively humble condition, and with few educational advantages; but by great physical and mental energy, strong natural talent, and indomitable perseverance, he surmounted every obstacle to his progress, and ultimately became the largest hop-grower in the world, besides acquiring considerable landed property. Notwithstanding the great extent of his plantations, as the Maidstone Journal, he personally superintended the whole of them to the last, and few men of his years have either the physical ability or the aptitude and determination for business, which, up to within a few weeks of his death, Mr. Ellis displayed.

Manchester.—On Sunday morning flames were discovered issuing from underneath the large stage-door at the back of the Queen's Theatre. An alarm was immediately given, and by prompt assistance it was speedily extinguished, when it was found that some combustible materials had been thrust under the door, and could only have been recently ignited. The damage done is very trifling. It is only nine months ago that the Theatre Royal of this town was burnt down, and strong suspicions now exist that that also was the act of an incendiary.

Northampton.—It is stated that Lord Francis Egerton, in consequence of some recent disputes between the farm labourers and the gamekeepers employed by some neighbouring gentlemen who are allowed to shoot over his estates in this county, has given directions to his steward to allow the tenantry to destroy the game on their farms, and to give the parties who had leave to sport over the estate notices to keep off the property.

Oxford.—The Convocation, to which public attention for some time has been so anxiously directed, took place on Thursday, when upwards of 1200 members were present, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. Mr. Ward defended himself in an English speech, under a dispensation from speaking in Latin from the Chancellor of the University. He was listened to for an hour and a half with the greatest attention, interrupted by some of his more zealous supporters with cheers. Mr. Oakeley, of Margaret Chapel, London, was with him in the rostrum, as also was Mr. E. Baddeley, Rev. Mr. Elliston, of Balliol, and others. The question having been put, the Rev. Dr. Grant moved, and the Rev. G. Denison (brother of the Bishop of Salisbury) seconded the following amendment:—"That the passages now read from the book entitled 'The Ideal of a Christian Church considered' are worthy of grave censure, but that Convocation declines to express any opinion upon the good faith of the author, or to exercise the functions of an ecclesiastical tribunal by pronouncing judgment upon the nature or degree of his offence." To this amendment the Vice-Chancellor objected in limine that no proposition could be submitted to Convocation without the previous sanction of the Heads of Houses. The objection was at once allowed. The Proctors proceeded to take the votes on the first proposition—"That the passages now read from the book entitled 'The Ideal of a Christian Church considered' are utterly inconsistent with the Articles of Religion of the Church of England, and with the declaration in respect of those Articles made and subscribed by William George Ward previously and in order to his being admitted to the degrees of B.A. and M.A. respectively, and with the good faith of him the said William George Ward, in respect of such declaration and subscription"—when the numbers were, for the proposition, 777; against it, 386; majority, 391. The Proctors then took the votes on the second proposition, for depriving Mr. Ward of his degrees: for the degradation, 569; against it, 511; majority, 58. The proposition respecting Tract 90 was prevented from being put to the vote by the intervention of the Proctors, who jointly are officially invested with an absolute negative upon all proceedings except elections, but this privilege is very rarely exercised. Among the placets were the Bishops of Llandaff and Chichester; Lords Romney, Feversham, and Sandon; the Deans of Norwich, Christchurch, Carlisle, Chichester, &c. Among the non-placets were Mr. Gladstone, M.P.; Drs. Hook, Manning, Grant, and Pusey; Messrs. Pusey, Goldsmid, Baddeley, Hope, H. Wilberforce, the Rev. Mr. Courtenay, of St. Sidwell's, Exeter; the Rev. E. Hawkins, Secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel; the Rector of Exeter College, Dr. Moberly of Winchester, &c. TRACT 90.—A requisition, of which the following is a copy, is in course of signature, to procure the condemnation of Tract 90 next term:—"We, the undersigned members of Convocation, finding that the University of Oxford has been precluded, by the intervention of the proctors, from publicly expressing its opinion on this day, deem it our duty to state our deliberate conviction, that a formal act of the University on the subject, which was proposed for consideration, is imperatively required. And we hereby respectfully request that, at the earliest opportunity which may seem to you fitting, you would be pleased to lay before the Board of Heads of Houses and Proctors this our earnest entreaty, that, notwithstanding the temporary obstruction which has occurred, through advantage taken of the form of our academical constitution, the matter may be again, after the least possible delay, submitted to Convocation." An address to the Proctors thanking them for their interference in regard to Tract 90, was also got up and numerously signed by the friends of Mr. Ward.

Plymouth.—The two experimental brigs, the Flying Fish and Espiègle, left this harbour on the 27th ult., and appeared again off the harbour last week. The weather during the first three days was dreadful, with a continued succession of heavy squalls, during one of which the Espiègle carried away her jib-boom, and it was feared she would be dismasted. The Espiègle proved herself a most efficient vessel, but the Flying Fish had an advantage on a wind. The ships experienced a very severe snow storm at sea, so that the decks were covered 6 inches deep. It is said that these brigs are to cruise until the Daring is ready to join them, so that ample opportunity will occur to test their relative qualities. The Erebus and Terror, discovery vessels, are to proceed to Woolwich, where they are again to be fitted out for a Polar expedition, under the command of Sir John Franklin. They are to be fitted with screw-propellers, to facilitate their progress against the currents of the North Polar seas, it having been found, on former occasions, that, notwithstanding all the sails had been set, the currents were in many places so strong the ships had not advanced any perceptible distance for whole days. The screw-propeller will be less liable than paddles to disarrangement in working through the ice, and being entirely under water, will prevent its being frozen as paddle-wheels elevated out of the water would be in these regions when at rest.

Sheffield.—On Tuesday week, at 8 P.M., the neighbourhood of Walkley-bank was alarmed by a brilliant conflagration, caused by the accidental firing of Mr. Dickenson's stacks. Some fireworks were let off at a distance, when suddenly a rocket crossed two fields, a distance of nearly a quarter of a mile, and fell on a wheat stack, supposed to contain about 30 loads. Having stuck in the ridge of the stack for a few minutes, the rocket shot down the thatch, firing it in its way, and then burying itself in a small stack of straw, containing about two loads, which stood immediately contiguous to the wheat-stack. Both of these were soon in a blaze, and the wind blowing a hurricane at the time, rendered their preservation impossible.—Another of those explosions in dwelling houses, which were so frequent in this town last year, took place in Broomhall-street, on the night of Sunday week. An infernal machine had been placed under the hearthstone in the shop of Mr. Harrison, gimlet manufacturer, and considerable damage was done by the explosion. No clue has been obtained to the perpetrators of this outrage.

Railways.

The following are the returns for the past week:—Birmingham and Gloucester, 2120*l.*; Bristol and Gloucester, 1085*l.*; Eastern Counties, 3872*l.*; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 1877*l.*; Great Western, 14,183*l.*; Grand Junction, 7157*l.*; Glasgow, Paisley, and Ayr, 1254*l.*; Great North of England, 1570*l.*; London and Birmingham, 14,209*l*; South Western, 4768*l.*; Blackwall, 1223*l.*; Brighton, 3281*l.*; Croydon, 363*l.*; Manchester, Leeds, and Hull, 6088*l.*; Midland 8923*l.*; Manchester and Birmingham, 3044*l.*; Newcastle and Carlisle, 1448*l.*; Newcastle and Darlington, 1010*l.*; South Eastern and Dover, 4712*l.*; Sheffield and Manchester, 577*l.*; York and North Midland, with Leeds and Selby, 2085*l.*; Yarmouth and Norwich, 200*l.*—The Board of Trade gave notice, in Tuesday's Gazette, that they have decided on reporting in favour of the Bolton, Wigan, and Liverpool railway scheme, and of the following schemes proposed by the Liverpool and Manchester Company, viz., the Patricroft and Clifton branches, the Parkside branch, the extensions into Liverpool, and against the St. Helens and Rufford branch; and the Board having further had under consideration the Trent Valley scheme, have decided on reporting to Parliament in favour of the said scheme, with the exception of the Potteries and Alrewas branches, the postponement of which, until a future period, will be recommended.—At a special meeting of the South Eastern Company last week, the directors were authorised to raise an additional capital of 3,780,000*l.*, and apply to Parliament for power to construct the following new lines: — The North Kent, beginning on the Surrey side of the Thames, between the Hungerford and Waterloo bridges, and passing over the Greenwich Railway, by Deptford, Woolwich, Greenhithe, Dartford, Gravesend, Strood, Rochester, Chatham, Sittingbourne, Faversham, and terminating at Chilham, at which place it joins the company's present line from Ashford to Canterbury, Ramsgate, and Margate. It comprehends also a branch, or duplicate line from Eltham to Stone, near Dartford. The Minster and Deal line. The Maidstone and Rochester line. The direct Tunbridge line from Eltham to Shoreham, Otford and Igtham, with a fork to Tunbridge and Paddock Wood. The line from Ashford to Hastings to extend the Greenwich Railway as far as the park, and to make a return from Woolwich to the opposite side of the park, so that if the consent of Government be obtained, the line to Woolwich will pass direct through Greenwich and the park, instead of taking the circuitous route through Blackheath. One of the important features, the report remarked, in this system is, the connection between all parts of the country, and the great terminal station opposite to Hungerford market. The South Western Company are preparing to extend their line to the same point; and other lines are proposed, by which the communication will be carried on to the Great Western and London and Birmingham Railways, and thus to all the important districts of Great Britain. The directors were authorised to extend the accommodation of cheap trains, and adopt a maximum charge of 3*d.* and 2*d.* per mile for first and second-class passengers. The lines already proposed, the report stated, presented no engineering difficulties, and no works of an unusual character.—The meeting of the Brighton Company was held last week, when a dividend of 1*l.* 10*s.* per share was declared; and the report read showed, that while the receipts of the company, as compared with the corresponding period of 1843, had increased by 15,873*l.*, the expenditure had only been increased by 4629*l.* After the confirmation of the report, the subject of the branch lines was brought before the meeting, and the company gave the directors discretionary power to proceed or not with all or any of these undertakings.—The York and North Midland Company at their meeting last week, declared a dividend of 10 per cent. free of income-tax upon both the stock of that and the Leeds and Selby Company, deducting from the latter, however, 4 per cent. interest on the amount of calls unpaid. The clear profits of the half-year were 39 617*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, the receipts being 75 474*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*, and the expenditure 35,826*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* As the dividend would absorb 31,490*l*, a surplus of 8357*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.* would remain to be carried to the next half-year's accounts. The late reduction of fares, while improving the company's finances, had increased the accommodation to the public.—The Newcastle and Darlington Company, at their meeting, declared a dividend, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The affairs of this company were reported to be in a very prosperous condition.—At the Norwich and Brandon meeting the shareholders authorised the directors to go to Parliament for the branches from Attleborough to Diss and Wymondham to East Dereham, notwithstanding the unfavourable verdict of the Board of Trade. They have also given the directors power to lease, in conjunction with the Norwich and Yarmouth Company, an intended branch to Lowestoft, embracing the purchase of the harbour, which is to be considerably improved, and to take the necessary steps for extending the terminus into the heart of Norwich.—At the Eastern Counties meeting last week, a dividend at the rate of 2*l.* 14*s.* per cent. per annum was declared upon the consolidated stock of the company, the net profit for the half-year being 15,495*l.* The report stated that the intended opening of the 30 additional miles of railway between Newport, Cambridge, Ely, and Brandon on the 1st July next, had rendered an immediate considerable increase necessary to the engines, carriages, and other carrying stock of the company, in order to meet the additional traffic upon this important extension of the line. After some discussion, it was resolved that a sum of 4000*l.* should be given to the directors for past services, and that in future an allowance of 1800*l.* a year should be set apart for their salaries.—The Rochester and Gravesend Railway was opened on Monday with the usual formalities, and, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, a considerable number of passengers passed up and down during the day, whilst the lookers-on mustered in strong force at the various points of the line where the train was visible.

Ireland.

Dublin.—A deputation from the corporation had an interview with Lord Heytesbury, on Saturday, on the subject of the Court of Conscience. His Excellency having heard their statement, promised to take it into his immediate and serious consideration. The corporation seek to abolish the present Court of Conscience and to constitute a new one, of which the Lord Mayor for the time being is to be the president.—The Lord-Lieutenant has appointed Mr. Charles Wallace, of Lime-park, in the county of Galway, to the vacancy in the list of stipendiary magistrates occasioned by the murder last week of Captain M'Leod.—On Sunday, the 2d inst., Lord Galmoy, his brother, the Hon. W. Butler, and two other persons, were received into the communion of the church established in St. Audoen's. His Lordship received the Lord's Supper, and subsequently abjured Popery, and signed the renunciation roll.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Mr. R. D. Browne, M.P., in the chair. After an address from the chairman, condemning the Queen's Speech, and the commissioners who have accepted office under the Bequests Act, several remittances were handed in, including the sum of 134*l.*, collected by Dr. Cantwell, Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath. Mr. Grattan, M.P., then addressed the meeting, and expressed his solemn conviction that the cause of Ireland could best be served in Ireland, and he regarded the concessions which the Prime Minister intimated his intention of granting as the results of agitation. He considered the changes in the Tory mind as most wonderful, and trusted they would be beneficial to his native country. Mr. M. J. O'Connell, M.P., having handed in a sum of money, proceeded to address the meeting. He expressed his conviction that there was a determination on the part of the people—at least that portion he had the honour of representing—to continue their exertions till the object which they were contending for should be achieved. Mr. S. O'Brien said that he was anxious to say a few words in reference to academical education, as he considered it was right that the attention of the people should be directed to it at the earliest moment. The chairman had said that it was desirable that the education of Protestants, Catholics, and dissenters should not be conducted in the same establishment. His own opinion was different, as he considered that all parties, when arrived at the period for receiving a University education, should be educated together; and further, that Dublin Trinity College should be thrown open to Catholics as well as Protestants; and as it was not extensive enough to accommodate all, he approved of provincial colleges also being established. He took the earliest moment thus to announce his opinion in reference to that subject. Having said so much, he did not then intend making any remark upon the plan proposed by the Government, further than this—that whatever came from that quarter he would look upon with great suspicion; and if any good did result from those colleges, it was not Sir R. Peel, but the Repeal Association they should thank for the benefit. Mr. O'Connell then rose and made a lengthy speech, commencing by denouncing the Queen's Speech as a delusion, and "the most stupid thing he had ever read."

He contrasted it with the speech at the opening of the previous session, which expressed the Royal determination not to concede Repeal; "and we," he said, "were equally determined never to give it up. It was determination against determination." None of the promises of that speech were kept; all were broken. He then went through the last speech, and first condemned any project for altering the circulating medium of Ireland. It was a most dangerous and pernicious scheme. He feared Ireland would not combine, as it should, against it. He prophesied it would be a most crushing measure to all classes in the country. If there was any fitting rally made, he would go over to Parliament to oppose so mischievous a project. He then attacked the Emperor of Russia. He expressed his horror of any friendship with the monster Nicholas. There was only one truth in the speech—and it was the assertion that a "spirit of loyalty and obedience prevailed among all classes of the people." That was quite true, and here we are to prove it. He humbly thanked the Minister for that statement. As to the subsidence of political agitation, they would show it to-day by 400*l.* or 500*l.* of Repeal rent—which next week would probably rise to 1000*l.* As to the persons who had introduced capital into the country, and who were said in the royal speech "to be persons interested in its welfare," he himself was certainly alluded to in that passage—for he was one of the first who signed for shares in the Cashel railway. He abused Lord Heytesbury as a "prime humbug"—then Lord Lucan, lately made Lieutenant of Mayo. He arraigned Lord Lucan more particularly for refusing to give a site for a convent, on his estate at Castlebar, to the Sisters of Mercy. The speech of the Ministers was like the whistling of a boy in the dark, to show that he was not afraid. He then went over all his well-known objections to the Bequests Act, and said that he despaired of seeing it amended. They were told that the Act would be amended the moment Parliament assembled—they were told the mortmain clause would be modified. Dr. Murray had stated in his pastoral address that that clause would be repealed or modified, and yet they had Sir J. Graham declaring that that clause would not be amended. He had good news for them. Letters had been received from Rome which stated that the Court of the Vatican had disavowed Mr. Petre. He had stated that this person was a Catholic—he was wrong in stating so. The Catholics of Rome had lately waited on his Holiness for the purpose of disavowing any connection with Mr. Petre, and they were graciously informed that no representations coming from such a person would be attended to. That was good news. He would abstain from dwelling on the Government plan of academical education till it was more fully explained; but this he would say, that if the proposed system interfered with the vested interests of Protestants or Presbyterians, he would oppose it to the last. He deprecated any premature discussion on the subject: it was better for them to wait till it was properly before them, and then each individual could form a conscientious opinion with regard to it. The Government proposed increasing the grant to Maynooth; he was glad of it, but he would rather that each persuasion supported its own church. No prayer, no pater noster, was his motto. He had now gone through those portions of the Ministers' speech which had reference to Ireland. What did that speech promise? Nothing. It said not one word about the extension of the franchise, or of relieving the distresses of the country. They were promised a report from Lord Devon. He could have no hopes from that report unless it recommended an abatement of the evils of absenteeism. He regarded, then, the Queen's speech as mummery and trash, ridiculous and absurd; it gave nothing like a reality—the Repeal agitation subsiding! He would promise the minister to collect as great a crowd as could be assembled in one place, and let him then ask the multitude whether the Repeal cause was declining.—Some routine business having been gone through, Mr. O'Connell announced the rent for the week to be 514*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*

Limerick.—We noticed last week the fact that the O'Grady and his family had been obliged to leave their seat in this county. The local papers state that since their departure Mrs. O'Grady, who is now residing with her family at her marine villa, Carrigmahon, Monkstown, has received through the post a threatening notice, to the effect that it was intended to shoot her, unless certain terms were entered into with her tenants in Limerick, and that, notwithstanding she had left Kilballyowen, she could be as well found out for that purpose in Monkstown as in the county of Limerick.

Leitrim.—Since the murder of Capt. M'Leod, this county has been the scene of a daring, and all but successful attempt, to assassinate a respectable farmer. It appears that Mr. Peter Kiernan, of Killywillen, was returning from the fair of Bawnboy, on the night of the 3d inst., when an assassin walked deliberately up to him and discharged a cavalry pistol at his breast, but the ball missed its aim. When the murderer saw he had missed he turned the butt-end of his pistol, and struck Mr. Kiernan a severe blow on the head. Mr. Kiernan being a strong, athletic man, rushed upon his antagonist and took from him the pistol before he had time to repeat the blow; however, the miscreant succeeded in making his escape. Mr. Kiernan is in possession of a small holding, from which the former tenant was ejected for non-payment of rent, and some time since he received a threatening notice from Molly Maguire's men, informing him that if he did not give up the holding this would be his fate.

Donnybrook.—About ten days since a cottage in this village, occupied by an English gentleman named Orson, who had been many years in the East India Company's Service, was found to have been destroyed by fire in the night. Capt. Orson was in arrear for rent, and it was at first supposed that he had wilfully set fire to the premises and absconded. On examining the ruins, however, the bodies of Capt. Orson, his wife and two children were found burnt to death. An inquest was held, and after a long investigation the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

Law.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.—TRIAL AT BAR.—The Queen v. Smith. This was an action brought by the Crown against Mr. George Smith, the extensive distiller in Whitechapel, for the recovery of 309,000*l.* penalties for alleged frauds upon the Excise. The trial commenced on Thursday, and from the magnitude of the interests involved, the case was tried at bar, or, in other words, before the four judges. The jury was composed of some of the leading merchants and traders of the city. The fact of the seizure of Messrs. Smith's distillery was noticed in our paper of the 23d Nov. last. It appeared by the pleadings on the commencement of the trial, that the grounds of the action were,—1st, for using a distillery situate within a quarter of a mile distant from premises used for rectifying spirits; 2d, for having communications between the distillery and a place wherein spirits were rectified; 3, for having underground pipes communicating between such premises; 4, for having a trough for the conveyance of liquids between such premises; 5, for using such distillery without having previously given notices and plans thereof to the Excise; and 6, for the amount of duties. The Solicitor-General opened the case on Thursday at great length. It was expected that the trial would have lasted three days, but it came to an abrupt and unexpected termination on Friday. At the sitting of the Court on that day, the Solicitor-General stated that, in consequence of an informality in the writ, he could proceed no further at this time. The informality had arisen through the error of a clerk in the Remembrancer's office, who had been in the habit of devoting himself to the business of the Excise; but mistaking the terms of the new act of Will. IV., respecting trials at bar after term, had followed the precedents under the preceding Acts, and had mentioned only one day for the trial, viz., Thursday, instead of specifying that the Court should sit from day to day until the trial was concluded. It was clear, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the Court ceased on Thursday, and that the trial could not proceed until next term, three months hence. Mr. Kelly, on the part of defendant, submitted that it was the duty of the Crown lawyers to see that the rule was drawn up in a legal and correct form, and was proceeding to address the Court, when the Judges said that they had no jurisdiction. A long altercation here took place between Mr. Kelly and the Judges, upon which the Lord Chief Baron ordered the Nisi Prius Court to be proclaimed, and the other Judges immediately left the court. Mr. Kelly persisted in addressing the Chief Baron, in a state of great excitement, complaining that the defendant was not permitted to offer any remarks in reply to the speech of counsel for the Crown on the preceding day. The Lord Chief Baron peremptorily refused to hear him, declaring that it was a waste of the time of the Court, which had other business to attend to, as it had no jurisdiction in this cause. His Lordship then expressed his regret to the Jury, and said that they would be summoned again for the first day of next term. It is almost impossible to describe the sensation which prevailed throughout the court during the above unusual and extraordinary scene.

BIRTHS.—On the 7th inst., in Belgrave-square, her Grace the DUCHESS OF MONTROSE, of a son and heir—9th inst., at Hackthorn, in the county of Lincoln, the seat of her father-in-law, Colonel Cracroft, the lady of W. CRACROFT, Esq., of a son and heir—9th inst., at Greenlands, Bucks, the lady of G. JAMESON, Esq., of a son—10th inst., at Whitchurch, Shropshire, the lady of Mr. BROMFIELD, solicitor, of a son—11th inst., at Torrington-square, the lady of T. MARSTON, Esq., of a son.

DEATHS.—On the 30th ult., at Dalzell House, Lanarkshire, CAROLINE K. COCHRANE, only daughter of the Hon. Walter Erskine Cochrane, and niece of the Earl of Dundonald—7th inst., at his house, 17, Upper Wharton-street, P. J. SIMS, Esq., of the British Museum, aged 43—8th inst., at Brighton, the eldest son of the Hon. H. TRACY, aged 10 months—9th inst., at 24, Gillingham-street, Vauxhall-road, Mr. H. E. JOHNSTONE, formerly of the Theatres Royal—9th inst., in Air-street, Piccadilly, F. W. MORGAN, Esq., late Captain in the Hon. East India Company's Service, aged 56—9th inst., after a short illness, at his residence at Barming, near Maidstone, JAMES ELLIS, Esq., aged 75—9th inst., JANE WHITE, wife of Mr. White, surveyor, Swansea, aged 48.

WANTED, a SHOPMAN, to take the management of a SEED ESTABLISHMENT in a town a considerable distance from London. As there is a house to live in, a married Man, and one who has transacted business with a Nursery, would be preferred.—Apply by letter, post paid, to Messrs. W. and J. NOBLE, Seedsmen, 152, Fleet-street.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 30, who has a thorough knowledge of his profession in all its branches, having devoted the whole of his life to his business. Can have an unexceptionable character from his present and late employers.—Direct to T. H. P., Post-office, Hounslow, Middlesex.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A Married man, who understands his business in all its branches, has left a place where he had a great deal of Early Forcing of every description to manage; likewise a first-rate collection of all kinds of Plants; and can have a good character of four years from the gentleman he has lately left. Wages not so much an object, if a comfortable situation. Direct to G. Z., Mr. CHAPMAN, Nurseryman, Bedford-lane, Clapham, Surrey.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 28, without incumbrance, who possesses a good practical knowledge of his profession in all its branches, and can be highly recommended by his employer.—Direct to Messrs. WM. WOOD and SON, Nurserymen, Maresfield, near Uckfield, Sussex.

AS GARDENER.—A Nobleman's Gardener having to part with his Foreman, through alterations in the establishment, wishes to recommend him to any one in want of a thorough Gardener, having filled his present situation 2 years, and has had several years' previous experience under first-rate Gardeners.—Direct to J. M., 30, Regent-street, Mile End.

AS GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF.—A married Man, without family, aged 30, who is experienced in every department of Kitchen and Flower-Garden, the Laying-out of Grounds, and the Management of Land on the most improved principles. Satisfactory character may be obtained from gentlemen with whom he has lived.—Direct to S. E., Post-office, Sandgate, Kent.

AS GARDENER.—A steady, industrious Man, aged 29, who understands his business, including Kitchen and Flower Garden, the Management of Greenhouse Plants, Forcing and General Routine of the Profession. Can have 16 months' good character. No objection to milk a Cow, or to live in or out of the house.—Direct, J. C., Mr. B. Gibbard, Leyton, Essex.

AS GARDENER.—A middle-aged married Man, without encumbrance, who well understands his business, and can have 10 years' good character from his present employer.—Direct to R. BRAND, Chadwell Heath, Ilford, Essex.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 25, who is practically conversant with all the various branches of his profession. Unexceptionable reference as to character, &c., from the place he has lately left.—Direct to A. Z., at Mr. Brownlees's Nursery, Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A Single Man, age 35, who understands his business,—Greenhouse, Hothouse, Frames, Vines and Flower-garden—and can have 5 years' good character. No objection to a single-handed place. Direct E. M., Mr. Flanagan & Son, Seedsmen and Florists, 9 Mansion House-street, near the Bank.

AS GARDENER.—A single young Man, aged 24, who understands Pines, Vines, Fruit, Flower, and Kitchen Gardens. No objection to a single-handed place.—Direct A. B., 4, Pleasant Place, Holloway, near London.

AS UNDER GARDENER.—A Young Man, aged 20, where a good collection of Plants are grown, forcing, &c., and can have one year and a half good character. A liberal premium for instruction.—Direct B. H., Post-office, Wandsworth, Surrey.

AS GROOM, or GROOM and GARDENER, or to look after a Horse and Chaise, and to make himself generally useful.—A respectable young Man, 30 years of age, who can undertake to drive a pair, and who thoroughly understands his business. Can be well recommended. Has no objection to town or country.—Direct, post paid, to C. W., at Mr. Whiting's, Peckham-rye, Surrey.

TO FARMERS IN THE MOST IMPROVED AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS OF SCOTLAND AND ENGLAND

A YOUNG MAN, who has learned the whole system of Practical Farming in the most highly cultivated part of Norfolk, wishes to obtain a little further experience, and is willing to give any gentleman, farming in either of the above districts, his services if found equivalent) for his board, &c. The highest references will be given.—Direct, with full particulars, to M. N., 326, High Holborn, London.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1845.

HEAL AND SON'S LIST OF BEDDING.—Containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post, on application to their establishment, the largest in London exclusively for the manufacture and sale of Bedding (no Bedsteads or other furniture being kept). HEAL AND SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court Road.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.
The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.
GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l*.

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.
A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

NATIONAL LOAN FUND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 26, Cornhill, London.—Capital 500,000*l*. Empowered by Act of Parliament.

This Institution offers many important and substantial advantages with respect to both Life Assurances and Deferred Annuities. The Assured has, on all occasions, the power to borrow, without expense or forfeiture of the Policy, two-thirds of the Premiums paid (see table); also the option of selecting benefits, and the conversion of his interests to meet other conveniences or necessity. Assurances for terms of years are granted on the lowest possible rates.

DIVISION OF PROFITS:—

The steady success and increasing prosperity of the Society has enabled the Directors, at the last annual investigation, to declare a second Bonus, averaging 60 per cent. on the amounts vested on each Policy effected on the Profit scale.

EXAMPLES:

Age.	Sum.	Year.	Bonus added.	Bonus in Cash.	Permanent reduc. of Premium.	Sum the Assured may Borrow on Policy.
	£ £ s. d.		£ s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
30	1000 71 3 4	1837	170 9 3	77 5 1	12 3 9	346 2 3
		1838	144 2 2	64 5 6	9 16 4	296 13 4
		1839	116 16 0	51 5 11	7 11 9	247 4 5

The Division of Profits is annual.
F. FERGUSON CAMROUX, Secretary.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.
Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.
Thomas Farncomb, Esq., Alderman, Chairman.
William Leaf, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
Richard E. Arden, Esq. — J. Humphery, Esq., Ald., M.P.
William Banbury, Esq. — Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq. — Thomas Kelly, Esq., Ald.
Thomas Camplin, Esq. — Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
James Clift, Esq — Lewis Pocock, Esq.
Physician.—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.
Surgeon.—W. Coulson, Esq., 2, Frederick's place, Old Jewry.
Consulting Actuary.—Professor Hall, of King's College.
Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.
Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l*., the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l*. per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l*.

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term.
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured.

A Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.
A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON.

DIRECTORS.

Lieut. Col. Sir Fred. Smith, K.H., Chairman.
Col. Sir Wm. Gosset, C.B, K.C.H., Deputy Chairman
Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B., M.P., Lord of the Admiralty.
Major Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, Bart, G.C.H.
Admiral Sir C. Rowley, Bart., K.C.B., G.C.H.
Gen. Sir Thomas Bradford, G.C.B., G.C.H.
Major General Sir P. Ross, G.C.M.G., K.C.H.
Lieut. Gen. Sir F. W. Mulcaster, K.C.H.
Lieut. Gen. Sir John Gardiner, K.C.B.
Major Gen. Sir Hew D. Ross, K.C.B., R.A.
Major General Sir J. Bryant C.B., E.I.C.S.
Major General Taylor, C.B. E.I.C.S.
Major Gen. Edward Wynyard, C.B.
Major Gen. Arnold, K.H., R.E.
Major Gen. Clelland, E.I.C.S.
Lieut. Col. H. Hanmer, K.H., late R.H.G.
Lieut. Col. Purchas, E.I.C.S.
Major Shadwell Clerke, K.H., F.R.S.
Archibald Hair, Esq., M.D., late R.H.G.
Capt. Melville Grindlay, E.I. Army Agent.
Capt. William Lancey, R.E.
William Chard, Esq., Navy Agent.
James Nugent Daniell, Esq.

ACTUARY.—John Finlaison, Esq., the Government Calculator.

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of Persons in every station of life, and for every part of the world, upon particularly favourable terms.

Persons assured in this Office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their policies.

A Bonus, amounting to thirty per cent. on the actual value of the Policies, was apportioned to the assured at the recent First Septennial Meeting. JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Sec.

HOT WATER FOR BOTTOM-HEAT.

J. WEEKS AND DAY, ARCHITECTS, &c., Gloucester Place, King's Road, Chelsea, HORTICULTURAL BUILDERS, and Hot-water Apparatus Manufacturers, invite the attention of Horticulturists to their Improved Plan of Bottom-Heat, now becoming so universally adopted.

From the extensive Practice they have been honoured with for 20 years in designing and building CONSERVATORIES, GREENHOUSES, HOTHOUSES, PITS, &c. &c., and erecting their HOT-WATER APPARATUS to every description of Buildings to which heat is applicable, J. WEEKS and DAY have the greatest confidence in recommending their BOILERS as the most efficient of any yet invented, their largest being capable of heating a range of Forcing Houses 300 feet in length, with a comparatively small quantity of fuel, and only requiring attention once in 10 hours. To be seen in use at most of the London Nurseries, also at their Manufactory; and a variety of Horticultural Erections, Models, Plans, &c. &c.

News of the Week.

THE financial scheme of Government, and the great experiment which it proposes to make in the remission of certain classes of duties, continues to be the leading topic of attention. It appears from the conclusion of Sir R. Peel's speech, which will be found under our Parliamentary news, that the renewal of the Property and Income-tax will leave a surplus of 3,409,000*l*. This surplus Sir R. Peel proposes to apply to the reduction of certain taxes, in the belief that their remission will lay the foundation of great commercial prosperity. In addition to the reduction of the Sugar Duties, noticed in our last, he proposes to abolish all duties on exports, including the export duty laid on coal so recently as 1842; and to abolish altogether the duties on 430 articles in the tariff, which yield merely nominal amounts, and impose vexatious restraints on commerce. These include raw materials of various kinds, furniture woods and coopers' staves; and the reduction of the duties on these articles, he believes, will confer a benefit on a struggling trade, and assist many ingenious mechanics. He next proposes to abolish the duty on cotton wool, the auction duty, and the duty on glass, which he considers preferable to a remission of the Window-tax. These reductions will cause a total loss to the revenue of 3,358,000*l*. which will nearly absorb the estimated surplus of 3,409,000*l*. Sir R. Peel, in conclusion, expressed his belief that though the proposed scheme is a bold one, the success of the last experiment on the tariff induced him to believe that his present plan will encourage commerce and industry, and bring about a general prosperity which will benefit all classes of the community. On Monday the discussion on the principle of these measures was commenced by Lord John Russell, who approved, in many respects, of the bold reductions proposed by Government, and considered them the forerunners of still greater advances in the same direction. His lordship, however, objected to the Income-tax, and contended that by putting it on the popular but dangerous ground of abolition of taxes, it would be imposed not for three years but for perpetuity. He disapproved of the remission of the Auction Duty, of which no one had complained, and thought that the duty on fire insurances had preferable claims, to say nothing of soap, which ought, as a necessary of life, to be exempted from taxation. He argued that there was a great principle superior to all that Ministers had proposed, namely that we ought to have no protective duties at all. A readjustment of the Sugar Duties on correct grounds would render the Income-tax unnecessary, and he would then proceed to abolish all unjust monopolies. After repeating his opinion that protection is the bane of agriculture, he said that he was for a short Income-tax, and a final abandonment of all monopoly. His lordship, however, declined to move any amendment; upon which Mr. Roebuck moved the omission of "professions, trades, and offices" from the operation of the present Income-tax. A long discussion ensued, which ended in the rejection of this amendment by a majority of 208. On Wednesday Mr. Roebuck brought forward another amendment, that the Income-tax be extended to Ireland. This was warmly opposed by Irish Members of all shades of politics, and resisted by Ministers, on the ground that England would have by far the largest share of the proposed remission of taxes. After an animated debate, the amendment was negatived by 75 to 33; and on the question being put on the original motion, the continuance of the Income-tax for 3 years longer was carried by 228 to 30. On Tuesday Lord Ashley obtained leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the labour of children in the calico print works of Great Britain and Ireland. Sir J. Graham, on the part of Government, stated that he would not withhold his consent to the introduction of the Bill, but he gave slight hopes that it would be carried. On the same day Mr. T. Duncombe called the attention of the House to the unsatisfactory nature of the report of the Secret Committee on the opening and detaining of Letters, and demanded a Committee of Inquiry into the circumstances under which letters addressed to himself had been opened. Mr. Duncombe in this instance placed the question on new ground, and contended as a Member of Parliament that the opening his letters was a breach of privilege, and an insult to his constituency. The debate which ensued lasted nearly the whole of Tuesday's sitting, and was adjourned to Thursday, when Lord Howick moved as an amendment that a Committee of Inquiry be appointed; but this was negatived by a majority of 240, and after an ineffectual attempt of Sir R. Peel to bring the question to a division, another adjournment was agreed to.

From France we learn that the report of the Committee on the Secret Service Bill was presented to the Chambers on Tuesday, and was favourable to the Cabinet. The debate was to commence on Thursday, and the division which will decide the fate of the Ministry was expected to take place this day or on Monday.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the royal children, returned to Buckingham Palace on Thursday evening, from Brighton, travelling to town by a special train on the Brighton Railway. During the week, the Queen and Prince, and the infant royal family have taken daily airings on the Chain Pier, or on the cliffs and downs in the neighbourhood of Brighton. On Saturday, Her Majesty and Prince Albert paid a visit to the Earl of Liverpool, at Buxted Park, returning to the Pavilion to dinner. The towns of Lewes and Uckfield, through which Her Majesty passed on her way to Buxted, were gaily decorated with evergreens and triumphal arches, and Her Majesty was received by the inhabitants with every demonstration of loyalty. The Hon. Miss Paget has succeeded the Hon. Miss Murray, as Maid-of-Honour to Her Majesty. It is said that Her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the royal family, may be expected to arrive at Windsor for a sojourn of about ten days or a fortnight, on the 19th proximo, and that it is not the intention of Her Majesty to honour the Isle of Wight with a residence next autumn, the contract for Osborne House having been given up. The furniture removed from the Pavilion, Brighton, has been packed up, to be returned to that palace.

Her Majesty's Levees.—Notice has been given from the Lord Chamberlain's Office, that Her Majesty will hold levees at St. James's Palace, on the 5th and 12th of next month.

Parliamentary Movements.—A new writ has been issued for East Kent, in the room of Sir Edward Knatchbull, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds; and for Thetford, in the room of Mr. W. B. Baring, who has accepted the office of Paymaster of the Forces. The Hon. H. Fitzroy has been returned for Lewes without opposition, Mr. Harford and Mr. Kemp, who had come forward as candidates, having declined to go to the poll. The Right Hon. Sidney Herbert has been re-elected for South Wilts without opposition.

Official Appointments.—Capt. the Hon. R. S. Dundas, who commanded the Melville, 72, in the operations on the coast of China, including the capture of the forts of the Bocca Tigris, and the operations against Canton, in 1841, has been appointed Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, in the room of Capt. Hamilton, appointed Second Secretary to the Admiralty, vice Sir John Barrow, retired. Capt. Dundas is the second son of Lord Melville.

East India Mails.—The following notice has been issued by the Postmaster-General:—"A new line of mail communication having been established between Suez and Calcutta, viâ Ceylon and Madras, mails for India

&c., Egypt and the Mediterranean, will in future be made up at this office, and despatched on the evening of the 24th of every month, viâ Marseilles, in addition to the mails for India forwarded through France on the 7th of the month. When the 24th falls on Sunday, the mails will be made up and despatched from this office on the following evening."

Death of the Marquis of Westminster.—The Marquis of Westminster, who has been for some time an invalid, died on Monday at Eaton Hall, at the age of 78. His Lordship succeeded to the family honours as second Earl Grosvenor, &c., on the demise of his father, in 1802, and was created Marquis of Westminster under the Administration of Earl Grey, in 1831. His Lordship married, 1794, Eleanor, only daughter of Thomas, late Earl of Wilton, by whom he leaves issue, 1. Richard, Earl of Grosvenor, born 1795, and married 1819, Elizabeth Mary, youngest daughter of George, Duke of Sutherland, who succeeds the deceased nobleman in the family honours and estates. 2. Thomas, the present Earl of Wilton, born 1799, married 1821, Lady Mary Margaret Stanley, only daughter of the Earl of Derby, by his second Countess; and 3. Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P. for Chester, born 1801, married 1831, the Hon. Charlotte Wellesley, daughter of Lord Cowley. The late Marquis was a Liberal in politics, and a firm supporter of Earl Grey's Administration. His Lordship is generally supposed to have been the most wealthy nobleman in the kingdom. His house-property alone in Westminster is more than sufficient to constitute a city in itself.

Death of the Earl of Effingham.—This gallant nobleman, one of the most distinguished officers of the Peninsular war, died at Brighton on Thursday week, at the age of 78. His lordship was only son of Mr. Henry Howard, of Arundel, and the Hon. Maria Mackenzie, second daughter of Viscount Fortrose, eldest son of the Earl of Seaforth. He was born in 1767, and married in 1800, Lady Charlotte Primrose, eldest daughter of the late Earl of Rosebery, by whom he leaves issue three sons and two daughters, namely, Lord Howard, the Hon. Charles Howard, the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Howard, and the Ladies Charlotte and Arabella Howard. He succeeded to the barony on the death of the last Earl of Effingham, as Lord Howard of Effingham, but in 1837 the earldom was created anew in favour of the deceased. His lordship entered the army in 1786. He served with the Guards on the Continent, and was present at the affair of St. Amand, where he was wounded; at the siege and capture of Valenciennes, the action of Lincelles, and siege of Dunkirk. During the rebellion of 1798, he served as major of brigade in Ireland. He went in the same capacity with the expedition to Holland in 1799, and was present in all the actions of that campaign. In 1811 he joined the army in the Peninsula under the Duke of Wellington. He was appointed to the command of a brigade, and was present with that body at the action of Fuentes d'Onor. At the action of Arroyo de Molinos he particularly attracted the favourable notice of Lord Hill by his determined gallantry, and he was subsequently present at the storming of the forts of Napoleon and Ragusa, at Almarez. In 1812, he was appointed to the command of the first brigade of Guards in the first division, and in June in the following year he succeeded to the entire command of that division of the army, which he maintained to the end of the war in 1814. He was at the battle of Vittoria, the attack on Tolosa, at the passage of the Bidassoa, at Nivelle, at the Nive, and at Adour. For his services at Vittoria and the Nive he received a medal and one clasp. The noble earl was for some years Colonel of the 70th Foot, but on a vacancy occurring in the 3d (Buffs) in 1832, his lordship was appointed to that regiment, which he held at the time of his death. His lordship is succeeded by Lord Howard, his eldest son, born, 1806, and married, 1832, Eliza, only daughter of Gen. Sir Gordon Drummond, by whom he has a youthful family, his eldest son, now Lord Howard, having been born in 1837. His lordship, during the Parliaments of 1830 and 1831, was member for New Shoreham.

Death of Sir T. F. Buxton, Bart.—We regret to state that letters were received in town yesterday, announcing the death of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Bart., on the 19th inst. at his seat, Northrepps, Norfolk; after a lingering illness. Sir T. F. Buxton first became known by his great exertions to diminish the sufferings of those at home, whether confined in gaols or struggling in poverty, as the Spitalfields manufacturers were a quarter of a century ago. Entering into Parliament, he then commenced that career of enlarged and comprehensive usefulness which will always associate his name with the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, and with the most active endeavours to confirm and improve the measures for the abolition of the slave-trade; and not less with the well-meant, though not equally successful efforts for the benefit of the African race in their own continent. The comparative failure of the Niger expedition preyed, it is said, on his health and spirits, and probably hastened his death.

Foreign.

France.—The financial speech of Sir Robert Peel on Friday evening, and the proposed annexation of Texas to the United States of America, have for the moment diverted the attention of the French journalists from the Right of Search and the interminable Tahiti question. That part of Sir R. Peel's statement which referred to the civil list, and which stated that Her Majesty, notwithstanding the extraordinary expenses of the past year, had no intention of demanding an increase of income, was regarded with admiration in the French metropolis; but the Débats expresses a conviction that the income-tax will be permanent, and believing that it now forms part of our social economy, advises the English people to resign themselves to it. Another topic of discussion is supplied by the publication of three despatches from Lord Aberdeen to Lord Cowley, and from M. Guizot to the Count de Saint Aulaire, relative to the Right of Search, and to the institution of the commission who are to devise other means of repressing the slave-trade. Upon the contents of these documents, which they have derived from the London press, the Opposition prints animadvert with great severity; and the publication of the despatches at this moment seems likely to aggravate the critical position of the Cabinet, and to render the attacks of its foes still more formidable in the impending discussion on the Secret Service Bill. On Thursday the Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, on the Secret Service Money Bill, selected Marshal Bugeaud as their President, and M. Dessaigne as their Secretary, and both the majority and minority of the committee agreed as to the necessity of presenting their report as soon as possible, and thus hastening the grand debate which is to decide the fate of the Cabinet. On Friday the committee selected M. Debelleyme as their reporter, after hearing Marshal Soult and the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, the Interior, and Justice. On Tuesday they presented their report, which is stated by the Ministerial papers to be quite favourable to the Cabinet, and most explicitly to represent their vote on the Bill as a vote of confidence in M. Guizot and his colleagues. It was expected that the debate would commence on Thursday, and that the division or ballot on the Bill would take place this day, or on Monday next. The Chamber of Peers took into consideration, on Saturday, the proposition of Count Daru, having for its object to prevent stock-jobbing in the railroad shares which have not as yet obtained the sanction of the Legislature and the King. The Minister of Public Works himself supported the proposition, and announced that he would shortly present a project of law with that view to Parliament. The Chamber of Deputies took into consideration on the same day a proposition of M. Roger, to the effect of modifying certain articles of the Criminal Code restrictive of individual liberty. M. Isambert brought forward on Monday his proposition relative to the responsibility of the agents of the Government. The Minister of Justice opposed the proposition, which, having been feebly supported by M. Odillon Barrot, was rejected.—Considerable sensation has been created by an extraordinary mandate recently issued by Cardinal Bonald, Archbishop of Lyons, condemning a well-known work of M. Dupin's, on "the Liberty of the Gallican Church." M. Dupin was formerly President of the Chamber, and is now Procureur-General of the Court of Cassation, and the Government appears to have taken up his cause. A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday, at which the case was taken into consideration, and it was determined that Cardinal Bonald should be called before the Council of State to answer for the publication of the mandate.—M. Lakanal, who was a rather conspicuous member of the "Convention Nationale," died at Paris on Friday, at the age of 83, and according to the republican National, by no means regretting the sanguinary scenes in which he had participated.—A trial has just taken place in Paris, which has caused some interest in the higher circles. Six persons, including four Englishmen, called Walker, Fraser, Ogilvie, and Lambert, an Englishwoman called Emma Caye, and a Frenchman called Peyronnet, were tried for gambling on the complaint of certain parties who found that they had been cheated, and refused to pay. An Englishman, called Baring, was also concerned in the affair, but he was not to be discovered. After a long trial, the Court decided that the facts of the indictment were proved, but that as the parties had played sur parole, and money did not pass so as to constitute the offence of swindling, provided for by the Code, no conviction could take place. The persons in custody were therefore acquitted. —The weather was still cold, but fine, in Paris. A hard frost prevailed, but so hot was the sun, that vast numbers of persons were seated to enjoy it as in summer on the Boulevard des Italiens. The sudden variations of temperature which have been experienced at Paris during some days past have exercised a most unfavourable influence over the health of the inhabitants. The hospitals were never before known to be so full. A new epidemic had manifested itself, producing pains in the head and limbs, sore eyes, and other inflammatory effects.

Spain.—The Madrid journals of the 12th inst. announce that in the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on the 11th the Bills for the repression of the slave-trade had been at length passed. In the Senate, the Minister of Finance had introduced a Bill for reinstating the clergy in the possession of such part of their old property as had not yet been sold, and there was no doubt that it would pass. This project was believed to be connected with the pending negotiations with the Court of Rome. Subsequent advices state, that a proposition and a plan for the conversion of the Four per Cents. and Five per Cents. into Three per Cents. had been submitted to M. Mon by a Madrid banking-house, and would, probably, be adopted.

Germany.—The opening of the general Prussian Diet took place on the 9th inst. The Cologne Gazette observes that the whole of the deputies were present, expecting to find in the speech on the occasion some allusion to the rumoured intention of giving a constitution to Prussia. No allusion of the kind, however, was made. —We learn from Hamburgh that, in consideration of the active and generous conduct of the Jews of that city and of the banker Solomon Heine in particular, on the occasion of the great fire in 1842, the Government of the city and province has felt it to be its duty to ameliorate the laws which weighed so heavily on this class of its population. Hitherto, the Jews of Hamburgh have been restricted to commerce and to the exercise of the medical profession, but the Council of Ancients has proposed the opening to them of all professions and trades. —The Hungarian Diet has passed a decree, admitting non-nobles to purchase and possess land. The Prussian Ministerial paper congratulates the Hungarian Diet on its liberality in this instance, whilst the estates of Bohemia, Moravia, and Gallicia still insist on the rights of naturalisation. None, however, but Hungarian born citizens of recognised religion are entitled to the privilege. Letters of the 6th Feb., from Munich, in the German papers, state that the railway train for Augsburgh had, on the previous evening, been buried in snow near the former place, and that in spite of all the exertions used for the purpose it had been found impossible to extricate it. The consequence was, that the passengers suffered much inconvenience, since, instead of being able to proceed on their respective journeys, they were, after a delay of some hours, compelled to return to Munich. Fortunately the circumstance was attended with no serious accident.

Belgium.—The fall of snow in this country has been immense. A Brussels letter of the 10th states that immense flocks of larks had just passed over that city, flying westward. They came from the east, where probably the snow is deep, and were evidently, from the fact of their flying close to the roofs of the houses, almost exhausted. At Liege the streets, on the 16th inst., were rendered all but impracticable by the dense masses, portions of which had to be removed by the scavengers' waggons. So large a quantity of snow was scarcely remembered in this ancient city. The Bruges papers state that at Thielt the depth was so considerable that the labour, in partially clearing it away, had been very great. The church had for a time remained inaccessible.

Switzerland.—The affairs of Switzerland are hourly becoming more complicated. The party which demands the expulsion of the Jesuits has prevailed in the directing canton, without having as yet obtained a decisive majority of votes in the other States of the Confederacy, eight and a half of which have beforehand declared for violent measures; the Radicals are henceforth strong enough to lead the doubtful cantons, and to command the Diet. The law they will thus dictate will be a declaration of war against Lucerne and the Catholic Coalition. The Diet is to meet on the 24th. The question to be decided is, whether the admission of the Jesuits into the cantons is a federal question, or merely a question which must be left to the cantons themselves. General de Sonnenberg has arrived at Lucerne from Naples, and is to be put in command of the troops of the canton in favour of the Jesuits, should civil war break out.

Italy.—Letters from Rome state that a loan has been contracted by the Government with an eminent firm, but is only to be brought into circulation according to the wants of the treasury. The Princes Borghese, Odescalchi, Corsini, and Doria, Cardinals Orsini and Acton, and Monsignor Zacchi, Governor of Rome, are at the head of a company now forming for the cultivation of Olive and Mulberry trees in the Campagna, which is now a desert. The first day of Carnival was inaugurated with the usual ceremonies on the 25th ult., and has since been tolerably lively. On the 1st inst., there was a violent hurricane at Rome, with thunder, lightning, hail, and rain; and, in the morning of the 2d, the Tiber overflowed its banks, and inundated some of the lower parts of the city. It was the anniversary of the flood of 1805, when the water rose about 11 feet, but on this occasion it did not rise more than about 7½ feet. On the 3d, in the morning, Monte Cavi and the surrounding hills were covered with snow.

Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople, of the 25th ult., state that the Porte has at length unconditionally and unreservedly yielded to the demands of the British Government. The alternative which Sir Stratford Canning had demanded, viz. his admittance to an audience with the Sultan, produced the effect anticipated, and all other evasions, by which the Turkish Ministers sought indefinitely to postpone a settlement of the questions at issue, have been baffled by this argument. In addition to this, the Sultan has published a hatti-sherif or manifesto, in which he soundly rates his Ministers, and hints that all his efforts to improve the state of his empire have failed through their ill-will or incapacity. Even the reform which has taken place in the army is declared to be defective, since it is not based on the general prosperity of the country. This document is the more remarkable, as there is no doubt it is the spontaneous effusion of the Sultan's own feelings, and written by his own hand.

United States.—The accounts received since our last confirm the fact that resolutions for annexing Texas to the United States have passed the House of Representatives in Congress, by—ayes, 120; noes, 98. By this Bill, a portion of Texas is to be free, and the southern and eastern part slave. The fate of the measure in the Senate is uncertain, as parties are so nicely balanced that there are only eight doubtful votes. I was rumoured at Washington that the negotiations between Mr. Calhoun, American Secretary of State, and Mr. Pakenham, British Minister, in relation to settling the Oregon difficulty, had failed. A Bill for the occupation of Oregon from lat. 42° to 54° 40′ had been read in the House of Representatives. It was stated that the American claim up to 54° 40′ was founded on the fact that it was the line agreed upon with Russia in their treaty with that Power. Mr. Quincy Adams, a chief leader of the Whig party, was prepared to go as far as 49°, and to require further information respecting the remaining 5° 40′. He wished the United States to be morally, as well as geographically and politically right; and if, then, Great Britain should refuse to give up her adverse claim, he would be prepared to say—"Lay on, Macduff!" Meetings have been held in Michigan and near the northern frontier, to memorialise Congress to negotiate with the British Government for the sale of Canada to the United States.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—The Sydney Gazette, of the 30th Sept., announces the death of Sir James Dowling, Chief Justice of the colony, which took place on the 27th of that month, in his 58th year. Sir J. Dowling was universally respected, and was on the point of returning to England by the next packet. The Governor had issued a notification to the colony, announcing his intention to attend the funeral, and inviting all officers of the Civil Government also to attend.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday.—Lord CAMPBELL laid on the table a Bill to facilitate the Service of Process on Scotch Debtors residing abroad, which was read a first time.—On the motion of Lord BEAUMONT, a Bill to compensate the Families of Persons killed by Accident was read a first time.—Lord BROUGHAM introduced the subject of the report of the Railway Board, and said he had been told that a rule prevailed at this Board, that though the members might differ in opinion, the division was never stated. His lordship said he wondered if it were true that the South-Eastern line was approved of and the Kentish line rejected by the narrowest possible majority. He understood that General Pasley and Mr. Porter voted against the South-Eastern, and Mr. Laing and his noble friend, Lord Dalhousie, the other way. Captain O'Brien did not vote at all, but was present for the purpose of not voting. Now, the general way of not taking a part was to be absent; but he was present. He assisted, in the truest sense of the word, for he did nothing. What was the consequence? His noble friend first voted as an individual member of the Board, and the numbers being equal, he gave the casting vote as chairman. There, consequently, was in fact a division of two to two. Now, if all this were told to the House of Commons, this assistance, this ancillary process, would have much less weight with the committees.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE replied that the only answer which he could give was, that his noble and learned friend might be right, and he might not be right; he might wonder as to whether it was the fact or not; but it was his intention to leave him to wonder on.—Lord BROUGHAM, upon this, said that he no longer wondered—that, in fact, he was perfectly satisfied, that it was as he had heard.—The Duke of WELLINGTON testified to the honourable character of Capt. O'Brien, whose name had been again mentioned by Lord Brougham in reference to the lucky purchase of railway shares by his brother, Mr. William O'Brien.—Lord CAMPBELL said, his opinion of the judgment of the Board was not very high. It was a voluntary tribunal, and they might just as well have twelve drunken porters, meeting in an alehouse in Westminster, giving their opinions on the expediency of any scheme to be brought before Parliament, as the individuals composing the Railway Board.—After a few remarks from Viscount STRANGFORD and Lord WHARNCLIFFE, the subject dropped.—In reply to Lord BEAUMONT, the LORD CHANCELLOR said he had referred the remaining penal laws affecting the Roman Catholics to the Criminal Law Commissioners, with directions to consider them carefully, report their opinion, and prepare a draught of a Bill on the subject. He had also, he said, advised Her Majesty to add Sir Edward Ryan, Mr. Amos, and Mr. Richards, to the commission.

Tuesday.—Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the Lord Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh against any alteration in the bank-note system established in Scotland for 150 years—a system which was so well regulated that no fluctuations and no mischief to the public had or could result from it.

Thursday.—The LORD CHANCELLOR laid on the table a Bill, which he said was ancillary to that of last year, on the subject of bail in error in cases of misdemeanour. The Bill was read a first time.—In answer to Lord CAMPBELL, the LORD CHANCELLOR said that he hoped next week to lay on the table a Bill relating to the challenges to the array.—Lords CAMPBELL and BROUGHAM complained of the cold of the house, and desired to know when the new house would be ready for their reception.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he did not feel the cold, though he might perhaps ascribe that to his two noble and learned friends not having the dress which he had, alluding to his official costume.—Lord CAMPBELL hoped dress would not be made a subject of contest between his Noble and learned friends.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE promised to inquire into the state of the new house.

Friday.—On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE a return was ordered of the amount of sugar imported in 1835 and 1836, the produce of the East and West Indies, and the duties paid thereon, for the purpose of showing the effect of the equalisation of the sugar duties.—Lord CAMPBELL moved for a return of the number of complaints made during the last 12 months, respecting the non-delivery of newspapers.—The Earl of LONSDALE said he had not the slightest objection to grant the return. He would, however, state that the Post Office authorities were not so much to blame in the matter as the parties sending the papers, who were frequently remarkably careless in placing the envelopes upon them.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE said, in consequence of a question which had been put on Thursday, he had made inquiries as to the progress of the new House of Lords. He believed no one had entertained the idea that the House would be in a fit state during the present session, but he entertained the confident hope that it would be ready at the beginning of next session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—We gave in our last the first part of Sir R. PEEL's financial statement, so far as it related to the revenue and expenditure of the country, and to the continuance of the Income-tax. We now proceed to give as concisely as possible the remaining portion of the statement, including the proposed remission of taxes. After detailing the particulars of the surplus revenue, Sir R. PEEL said, assuming that the renewal of the Property and Income-tax is sanctioned, the estimated revenue for next year will be 53,700,000*l.*; or, striking off 600,000*l.* of China money, 53,100,000*l.* This would leave a surplus of 3,469,000*l.* How was it to be expended? What inducement was to be held out for the renewal of the Income-tax? He would propose to reduce taxes, which would lay the foundation of great commercial prosperity, and add to the comforts of those who may be called upon to pay it. Supposing the Income-tax to be continued, he would propose a great experiment with respect to certain classes of duties. On sugar, he would adhere to the principle laid down in the temporary measure of last year, that of confining competition with the produce of our own colonies to sugar of foreign growth raised by free labour; and between colonial and free foreign sugar, he would still maintain the proportion of differential duty as established by the Act of last session—that is, a differential duty of 10*s.* 6*d.* But though the differential proportion would be maintained, the rates of duties would be greatly reduced. British plantation sugar was now rated at 24*s.*, and free foreign at 34*s.*, with the additional 5 per cent. On colonial brown Muscovado, he would effect a reduction of 11*s.* 3*d.*, that is, the duty would be reduced to 14*s.*, with the exception of certain districts in India, whence foreign sugar is imported, and on sugar from that quarter the duty would be 16*s.* On foreign sugar, the produce of free labour, the duty would be 23*s.* 4*d*, thus leaving a protecting duty of 9*s.* 4*d.* Colonial white or clayed sugar would be reduced to 16*s.* 4*d.*, and free labour, foreign, to 28*s.*; thus retaining between them the proportion of discriminating duty. There would be a farther regulation in favour of the colonies. The prohibition to import refined sugar would be removed, and a duty of 18*s.* 8*d.* established, and on double refined of 21*s.* This would apply to all British colonies entitled to import Muscovado. Various estimates had been made of the probable produce of colonial sugar, varying from 230,000 tons to 250,000. These were, of course, only approximations; but supposing that the effect of reduction will increase the consumption, and taking the loss to the revenue at 1½*d.* per pound on 250,000 tons, the total loss would be 1,300,000*l.* He would next propose to abolish all duties on exports. This would include the export-duty laid on coal in 1842, but he was indifferent on this subject to party taunts and triumphs. He hoped, however, that the coal owners would make a suitable return to the public for this voluntary concession. It was unnatural that, by means of combination, the people of the metropolis should have to pay a higher price for their coal than foreigners; that a combination should exist for restricting the supply, and enhancing the price to Her Majesty's subjects. The loss to the revenue from the abandonment of the coal duty, would be 118,000*l.* By abolishing the duties on those articles in the tariff which merely yield nominal amounts, we should get rid of troublesome accounts, and liberate commerce from vexatious restraints. All he would propose to retain would be a weighing and examining power, for statistical purposes, and to guard against possible frauds. Thus 430 articles on which nominal duties are paid would be swept from the tariff. Amongst these are fibrous or raw materials, furniture woods for the great cabinet trade growing up in this country, animal and vegetable oils, ores, and minerals, except copper ore, iron, zinc in its first stage, and dye-stuffs universally. He would also take staves out of the category of timber, and by classing them as raw materials, and admitting them free of duty, confer a boon on a struggling trade, which gives employment to many ingenious mechanics. The loss of the duty on staves would be 32,000*l.*, and the entire amount of which the revenue would be deprived by the abolition of the duties on these 430 articles of the tariff would be 320,000*l.* Next was the duty on cotton wool, which he would abolish at a loss of 680,000*l.* This closed the list of reductions in the Customs. Reviewing the Excise duties, Sir R. Peel announced that he intended altogether to abolish the auction duty, as being a great impediment to the open and ready transfer of property. The amount of duty collected in the United Kingdom is 300,000*l.*, and its removal would be a boon. Concurrently with this, auctioneers would be relieved from the necessity of taking out licences for the sale of different descriptions of property, and to be subjected henceforth to a uniform annual licence of 15*l.* Then came the article of glass, on which the excise would be altogether abolished. He dwelt at great length on the importance of this to science, to comfort, and to health. There was no duty on glass in France, Belgium, and Bohemia, and the manufacture, unrestricted by vexatious interference, was carried to great perfection, and successfully competed with our own, though we had ample command of all facilities, coke, alkali, &c., and might supply the whole world. Chronometers made with glass balance-springs were found to keep time better than any others. In France they made glass pipes for conveying water, which were 30 per cent. cheaper than iron, and being coated with bitumen, not only endured great pressure, but were better for health. Between the two extremes of a chronometer glass-spring and a glass tile to convey water, what a range had science! The removal of the fiscal regulations unfettered the manufacturer, and the abolition of a duty of 200 or even 300 per cent. on the value of the article would enable them to give free play to our powers of production. The abolition of the glass duty, in his opinion, was preferable to that of the window-tax. The reductions to be effected were therefore—Sugar, 1,300,000*l.*; Coal, 118,000*l.*; Import duties on raw materials, including Staves, 320,000*l.*; Cotton Wool, 680,000*l.*; Auction Duty, 300,000*l.*; Glass, 640,000*l.* Total loss to the Revenue, 3,358,000*l.*; which would nearly absorb the estimated surplus of 3,469,000*l.* Sir R. Peel concluded his speech by declaring that, though the proposed scheme was a bold one, the success of the experiment of the tariff in 1842 encouraged him to expect from his propositions the most beneficial results to the commerce and industry of the empire. But to enable the experiment to be safely carried out, it was necessary that the Income-tax should be renewed for three years longer. By the end of that time we might be able to get rid of it; but meantime it was necessary to have the assurance that this great source of income would not be dried up. He did not ask for a renewal of the Income-tax in order to make up a deficiency in the customary sources of revenue, but to enable him to effect such absolute reductions of taxation as would tend to the extension of industry and enterprise, benefit all classes, agricultural and manufacturing, and even those not engaged in either; measures which he was convinced would bring about great commercial prosperity, and in which the whole community would find its welfare. The right hon. baronet concluded by moving a formal resolution on the subject. The House rung with cheers for some minutes after he had concluded. After a short pause, the right hon. baronet rose again, and said that he would not ask the committee to confirm his proposition that night; but he hoped that hon. members would be in a condition to decide on the principles of his resolutions on Monday.—Lord J. RUSSELL thought that they ought not to come to an immediate conclusion on such a subject. He would not ask for a day's delay beyond that which the right hon. gentleman had proposed; he would then take a view of his whole proposal. He considered the right hon. baronet's proposal on the sugar duties liable to much objection.—Mr. LIDDELL and Lord HOWICK approved of the remission of the coal duties, and Mr. BELL, Mr. HUME, Mr. WAKLEY, Mr. WARD, and other members approved generally of Sir R. Peel's scheme.—Sir R. INGLIS regretted that some modification was not proposed respecting the Income-tax. He thought it should only be levied on those incomes that exceeded 150*l.*, so that if a person had 200*l.* a year, he should pay the tax on 50*l.* only.—Mr. CURTEIS, and Mr. ROEBUCK disapproved of the continuance of the Income-tax, and after a brief conversation in which several members took part, the resolution for continuing the Income-tax was read, and its further consideration postponed till Monday.

Monday.—Sir R. PEEL, in reply to Mr. Labouchere, intimated that his propositions with respect to sugar are not intended as a permanent settlement; but merely to be annual, until the end of the next financial year, as the sugar duties have hitherto been voted. And in reply to Mr. Borthwick, he said that there was no foundation for the statement which had appeared in the papers, as to any intention of conferring upon Prince Albert the title of King Consort.—Lord HOWICK, calling attention to the first report from the Board of Trade on the South Eastern Railway, asked if all the members of the Board signing it had been unanimous?—Sir G. CLERK declined to give any information, as being a dangerous precedent, and very inexpedient.—Mr. ROEBUCK said it was current in the City that the Board had been divided, and that the decision had been arrived at by the casting vote of the chairman. It would not do, therefore, to withhold information, for the most ample investigation was required.—A desultory conversation followed, and then, the House having resolved itself into a committee of ways and means, Lord JOHN RUSSELL rose, and said that he viewed an Income-tax as only suited to some great emergency, as a state of war. Inequality, vexation, and fraud were inseparable adjuncts of an Income-tax. It fell unequally upon income; was accompanied by vexatious circumstances in assessment and collection; was paid by the honourable and evaded by the fraudulent. A tax, whose great and sole merit was its productiveness, should, therefore, only be imposed on extraordinary occasions. When it was proposed three years ago, Sir R. Peel urged that though not actually engaged in a European war, yet the aspect of affairs in the Mediterranean, as well as in India and in China, was sufficiently alarming; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, when incidentally adverting to the subject last year, contended that the tax was a compensation for commercial reductions, which we must either submit to, or take refuge in national insolvency. Both these grounds were abandoned on Friday night, when, in urging its continuance, Sir R. Peel took the popular but dangerous course of placing it on the ground of abolition of taxes, whereby we might rest assured that it would be imposed, not for three years, but for perpetuity. Parliament would, indeed, have the privilege of continuing it from time to time; but continued it must be, for to a perpetual Income-tax in time of peace the resolution before the House would pledge them. Reviewing the statements made on Friday night, and expressing his satisfaction that Government were now paying attention to the navy, which hitherto they had neglected, he came to the financial propositions. The tax on cotton wool was opposed to all sound commercial principle; and in its removal, and of the excise on glass, he concurred. But he did not see why 300,000*l.* should be thrown away with the auction duty. The duty on fire insurances had preferable claims, but Sir R. Peel made a merit of finding out a tax of which nobody complained. Soap was the only remaining article of those enumerated as necessaries by Adam Smith, and which ought to be exempted from taxation. The tabular statements which had been published respecting the operation of the tariff, bore on their face that our commercial prosperity was the true cause of the increase in the Customs, aided by a bountiful harvest, and not the simple and mere fact of the reductions themselves. The principle of getting rid of duties on raw materials, as proposed in the case of 430 articles, though a good one, possessed no novelty; as far back as the year 1721, Sir Robert Walpole had removed 130 articles from the Customs List on similar grounds. But there was another great principle, of which Sir Robert Walpole was entirely ignorant, which, taught by Adam Smith, had been admitted by Pitt, Grenville, Huskisson, and every one worthy of the name of statesman, namely, that we ought to have no protective duties at all. All theoretical writers, though advising caution in meddling with great interests, never doubted the necessity of progress in getting rid of these duties, which were, in fact, not a fit subject for legislation at all. Legislation ought to repress crime, preserve order, provide for the defence of the State; but we perverted it when we turned it from these, its proper subjects of concern, to meddle with the inherent right of the subject in the disposal of his labour, the right of the poor man to perfect freedom in the disposal of the products of his industry. The business of the Government should be to break down all unjust monopolies; but in the article of sugar its course of legislation would lead to consequences which would probably be permanently injurious. Slavery was the pretext: but we should now proceed on more rational grounds. Suppose a Brazilian commissioner in this country proposing the introduction of the sugar of his country. The Government would say to him, we admit coffee, cotton, and tobacco, the produce of slave labour; nay, we have no objection to send you our manufactures in exchange for your sugar, which we will export to other countries; and under treaties of reciprocity we admit the slave-grown sugar of Venezuela, and other countries; but sugar, the produce of slavery, we cannot touch ourselves. Would not the commissioner laugh in their faces? On these false principles we were about to sacrifice no less than 1,300,000*l.* of revenue, which might be rendered wholly unnecessary by a re-adjustment of the sugar duties on correct grounds. But Sir R. Peel, by absorbing nearly the whole available surplus, put the Income tax in that position that it could not be got rid of without national insolvency. He thought that the Government were bound to make some declaration on this point; for if the tax were to be made permanent it ought to be referred to a committee, in order to ascertain if some portion of its inequality could not be got rid of. But Sir R. Peel, while he repealed duties on principles on which everybody was agreed, shrunk from meddling with those which affected great interests that could make a stir for themselves. He only touched upon one of those great interests, sugar, and here he went wrong. Another he did not meddle with; and even the timber duties, which had been as injurious to Canada as other protecting duties had been here, were left alone. For himself, he repeated that protection was the bane of agriculture; and he was satisfied that, if you wished to get rid of the Income-tax, you must improve the condition of the people, and find out new markets for our manufactures. He was for a short Income-tax, and a final abandonment of all monopoly; but Sir R. Peel had put his proposition in that shape, that he could not see how he could oppose its reimposition for three years longer. It had been rendered necessary by the nature of the proposed reductions, and he should not therefore propose any amendment; but he hoped that the time was not distant when, by the prevalence of sound principles, an Income-tax in time of peace would not be requisite.—Mr ROEBUCK was surprised at the lame and impotent conclusion of the noble lord. He would propose, as an amendment, the omission of the words from the resolution of "professions, trades, and offices," not with a view of exempting them from taxation altogether, but with the intention hereafter of providing that they should be rated on a graduated and equitable principle.—Sir G. GREY, though opposed to an Income-tax, would willingly assent to its reimposition for three years longer if it were bonâ fide for that term only, and with the express purpose of benefiting trade and commerce. But the speech of Sir R. Peel did not enable him to entertain this expectation.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER remarked that but for that increase of expenditure, on the necessity for which most of them were agreed, the Income-tax might be abandoned, so far as the present year was concerned. But his anticipations for the future were grounded on his experience of the past. Defending the repeal of the auction duty, and reiterating the argument for the exemption of slave-grown sugar, he congratulated the House on the concurrence which was evinced in assenting to this resolution.—Mr. C. WOOD contended that the remission of duties by the tariff of 1842 was not really any cause of our commercial prosperity; the consumption was greatest in those articles which were left by it untouched; and, above all, we had cheap corn. Criticising in detail the various propositions of the Government, he contended that Sir R. Peel would find himself deceived in his calculations, while a re-adjustment of the sugar duties on sound principles would have really brought about a great increase of revenue.—Colonel CONOLLY commented on the advantages of the Income-tax—which, as coming from an Irish member, raised great laughter.—Mr. BANKES hoped that Colonel Conolly and his Irish friends, with their native generosity and sense of justice, would see the propriety of concurring with Englishmen in taking their share of the burden of the Income-tax. Mr. Roebuck had characterised the agricultural interest as one of those which sustained the Government in the imposition of the Income-tax. If so, it was a noble and disinterested interest, for it supported a Government which bestowed all its favours on the commercial classes, while the agricultural were not so much as mentioned. Do we complain of this? No. But then if you say that we are powerful, do not charge us with being selfish. Though he viewed with alarm the chance of a permanent imposition of the Income-tax, the agricultural members had no choice.—Mr. Warburton intimated his opinions in favour of direct taxation. The Income-tax, as at present constituted, he regarded as most unjust; the only way to render it equitable would be to render it perpetual.—Mr. R. Palmer said that the greatest disappointment had been excited in the country by the omission of any allusion to agriculture in Her Majesty's Speech at the opening of Parliament, as well as in the able financial statement of the Premier. Every one admired the speech of the right honourable gentleman for its power and range of subjects, but looking at the state and condition of the agriculture of the country for the last two years, seeing that its profits were materially decreasing every year in that period, and seeing, moreover, that agriculturists attributed that distress mainly to the measures that had been brought forward by the right hon. baronet in respect to them—seeing and feeling all this, they considered it a very extraordinary circumstance that not alone should no relief be given them out of the large surplus in his hands, but that all mention of them should even be avoided.—Mr. M. Gibson said he should vote with Mr. Roebuck.—Mr. Miles objected to the permanence of the Income-tax, although he believed that Sir R. Peel had introduced it for three years with the very best intentions. He found that commerce and manufactures were now flourishing, but that agriculture was in a state of the deepest depression. No attempt was made to relieve agriculture from any part of its burdens. He could not ask the right hon. baronet for the repeal of the malt tax, because the surplus would not allow the right hon. baronet to repeal that tax, and even if it would, he would not ask that the whole relief from taxation should be given to the agricultural interest. But when taxes to the amount of 3,400,000*l.* were taken off, he thought that the agriculturists should have some share in the remission. They had looked to the right hon. baronet as the asserter and defender of their rights; but they now perceived how totally and entirely he passed by their distresses, without affording them a penny of relief. He was not of that kind of spirit which would tamely submit to every dictate of a Minister—and, if he stood alone, at a future period in the discussion of the subject before the House, he should give the House and the county members, most of whom had been returned to advocate certain principles, an opportunity of stating to the country and to their constituents whether, when a great remission of taxation was about to be made, agriculture should or should not be benefited by it, as well as trade, manufactures, and commerce. He begged therefore to suggest to the right hon. baronet, that if the Income-tax was to be continued, it would be but an act of strict justice to give the tenant of land a right of appeal.—Sir R. Peel defended himself from the charge of being insensible to the distress of the agricultural interest, and also reminded the House that if he had not alluded to that subject in his speech of Friday night, it was simply because he had entered upon it at some length in a speech which he had made two or three evenings before. He had the firmest conviction that if the agricultural interest would agree to the continuance of the Income-tax, and to take their share in the general prosperity which he believed would be derived from it, they would be more benefited by it than if he were to relieve them from some local taxation, and to burden the Consolidated Fund with a grant of 500,000*l.* for their benefit. He pointed out the advantage which the agricultural labourer would derive from the repeal of the duty on cotton wool in the diminished price of his clothing, and which the farmer would find in the ease of transferring his property, from the repeal of the auction duty, which, though Lord J. Russell thought it of little value, appeared a very injudicious tax to his late colleague, Sir H. Parnell. Considering that the noble Lord had described the Income-tax as a tax which was the most unequal, inquisitorial, and onerous that could be devised, he was somewhat surprised at the compliment which the noble Lord had paid him in stating that he would give him the support of his vote if a division were pressed against it. Certainly, if he were in his place, he would find the five millions and a half which the Income-tax produced a most comfortable addition to the ordinary sources of revenue. The tax was really not more unequal than other imposts; its continuance was a guarantee for the safe conduct of an experiment which, if successful, would be of great benefit to the whole community. If he had his own way, he would have proposed the re-imposition of the tax for five years, in order to give full time for the experiment, but looking to the increase of population, and the rapid extension of commerce and trade, the accumulation of capital, and so forth, he had a sanguine expectation that three years would suffice to enable them either to get rid of it then or to make further experiments. At all events, the public credit must be maintained. The loss of duties on raw materials and manufactured products was compensated by the advantage conferred; the benefit resulting from the repeal of those on cotton and glass would be immediate; and he trusted that the Government would receive an all but unanimous support from the House.—Lord Howick remarked that Sir R. Peel by his reductions only left himself a surplus of 90,000*l.*, while nearly a million expected from sugar was entirely problematical; There was, therefore, danger of a serious defalcation. Protective duties plundered the people without benefiting the revenue; and their removal would relieve the one, without the slightest danger to the other. Heavy duties, which led to smuggling, as tobacco, foreign spirits, &c., also presented a field for financial operations; or Sir R. Peel might have dealt with tea, to the great advantage of the community.—Sir J. Tyrrell thought that last Friday, Valentine's day, was a very unlucky one for the agricultural interest, to which, some years ago, Sir R. Peel had paid his addresses. The right hon. baronet was a difficult bird to lay much salt on his tail; yet, on the 14th February, 1834, in a debate on Lord Althorp's budget, he had used language in favour of the agricultural interest, which did not accord with his present sentiments. Lord J. Russell, also, who had made many declarations on agriculture not in harmony with one another, had declared, on a former occasion, that it was intended, by the Reform Bill, to give a preponderating interest to the agricultural body. He now, however, gave them little to hope. But a general election would evince whether or not that great interest was to be trifled with. They must not lay the flattering unction to their souls, that the Income-tax would not be permanent; and he, therefore, gave notice that, on a future day he should propose to extend the Income and Property-tax to Ireland.—The Marquis of Granby thought that the manufacturers would not feel satisfied if the same answer were returned to them which Sir R. Peel had just returned to the agriculturists. Would they think themselves well treated if they were told that their distress would be alleviated in consequence of the general prosperity which would overflow the country, when the remission of the taxes on agriculture came into full operation?—Mr. C. Buller saw the prospect of the termination of the Income-tax growing fainter with every speech from the Treasury bench. Let them talk sense about their prosperity; two good harvests had produced it; and let the Chancellor of the Exchequer get up and guarantee them two more, before the House suffered itself to be misled as to the tax being otherwise than permanent. If by their vote that night they affirmed it, it was their business to devise means of mitigating its injustice and inequality. On a division, there appeared—for Mr. Roebuck's amendment, 55; against it, 263; majority, 208.

Tuesday.—Lord Ashley moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the labour of children in the calico printworks of Great Britain and Ireland. As the children for whose protection he now claimed the interposition of the House were in a situation very much akin to that of the wretched children in the factories for whom he had formerly implored its protection, he could not hope to attract its attention by any novelty of statement or argument. These children were chiefly employed in the counties of Lancaster, Chester, and Derby, in some parts of Scotland, and also in the neighbourhood of Dublin. The ages at which they began to work were 4, 5, 6, 9, and 10 years; but he would only claim the interference of Parliament for children under 13 years, as that was the age under which children were protected by the Factory Act. The number of children employed in the calico printworks was 25,000. Many of those places of work were excellently arranged and well ventilated; but the great majority of them were in a very deplorable, and indeed he might say, detestable condition. The nominal hours of work were in Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire 12 hours a day, but the actual hours of work varied from 12 to 16 hours, and even more. Night work among these young children was universal, so that in those factories where it was not carried on it was considered as an exception from the general practice. These long hours excluded the children, and particularly the female children, from all opportunities of education. Indeed, the commissioners stated in their report that the girls employed in these calico printworks were prevented by their early removal from home from learning ordinary needlework and those customary domestic arts by which they could in after life promote the comforts and economise the earnings of their husbands. This lamentable condition of things was represented by master manufacturers, clergymen, medical men, and others acquainted with the districts, as one of the chief causes of distress and crime among the working classes. Ought they to allow it to continue without making even an attempt to remedy it? The first proposition, therefore, he should make to the House was, the total abolition of night work for all females of whatever age, and for all of both sexes under 13 years of age. He showed, upon the evidence of several manufacturers, not only that these long hours were not necessary, but that they were positively injurious to the interests of the trade, in consequence of the quantity of work which was spoiled by the fatigued and drowsy children. With regard to the reduction of the hours of labour for children under 13 years of age, the proposition which he had to make was, that from and after the 1st of October, 1846—which would allow nearly two years to expire before his Act came into operation—no children under 13 years of age should work more than eight hours a day for six days in the week, or more than 12 hours a day for alternate days in the week. He further proposed, that, in conformity with the provisions of the Factory Act, two hours should be set aside each day for the education of those who worked eight hours for six days in the week, and three hours on alternate days for those who worked 12 hours for three days in the week. He was at a loss to know on what grounds his motion would be opposed; and he, therefore, proceeded to answer the objections which he imagined might possibly be urged against it. He declared that he was ready to devote the whole of his life to the promotion of the great work which he had now taken in hand. He knew that the labour would be great; but he feared nothing but defeat. He would readily undertake all the labour and all the obloquy to which he might be exposed, if he could only hope ultimately for success. He called upon the State to fulfil its boast, and to show itself the pious parent of these unprotected children. Such efforts would not be lost in the eyes of God; and her children would speedily "rise up and call her blessed."—Sir James Graham said, that if the House determined to proceed at all upon the principle of regulating labour in manufactories, nothing could be more moderate than Lord Ashley's proposal. But it would be impossible to stop here, and therefore he had great hesitation in consenting to the introduction of the Bill. Considering, however, the moderation of the proposal, he could not reconcile it with his public duty to withhold his consent; but he reserved to himself the greatest latitude as to the mode he should deal with the measure on its second reading.—After a brief discussion, leave was given to bring in the Bill.—Mr. T. Duncombe then drew attention to "the unsatisfactory and evasive character of the report of the secret committee on the opening and detaining of letters." He had objected to the constitution and secrecy of the committee, from which he had himself been excluded; and all his allegations had not only been left uncontradicted, but the report would justify the suspicion that the committee had been instructed to go into a certain room in order to explain nothing, and mystify everything. The report was full and explicit respecting the practices of early days, and the perusal of the first portion of it would create an impression that when it came down to modern times it would be exceedingly interesting; but the committee's ardour of research evaporated on arriving at the 19th century, and they had altogether evaded the tracing of the progress of letter opening warrants. It had been stated that the secret letter department of the Post-office had been closed; but he believed that, as the lawyers said, it was the venue that had been changed, the practice still existing; nothing but an Act of Parliament could deprive Ministers of the power. The report justified his allegation that more letters had been opened by the present Government than by their predecessors; and he could prove that Mr. Mazzini's letters had been opened, for the inspection of persons high in office, prior to the time when it was stated a general warrant had been issued, and subsequent to the date at which it was reported to have been closed. The communication of the nature of these letters to Foreign Powers had been denied by the Earl of Aberdeen, but was admitted in the Lords' as well as the Commons' Reports; and the fact, impeaching the honour and character of England, implicated our Government, in having betrayed to a violent death the misguided men who had attempted to raise a revolution in Calabria. It should be inscribed on their tombstone that they fell in the cause of liberty and their country, through the treachery of British Ministers. Adverting to the case of Stolzman, and the alleged plot against "a foreign Sovereign intrusted to the protection of England" (known to be the Emperor of Russia, though the Committee were not straightforward enough to name him), he adduced instances where even a Polish lady had been punished for corresponding with her husband, and cautioned Government against lending themselves to the tyranny of foreign despots. The practice of sending the despatches of foreign ambassadors from the Post-office to the Foreign-office had only been discontinued in June last, the very time when he had brought the subject forward. The practice of opening the letters of ambassadors, against which the Venetian Ambassador had appealed, in 1641, to the House of Lords, was disgraceful to the country, and he was glad it was given up. As to a "roving commission," alleged to have visited the manufacturing districts, during the disturbances of 1842, for the purpose of opening letters, the Committee, even in attempting to evade it, had stated the fact of letters having been opened, and of persons having been tried and convicted on information thus obtained. His own letters, he affirmed, had been detained and opened, under the authority of Sir J. Graham—a personal insult, as well as an insult to the constituency which he represented; for if his correspondence were not to be free, he was unworthy the position he held. The Home Secretary, being mean and base enough to do this, had not the courage to avow it. [Here, being called to order by the Speaker, Mr. Duncombe said he applied these epithets to Sir J. Graham in his "ministerial capacity, and to them he must and would adhere."] After criticising the opinions anonymously furnished to the Committee on the nature or expediency of the practice, he concluded by contending that he had made out a case for the appointment of a select committee, to which the report of the secret committee might be referred, with a view to a more ample and searching inquiry into the circumstances under which letters have been detained, opened, and re-sealed at the general or any provincial post-office, since the 1st of January, 1840.—Sir J. Graham, although unconscious of having done anything in the discharge of his Ministerial duties unworthy of a public servant and a gentleman, felt the disadvantage of his position, in addressing a body of gentlemen in whose minds there was a natural repugnance to the practice charged against him. Before the committee chosen by the House, composed of nine influential and honourable members, he had voluntarily tendered a full disclosure of all that he knew, and as they had acquitted him of "baseness and meanness," he felt perfectly indifferent to the imputations of Mr. T. Duncombe, whether applied to him individually or ministerially, even though accompanied by the easily-made accusation of a want of courage. Another answer to the charge of baseness and meanness was the report of the Lords' Committee, before which he was searchingly examined on oath, and which stated that the power of opening letters had been very sparingly used, and never from personal or party motives. The secret office adverted to, on newspaper authority, as having been broken up by an order from the Home Office, was the one which had existed for more than a century, in connection with, and under the authority of the Foreign Office, and it had been abolished in deference to the recommendation of the committees of inquiry. It now, therefore, no longer existed. Under the established regulations, no warrant could be issued by him without the knowledge of the two Under Secretaries and a confidential clerk, a gentleman as incapable of "baseness and meanness" as any member of the House; and this was his answer to the charge of falsification of dates. Lord Aberdeen's statement in the House of Lords, that the letters of Mr. Mazzini had not been communicated to any Foreign Power, was quite consistent with the report, for no original letters or copies were given, and in affording information of a conspiracy, which they considered dangerous to the peace of Italy, no names were mentioned, and no individuals were compromised. But of the descent on Calabria, as it was unknown to them, the Government gave no information, and were, therefore, free from participation in causing its results. The appointment of a committee would not place the matter in any new light; the only question was, whether or not they should repeal the statute of Anne, which gave the power of opening letters to the Home Secretary, merely reserving such checks as might seem to be required by extraordinary circumstances.—Mr. Sheil remarked that the broad fact was admitted, of Mazzini's letters having been opened, re-sealed, and sent to him, and the information thus acquired was communicated to a Foreign Power. He wished to know why the committee had made no allusion to Mr. Duncombe's charge that his letters had been opened. Mr. Duncombe made that statement openly before the committee, and yet the committee excluded him not only from the management of his own charges, but also from their very presence. He now asked those who had answered for the opening of the letters of Mr. Mazzini and of Capt. Stolzman, why the charge had not been answered that the letters of Mr. Duncombe, a member of that House, and the representative of a large section of this metropolis, had been opened and read by order of the Home-office?—Lord Sandon, on rising, was met with loud cries of "Question, Question." He was proceeding to say that he would answer the question, when Mr. Sheil said: I did not put the question to you, I put it to the right hon. baronet, the Secretary of State opposite, and I now repeat the interrogatory.—Sir J. Graham remained silent, but the House rung again with the cheers of the Opposition.—Lord Sandon complained of the difficulty which he, as chairman of the committee whose report Mr. Duncombe had impugned, experienced in coming forward to defend it. That was a committee of secrecy, and of course the members of it, till they were released from their obligation, could not disclose the particulars of the different cases which had come before it, nor justify fully the report which they had made. They must therefore trust to their own characters for their defence. Still he thought, that upon the very face of it, the report was neither evasive nor unsatisfactory. If Mr. Sheil were to put to him the question which he had just put to Sir J. Graham, and if he (Lord Sandon) were to answer it, some other member would rise and put another question to him; and he must therefore at once decline to gratify such prurient curiosity.—Sir J. Graham observed that, when he was interrogated upon this subject last year, he had refused to answer any question respecting it, unless Her Majesty released him from his oath of secrecy as a Privy Councillor, and the House appointed a committee to examine and report upon the whole matter. A secret committee was then appointed, in which, as he had already mentioned, there was a majority of his political opponents. There was no one act which he had not laid before that committee fully and in detail; and after such a statement on his part, no fault was found by the committee with any portion of his conduct. He should now adhere to the course of proceeding which he had adopted last session, and should therefore reply to the question of Mr. Sheil by stating that he could not consistently with his public duty answer any further interrogatory. He hoped it would be seen that there was a wide distinction between the cases of the two foreigners and the other cases which had been alluded to.—Mr. Hume commended the discretion of Sir J. Graham in not replying to the interrogatory which had been put to him. Still, he must ask who it was that made this committee a secret one? It was Sir J. Graham himself, who had therefore no right to throw off his own shoulders the responsibility of his own work. He thought at the time that the proceedings of the committee ought to have been public, and he now considered it to be advisable that the evidence which it took should be forthwith published. He confessed that he had always considered it derogatory to the honour of England, and to the dignity of a minister of the Crown, that he should have become in any respect a police minister to the Emperor of Russia.—Sir J. Hanmer thought that, as the matter concerned a Member of Parliament, further inquiry was necessary.—Mr. Sergeant Murphy felt that the power conferred by the statute of Anne was as useless to a Government as injurious to the people. A more stringent alien act would be preferable to its exercise.—Sir R. Peel defended the report of the Committee of Secrecy from the remarks which had been made to its discredit, and reprobated in very strong terms the proposition of Mr. Hume, that the evidence taken before it should be forthwith published. He insisted that there had been no misconduct on the part of the executive Government in the exercise of this power of opening letters. If it was wrong to exercise such power at all, the fault was not with the executive Government, but with the Parliament which had thought fit to arm it with such an instrument. Parliament had not intrusted the executive Government with such power hastily or without due deliberation. That power was under the consideration of Parliament in 1735, and the House of Commons of that day declared that there was no peculiar sanctity in a Member of Parliament; for it passed a resolution that it would not be a breach of privilege to open a letter addressed to a member if it were done under the warrant of a Secretary of State. In 1745 this power was exercised by Ministers as friendly to civil liberty as any which this country ever possessed. In 1837 the House was party to an Act of Parliament expressly recognising the existence of this prerogative in the Secretary of State. Now, he contended that the House, seeing that it had intrusted them with such a power, would not hold any Ministers justified who, from a feeling of cowardice, should refuse to exercise it in time either of external attack or of internal disorder. The hon. gentleman opposite had condemned Sir J. Graham for issuing seventeen or eighteen of these warrants in August, 1842, but had hon. members forgotten the state of disturbance in which some parts of the country were at that period? The member for Wolverhampton at that time made a motion limiting the prorogation of Parliament to some day in the month of October, on the express ground that the country was in danger of civil confusion. The members for Manchester and for Stockport both spoke in terms of strong alarm respecting the "dire confusion" which then prevailed. Ministers at that time asked for no extraordinary powers; but what would Parliament have said to them if in that time of "dire confusion" they had displayed apathy and indifference? Would not Parliament, in case of danger, have held Ministers responsible for the non-exercise of that very power which it now blamed them for exercising after tranquillity had been restored? All that Ministers had done in the exercise of that power, both with respect to Mr. Mazzini and Capt. Stolzman, had been laid fully and without reserve before a committee in which there was a majority of their political opponents; and that committee had fully acquitted them of any abuse of that authority. In the exercise of that authority they might in critical times have made mistakes; but what would have been their position if they had endangered the life of one man, or had compromised the safety of the nation by shrinking from the responsibility which was imposed upon them? He pressed, in conclusion, upon the House, the propriety of not implying suspicion of their committee, and of the Ministers whom that committee had acquitted, by subjecting them to a second trial.—Mr. WARBURTON justified, at considerable length, the report of the committee, of which he had been a member. In considering the question whether it was advisable to grant to Mr. Duncombe the committee for which he had moved, he observed that his own opinion was, that the facts of the case had been communicated to the House as far as was consistent with the public good.—Mr. WAKLEY maintained that this motion ought to be granted, inasmuch as his hon. colleague had now presented new facts to that House. His hon. colleague had said in express words, "You, Sir J. Graham, have opened my letters." What said the right hon. baronet in reply? He did not deny it, but shrouded himself in mysterious silence, under the cloak of his oath of office. But what had Sir R. Peel said in his speech? Why, he absolutely made out an implied justification for the conduct of his right hon. colleagues, by referring to the disturbed state of the country in 1842. Was the House, then, to understand that Mr. Duncombe was connected with the seditious movements of that time? That was the undoubted inference from Sir R. Peel's speech. (Cries of "No, no!") Then why were the letters of Mr. Duncombe opened? —On the motion of Mr. Brotherton, the debate was adjourned.

Wednesday.—Sir R. PEEL, in answer to Mr. M. Milnes, entered into an explanatory statement respecting the participation of the British Government with that of Austria, in the suppression of the attempt at insurrection in Calabria. At an early period of last year there were certain Italian refugees, subjects of Austria, residing in the British possessions in the Mediterranean. A strong expostulation was received from the Austrian Government, complaining that these refugees were carrying on designs adverse to the peace of Italy; and that remonstrance was accompanied with the explicit declaration that if any insurrection, as suspected, broke out in the Papal States, the commander-in-chief at Milan had instructions to march at once, without waiting for orders from Vienna. Recollecting the complications which at a former period arose from a similar act to the one threatened, the Earl of Aberdeen conveyed to the Austrian Government whatever information he obtained with respect to these insurrectionary designs, though he did not communicate any copies of letters or extracts from them, nor did he communicate the names of any individuals within the power of the Austrian Government. But he never communicated any information respecting the attempt from Corfu on Calabria, for they possessed none, and the event itself took every one by surprise. Amongst the refugees residing, in apparent quietness, in Corfu, were the two sons of Admiral Bandiera, but on the 12th June 22 individuals left Corfu in a small boat, unknown to the British Authorities, and when the Austrian Government asked Lord Seaton, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, to send an armed steamer in pursuit, he declined, merely despatching a small boat to Otranto, in order to communicate the fact to the Neapolitan Government. To show that there was no participation whatever on the part of the British Government, a despatch was received from our Ambassador at Vienna in the month of July, which contained a complaint from the Austrian Government that we afforded shelter to individuals concerting measures opposed to the tranquillity of Italy. The attempt itself, by the 22 individuals who landed in Calabria, was put down by the local municipal force, aided by the inhabitants. He trusted, therefore, that this statement would show the groundlessness of the imputations which had been thrown upon the British Government.—The House having resolved itself into a committee of ways and means, Mr. ROEBUCK brought forward his amendment, that the Property-tax should be extended to Ireland, his object was to subject realised capital to the operation of the tax. Twitting the helpless agriculturists, who now found Sir R. Peel a King Stork instead of a King Log; taunting the commercial classes, who had been bribed into acquiescence in the Income-tax; and censuring, with caustic sarcasm, those absentee Irish members, who, because they could not get all they wanted, fled with coward hearts from the field on which the battles of the country must be fought, the floor of the House of Commons, he urged the reasons why he considered that the rich Irish landlords should share with the other parts of the empire in the burden of the Property-tax.—Mr. SHEIL did not think that he would be discharging his duty to his country by imitating the example of absenting himself from the House. But he felt that the absentees had a justification, in the fact that Ireland was not adequately represented, and that all their efforts were neutralised by an overwhelming majority. Between the perpetuity of Mr. Warburton, and the extension of Mr. Roebuck, the Income-tax had, in that House, its attributes of eternity and infinity. The Union had burdened Ireland with its share of the national debt; an immense amount of Irish quit-rents and ground-rents had been spent in the embellishment of Windsor Castle, the improvement of London, and the advantage of England; and Ireland had been brought into such a local relation with this country, as to render the extension to it of the Income Tax an injustice. Swift, with Wood's pence, raised a commotion in Ireland; another might be created by that man of whom Swift might be deemed the precursor, if they inflicted on it the Income Tax—in such an event even the member for Donegal (Col. Conolly) might become a Repealer. He concluded by urging that peace and prosperity in Ireland would enable that country illimitably to repay the benefit she received from England.—Sir J. TYRRELL did not present himself as an example of agricultural distress, but if the agricultural interest were really in a depressed condition, he hoped that its representatives, undeterred by the usually extreme political opinions of Mr. Roebuck, would pluck up courage and support him in his present proposition. Were Lord J. Russell in his place he would ask him if his negotiations with Conciliation-hall were in such a state as to be laid on the table of the House. In that case, they might have "hereditary bondsmen, know ye not," and the walls of the House would be ringing with justice to Ireland, except justice in pecuniary matters. He would not lay additional burden on the humbler classes of the ill-used Irish people, but he desired equality in taxation. He repeated his complaint that the agricultural interest had not received any relief from Sir R. Peel's proposed measure of reduced taxation; and remarked, that it was a singular fact that gentlemen on the Opposition benches supported that right hon. baronet upon the voluntary, whilst gentlemen on the Ministerial benches supported him on the compulsory principle. He hoped that when he read the division list, he should find that his agricultural friends, who complained so much of the treatment which they received from Government, had not gone "about ship," but had given their votes in favour of Mr. Roebuck's amendment.—Mr. WILLIAMS supported the amendment, intimating, at the same time, his intention of moving that persons receiving salaries in Ireland should be made liable to the tax.—Mr. ROSS, Mr. BELLEW, Lord BERNARD, Mr. NEWDIGATE, Sir H. W. BARRON, and Colonel CONOLLY, opposed the proposition.—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER assigned, as a principal reason for opposing the amendment, that, by imposing a Property-tax on the English people, he could realise out of the proceeds of that tax the largest possible amount to the Exchequer, at the least possible expense in collection. The expense of the machinery was very small, whilst the produce to the Exchequer was very large. But in Ireland no such means of collection existed, and he would find it impossible to collect such a tax without creating new machinery of an expensive character—paid assessors, collectors, and commissioners of appeal, which, in proportion to the amount produced, would have constituted the most expensive machinery for collecting a tax ever inflicted on any people whatever.—Mr. HUME said he had not intended to have said a word about extending the Income-tax to Ireland; but, after the speech made on Tuesday by Colonel Conolly, he had altered his mind, and now thought Ireland ought to be made to pay as well as England and Scotland.—Sir R. PEEL said he would prove to Mr. Hume that, consistently with his sound judgment and good sense, he could not support the amendment of Mr. Roebuck. The member for Montrose was at first inclined to support the proposition of the Government, but being provoked by what he considered a foolish speech from Colonel Conolly the other night, he had come to the resolution of extending the tax to Ireland. Really this was strange in a man who, for forty years, had, with much credit to himself, and great benefit to the country, devoted his time, industry, and abilities to financial subjects. Why, let them vote Colonel Conolly's speech as one never made, and look to the reason of the thing. If the tax were to be a permanent one, he granted that this would form a distinct ground of consideration. But let them look at the great difference existing between the condition of the two countries. They were remitting some 700,000*l.* of duty on raw cotton. How much did Ireland contribute of this? Last year, 114*l.* He longed to see the day when cotton and other imports of raw materials would be imported into Cork or Waterford, and the country, in its manufactures, be independent of Liverpool. Again, how much of the auction duty of 270,000*l.* did Ireland pay? The sum of 11,000*l.* Or of the duty on glass, which had yielded 574,000*l.*? Only 5000*l.* England would, therefore, have by far the largest share in the remission of taxation. He did not say that the imposition of the Income-tax on Ireland would be abstractedly unjust, but he considered it would be morally and politically inexpedient. Let them take a liberal and indulgent view of Irish interests, and they would be compensated in that reciprocity of good will with a people whose condition was still inferior to that of England, but who would appreciate their sentiments of kindness and goodwill.—Mr. Sergeant MURPHY opposed the amendment, and, speaking of Mr. Roebuck, said he had looked on his hon. and learned friend, on all occasions, as a hand-grenade, which exploded no one knew where in the ranks of that House. He could honestly say that he had never thought so small a comet as his hon. friend could ever attract so heavy a tail as he had that night succeeded in doing.—Mr. BLACKSTONE, believing the Income-tax to be a permanent one, could not justly impose it on England and Scotland without also laying it upon Ireland. He supported the amendment.—Col. SIBTHORP also supported it.—Col. RAWDON, Mr. CURTEIS, Mr. WALLACE, Lord CASTLEREAGH, and Lord PALMERSTON, opposed it.—The House then divided—for Mr. Roebuck's motion, 83; against, 75; majority, 42.—On the question being put on the original motion, the committee again divided, when the numbers were—ayes, 228; noes, 30; majority, 198. The House then resumed, the committee to sit again on Friday. Subsequently a division took place on a motion made by Capt. PECHELL for a return of cases of surcharge for duties on windows, which was resisted by the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, and negatived by 31 to 5.

Thursday.—On the motion of Mr. MACKINNON, leave was given to bring in a Bill for the prevention of the nuisance of smoke arising from the furnaces of factories.—Leave was given to Mr. WATSON to bring in a Bill for a total repeal of the enactments imposing pains and penalties on Roman Catholics.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, leave was given to bring in a Bill to regulate the appointment and payment of clerks and other officers of the courts of petty quarter sessions of the peace, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery.—The adjourned debate on the opening of Post-office letters under the authority of Government was resumed by Mr. MILNES, the result of whose recent personal experience convinced him that these Post-office matters had grievously damaged, in the minds of foreigners, the ancient reputation of this country for hospitality to and protection of strangers. If Cæsar's wife, required, as she was, not merely to be free from guilt, but above suspicion, had been unable to answer a straightforward question in English, her character would not have escaped imputation. The Government ought to make a clean breast of it, and set itself right, both at home and abroad, in the minds of all whom these transactions had pained and prejudiced.—Mr. MACAULAY declined to vote for the motion as it was worded, because it implied a censure on the secret committee; but he thought that Mr. Duncombe had a positive right to be told by the Government whether they had opened his letters or not. He treated the matter as a question of privilege, and suggested that, instead of a committee of inquiry, the hon. member should move for a committee to consider whether a Bill should not be introduced to alter and modify the existing practice.—Mr. J. S. WORTLEY opposed the motion, because, if it were acceded to, the House would not only be censuring the committee, but sanctioning the charges which Mr. Duncombe had made against the Home Secretary.—Mr. WARD said that the statements which had been made appeared to him to acquit the British Government of having been a party to laying a trap for the unfortunate men who had descended on Calabria; but the personal charges of Mr. Duncombe ought to be investigated, and he would give him an open committee for that purpose. Any member of the House might be consulted by restless and designing men; and if he joined in a treasonable attempt, let him take the consequences. But a member had a right to know the grounds on which he had been suspected of correspondence with individuals intending to disturb the public peace.—Lord J. MANNERS thought that if members were to be treated as Mr. Duncombe alleged he had been, without explanation from the Government, the sooner a new Cromwell arose, to "take away that bauble," and turn them all out of the House, the better. He did not doubt the honour of Sir J. Graham; but he thought it was due to himself and to the House that he should give an explicit answer as to whether or not, in times of difficulty and danger, and under circumstances of suspicion, he had used the power vested in him of opening Mr. Duncombe's letters. The member for Finsbury, with his fluent tongue, happy manner, and keen sense of injury, had made the charge, and official reserve should not be the obstacle to his receiving an apologetic or a justificatory explanation. He entreated Mr. Duncombe so to alter his motion as to enable him to vote for an inquiry into his case, without subjecting him to the necessity of passing a censure on the secret committee, or to indicate want of confidence in the Government.—Captain LAVARD, Mr. C. BULLER, Mr. D'ISRAELI, and Mr. ROEBUCK supported the motion; and Sir R. H. INGLIS, Mr. P. BORTHWICK, and Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT opposed it. Lord HOWICK proposed an amendment, that a committee be appointed to inquire whether Mr. Duncombe's allegations were true, and if so, by what authority his letters had been opened. An adjournment of the debate was moved by Mr. BROTHERTON and resisted by Sir R. PEEL, who declared that he would not bring on any public business until a decision had been pronounced on this question.—The House divided—For the amendment, 29; Against it, 269; Majority, 240.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL then attempted to speak to the question, but found it impossible to obtain a hearing, and an adjournment was ultimately agreed to.

Friday.—On the motion of Lord G. SOMERSET, the House went into committee on the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Bill.—Sir G. CLERK said one of the principal objects of this Bill was to put a stop to bubble companies. It was notorious that there had been many companies which declared large dividends out of the capital subscribed, there being no profits whatever. By such means individuals had been induced to take shares which ultimately proved valueless. It must be the wish of the legislature to give every facility and protection to bona fide companies, but at the same time to put a stop, if possible, to bubble companies.—The whole of the clauses in the Bill, 161 in number, after a protracted desultory conversation, were all agreed to, some verbal amendments having been made, and a new clause added, empowering companies to recover "calls" on shareholders living in Scotland.—Lord G. SOMERSET then proposed that the House meet on Tuesday next at twelve o'clock, to consider the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill in committee. It was of the utmost importance that all the consolidation Bills relating to railways should be considered with as little delay as possible. After a short discussion the arrangement was agreed to.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN gave notice, that immediately after Easter he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to allow a drawback of the duty on foreign corn, used for the purpose of feeding cattle.—Mr. HOGG gave notice of moving for several returns relating to the duties on sugar.—Mr. G. BANKES stated that in Committee of Ways and Means, on the resolution of the right hon. bart. for the remission of the auction duties being submitted to the House, he should take the sense of the House on the subject.—Mr. O. STANLEY wished to ask the hon. member, in the event of his succeeding in his amendment, for not allowing the repeal of the Auction Duty, how he intended to employ the surplus which would then remain in the hands of the Government?—Mr. G. BANKES said, in the first place he wished to get a negative to the repeal of the Auction Duties; he wished to get the money, and then apply it to some relief of the agricultural interest, and the local taxation of the country.—Mr. AGLIONBY gave notice that on the 6th March he should bring in a Bill relating to the Inclosure of lands and exchange of lands, and divisions of mixed lands.—Mr. MILES gave notice that on the resolution for the continuance of the Income-tax being discussed in Committee of Ways and Means, he should submit to the House an amendment, giving the right of appeal to all persons assessed under schedule B, as was at present allowed to those assessed under D; and that on the motion for the House going into committee on the Custom Duties Act, he should submit an amendment to the effect that it is the opinion of this House, that in considering the burthens of the people, due regard ought to be had to the necessity of providing some relief to the agricultural interest.—Sir W. CLAY wished to know from what precise date the proposed alterations in the sugar duties would take place.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied that it was the intention of Government that the alteration should take place from the day the resolutions were adopted by the House.—In answer to Mr. H. HINDE, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said it was the intention of the Government that the export duty on coals should cease as soon as the House had agreed to the resolutions for that purpose. He should not wait until a Bill was passed on the subject. The House then resumed the adjourned debate on the Post Office, and was left sitting.

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols closed at 99⅛; Reduced Three per Cents., 100¼; New Three and a Quarter, 103⅞; Bank Stock, 212½; Exchequer Bills, 57 to 59 pm.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—E. CLOSSON, Lower Holborn, stationer—J. P. BEALEY, Brompton-row, Brompton, plumber—I. HAGG, Colchester, tailor—T. WILKINSON, Hartlepool, draper—W. HALL, Claypath, near Durham, grocer—T. REES, Liverpool, porter brewer—J. SCOTT, Liverpool, paper dealer—S. CREW, Bristol, coal merchant—J. HUTCHINGS, Bath, boot maker—W. KNIGHT, Manchester, oil cloth manufacturer—J. SCHOFIELD, Oldham and Greenacres Moor, Lancashire, grocer—J. HOLMAN, Exeter, victualler—T. GRIFFITHS, jun., Wem, Shropshire, wine merchant—W. DALE, London Wall, boot maker—L. D. DELBELL, Lower Mitcham, dyer—F. CRANSWICK, Bridlington, Yorkshire, innkeeper—G. SAMSON, Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, Dorsetshire, corn dealer—J. CRABB, Great Tey, Essex, bricklayer—C. RAMSFORD, Stoneley, Middlesex, grocer—A. WYATT, late of Highworth, Wiltshire, victualler—C. THORNTON, Huddersfield, Yorkshire, stationer—T. FERRIS, Wootton Bassett, Wiltshire, grocer—J. WELLS, Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, common carrier—G. LEWIS, late of Regent-street, Westminster, but now of Downham-rd., Kingsland-rd, shawl warehouseman—W. BARNES, Osnaburgh-street, New-road, marble merchant—W. REEVES, Walcot, Somersetshire, coach builder—T. LANGTON, Manchester, share broker—J. TAYLOR, High Walton, Cheshire, farmer—J. DANKS, Birmingham, wharfinger.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The New War Steamers.—Preparations are making at Deptford Dockyard for laying down the keel of the Odin, on the slip lately occupied by the Terrible. She is to be 208 feet long, 1326 tons, and 500 horse-power. She will be built according to a design by Mr. Fincham, master shipwright of Portsmouth Dockyard. A new 50-gun frigate is also to be built, of about 1800 tons burthen. It is also in contemplation to lay down a second class steam-frigate, to be driven by a submarine propeller. She will be 215 feet long, 1500 tons, and 600 horse-power. Another war steamer is to be constructed at Greenock, to be 1300 tons, and built entirely of iron.

The Portland Vase.—We stated in our last that this vase was in course of restoration by the restorers attached to the Museum. It now appears that the injury sustained was not so serious as was at first supposed, that the figures are entire, and that the work of restoration is proceeding satisfactorily. In regard to the offender, who was liberated on the receipt of the fine from some unknown person, it is said that he is a student at Trinity College, Dublin, which he entered as a pensioner, under Dr. Atkins, and that he has at present a brother of considerable standing at the same University. Beyond this he has given no particulars respecting himself and family, from a desire, as he stated when under examination, not to inflict upon his relatives the pain of his disgrace. He says that his object in visiting England was merely to spend the vacation in viewing the principal exhibitions and other objects of attraction in the metropolis; and that, having exhausted his means, it was his intention to have written to his friends for a remittance, to enable him to return to Dublin.

Metropolitan Churches.—The Rev. Henry Howarth, B.D., has been presented to the rectory of St. George's, Hanover Square, vacant by the death of the Dean of Carlisle; and the Rev. R. S. Bower has been presented to the rectory of St. Mary Magdalen and St. Gregory by St. Paul, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. Saunders.

Destitution in the Metropolis.—On Wednesday week the police discovered in an old and ruinous cow-house on Clapham Common, a poor girl, 16 years of age, with scarcely any signs of life, covered only with a few rags, which were swarming with vermin. She was taken to Wandsworth workhouse, where her clothes were at once burnt, and proper remedies adopted. It was then found that the girl was perishing for want of food, her feet frost-bitten and apparently mortifying, and her whole body a mass of sores. She was also found to be the daughter of a gardener called Loveday, living in the Union-road, Larkhall-lane, who had recently married again and turned his daughter out of doors. She had been six days without food or water, and had remained in the cow-house to die. The medical men have had her under their care during the week, and she still remains in a precarious condition.—On Tuesday, the Guardians of the Strand Union reported to the magistrate at Bow-street that they had found in New Church-court, Strand, almost opposite Somerset House, three children lying almost naked, in a filthy cellar underground, cold, dark, and without furniture or fire. There was some straw in the cellar, but it was wet and rotten; and in this state the children had remained for upwards of six months. The father, a trunk-maker, called Paris, admitted that he had been in constant employ for 20 years, and said he had a fourth child (a girl) in the parochial school, besides the eldest boy, who earned 8*s.* a week in Hungerford-market. The children were brought into court, and presented a miserable spectacle, being almost idiotic and half-starved. The magistrate, after hearing the details, remanded the father for further inquiry.

Court of Common Council.—At a Court held last week it was resolved unanimously that the freedom of the city, in a box of the value of 100 guineas, be presented to Sir H. Pottinger, in testimony of the estimation entertained by the Court, in common with their fellow citizens, in regard to his important services in negotiating a treaty of peace and commerce with the Chinese empire.

New Zealand Company.—The meeting of this Company, which was adjourned on the 13th ult., took place last week for the purpose of considering the state of their affairs, Mr. Somes, M.P., in the chair. The report stated that the publication of Lord Stanley's despatch to Governor Fitzroy, of the 13th August, 1844, and which was ordered last week to be printed by the House of Commons, left no hope of obtaining, except from an appeal to the justice of Parliament, redress of the wrongs which the Company was suffering at the hands of the Colonial-office. The Directors, therefore, recommended that the shareholders should now authorise them to lay the whole case before the House of Commons, in the form of a petition from the Company. The Chairman said that he deeply regretted the spirit which had been evinced by the Colonial-office against the New Zealand Company ever since Lord J. Russell resigned the post of Colonial Minister. Had his Lordship remained at the head of the Colonial-office up to the present time, the Company, and the 10,000 British subjects in New Zealand, would have been in a very different situation to that in which they were now found. The Colonial-office had not carried out either the spirit or the letter of the agreement entered into with the Company. When Lord J. Russel granted a charter of incorporation, it was upon condition that the Company should make over to Government all lands to which the Company had a claim. In return, Government were to make over as many acres of land at 5*s.* per acre, as the Company had laid out money for the benefit of the colony, subject to the award of Mr. Pennington, which sum amounted to 218,148*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, and entitled the company to 762,593 acres, for which the Government were bound to give to the Company a clear and boná fide title. He maintained that the Company had nothing to do with the native claims—that was a matter between the government and the natives; and he therefore feared that there was no other course left for the Company but to appeal to Parliament for justice and for that compensation which was clearly due to them. Mr. Aglionby, M.P., Mr. G. F. Young, and other gentlemen, concurred in attributing blame to Lord Stanley for the course he had adopted with respect to the Company. They also agreed to the propriety of petitioning Parliament. The report was adopted, and a resolution authorising the directors to prepare a petition was unanimously agreed to.

Opening of the New Conservative Club.—This splendid edifice, recently erected on the site of the Thatched House Tavern, in St. James's-street, was opened on Wednesday evening, and the event celebrated by a grand banquet. Viscount Castlereagh, M.P., one of the trustees, occupied the chair, and was supported by the Duke of Buckingham, Marquis of Blandford, Lord Tenterden, Mr. D'Israeli, and about 120 gentlemen.

Anti-Corn-law League.—On Wednesday the League held their first regular meeting for the season. Mr. Brown, the late candidate for South Lancashire, presided; and the meeting was addressed by Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. G. Thompson, and Mr. Bright, chiefly on the new financial and commercial measures of the Government.

The Fountains in Trafalgar-square.—The structure for the fountains in the eastern reservoir in Trafalgar-square was completed on Thursday. It is constructed entirely of red granite, highly polished. The base is an octagon, and the pedestal, which is of a similar form, diminishes gradually to the lower basin, which is an immense block of the same material. On four sides of the pedestal are carved dolphins' heads, through which the reservoir will be filled; the fountain has two basins, the upper one much smaller than the lower. A number of plumbers are employed fitting the pipes, and masons constructing conduits in the sides of the reservoirs to carry off the surplus water. It is expected that in about a month the whole will be finished.

Repeal of the Window-tax.—The delegates of the metropolitan parishes met at the Court-house, Marylebone, on Saturday, and unanimously resolved to co-operate with Lord Duncan, M.P., for Bath, who will bring forward his motion for the repeal of the Window-tax, at the earliest possible opportunity, and to support such measure by every means in their power.

Small-Pox Hospital.—The Governors of the Small-pox and Vaccination Hospital held their half yearly meeting on Friday last. From the reports of the committee and medical officers, it appeared that small-pox has been greater during the past year than any former period since the foundation of the Hospital, except in 1838, and that it was still raging, 97 patients having already been admitted this year—the admissions for the past year having being 647, of whom 151 died, being at the rate of 23½ per cent. In 1781, the number of admissions was 646. In that year, however, the deaths were 257, being at the rate of 40 per cent.; showing a remarkable improvement in the treatment of the disease during the last 64 years.

Public Baths and Washhouses.—The daily papers state that the Committee on Baths and Washhouses, after a month's consideration, have selected the plan of Mr. Baly, as the best of 22 which were submitted to them in competition.

The late Robbery at Messrs. Rogers'.—Information was received a few days since from France, announcing that two men are in the custody of the French police, in whose possession were found four notes for 1000*l.* each, that had been stolen from Messrs. Rogers's bank. It appears, however, that this is erroneous, as the notes found upon the arrested parties form no part of the property stolen from Messrs. Rogers; an inquiry, however, is going on at the French police respecting the parties, which is expected to lead to further disclosures.

The Tottenham Churches.—Our readers will remember that some time since resistance was made by the residents of Tottenham to attempts made by the clergy of the parish to introduce innovations in the service of the Church, and that a deputation waited on the Bishop of London, who postponed his decision for a year. The clergy, however, have resolved to settle the question at issue by at once complying with the wishes of the parishioners; and a letter has accordingly been circulated, in which they announce their intention to await that adjustment to which the Archbishop of Canterbury alluded in his pastoral letter. In the meantime they intend to abandon the following changes:—"The omission of an anthem before the commencement of Divine service; the giving out the singing psalms by the minister; the use of the prayer for the Church militant; and the collection with the offertory sentences upon the occasion of charity sermons." We may also state here that the Rev. Mr. Goodchild, Rector of St. John's, Hackney, on Sunday last announced that it was his intention immediately to return to the ancient forms of Divine service, and to abandon all the innovations that had given such offence to the parishioners, including the wearing of the surplice in the pulpit, the offertory, and the prayer for the Church militant, &c.

Camberwell.—A small tradesman named Montague and his wife, who resided in Grove Lane, in this village, were poisoned last week by oxalic acid which had been mixed accidentally in their tea. The shopman who resided with them was seriously affected by the poison, but was recovered by the means adopted by the medical attendants. An inquest has been held, but the jury have not yet come to any decision.

Suicide of Mr. Laman Blanchard.—We regret to record the death of this popular writer, who died on Friday night by his own hand. Mr. Blanchard had lately suffered a severe domestic affliction in the loss of his wife; and his unceasing anxiety during the progress of her long and harassing illness had so injured his own health, that fits ensued which led to despondency, and finally to paroxysms of insanity. On Friday night he had read prayers as usual before his family and household, and was preparing to go to bed, when he cut his throat with a razor in the presence of one of his children, and died instantly. The jury at the inquest, without hesitation returned a verdict of temporary insanity. Mr. Blanchard had been connected with the press in various ways for more than 20 years. He was formerly Editor of the Courier, and was a frequent and welcome contributor to our periodical literature. His writings were always lively and graceful, and were marked by the many amiable qualities which made him respected in private life.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Feb. 15:—West Districts, 160; Northern, 225; Central, 223; Eastern, 219; Southern, 280; Total, 1112; males, 554; females, 558. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1256; males, 653; females, 603.

Provincial.

Arundel.—On Thursday last, the day of Her Majesty's visit to Arundel Castle, the horses of the Defiance, Portsmouth and Brighton four-horse coach, took fright as they were about to enter Arundel, and galloped through the narrow streets of the town at a tremendous rate, ultimately dashing out of Farrant-street, fronting the Norfolk Arms, across the intervening road, clearing the stable gate with the fracture only of a splinter-bar, entering the yard at full speed, and not being able to stop themselves, ran into a shed at the other extremity of it. The coachman and outside passengers were severely injured, but those inside escaped unhurt. It appears that Her Majesty and Prince Albert were exposed to great danger by this occurrence. The royal party were on the way to the Castle at the time, and had scarcely passed the Norfolk Arms—not by more than two or three minutes—when the coach came dashing at a tremendous rate across the road which had just been traversed by the royal equipage. A minute or two earlier on the part of the coach, or later on the part of the royal carriage, and a collision must have taken place.

Brighton.—On Wednesday a man about 60 years of age, called Ralph Stennett, who described himself as an artist, was charged before the magistrates with loitering about the Pavilion, with intent to annoy Her Majesty and Prince Albert. It appeared that he was endeavouring to deliver two letters to Her Majesty and the Prince, soliciting their acceptance of some paintings. The prisoner stated that he had no improper object in approaching the Palace, being merely desirous of delivering his letters. The magistrates cautioned him to adopt some other mode of effecting his object, and ordered him to be discharged.

Cambridge.—At the meeting of the Cambridge Camden Society last week, the chairman, Archdeacon Thorp, announced that the Bishops of Lincoln and Exeter, and the Chancellor of the University (the Duke of Northumberland), had withdrawn from the Society. That, on behalf of the committee, he had to state that the retirement of the two Episcopal patrons of the Society, followed by that of the chief officer of the University, had suggested to the committee the serious consideration of the organisation of the Society, and that they had come to the conclusion that any advantages which might result from the continued operations of the Society would be insufficient to counterbalanse the positive evil consequent on a violation of the respect due to Episcopal and University authority. The committee, therefore, unanimously recommended that the Society be dissolved. This recommendation was assented to by the meeting, but the Society cannot be formally dissolved without the authority of the members at the anniversary meeting. In the interval the affairs of the Society will be wound up.

Carlisle.—A frightful tragedy was perpetrated in this county last week, a child, 7 years of age, having been burned to death by her own mother. It appears that the woman, Jane Crosby, the wife of an agricultural labourer, who keeps a small public-house at Lammonby, had taken a dislike to the child, and had several times lately turned her out of the house at an untimely hour, and left her out all night, no doubt surmising that the inclement weather would have caused her death; but the poor child was generally found by the neighbours and taken care of. Finding she could not make an end of her by these means, the mother formed the horrible design of roasting the poor child alive. Accordingly, on Wednesday night, having previously barred the outer door, and taken off the child's clothes, she seized her by the leg with one hand, and by the back of the head with the other, and pressed her forcibly upon the fire, until the left cheek and eye, and part of the nose had been almost burned off. She then pretended to the neighbours that the child had got burnt in her absence at market. The suspicion of the neighbours, however, was aroused, and a surgeon was sent for. Upon examining the child, he found her breathing, but on the point of death, and, after suffering great pain, she ceased expired on Thursday morning. At the inquest the coroner sent for the other child of the prisoner, aged 11, who had been present at the time in the house, and on questioning her, after some difficulty he elicited the above facts. The child was afraid to give evidence, on account of the cruel threats the mother had used towards her if she ever told any one what she had seen. The surgeon deposed that deceased must have been held down on the fire forcibly, as he was satisfied, from the appearance, the injuries could not have been done accidentally. A great many witnesses were examined, who stated the cruel treatment the children had sustained from their mother during the father's absence. The coroner then went through the evidence, and the jury after an hour's deliberation, brought in a verdict of wilful murder against Jane Crosby. She was accordingly committed to Carlisle gaol, and will take her trial at the ensuing assizes.

Carnarvon.—Carnarvon Castle, which has been for some time in a dilapidated state, is, by order of the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests, to be put in complete repair.

Chelmsford.—The Rev. Mr. Mildmay, rector of this town, on Sunday last abandoned the use of the surplice in preaching, and the prayer for the church militant. The clergy of Colchester, Witham, and other parts of the diocese have come to the same resolution.

Dorchester.—Another case of poisoning children by arsenic has just occurred in this town, a woman named Warr, who resides at Wooland, near Blandford, having poisoned her illegitimate child, a few months old, by administering arsenic in its food on each occasion of her visiting Dorchester, where it had been left to nurse. Mr. Herapath of Bristol, at the post-mortem examination, discovered arsenic in the stomach, and on searching the mother, a paper of that poison was found in her pocket. session.

Manchester.—The subscriptions for the public park in this town now exceed 30,000*l.*, which is equivalent to one of 2*s.* each, from every man, woman, and child, in the community, assuming the population to be 300,000.—Sir Henry Pottinger has intimated to the committee for managing his testimonial, that he has already two complete services of plate, in addition to that to be presented to him by the merchants of Bombay; and that it would be most gratifying to his feelings if the amount subscribed in Manchester, together with that subscribed for a testimonial in Liverpool, should be expended in the purchase of a residence in London. This was at once acquiesced in by the committee, with the understanding that a sum should be applied for the purchase of a single piece of plate, on which should be engraved a suitable commemorative inscription.

Oxford.—Since the proceedings of Convocation last week, Mr. Ward has addressed a letter to the Vice-Chancellor, containing a statement of the reasons which ed him to consider his position in the University morally naffected by what passed on that occasion. Mr. Ward tates that he should at once relinquish his position, if e could be satisfied that Convocation is the true imoser or competent interpreter of subscription to the 9 Articles. He refers to the opinions of legal authoities on this point, stating that the Articles are imposed nd the sense of subscription determined, by the law f the land; and that the Judges of the Ecclesiastical ourts alone have the power authoritatively to deare that sense, while the Supreme Legislature alone as the power of altering or adding to it. Under these ircumstances, he says he cannot feel that any obligation hatever is laid upon him in consequence of the events f the 13th, to act for the future upon any different view f subscription to the Articles from that on which he has itherto acted, and which is expressed in his work and amphlets.—The Rev. F. Oakeley, Senior Fellow of Balol has also addressed a letter to the Vice-Chancellor, eting that a pamphlet which he published a few weeks ince contained the following passage:—"I have no wish o remain a member of the University, or a minister of he Church of England, under false colours. I claim he right which has already been asserted in another uarter, of holding (as distinct from teaching) all Roman octrine, and that notwithstanding my subscription to he 39 Articles." This right, he says, he appropriates nd repeats with the fullest deliberation and distinctness; nd as he considers that it has been apparently alled in question by the vote of Convocation in the ase of Mr. Ward, he is anxious to state in what ight he regards that vote. He says that Convocaion in its recent judgment on the passages of Mr. Ward's book has not made it clear whether it proounced any declaration with respect to the question of ubscription, so as to affect those who, like himself, while appropriating Mr. Ward's view of subscription, do not appropr ate (nor yet disclaim) other sentiments exressed in the selected passages. "But if," he says, 'in the judgment of the Board over which you preside, nd of the House of Convocation, I have rendered myself personally liable to penalty by the declarations above cited, I am anxious 'not to shelter myself (as I ay in my pamphlet) under the cover of supposed differnces, as to this matter of subscription, from others who ave been directly assailed.' If, on the other hand, I m allowed, after this plain and public declaration of my entiments, to retain my place in the University, I shall egard such acquiescence as equivalent to an admission, n the part of the academical authorities, that my own ubscription to the 39 Articles is not at variance with good faith.'" Since the proceedings on the 13th, upwards of 100 members of Convocation have signed a declaration, expressing their concurrence in the following amendment, which was tendered in Convocation:—"That the passages now read from the book entitled 'The Ideal of a Christian Church considered' are worthy of grave censure, but that Convocation declines to express any opinion upon the good faith of the author, or to exercise the functions of an ecclesiastical tribunal by pronouncing judgment upon the nature or degree of his offence."

Ramsgate.—At a meeting of the inhabitants on the 18th ult., it was unanimously resolved,—"That, deploring the agitation respecting conflicting differences in the form of Divine worship, as tending to great discomfort and disunion among those warmly attached to the Church, the vicar be respectfully requested to restore the service to its original form in conformity with the usages of the last 130 years. That he therefore be requested to resume the gown while delivering the sermon, and to discontinue the reading of the offertory sentences and the prayer for the Church militant on ordinary occasions." In accordance with this resolution, the vicar on Sunday preached in the gown and abandoned the forms objected to by the parishioners.

Rendlesham.—On Saturday night the gamekeeper of Lord Rendlesham returned home late in a state of intoxication, and after a few minutes' time desired to leave again. His wife remonstrated against this, and shut the door to prevent his getting out; a quarrel ensued just at the moment he was adjusting the pistols in his dress, when almost instantaneously one of them, during the scuffle, went off, and shot her through the head, and she immediately expired. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of manslaughter against the gamekeeper, who has been committed to Ipswich gaol to take his trial at the next assizes.

Tunbridge Wells.—A correspondent informs us that, on Friday week the Rev. H. G. Randall was presented with a handsome silver salver, subscribed for by the parishioners of Frant near this town, as a memorial of their attachment to him on his resignation of the curacy of that parish. The Hon. Percy Ashburnham presented the memorial to Mr. Randall in the name of the parishioners.

Uxbridge.—At the recent sittings of the Central Criminal Court, Charles Lamb was tried on the charge of having murdered a lad named Brill at Ruislip, 8 years ago. The particulars of this case have been already given in this Paper. The charge rested on the testimony of a man who had been committed with the prisoner to the House of Correction about 12 months since for poaching, and who stated that the prisoner had confessed to him that he was the murderer. The jury however were not satisfied with his evidence, and found a verdict of acquittal.—Thomas Dickman, the baker, whose apprehension on the charge of attempting to poison his wife, has also been noticed in this Paper, was acquitted by direction of the Judge, who decided that the evidence was not sufficient to implicate the prisoner.

York.—The bell intended to be put up in the south tower of York Minster, has recently been manufactured at the foundry of Messrs. Mears, Whitechapel, and is larger than any other in the kingdom. Its weight exceeds 12 tons, and it is 7 feet 7 inches in height, and its diameter is 8 feet 4 inches, being heavier by 7 tons than the celebrated "Tom" of Lincoln, and by 5 tons than "Old Tom" of Oxford. The metal took 12 days to cool. The clapper is not yet put in, but this will weigh between 3 and 4 cwt. The arms of the city of York and those of the Archbishop are on the bell, with a Latin inscription, in Lombardian characters. The cost of it is about 2000*l.*; the sum having been raised by voluntary subscription.—It is stated by the local Papers that George Hudson, Esq., of York, has become the purchaser of the Duke of Devonshire's Baldersby estate, near Ripon.

Railways.

The following are the returns for the past week:—Birmingham and Gloucester, 2029*l.*; Bristol and Gloucester, 1069*l.*; Eastern Counties, 3666*l.*; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 2072*l.*; Great Western, 14,010*l.*; Glasgow, Paisley, and Ayr, 1384*l.*; Great North of England, 1577*l.*; London and Birmingham, 15,445*l.*; South Western, 4941*l.*; Brighton, 3257*l.*; Liverpool and Manchester, 4639*l.*; Manchester, Leeds, and Hull, 6310*l.*; Midland 9115*l.*; Newcastle and Carlisle, 1454*l.*; Newcastle and Darlington, 1001*l.*; Paris and Rouen, 3846*l.*; Paris and Orleans, 4923*l.*; Sheffield and Manchester, 632*l.*; York and North Midland, with Leeds and Selby, 2127*l.*; Yarmouth and Norwich, 170*l.*; Preston and Wyre, 395*l.*—The Board of Trade announced in Tuesday's Gazette, that having had under consideration 6 schemes for extending railway communication in Scotland, they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Clydesdale Junction, Caledonian, Edinburgh and Hawick, Scottish Central; and against the Edinburgh and Glasgow—Stirling Branch, Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle. The Board announced in last night's Gazette, that they have decided in favour of the Blackburn, Burnley, and Accrington Extension, and the Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton line; and in favour of the following Irish railways:—The Irish Great Western (Dublin to Galway), the Londonderry and Enniskillen; and against the Londonderry and Coleraine; the Irish Great Western (Dublin to Mullingar, &c.); the Alternative line; and the Extension line of the same Company. The following Railway Bills were presented and read a first time in the House of Commons on Wednesday:—Manchester and Birmingham (Ashton branch); York and Scarborough Deviation; Leeds and Bradford Extension; Ashton, Staleybridge, and Liverpool Junction; Manchester and Leeds, (Burnley, Oldham, and Heywood Branches); Leeds and West Riding Junction; Leeds, Dewsbury and Manchester Junction; West Yorkshire; Richmond and South Western Junction, South Western and Hungerford Bridge Junction. The following were read a first time on Thursday:—Hull and Selby; Cockermouth and Workington; Kendal and Windermere; Lancaster and Carlisle; Manchester and Buxton; Chester and Birkenhead. The London and York, Norwich and Brandon, and Great Northern were read a first time last night. In the case of the London and York the House of Commons resolved to dispense with the Standing Orders which had not been complied with.—The London and Birmingham Company held their meeting last week, and announced a dividend of 5*l.* per cent. for the half year, which would leave a rest of 47,093*l.* to the credit of the current half year. The report stated that the revenue of the line had increased and the expenditure decreased, and that the directors were in favour of a reduction of fares so long as the interests of the shareholders are not interfered with. The report proceeded to state that the Warwick and Leamington line was opened December 9, and that the traffic more than equalled expectations. The advanced state of the works on the Northampton and Peterborough line, and the progress making in the Lancaster and Carlisle line, continued satisfactory. The report concluded by referring to the proposed extension lines of the company, for which arrangements had been made. The report was adopted; and resolutions were passed authorising the directors to lease the Chesnet line, by which a direct communication would be made with Manchester, to lease the Trent line, and to construct a branch line from Dunstable to the London and Birmingham at Leighton Buzzard. A resolution was also passed, empowering the directors to purchase the West London Railway.—The South-Western Company at their meeting declared a dividend of 4*l*0*s.* per share, subject to income tax; the traffic for the last half-year has exceeded the corresponding period of 1843 by 9737*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* The gross amount of revenue was 190,631*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*, and after deducting all charges, the sum for the dividend was 101,191*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, which would leave a balance of 9367*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* to be carried to the next half-year. The meeting passed off in the most satisfactory manner, and it appeared the directors are not in all respects aggrieved at the late decisions of the Board of Trade on certain lines promoted by themselves, but gained by the Great Western. It was stated that the line from Basingstoke to Didcot would not pay, that Cornwall had not come forward with one third of the capital for the proposed central line, and that the company did not intend to make a rail from Dorchester to Exeter, but if the inhabitants chose to construct one, it would be favourably received by the company.—The Great Western at their meeting announced a dividend of 4 per cent. for the half-year. The increased dividend and generally prosperous state of the affairs of the company produced much good feeling among the shareholders. The receipts for the six months were 440,046*l.*, or 62 248*l.* more than for the corresponding period of last year, and the expenditure 143,270*l.*, or about 32 per cent. The balance, after payment of the dividend, is 13,613*l.* The estimates for the several new lines which the company propose to construct in accordance with the report of the Board of Trade amount to 3,050,000*l.*, including the Berks and Hants, the Monmouth and Hereford, the Wilts and Somerset, and Oxford and Rugby branches. 600,000*l.* was voted in assistance of the South Wales project.—The Great North of England Company have declared a dividend of 6 per cent., leaving a reserve fund of 7964*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The report for the half-year showed a gross receipt of 54,018*l.* 6*s.*, which, compared with the corresponding half-year, is an increase of 15,481*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* The balance, after defraying expenses, amounted to 31,784*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, from which the dividend would be disbursed. The question of amalgamation with the Newcastle and Darlington upon equal terms was rejected by a very large majority.—The Northern and Eastern Company at their meeting announced a dividend of 5 per cent. in accordance with the agreement of the Eastern Counties Company. The report stated that the traffic of the line is increasing. The directors, in reply to a question whether any opposition would be given by this company to the proposed Blackwall and Epping scheme, said they had memorialised the Board of Trade against sanctioning any such absurd undertaking.—At the meeting of the South Devon Company last week, it was announced that the line from Exeter to Newton would be opened in July, and that the Great Western Company are going to revise their fares, and probably reduce them, to close their second-class carriages, and run a mail train daily in 5 hours from Exeter. Resolutions were agreed to, authorising the directors to construct a branch railway from the South Devon near Crabtree to Tavistock; to construct a branch from near Laira-green to Sutton Pool, Plymouth; to construct a branch to Newpassage, with a road or approach from Morice-square, Devonport; to alter the branch at present authorised to be made to Mill-bay, Plymouth, and to extend the same to the shore of the bay; to contribute towards the construction of intended railways from Devonport to Falmouth; and from Tavistock to Launceston; and to apply to Parliament during the present session, for an Act for these objects, and for raising additional capital.

Ireland.

Dublin.—Dr. Blake, the Roman Catholic Bishop, has addressed a short letter to the Freeman, assuring that journal, on the very best authority, that there is no foundation for the reported concordat between England and the Holy See. Dr. Cullen, the president of the Irish College at Rome, has addressed a similar communication to Archbishop Murray, giving, as his voucher for the fact, no less a personage than the Pope himself.—A paragraph has taken the round of the papers alleging that a correspondence is being carried on between Sir Robert Peel and the heads of the Irish University respecting the expediency of opening the college to Roman Catholics and Dissenters, &c., for which there is not the shadow of a foundation. "No correspondence," says the Times, "direct or indirect, has taken place between the Government and the Board of Trinity College upon those or any other subjects connected with the meditated academical changes."—A meeting was held last week in this city to devise means of promoting the manufactures of Ireland. The Lord Mayor presided, and was supported, among others, by the Rev. Tresham Gregg and Mr. O'Connell. Mr. Gregg made a long speech in praise of O'Connell, concluding by proposing an amendment declaring that the blessing of Providence could only be obtained by the medium of true religion, and farther recommending that the meeting should use its exertions to have that religion set up and maintained which was proved to be true. This amendment was put and negatived, but Mr. O'Connell immediately rose, and passed a most glowing eulogium on Mr. Gregg's speech. He was delighted to hear him, and, let him hereafter do what he might, he (Mr. O'Connell) would never quarrel with him. Oh, he said, it is because we did not know each other before that we were not the best friends. The Government has been playing us against each other.—Mr. Gregg: They are a contemptible set. (Laughter).—Mr. O'Connell: I have no great respect for them myself, but when your Protestant turns agitator, he always goes further than we do. (A laugh).—After some further speeches, a committee was appointed, who are to report to a future general meeting.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday.

Mr. M'Navin, having been called to the chair, addressed the meeting at considerable length in reference to the remedial measures promised to this country, and stated his opinion to be, that the object which the Prime Minister had in view was the creation of a Catholic ascendancy in Ireland. In the name of his fellow Roman Catholics, he declared that they would not accept of any elevation above their Protestant brethren. They would not repay the wrongs so mistakenly inflicted on them, by consenting to be masters when they ought to be only free citizens.—Mr J. O'Connell, M.P., made some observations respecting Sir R. Peel's financial scheme, which he admitted would be productive of vast benefit to the poorer classes, but he complained of the continuance of gross injustice, and of various omissions towards Ireland.—Mr. Clements said, that it had been referred to a committee of the Association to report on the best method of preserving the ancient melodies of Ireland, and they had come to the conclusion that the most effectual way of perpetuating those sacred relics of antiquity was to have them arranged for the temperance bands. This had been done by a competent person, and the first of a series was then ready to be issued.—Mr. O'Connell, in handing in several subscriptions from the county of Louth, took occasion to give vent to some hearty abuse of Mr. Bellew, M.P. He stated that his uncle had received three pensions from Government for selling his religion and country. The first was given to him upon being called to the bar; the second for supporting the union; and the third for speaking in favour of the veto. The present man probably had a squint back at his old uncle, but he ventured to say, that if he showed his face in Louth at another election, it would be handsomer going there than coming away, particularly if there were any rotten eggs to be found in the neighbourhood.—Messrs. O'Brien, M.P., Browne, M.P., Roche, M.P., and Somers, M.P., handed in various sums of money, and severally addressed the meeting.—Mr. O'Connell announced the receipt of 52*l.* from Washington, and 250*l.* from Baltimore, United States, and read two lengthy epistles which accompanied these donations. In reference to the increased grant to Maynooth, Mr. O'Connell stated he had been informed that the amount was to be 26,000*l.*, besides which the buildings were to be repaired under the superintendence and at the expense of the Board of Public Works. He had been reproached with neglecting to oppose this grant, and reminded of his often-repeated principle that every religion should pay its own clergymen. That certainly was his principle, and he should like very well to see it carried out; but while the Established Church took money from Catholics and Dissenters, for which it gave no value, he would take all he could get for Maynooth. He then proceeded to comment upon the speeches made by Mr. Wakley in the debates on the address and the budget. Mr. Wakley had been made a mouth-piece to insinuate charges against Irish members, which were totally without foundation, and he therefore charged him with the grossest ignorance regarding Irish affairs. This ignorance was so crass, that it would seem to be pretended, and Mr. Wakley was in the position of "innocent Abigail, who went to hell without sin." In reply to the demand made by Mr. Wakley, that Irish members should make a distinct declaration of the measures they required, and would be contented with, Mr. O'Connell read a number of documents published by himself and others, at different periods, for years back, in which the required list of grievances and their remedies were put forward. He concluded by moving that copies of the reports and addresses which he had read should be forwarded to Mr. Wakley by the secretary of the Association. — Mr. Roche, M.P., seconded the resolution, which was adopted.—The rent for the week was 751*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*

Miscellaneous.

Report of the Landord and Tenant Commission.—The report which has been for some time past in preparation by the commission appointed "to inquire into the law and practice in respect to the occupation of land in Ireland," has at length been presented to Parliament. As such deep interest is felt to know the import and character of this report, we give below its concluding portion, which may be regarded as a "summing-up" of the facts and arguments that are of so voluminous a nature as to occupy some 60 or 80 folio pages of print. This is, however, occupied with the report alone; the evidence that has been laid before the commission must extend to many bulky volumes, if it be intended to print it in its complete form. The commissioners thus conclude their report:—"We have thus endeavoured to lay before your Majesty the conclusion at which we are arrived after the extensive inquiry in which we have been engaged. We are well aware of the difficulty that surrounded the whole subject of the inquiry. One class of persons has been accustomed to look exclusively to legislative interference for removal of the evils to which Ireland is exposed, while others despair entirely of any beneficial effect upon her social condition from such interference. We do not agree with either of those classes. We know that the best-directed measures of Parliament cannot produce the desired effect, unless aided and enforced by the steady as well as active exertions of people of all ranks and conditions in their respective spheres; but we are at the same time satisfied that a very beneficial change may be effected by the united and vigorous efforts of the Legislature, and of individuals. We cannot despair when we find a country enjoying such natural advantages as Ireland possesses, with a large extent of uncultivated and unimproved land and a numerous population able and willing to labour, if opportunities are offered to them. On the contrary, we confidently believe that, by an examination of the facts as they actually exist, and by close attention thereto, means may be found for removing many or most of those particular obstacles which have hitherto so greatly impeded the beneficial employment of labour, and obstructed the enjoyment of those advantages which a country such as Ireland is calculated to afford. But this desirable result cannot be looked for unless the united and vigorous efforts of all classes in Ireland are directed towards it. Instances are to be seen in every part of the country of estates upon which the liberal conduct and active superintendence of a resident landlord, or of a resident and judicious agent, has established a system of progressive improvement as to the land, and of increasing comfort to the people, which are unfortunately wanting in many other districts. We trust that one effect, at least, of our labours will be to arouse the attention of many who have as yet thought little upon the subject, and to encourage them to follow the example thus held out to them. Above all, we would call upon all such persons not to rest satisfied with any vague or general notion of the state of the population with which they are connected, but carefully to examine all the circumstances, in order that they may apply those remedies which shall be appropriate to the case as well as efficient for the purpose of relief. The voluminous evidence collected by us in all parts of Ireland, with the numerous returns and other documents transmitted to us, present a mass of information upon the social condition of the country which may serve as a useful guide to all who desire to employ their efforts for improvement in the right direction and upon sound principles, and we feel satisfied that great advantages may be derived from placing in their true light many facts and circumstances hitherto little known or greatly misunderstood. Whilst we have, in various parts of this report, made observations in the nature of advice to some of those who are landlords in Ireland, we trust at the same time to be permitted to remark shortly upon the conduct too often pursued by some of the class of tenants. There is frequently a readiness amongst them to attribute their whole wretched condition exclusively to the conduct of their landlords, sometimes with an utter disregard of truth, and almost always without admitting—perhaps without seeing—how much of it arises from their own indolence or want of skill. The truth is, to use a familiar expression, the faults are, in many cases, to be found on both sides; and, considering how uninformed a large portion of the Irish population is, a heavy responsibility rests upon all those to whom the poorer classes have a right to look for information and advice. The foundation of almost all the evils by which the social condition of Ireland is disturbed, is to be traced to those feelings of mutual distrust which too often separate the classes of landlord and tenant, and prevent all united exertion for their common benefit. It has been truly said that confidence is a plant of slow growth. It is, however, a plant which will flourish well in Ireland if cultivated with patience and with care. We say particularly with patience, because we believe that many excellent persons, having the best intentions towards improvements, the cultivation of the soil, and the condition of the people of Ireland, have been too easily diverted from their course by feelings of disappointment at the slow progress which is made towards the attainment of those ends, and the little result which is perceived from their most anxious endeavours. We would earnestly impress upon such persons and upon all who have the interest of Ireland at heart, not hastily to relax from the exertions, which circumstances may enable them to make, in forwarding the march of improvement amongst their poorer neighbours. Without touching upon the political or other causes which may have contributed to create a feeling of distrust, we cannot disguise from ourselves that the Irish peasant is inclined to look with suspicion upon all attempts of his landlord to inculcate new habits, or to introduce new plans for the arrangement of his lands. Every considerate and benevolent landlord will make allowance for this feeling. He will not suffer any exhibition of it to turn him aside from any scheme of improvement upon which, after deliberation, he has determined to enter. He must be prepared for frequent disappointment. He will unquestionably meet with ingratitude and injustice; but if he perseveres in a spirit of kindness, united with firmness of purpose, he may eventually look to well-merited reward, probably in the advancement of his personal interest; but certainly in the improvement of the district in which he lives, and the increasing comfort of the people around him." [The following signatures are appended to the report, which is dated February 14, 1845]:—"Devon; R. A. Ferguson; Geo. A. Hamilton; Thos. N. Redington; John Wynne."

BIRTHS.—Recently, in Hertford-st., Mayfair, the Hon. Mrs. Scott, of a daughter—29th Jan., at Ardwick Green, Manchester, the lady of J. Jesse, Esq., of a son—10th inst., at Stockton on Tees, the lady of W. C. Gibson, Esq., Ceylon Civ. Serv., of a son—11th inst., in Arlington-street, St. James's, Mrs. Edw. Moore, of a daughter.

DEATHS. — 13th inst., at Brighton, General the Earl of Effingham, G.C.B., Col. of the 3d Reg. of Inf., aged 78—13th inst., at his house, Gate-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W. Day, Esq., aged 49—15th inst., at his house, Southern Hill, Reading, T. Willimot, Esq., formerly Collector of H.M.'s Customs, London—17th inst., in Bloomsbury-place, T. J. Davis, Esq., Secretary to the National Benevolent Institution—30th ult., at St. Petersburgh, his Excellency Admiral Greig, Member of the Imperial Council, and Senator of Russia, and Knight of all the Russian Orders.

DECEPTION AND FRAUD.

THE well-known Instruments called the STOMACH and ENEMA PUMPS, invented by J. READ, were sanctioned by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, and highly approved by the most eminent members of the Medical Profession in this kingdom, as well as on the Continents of Europe, India, and America, and which, by the blessing of Providence, have been the means of saving thousands of lives (vide the Life of Sir A. Cooper, page 301). This distinguished patronage induced many unprincipled adventurers to palm upon the public spurious imitations of Read's last improved FOUNTAIN RESERVOIRS (but which may be easily distinguished from his by the incumbrance of a Chain and Stop-cock). These facts have come to his knowledge by the number of paltry instruments which are daily sent from all parts of the kingdom, and frequently from India, for repair, many of which are not worth the expense of their carriage. As some protection, J. R. has instructions from the Hon. East India Company to place their mark, in future, on all instruments sent to their presidencies. But in vain may a humble mechanic attempt to defend himself against the wholesale frauds that are practised upon him, when instruments with all the imperfections alluded to, are boldly and falsely advertised as Read's Patent Pump, which are manufactured only by himself, at 35, Regent-circus, Piccadilly. None are genuine except stamped with the words, "Read's Patent."

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds announced for promoting the growth or restoration of the Hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a limited period, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in estimation. The singular virtues of this successful Preparation for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair are well known and appreciated to need comment. The distinguished patronage it enjoys at the Courts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys in all countries, together with numerous testimonials of approval received in its favour, are authorities which stamp it with excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. It is universally preferred, its consequent great demand has given birth to the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most worthless trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. Rowland and Son, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus preventing the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper, nearly 1500 times, containing 29,025 letters.—Price 3*s.* 6*d.*—7*s.*—Family Bottles (equal to 4 small, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and to that size, 21*s.* per Bottle. Sold by the Proprietors at 20 Hatton Garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL,

 All other Articles sold under the same name are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY—A steady, respectable married Man, not more than 40, as FOREMAN in a Market concern of some magnitude. He must thoroughly understand Forcing in all its branches, particularly Grapes, as well as packing for market, in which he will be wholly employed. To such a person permanent employment, and good but not high wages, will be given.—Application by letter only addressed to A. B., No. 6, Brompton-row, stating real name and address, in whose present or late employ, and references as to character and ability, will be attended to; and after the necessary inquiries have been made, such as are likely to suit will be communicated with.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY in a large Provincial Nursery, 40 miles distant from London, two industrious working hands, that are well versed in budding and grafting, &c.—Apply, by letter post paid, to Messrs. E. and J. Nixon, 121, Great Portland-street, London.

WANTED.—A GARDENER.—A steady, active, married Man, without a family, or with only one or two children. He must be a good Kitchen and Flower-gardener, and understand the management of Vines and Greenhouse Plants, and Wall-trees. Address, post paid, A. H., Mr. Nash's Library, Tonbridge Wells.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS FOREMAN in a Nursery, or Gardener in a Gentleman's family, a steady, middle-aged Man, who has had about 30 years' practice in the nursery; he also well understands his business as a gentleman's gardener. No objection to manage land, &c.—Direct to G.S.S., Mrs. Elk's, 19, High-street, Portland-town, Regent's-park.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A respectable married Man, aged 38, who understands the duties of his profession, Land, and Stock; has lived 10 years as Under Gardener in four Noblemen's families, and Gardener and Bailiff in highly respectable families 12 years. His wife can undertake the Laundry or Dairy, if required; and most satisfactory testimonials of three years' character can be given.—Direct to A. B., at Mr. Pilcher's, Hair-dresser, North-end, Croydon, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A Nobleman's Gardener having to part with his Foreman, through alterations in the establishment, wishes to recommend him to any one in want of a thorough Gardener, having filled his present situation 2 years, and has had several years' previous experience under first-rate Gardeners.—Direct to J. M., 30, Regent-street, Mile End.

AS GARDENER.—An industrious married Man, aged 31, without family, who has a practical knowledge of his business, including Hothouses, Early Forcing, Greenhouse Plants, and Flower-gardens; also Kitchen-gardens, Wall-fruit, &c., with two years' unexceptionable character from the gentleman he has just left. Wages, equal to 18*s.* per week.—Direct to G. L., Rev. J. Curwen's, Plaistow, near London.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, without family, aged 36, who perfectly understands the management of a Greenhouse, Vines, forcing Cucumbers and Melons, Flower and Kitchen Garden, Meadow-land, &c. His wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have 5 years' good character; leaving on account of his employer removing.—Direct to John Hewett, Mrs. Deacon Hume, Great Dood's House, Reigate, Surrey.

AS GARDENER. — A respectable married Man, 30 years of age, well conversant with Designing and Managing, Forcing, Flower and Kitchen Gardens, Profitable and Ornamental Plantations, &c. No objection to act as Land Steward also, if required. Unexceptionable references given. — Direct, No. 1916, Post-office, Hereford.

AS GARDENER.—A steady, industrious Young Man, from the country. He has a thorough knowledge of his business, has been in the practice of Gardening all his life, and can have 13 years' recommendation. No objection to live in the Lodge, or to milk a Cow.—Direct to X. Y. Z., at Mr. B. Gibbard's, Leyton, Essex.

AS LAND STEWARD. — A married Gentleman, 35 years of age, an experienced Agriculturist, and a native of Scotland, whose present engagement terminates on 1st May next, will be glad to treat with any nobleman or gentleman, or landed proprietor, who is in want of a person qualified to carry on the improvement of land on the most approved principles. He farmed in one of the best cultivated districts of Scotland for 14 years, and for the last 3 years has been engaged in the management, draining, and otherwise improving the estate of a gentleman in the south of England. Unexceptionable references as to abilities, &c., will be given on application by letter.—Direct to G. Smith, post-office, Abergavenny, Monmouthshire.

A YOUNG MAN, 28 years of age, would be glad to meet with an engagement as UNDER-GARDENER. All particulars may be learned by applying to the Gardener with whom he now lives.—Direct to G. M. care of Mr. Chambers, Gardener at S. S. Phelps, Esq., Warminster, Wiltshire.

A PREMIUM of 10*l.* will be given by a Young Man who wishes to place himself in a GENTLEMAN'S GARDEN for two or three years, where he may acquire a knowledge of his business, including forcing. Can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to Wm. Green, care of Mr Garvey, Nurseryman, Stratford, Essex.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1845.

NATIONAL ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION,
No. 4, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, LONDON.

Assurance Department—Policyholders for the whole of life are entitled to the whole profits. For Investment, shares are issued of Five Pounds; also reduced shares of Five Shillings, designed to enable provident persons to improve savings. Shareholders are not subject to calls nor liable in respect of other claims. Agents wanted in towns where none are already appointed. The Prospectus and all necessary information may be obtained at the offices of the Association.

WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON,
11, HANOVER SQUARE. March 1, 1845.

The COUNCIL of this Society, in furtherance of one of the original objects of its founders, contemplate encouraging an Exhibition of Domestic Poultry, Carassows, Pigeons, Ornamental and other Water Fowl, &c., in the approaching month of May, or June, with a view to the improvement of the breeds: and such persons as are interested in this object, or desirous of co-operating with the Council in carrying it out, are invited to communicate with the Secretary. WM. OGILBY, Hon. Sec.

Just published, 4th Edition, greatly enlarged, 8vo, with nearly Two Hundred and Forty Illustrations on Wood, 21*s.* cloth,

ELEMENTS of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE; comprehending the Cultivation of Plants, the Husbandry of Domestic Animals, and the Economy of the Farm.

By DAVID LOW, Esq., F.R.S.E.
Professor of Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh.

"The best work on farming in our language."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

By the same Author, just published,

ON LANDED PROPERTY and the ECONOMY of ESTATES.

8vo, with numerous Wood Engravings. 21*s.* Also,

THE BREEDS of the DOMESTICATED ANIMALS of GRAT BRITAIN.

2 vols., 4to, with 56 Coloured Plates, 16*l.* 16*s.*
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

MRS. RUNDELL'S COOKERY BOOK IMPROVED.

Now ready, 68th Edition, enlarged, Fcap. 8vo, 6*s.* bound,

DOMESTIC COOKERY, for PRIVATE FAMILIES; being founded upon Principles of ECONOMY and PRACTICE. New Edition, comprising all MODERN IMPROVEMENTS. By Miss EMMA ROBERTS.

"In point of excellence as to cookery, and economy in expenture, leaves no room to any rival. The present editor has added entirely New Receipts, given in a plain, concise, and explicit anner."—Keane's Bath Journal.

* Of this POPULAR COOKERY BOOK upwards of 200,000 copies have been sold.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

WORKS BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.

New Edition, corrected, with a Supplement, containing above 160 additional pages of Letterpress and nearly 300 New Engravings, in 1 very thick vol. 8vo. of above 1300 pages, and 2000 Engravings on Wood, 3*l.* 3*s.* cloth,—An

ENCYCLOPÆDIA of COTTAGE FARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE and FURNITURE; containing Designs for Cottages, Villas, Farm Houses, Farmeries, Country Inns, Public Houses, Parochial Schools, &c.; with the requisite Fittings-up, Fixtures, Offices, &c. and general Estimates of the Expense.

By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.

 The NEW SUPPLEMENT separately, 7*s.* 6*d.* sewed.

By the same Author,

ARBORETUM et FRUTICETUM BRITANNICUM. 8 vols. (4 of letterpress and 4 of plates), new and corrected impressions of the plates, 10*l.*

ENCYCLOPÆDIA of TREES and SHRUBS. 2000 Woodcuts, 2*l.* 10*s.*

HORTUS LIGNOSUS LONDINENSIS. 7*s.* 6*d.*

ARCHITECTURAL MAGAZINE. 5 vols. 6*l.* 6*s.*

THE SUBURBAN GARDENER. Numerous Woodcuts, 20*s.*

REPTON'S LANDSCAPE GARDENING and ARCHITECTURE, 30*s.*; with the Plates coloured, 3*l.* 10*s.*

On the LAYING-OUT and PLANTING of CEMETERIES, and the Improvement of Churchyards. 60 Woodcuts, 12*s.*

GARDENER'S MAGAZINE. Complete in 9 vols. numerous Woodcuts, 9*l.* 17*s.*

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

This day is published, price 3*s.*, No. VIII. of the New Series of

THE JOURNAL OF AGRICULTURE AND THE TRANSACTIONS OF THE HIGHLAND AND AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.

The TRANSACTIONS contain Proceedings of the Agricultural Chemistry Association, 1845; and The Premiums of the Highland and Agricultural Society for 1845.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London; and sold by all Booksellers.

Number 40, price 6*d.*, and Part 9, price 2*s.*,
A New and Splendid Edition of

THE MYSTERIES OF PARIS.—Adapted to the English reader. Illustrated with upwards of 700 Engravings on Wood of all the characters, scenes, costumes, and localities described in this extraordinary work; executed expressly for this edition by the first Artists in Paris, under the superintendence of Mr. CHARLES HEATH.

The First Volume is now completed, handsomely bound in cloth, price 12*s.*

CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

Number 45, price 3*d.*, and Part 11, price 1*s.*

THE WANDERING JEW.

By M. EUGENE SUE, Author of "The Mysteries of Paris."

The First Volume is now completed, price 9*s.* in cloth boards.

CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

Number 5, price 6*d.*, containing Four Plates,

ILLUSTRATIONS TO THE WANDERING JEW.

Drawn by the first Artists in Paris, and executed on Wood by the most Eminent English Engravers, under the superintendence of Mr. CHARLES HEATH.

CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Cottier Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s.*

London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

THE HORTICULTURAL MAGAZINE, PART III.

Price 1*s.*, contains—Practical Gardening for March—The Flowers and Plants of Scripture—Description of 49 New Orchidaceæ Plants and 15 Hardy Evergreens—An important Paper on Florists' Flowers—the Tulip, the Double Sweet William, the Cedrus Deodara, the Achimenes—The 6 best Hardy Shrubs—Landscape Gardening—The Vine—Small Gardens—New Flowers—Horticultural Notes, &c.

THOMAS HOULSTON, 154, Strand, and all Booksellers.

NEW WORK BY MRS. LOUDON.

This month will be published, fcap. 8vo, with an Engraving on Steel, and Illustrations on Wood,

THE LADY'S COUNTRY COMPANION;

OR, HOW TO ENJOY A COUNTRY LIFE RATIONALLY.

By Mrs. LOUDON, Author of "Gardening for Ladies," &c.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.

Shortly will be published, in one vol. 8vo, with a MEMOIR of Mr. LOUDON, by Mrs. LOUDON, and a Portrait,

SELF INSTRUCTION FOR YOUNG GARDENERS, FORESTERS, BAILIFFS, LAND STEWARDS, AND FARMERS;

In Arithmetic, Book-keeping, Geometry, Mensuration, Practical Trigonometry, Mechanics, Land Surveying, Levelling, Planning and Mapping, Architectural Drawing, and Isometrical Projection and Perspective; with Examples, showing their applications to Horticultural and Agricultural Purposes. By the late J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S., H.S., &c.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

HOT-WATER APPARATUS FOR HEATING HORTICULTURAL BUILDINGS, DWELLING-HOUSES, CHURCHES, and MANUFACTORIES, upon improved principles, and at very moderate charges, erected by DANIEL and EDWARD BAILEY, 272, HOLBORN.

D. and E. BAILEY having devoted much time to the consideration of this subject, and had much experience in the erection of apparatus for the above-mentioned purposes, have, by improvements suggested in their practice, rendered their mode of heating not only very efficient, but very simple, and have combined durability in the apparatus with economy in the charge. They have erected apparatus in England, Scotland, and Ireland, for many noblemen and gentlemen, and have had the honour to be employed by the Horticultural Society of London, in executing the works of their splendid Conservatory, lately erected at Chiswick.

D. and E. BAILEY also construct in metal all descriptions of Horticultural Buildings and Sashes, and invite noblemen, gentlemen, and the public to an inspection of their various drawings and models, at 272, Holborn, where they have the opportunity of exhibiting, amongst other metal works, an extremely complete and convenient kitchen apparatus, or range, adapted for the continued supply of hot water, and an arrangement of the oven more complete than has hitherto been brought before the public.

D. and E. BAILEY were the first to introduce metallic curvilinear houses to horticulturists, and can refer to the Conservatory attached to the Pantheon as one of their works, besides many others in this country and on the Continent.

D. and E. BAILEY have prepared a quantity of the Galvanic Plant Protectors, which are now ready for immediate delivery; they beg to introduce to public notice a new Trough Pipe, for Orchidaceous or other Houses where vapour is constantly, or at intervals required, and which may be seen at their Manufactory.

STEPHENSON AND CO., 61, Gracechurch-street, London, and 17, New Park-street, Southwark, Inventors and Manufacturers of the Improved CONICAL and DOUBLE CYLINDRICAL BOILERS, respectfully solicit the attention of scientific Horticulturists to their much approved method of applying the Tank system to Pineries, Propagating Houses, &c. by which atmospheric heat as well as bottom-heat is secured to any required degree without the aid of pipes or flues. S. & Co. have also to state that at the request of numerous friends they are now making their Boilers of Iron as well as Copper, by which the cost is reduced. These Boilers, which are now so well known, scarcely require description, but to those who have not seen them in operation, prospectuses will be forwarded as well as reference of the highest authority; or they may be seen at most of the Nobility's seats and principal Nurseries throughout the kingdom.

S. & Co. beg to inform the Trade that at their Manufactory in New Park-street, every article required for the construction of Horticultural Buildings, as well as for heating them, may be obtained upon the most advantageous terms.

Conservatories, &c., of Iron or Wood, erected upon the most ornamental designs. Balconies, Palisading, Field and Garden Fences, Wire Work, &c. &c.

WIRE-WORK, HOT-WATER APPARATUS, GREEN-HOUSES, &c.

ST. THOMAS BAKER, MANOR-HOUSE, MANOR PLACE, KING'S-ROAD, CHELSEA, Manufacturer of INVISIBLE WIRE-FENCE, to resist Grazing Stock, and rendered Rabbit-proof. WIRE-WORK in Trainers, Arches for Walks, Bordering, Flower Stands, Pheasantries, &c. HORTICULTURAL BUILDINGS, Green and Hothouses, Conservatories, &c. The same heated by HOT-WATER APPARATUS, on improved and economical principles.

Parties waited on in Town or Country, and Drawings and Estimates free. Work for the Trade as usual.

Ward's Cases, or Domestic Greenhouses.

POTTER'S GUANO.
REDUCTION IN PRICE.

THIS MANURE, which has stood the test of three seasons, and been shown to be superior to the Foreign Guano, is now offered at a greatly Reduced Price.

Sold by all dealers in Manures.

POTTER'S LIQUID GUANO, FOR FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES.

Recommended by Dr. LINDLEY and others. Sold by all respectable Seedsmen and Chemists, at 1*s.* 9*d.* per Quart Bottle, enough to make 60 to 80 gallons of Liquid Manure.

CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for POTTER'S MANURES, as there are Imitations.

PHOSPHATE OF LIME, 6*s.* 6*d.* per cwt.; SULPHATE OF LIME, (Gypsum) per ton, 25*s.* in quantity.

Manufactory, 28, Upper Fore-street, Lambeth.

THE URATE of the LONDON MANURE COMPANY. Four Guineas per Ton. Six cwt. per acre.

The above Manure having been used for the last four years, in all parts of the country, with the greatest success, is most confidently recommended to the notice of Farmers. It will be found most valuable for Spring Wheat, Oats, Barley, Tares, Turnips, Carrots, and Potatoes, either put in with the seed, or sown broadcast; it not only benefits the crop to which it is first used, but extends its fertilising properties to succeeding years. Being prepared with the greatest care, "The Urate" (if ordered direct from the Company, or through their appointed agents in the country) may always be depended on, thereby avoiding those serious disappointments to which the Farmer is liable from the uncertainty of procuring Guano and other Manures in an unadulterated state. Testimonials and particulars forwarded on application.

The Company also supply Peruvian and African Guano, Superphosphate of Lime, and every artificial Manure, of the most genuine quality, and on the best terms, for cash.

40, New Bridge-street. EDWARD PURSER, Secretary.

GUANO (GENUINE PERUVIAN & BOLIVIAN, ON SALE, BY THE ONLY LEGAL IMPORTERS, ANTONY GIBBS AND SONS, LONDON;
WM. J. MYERS AND CO., LIVERPOOL;

And by their Agents,
COTESWORTH, POWELL, AND PRYOR, LONDON;
GIBBS, BRIGHT, & CO., LIVERPOOL and BRISTOL.

47, Lime-street, Mar. 1.

NOTICE.—GUANO.—It having come to the knowledge of the undersigned that on various occasions this article has been offered for sale under the name of, and purporting to be, either PERUVIAN or BOLIVIAN, without any title to be so called, they deem it necessary, as well for the protection of the British Public, as in defence of the interests of the Governments they respectively represent, to give notice, that NO PERUVIAN or BOLIVIAN GUANO can be IMPORTED, or authenticated as such, by any other than the ONLY AGENTS in this Country appointed for its Sale, viz.:—

Messrs. ANTONY GIBBS and SONS, London,
Messrs. WM. JOS. MYERS and Co., Liverpool.
HENRY KENDALL, Consul for Peru.
ANTONIO ACOSTA, Consul-general de Bolivia.

London, Mar. 1.

GUANO.—For Public Sale, by Wm. KIRKMANN & Co. at No. 2, St. Dunstan's Hill, Tower-street, on MONDAY, Mar. 3, at ½ past 2 o'clock precisely, the following Goods, viz.;—about 260 Tons ICHABOE GUANO. Analysis by Mr. E. F. Teschemacher. 100 parts contain 8 parts of Ammonia combined with Phosphoric, Carbonic, Oxalic, Muriatic, and Humic Acids, forming—27 parts of Salts of Ammonia, 9½ of Animal organic matter, 9 of Muriate and Sulphate of Potash and Soda, 27½ of Phosphate of Lime and Phosphate of Magnesia, and Oxalate of Lime, ½ of Sand, 26½ of Water—100.

ENGLAND INDEPENDENT OF ICHABOE FOR GUANO.

BRAIN'S GUANO.—This being the third year of its introduction to the Agricultural world, it has been proved on almost every description of crop and soil, by practical men, to be superior to the imported, as it can always be depended on, being of uniform strength and composition, founded on the analysis of the best Peruvian, without its impurities.

TESTIMONIAL.

Extract of a Letter received from J. W. KELSEY, Esq., Hope Farm, near Folkstone, Kent, Oct. 17th, 1844.

SIR,—Your Guano has turned out well, quite answering my utmost expectation; it has made my Turnips best at the poorest part of the field, being the spot where I employed it. I will thank you to send me the price of your Bone Powder, and remain, yours respectfully, J. W. KELSEY.

The price 9*l.* per ton, including sacks, wharfage, delivery to the railway, and when the distance does not exceed 10 miles from London, delivered free. Also, BRAIN'S HIGHLY-CONCENTRATED LIQUID GUANO, for Flowers, Plants, Shrubs, Grass Lands, &c., 1*s.* 9*d.* per quart bottle, which, added to 80 gallons of water, will make a most powerful Liquid Manure. To be had of all respectable Florists, Seedsmen, and Chemists.

GENUINE CRUSHED BONE. 1*l.* per quarter, including sacks; warranted to stand the most rigorous analysis.

Gypsum (Sulphate of Lime 23*s.* per ton, in quantities not less than 3 tons, warranted pure.

Steam Mills, Thomas-st., Stamford-st., Blackfriars, London.

CHEAP AND DURABLE ROOFING,
AND THE BEST RESISTER OF FROST FOR GARDEN USES.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT

TO GARDENERS, NURSERYMEN, AND OTHERS.

F. M'NEILL & CO., of Lamb's Buildings, Bunhill-row, London, Manufacturers and only Patentees of IMPROVED PATENT ASPHALTED FELT, for Roofing Houses, Sheds, Verandahs, &c., and particularly for COVERING GARDEN FRAMES, TO PROTECT PLANTS AGAINST THE EFFECTS OF THE FROST, beg to call the attention of Gardeners and others to their superior article, which has been exhibited at the Great Agricultural Shows of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and obtained the Prize for being the best and cheapest article for roofing, &c. It has been tested in the gardens of several noblemen and gentlemen in the neighbourhood of London, and in different parts of the country, to whom reference can be made. This Felt is composed of the strongest and most durable materials, and is saturated with the BEST OF ASPHALTE OR BITUMEN, (THE SAME AS SELECTED AND USED BY SIR ISAMBERT BRUNEL FOR THE THAMES TUNNEL, BEING FOUND THE MOST ELASTIC AND EFFECTIVE RESISTER OF WET.) NO OTHER FELT HAS THIS ASPHALTE BUT F. M'NEILL & CO.'s, and which renders it impervious to rain, snow, and frost, and a non-conductor of heat and sound. Its advantages are Lightness, Warmth, Durability, and Economy.—Price ONLY ONE PENNY PER SQUARE FOOT.

Samples, with directions for laying on, and testimonials and references of seven years' experience as to its merits, sent free to any part of the town or country.

PATENT FELT MANUFACTORY (THE ONLY FACTORY IN GREAT BRITAIN WHERE THE ABOVE DESCRIPTION OF ROOFING IS MADE), LAMB'S BUILDINGS, BUNHILL-ROW, LONDON.

A Specimen Roof and Frame to be seen at the Factory, and a Discount allowed to the Trade.

News of the Week.

THE adjourned debate on Mr. Duncombe's motion respecting the opening of letters at the Post-office terminated on Friday in favour of Ministers. The opinions of both sides of the House appeared to be divided on the propriety of re-opening the whole question, lest such a course should be considered a disavowal of the Secret Committee of last Session, but a strong feeling prevailed that some inquiry was necessary to vindicate Mr. Duncombe from the imputations cast upon him, and left unexplained by Ministers. To meet this feeling Lord Howick moved an amendment for the appointment of a committee to inquire into Mr. Duncombe's case. After a long discussion, Mr. Duncombe consented to yield to the opinions of his friends, and withdrew his original motion. Lord Howick's amendment was then put as a substantive motion, and was negatived on a division by 240 to 145. Mr. Duncombe, however, announced that he should take further steps to obtain satisfaction, and gave notice of a motion for calling the officers of the Post-office to the bar of the House to give information respecting the authority upon which his letters had been opened. On Monday, the Sugar Duties were brought under discussion by an amendment of Mr. Milner Gibson in favour of an equalisation of the duty on foreign and colonial sugar. The discussion involved, as a matter of course, the general question of protective duties, and after an animated debate the amendment was negatived by 211 to 84. On Wednesday, Lord John Russell brought forward his amendment on the Government propositions respecting sugar, declaring that the distinction which they profess to keep up between free-labour and slave-labour sugar is impracticable and illusory, and so injurious to the revenue as to render the removal of the Income-tax, at the end of three years, extremely improbable. Sir R. Peel opposed the amendment, on the ground that the admission of sugar from Brazil and Cuba would materially aggravate the slave-trade, and be considered a practical confession that the emancipation of our slaves had been a failure. On a division, Lord J. Russell's amendment was negatived by 236 to 142. On Tuesday, Sir J. Graham brought forward his new Bill for the reform of the Medical Profession. In this important measure some of the leading features of his former Bill are retained, but many of the provisions which have excited such hostility among medical men in all parts of the kingdom, are altogether abandoned. For the details of the Bill we must refer to our Parliamentary Report, from which it will be seen that Mr. Wakley, the representative of the General Practitioners in the House, expressed his satisfaction with the measure, and his belief that the modifications it had undergone would be favourably received by the profession at large. On Thursday the House was occupied with a discussion on the Game Laws, on Mr. Bright's motion for a committee to inquire into their operation. Sir J. Graham, on the part of Government, consented to the appointment of the committee, promising that every assistance which the Government could give would be readily afforded to carry out the inquiry in the fullest and most satisfactory manner. On the same day, in the House of Lords, the Bishop of Exeter gave an explanation of the recent disturbances in his diocese on the subject of the Rubric; and Lord Aberdeen assured the House, in the most solemn and distinct manner, that he was entirely innocent of all knowledge of the late expedition from Corfu, that he had used extreme caution in transmitting to the Austrian Government the intelligence derived from the inspection of Mr. Mazzini's letters, and not a single person had suffered in consequence of the information thus supplied.

The great debate on the Secret Service Bill, in the French Chamber, has terminated in favour of the Cabinet by a majority of 24. This majority, though satisfactory for the moment, is not strong enough to carry on the Government for any lengthened period, and as no other Cabinet can hope to be more successful with the present Chambers, it is expected that a dissolution will take place at the close of the Session.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family continue at Buckingham Palace, and have taken their usual airings during the week. On Saturday the Queen and Prince honoured the Haymarket Theatre, and on Monday the French Plays with their presence. On Tuesday Prince Albert presided at a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission. On Wednesday the Queen held a Court for the reception of H.R.H. the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden, who has arrived in this country on a visit to the Duke of Hamilton. The Countess of Dunmore has succeeded the Countess of Mount-Edgcumbe, as Lady in Waiting. The Earl of Morton has succeeded the Marquis of Ormonde as Lord in Waiting; and Mr. Ormsby Gore has succeeded Capt. Meynell, R.N., as Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

Parliamentary Movements.—The Hon. W. B. Baring has been re-elected member for Thetford; Mr. Tower has been elected for Buckinghamshire; Mr. Carew for East Cornwall, and Mr. R. A. Fitzgerald for Tipperary, without opposition. Mr. Deedes, of Sandling Park, is the candidate for East Kent, in the room of Sir E. Knatchbull, and Mr. R. B. Sheridan has come forward for Shaftesbury, in the room of Lord Effingham.

Death of the Earl of Mornington.—After a long illness Lord Mornington, brother of the Duke of Wellington and Lord Cowley, expired on Saturday, at his house in Grosvenor-square. His lordship, who perhaps was better known as Lord Maryborough, was born 20th May, 1763, and was consequently in his 82d year. In 1815, under the Earl of Liverpool's administration, he took office as Master of the Mint; and when the Duke of Wellington, in 1828, was First Lord of the Treasury, his lordship was Master of the Buck-hounds. He again took office under Sir R. Peel's administration, in 1834-5, when he accepted the office of Postmaster-General. Since that period the noble lord has abstained from taking any active share in politics. His lordship is succeeded in his title and estates by his only son, Wm. Pole Tylney Long Wellesley, Viscount Wellesley, born 1788. His lordship had also three daughters; the late Lady Bagot, Lady Fitzroy Somerset, and the Countess of Westmeath.

Death of the Rev. Sydney Smith.—We regret to announce the death of the Rev. Sydney Smith, who, after an illness of some weeks' duration, which ended in an entire prostration of strength, expired at his residence in Green-street, on Saturday, at the age of 74. Mr. Sydney Smith's career as the first editor of the Edinburgh Review, his celebrated "Peter Plimley's Letters," and his witty sayings, are well known wherever the English language is spoken or understood. Few men occupied for so many years a larger share of public attention, and his loss will be felt not only by literary circles, but by the Whig party, to which he had rendered important services. Mr. Sydney Smith's letters on American repudiation, and on the system of locking-in, as practised a few years since on some of our railways, must be familiar to every one, as recent instances of that power of humorous attack for which he was remarkable. His wit indeed was inexhaustible, and, combined with a keen perception of the ludicrous it rendered him a formidable foe on subjects where his talents could be called forth. By his death a canonry in St. Paul's becomes vacant.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The debate on the secret service funds was brought to a close on Friday evening, and the result turns out to be, as was previously expected, an increased but still small majority in favour of the Ministry. The debate commenced on Friday with a dull speech from M. Joly, to which even the Opposition gave a reluctant hearing. M. Liadières, Aide-de-Camp to Louis-Philippe, attracted somewhat more notice, by a provoking, but by no means happy, defence of the Administration. He began by animadverting, in severe terms, on the state in which M. Thiers left France when the Ministry of the 1st of March dissolved, and, whilst enumerating their blunders, committed that of reminding the Chamber that "riots raged in the streets of Paris, and the 'Marseillaise' was sung at the theatres." A Deputy immediately exclaimed, "Remember 1830!" and an explosion of laughter was kindled when M. Thiers sarcastically observed, "The crown was given and taken to the song of the 'Marseillaise.'" The general discussion was then closed, and M. Boudet brought forward an amendment, the object of which was to reduce the amount of the secret service funds by 25,000 francs. In the few words which he said in support of his amendment, M. Boudet acknowledged that his object was to ascertain distinctly the feelings of the Chamber in respect to the Ministry. Hitherto the Ministry were in a doubtful position, neither exactly in power nor out of it. He wished that state of affairs to be ended, and he hoped his amendment would be adopted. M. d'Haussonville opposed the amendment, but the Chamber became so impatient to hear some of the leaders of either party that they would not listen to him. M. Billault then rose, and said the question they had to examine was, not whether any new Cabinet that might be formed would have the confidence of the Chamber, but whether the present Cabinet had it. He then examined the past votes of the Chamber since the commencement of the session, to show that the Ministry had not a sufficient majority to carry on the administration, especially in respect to its foreign policy. He went into an examination of the negotiations relating to the right of search, to show that the Ministry had deceived the Chambers, in saying that negotiations were now going on for the abolition of the treaties of 1831 and 1833, during the years 1843 and 1844; while the documents now before the Chamber showed that it was only on the eve of the parliamentary session that they now commenced, and they were then commenced, not from any real wish or intention to abolish the right of search, but for fear of the Chamber. He therefore contended that the Ministry acted without either fairness or frankness in the question, and that as it was a question which was forced upon the Government as much by the Conservatives as the Opposition, it was the interest of the Conservatives themselves to have a change in the Government, in order that they might see their own principles carried out. He denied that the Ministry were entitled to any credit for the internal prosperity of the country. What had they done to produce it? What treaties of commerce had they made? What outlets for industry had they opened? What had they done for agriculture or for commerce? Nothing. Without influence or moral weight, everything attempted by the Government vanished before other projects, or disappeared in the ballot-box. The fate of the dotation question and other questions, which want of courage only prevented the Government from bringing forward, showed its weakness. A weak Government was always an evil to a country, and he wished such a state of things to be brought to an end.—M. Guizot then rose, and said he did not wish to prolong the debate, and he would therefore come at once to the point. He denied that the negotiations respecting the abolition of the right of search were suspended till the commencement of the session, or that the absence of official despatches upon the subject was any proof that the negotiations had not been begun. Despatches were the end, not the commencement of negotiations, which were carried on in private correspondence and conversations, and only put in the shape of official despatches when the Governments came to an understanding as to what was to be done. He would not be doing his duty were he to publish the details of all his conversations, difficulties, or embarrassments. The commencement of the year 1844 was not a good time to push the negotiations, because of the Morocco and Tahiti affairs, but the visit to Windsor was a capital opportunity, of which it would have been unpardonable not to have profited, and he accordingly did so; but unhappily the English Cabinet immediately afterwards dispersed to their country seats, and it was impossible for some time to go on with the negotiations, because a Cabinet Council could not be got together. This statement created a great deal of hilarity on the left, which was renewed when M. Guizot added, that on the very first day that a Cabinet Council could be got together, the 9th January, the needful was done. He then said, that now two Commissioners were appointed who would examine whether there were any means of getting rid of the Right of Search, and he hoped they would succeed. He then took a rapid view of the general policy of the Government, and finished by declaring that the Ministry were willing to take the result of the vote as conclusive of the confidence or want of confidence in the Chamber.—M. Odillon Barrot then said a few words, and declared that he and his friends would support any motion which might bring about a change of Ministry, not because the new Ministry would be exactly what they could wish, but because a change would be an approach to their opinions—a small profit which they were willing to accept as an instalment of the whole account.—The division was called for, and the Opposition having demanded the ballot, in order that the country might see exactly what the majority was, the ballot was immediately taken, when there was a majority of 24 for Ministers in a house of 434 members. The amendment was therefore rejected, and the Chamber then divided on the whole Bill, which was carried by a large majority. There can be no doubt that this division is conclusive as to the continuance of the Ministry in power during the remainder of the present session. The majority is not a large one, but it is larger than that on the Pritchard indemnity. It is curious that in the division on the Pritchard affair the number of the Opposition voters was exactly the same as in this division (205), while the Ministerial party has gained a few votes from among the absentees. It is impossible that with so strongly organised an Opposition the Ministry can continue to go on long with the present Chamber. It is, therefore, nearly certain that in October there will be a dissolution, if the Ministry survive the session, and that the general election will come on in November. "M. Villemain," says the Revue de Paris, "has resumed his functions of Perpetual Secretary of the French Academy. The hon. member, in a short and lucid address, thanked his colleagues for the very marked sympathy which they had evinced for him on a late painful occasion, which fortunately was now only a reminiscence." The National of Friday contains the following observations upon a portion of the financial speech of Sir Robert Peel:—"As we had anticipated, the civil list (of France) has been much offended at that portion of Sir Robert Peel's speech in which the honourable baronet says, that he will not require one shilling increase in the income of his Sovereign, although the expenses of her household have been increased proportionably with her Royal family. The Queen of England has given birth to four or five children, and far from making them serve for a pretext for a dotation, the First Lord of the Treasury announces that Her Majesty will continue to be satisfied with her present income. Such an example of moderation and disinterestedness given by the Crown of England—that Crown which shines with such splendour, and serves, as is well known, as a model for all others—such an example was well calculated to annoy persons who cannot consent to abandon their unfortunate plan of demanding a dotation for the Duke de Nemours."—The Bishop of Chartres has published a letter to the Minister of Justice and Public Worship, on the subject of the pastoral letter of Cardinal de Bonald, Archbishop of Lyons. The Bishop declares that he participates in the sentiments of the Cardinal.—The arrest of the two Englishmen, Parker and Williams, who were supposed to have been changing some notes stolen from Messrs. Rogers's bank, is likely to lead to important disclosures. It has been already ascertained that two of the Bank of England notes which they had exchanged in Paris formed part of two robberies which took place in Manchester last year, viz., one on the 22d June of 345*l.*; the other on the 20th September of 400*l.* Both these robberies were committed in the same way, the money being abstracted from the coat-pockets of persons on their leaving the bank. Two other notes changed by the prisoners were stolen in April last from a house at Bethnal-green. No clue had been previously obtained to the disposal of this property, although the actual perpetrator of the robbery was discovered and transported for 15 years.

SPAIN.—The Madrid Journals of the 18th ult. state that the Senate had just adjourned, after passing the Bill for the repression of the slave-trade, and for securing to the Nuns the enjoyment of their pensions. On the 19th the Minister of Finance brought in the Bill for restoring to the clergy their unsold property. The preamble to the Bill is published in the journals. It declares that the restitution of the clergy's unsold property is a measure of strict justice and sound policy, and that the Government will most scrupulously respect the rights of the holders of such part of the Church property as has been sold.

PORTUGAL.—Accounts from Lisbon state that on the night of the 17th a salute from the Castle of St. George, together with the firing of rockets and ringing of bells, announced to the inhabitants of Lisbon the accouchement of the Queen. The intelligence of this event was rendered more welcome from the varying reports which had been in circulation during the week respecting the health of her Majesty. The birth of a Princess has quieted the anxiety which prevailed, and the official bulletin of the 18th is of the most satisfactory nature.—The untoward events in Madrid of a recent date, involving the Ministerial Deputy Quintanella in a charge of robbery, has been followed in Lisbon by an occurrence similarly disagreeable. A Ministerial Deputy was convicted in the tribunal of the First Instance of forgery and attempted fraud. The Ministerial party took the case into their own charge, absolved their colleague, and prohibited the judicial tribunals to proceed further against the accused member.—The Viscount Sa had brought forward an Address to the Crown, on the subject of slave-trading practices in the province of Angola, revealing a system of barbarity carried on under the eyes of the Portuguese authorities.

SWITZERLAND.—The Grand Council of Lausanne, after discussing in two long sittings the nature of the instructions to be given to the deputies to be sent to the Extraordinary Diet, decided last week, by a small majority, against those who wished at once to expel the Jesuits. A popular commotion was the consequence, and a signal fire from a neighbouring hill soon brought together the people from all parts of the country. The Government resolved upon calling together the militia, notwithstanding the protest of the minority. The drums immediately beat to arms, but that only hastened the gathering of the people. The militia refused to turn out, and finding that it had lost all power, it ultimately abdicated its functions. By a letter from Geneva, of the 8th, we learn that the Government of that canton, though Protestant, and therefore opposed to the encroachments of the Jesuits, has refused to concur with the Radical party in illegal means for compelling the canton of Lucerne to revoke its decisions. Geneva was tranquil at the date of this letter. The Council of State had also received an official letter from Zurich, saying that they have obtained from the cantons of Berne, Argovie, &c., the promise that the volunteers shall not enter Lucerne, or, to speak more correctly, that all operations on their part shall be suspended until the Diet have come to a decision. This looks like a return of legal order; at all events, time is gained. The representatives of England, France, and Austria, have made strong representations to the President of the Confederation as to the necessity of putting a speedy end to the increasing disorders in the republic, and the President has intimated his full concurrence in the views of the three powers. Lucerne, however, has taken measures to resist. On the night of the 17th, the Government of that canton learnt, that on the news being received of the revolution in the Canton de Vaud, the leaders of the Free Corps met at Herzogenbushzee, and that they resolved to march upon Lucerne. On the 6th, on the news being received of the disturbances at Lausanne, the Government called together a large body of troops at Lucerne and at Sursee, when a proclamation was read to them, announcing that Gen. Sonnenberg had arrived from Naples, and taken the command of the Catholic forces. Delegates of the cantons of Uri, Schwytz, Unterwalden, and Zug, had also met in a Council of War at Lucerne, and engaged to place their contingents at the disposal of that canton. Friburg was also arming, and in Bale country the utmost agitation prevailed. According to the local papers, Lucerne can oppose 26,000 men to its aggressors.

SWEDEN AND DENMARK.—A telegraphic despatch has been received through France, stating that the affairs of Sweden and Denmark with Morocco have been arranged by the mediation of France and Great Britain. The Emperor has renounced the tribute, and the Danish and Swedish Consuls returned to Tangiers on the 14th.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The first attempt to establish an Indian mail twice a month is now fairly in operation. The news by the first of the intermediate mails from Calcutta arrived this week with intelligence only eight days later than that brought by the usual conveyance, which reached London at the beginning of the month. The mail was brought to Suez by the Hindostan, on the 11th ult., having left Calcutta on the 8th, Madras on the 13th, Ceylon on the 18th, and Aden on the 28th Jan. The intelligence by this conveyance may be stated in a few words. Another revolution had taken place in Lahore. It appears that Heera Singh, getting disgusted with affairs in Lahore, left that city with a few followers, but was made prisoner shortly after, and conveyed back. One account mentions his death; but another merely says that he has been sent to prison. The mother of the Maharajah, therefore, is now sole ruler at Lahore; and although this revolution has caused some talk in India, it is not likely to result in anything serious. A revolution had taken place also in Nepaul, but from the circumstances it is generally believed that it was a got-up affair. The Rajah had promised to abdicate in favour of his son. When the time came he refused, on which the son, assisted by some chiefs, deposed him. The new Rajah is only 17 years old, and an idiot. The British Government would be compelled to interfere. The war, however, was expected to be one of diplomacy rather than of arms.—The news from Scinde is still unfavourable. The Highlanders at Sukkur were still dying off. Upwards of 200 men, women, and children had perished since their arrival. The survivors were to be removed immediately.—The serious disturbance at Hong-Kong in consequence of the registration decree issued by Government, had caused great dissatisfaction to the Chinese traders as well as the Europeans, in consequence of an article in the decree obliging all Chinese vessels to report themselves immediately, and to register their passengers within twenty-four hours. The consequence of this was, that while Macao was crowded with junks, few or none had come to Hong-Kong. Most of the Chinese who left the island had, however, returned. The report that the Emperor had abdicated in favour of a near relation is totally without confirmation.—The supercession of Colonel Outram is altogether denied by the Delhi Gazette of the 24th ult., which states that the act was voluntary, Col. Outram having declined the office of permanent agent of the Kolapore country. The court-martial on Colonel Moseley had occasioned a good deal of discussion in the press. One or two papers contend that the sentence was most severe, and others that it could not have been otherwise, as he actually denied the existence of the mutiny in the first instance. A subscription is talked of by his friends. The non-arrival of the ships Runnymede and Briton, the former from London with recruits, and the latter from Sydney with a detachment of H.M.'s 80th Regiment, and 9 officers, together with all the mess plate, had caused great uneasiness, and great fears were entertained for their safety. The Company's steamer Enterprise had been sent in search of them. Some of the ex-Ameers of Scinde proceeded by the Hindostan to Europe. Prince Waldemar of Prussia, had reached Calcutta a few days before the departure of the mail. The Precursor steam-ship, from London, arrived at Calcutta on the 25th December. Her average speed throughout the voyage from Southampton was 8½ knots an hour.

UNITED STATES.—By the ship Patrick Henry, we have accounts from New York to the 8th ult. The intelligence is important, including the passing by the House of Representatives of the Bill extending the authority of the United States over the territory of the Oregon, and the gratifying announcement that Pennsylvania has paid the February interest on her debt. The proceedings in the House of Representatives, in connection with the Oregon occupation, were brought to a close on the 3d ult., when the Bill passed by 140 to 54. It was introduced into the Senate on the following day, read twice, and referred to a special committee; and it was said there was no chance whatever of the Senate agreeing to any measure hostile to Great Britain. The Texas annexation scheme passed by the House was reported against by the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate on the 4th. The committee were, with but one exception, unanimous, which also recommended that the several propositions of the Senate, as well as the resolutions of state legislatures and petitions, be laid on the table. As stated above, Pennsylvania has paid the interest on her debt; the Bill passed both branches of the Legislature by a unanimous vote in each, on the 1st ult. The payment took place on the 3d, and was signalised by the firing of cannon. Pennsylvanian stock has risen considerably. The Governor has signed the Bill suspending the payment of the principal of domestic creditors' certificates, which places above 100,000 dollars more to the fund to pay the interest on the funded debt. —Maryland stocks are said to be improving, owing, no doubt, to the increased confidence of capitalists, that some decisive and favourable action will take place in the Legislature in regard to the interest on the State debt. —The accounts from Mexico state that Santa Anna, after having received several repulses before Puebla, had made his submission to the new Government.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday.—Lord CAMPBELL laid on the table a Bill for the abolition of deodands.—The LORD CHANCELLOR concurred in describing the present system as being full of absurdities. There were some technical difficulties, such as the consent of the Crown, and compensation to those to whom the deodands, by consent of the Crown, were paid. But he did not oppose the introduction of the Bill.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE laid on the table the reports of the Railway Board on the Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Berwick and the Manchester and Leeds lines.—Earl FITZWILLIAM remarked, that if the labours of the Railway Board were not soon concluded, their advice would come after Parliament had decided. He expressed his opinion that the Board had been very hardly dealt with by the public, and in the House of Commons. With regard to the recommendations of the Railway Board, the distinction which he should be inclined to take would be this?—He should say that whenever the Railway Board reported against a measure, that decision ought to be considered conclusive against it; but he did not think that the opinion of the Board in favour of the measure should be considered conclusive; for in the one case the only effect would be to postpone the measure, and the parties might again come to Parliament. Whilst approving, however, of the conduct of the Railway Board, he took exception to its constitution, and complained that the members of the Committee were not Privy Counsellors.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE could not say when the labours of the Committee were likely to terminate. He knew that he had no right to complain of the tone which had been taken with regard to the committee of the Board of Trade. No one in Parliament, especially no one in office, had a right to complain of anything; but certainly the Committee had been dragged forward as culprits, and as culprits condemned. The observations of his noble friend were therefore doubly pleasing, from their novelty.

Tuesday.—Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that, on Thursday week, he should introduce his Bill, transferring the jurisdiction in divorce a mensâ et thoro, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. A short conversation took place touching Lord Brougham's petition against the London Commissioners of Bankrupts, which the LORD CHANCELLOR thought had better not be pressed further for the present.

Thursday.—Lord FORTESCUE, in presenting certain petitions from the diocese of Exeter, praying a revision of the Rubric, went into a narrative of the events which have lately attracted so much attention to that part of the kingdom, and described the universal irritation of feeling which the commands of the Bishop had produced among the people. Their conviction was, that the observances enjoined had a tendency to produce an approximation to the Church of Rome; and so strong was this impression, that even where the practices objected to were of long standing, the clergy had been compelled to abandon them. The Bishop, in making the orders which had provoked this controversy, had professed to be acting in the spirit and according to the letter of the Rubrics; and attention being thus directed to them, it had been discovered that the laxity in their administration was not confined to the clergy, but that even by the Bishops, as in the ceremony of confirmation, they were not strictly carried out. Much that they enjoined had, in fact, fallen into disuse; but there was no power in the Church to alter or amend them; the penalties for neglecting fully to execute them were extremely severe, and the evil of reviving those parts which had been obsolete had been already amply demonstrated. On these grounds he argued that it was the duty of Parliament, by a distinct legislative enactment, for which there was ample precedent, to remove these difficulties, and to declare how much of the Rubrics is really binding.—The BISHOP of EXETER, although declining, as a spiritual lord, to enter into any defence of his conduct, proceeded to explain at very considerable length the motives on which he had acted, and attributed his orders for the rigid observance of the Rubric to the necessity for establishing uniformity in his diocese. He found a diversity of practice, and had prescribed a change only to those who were acting in contravention of the liturgy. He referred to the proceedings at South Molton and at Exeter; and contended that the statute of Henry VIII. conferred upon the Crown no spiritual power or jurisdiction, but only a temporal authority, which had been usurped by the Pope, and was then rightfully restored to the Sovereign. He vindicated to the clergy the possession of all purely spiritual supremacy, and denied therefore the right of the Crown to impose upon them any change of the Rubrics. He then proceeded to analyse the petitions which Lord Fortescue had presented, explaining his own conduct in reference to them, and commenting unfavourably upon them as he went along; and concluded by contesting the right of Parliament to interfere in a matter jurisdiction upon which rested exclusively with the Church, and conjuring their Lordships by the unhappy result of their ancestors' experiment in 1641 not to constitute themselves a committee of religion.—Lord BROUGHAM agreed in every point with the Bishop of Exeter, except in so far as the power of Parliament was concerned. He held that power to be paramount in everything; but he anxiously deprecated its interference in the controversy by which the Church is divided. He thought the wisest course was, whether what had fallen into desuetude were trifling or important, not to revive any usage which would occasion scandal and dissension.—The BISHOP of NORWICH rejoiced that the laity were alive to what was going forward, and trusted that the spirit which had induced 3000 persons in one town, in a temperate and calm manner to bring these practices under the notice of their Lordships, would animate England throughout; for sure he was that a return to any of the old customs and rubrical forms, which had fallen into disuse, was utterly impossible in the present state of society. The right rev. prelate had said that they were bound by stringent vows to obey the Rubric. Bound by stringent vows? Why, none of them obeyed the Rubric. They had never obeyed it, because they never could; and if they talked of a stringent vow he did not see what right, in that case, any man had to say, "This part I will order, and that part I will not."—The BISHOP of LONDON protested, in the most solemn manner, against this opinion.—The BISHOP of NORWICH said that the right rev. prelate must have mistaken him; he stated that there were parts of the Rubric which they could obey but did not. That was what he said, and what he repeated; and he thought they had no right to make their choice as to the parts they would obey, if the whole was binding.—The petitions were then ordered to lie upon the table.—Lord BEAUMONT called attention to the attempt of the Bandiera and their companions, in their unfortunate expedition from Corfu to Calabria.—The Earl of ABERDEEN entered into an explanation of the circumstances, as affecting the conduct of the British Government. Representations led them to issue a warrant to open the letters of Mr. Mazzini; but no names or letters were communicated to foreign powers, which either could or did compromise the safety of any person. In fact, Mr. Mazzini had induced his friends to abandon their contemplated enterprise. No information had been communicated respecting the Corfu conspiracy, because the Government had been in entire ignorance of it, and he believed it to be wholly untrue that the Austrian or the Neapolitan Governments had entrapped the parties, by inducing them to undertake their expedition. Expressing his keen sense of the unjust imputations which had been thrown upon him, he said that he only hoped, that when the day should come on which he would have to account for all his actions, that every charge against him would prove as groundless as the present one.—Lord BEAUMONT expressed his satisfaction.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—The adjourned debate on the Post-office was resumed by Mr. COLLETT, who amused the House by reminding Government of the "Running Rein" trial in the Court of Exchequer, when Baron Alderson called for the production of "the horse." The Member for Finsbury, who stuck like an Englishman to his case, and who was still "honest Tom Duncombe," asked them to look, not merely into his "mouth," but into his face.—Mr. R. COLBORNE was willing to support the amendment, and Mr. FERRAND spoke in favour of the original motion.—Mr. STRUTT, as a member of the secret committee, bore testimony to the frank and straightforward manner in which Sir J. Graham had given his evidence before it. The Home Secretary had not acted otherwise than any of his predecessors, and in this particular matter he had been pursued with great harshness and injustice. But looking to the effect produced by it, he was of opinion that the extraordinary power of opening letters, if necessary to be preserved, ought not to be suffered to remain in its present state; he would provide some checks, such as assimilating the proceedings to those in the case of a search warrant.—Mr. COLQUHOUN, Mr. B. COCHRANE, and Lord C. HAMILTON, opposed both the motion and amendment.—Mr. M. MILNES, Mr. BLEWITT, and Mr. WATSON, spoke in favour of the original motion, and the latter entered into a legal argument to prove the illegality of the Secretary of State's warrants.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL argued at considerable length in support of their legality. With respect to the motion and amendment, he said whatever might be the terms in which the amendment of the noble lord was conceived, it would not at all change the position which Mr. Duncombe had assumed at the beginning of the debate; for the motion before the House was a personal and party attack, and the amendment proposed by Lord Howick rendered it ten times more personal.—Lord J. RUSSELL admitted that if the Secretary of State did not possess the power of detaining and opening letters, then to unlearned persons the statutes of Anne and Victoria were a trap. If persons of authority in the law differed in opinion on the question, then the remedy should be to make the law clearer. As far as he could see, the conduct of Sir J. Graham had been similar to that of his predecessors in office, and the power had been used to defeat conspiracies against the public peace. If therefore they contemplated taking away the power, they should well consider what they would leave in its place. Lord Sidmouth considered spies necessary for detecting dangerous designs. He himself regarded spies as dangerous in a free state, and of often being the cause of bringing about the disturbances they pretended to discover. He acted on this principle when he was in the Home Office, and rejected the proposals of a "physical force" Chartist who had come to him with an offer of his services to betray his associates. At this moment he did not believe that spies existed in this country. The melancholy fate of the brothers Bandiera, who, with their 20 companions, had been lured and betrayed by a spy, did not afford us any encouragement to pursue the practice of opening letters on the suggestion of any foreign power. For if, under threats which might never be seriously intended to be realised, we gave information respecting Poles to the Emperor of Russia, of Italians to the Emperor of Austria, or of Spanish exiles to the Queen of Spain, this country would cease to be that happy land of hospitality to strangers which it had hitherto been. Much stress was laid on the fact that the majority of the members of the Secret Committee were political opponents of the Government. He did not think that political opponents were necessarily devoid of candour and impartiality; but if the Government contemplated another inquiry, they might reverse their tactics, and try the experiment of substituting on the committee, in the room of two of their political opponents, the members for Shrewsbury and Knaresborough. He acquitted Sir J. Graham of any improper use of the power, though he thought that blame was to be attached to the Government, on account of the new and unusual course which had been adopted in the case of Mazzini, and which had led to such melancholy results. The allegations of Mr. Duncombe had been left wholly uncertain, and imputations on his character were unexplained; he therefore thought that explanation was due both to him and the public, who would not rest satisfied with the state in which the matter at present remained.—Sir R. PEEL, considering that a false construction had been placed on his words, emphatically declared that he would be taking a most unfair advantage if, in any way, he should leave it to be inferred that he attached participation in criminal proceedings to Mr. Duncombe. When he was so misunderstood, he was referring to the alarming circumstances of 1842 (when in one manufacturing town alone there were 17,000 persons who rose in the morning without food for the day), as a reason why Government was justified in resorting to extraordinary precautions in maintaining the public tranquillity. The member for Shrewsbury on a former evening had taunted him with occasionally playing the part of the "choleric gentleman," and of simulating a warmth he did not feel. Undoubtedly a warmth might be manifested which was not felt; and as undoubtedly a calm and deliberate manner might be the accompaniment of the most acrimonious language. He would be more just to Mr. D'Israeli than he had been to him; his bitterness, at least, was not simulated—it was perfectly sincere, while he professed the most friendly intentions. Mr. D'Israeli had taunted him with his friendship for a gentleman holding an official station, who had been concerned in Despard's plot. That reference was to Mr. Bonham, and the event occurred in 1802. A lapse of 42 years might be admitted as a sufficient time to permit old faults to be consigned to that oblivion which was consistent with true charity. But when he recollected that the plot of Despard contemplated the burning of the bank, the massacre of the people of the metropolis, and the murder of the King on his way to Parliament, he was not sure that even distance of time would induce him to recommend a participator in that plot to a high civil office in the Ordnance department. The imputation, however, was utterly unfounded, as he showed, by reading a letter from Mr. Bonham, in which he stated that, at the period in question, he was only 16 years of age, and living at Bath with an invalid parent, and under the care of a tutor. After having distinctly declared that he had no more connection, directly or indirectly, with Despard or his associates than the right hon. baronet himself, the writer added that he had a half brother, 15 years older than himself, whose misfortune it was to be imprisoned along with Lord Cloncurry, in Ireland, on the charge of being a party to the conspiracy, and he had no doubt that Mr. D'Israeli had supposed him to be the same person. Passing from this to the general question, Sir R. Peel urged that, by voting for the amendment, they would do the Government a gross injustice. In the exercise of the power of opening letters, essential as they considered it to be, they may have possibly fallen into mistakes; but though he had no right to expect general sympathy from the Opposition, this was one of those cases where fair play required from public men an impartial construction of motives and actions. Some change might be required in the mode of exercising the power; but he would not purchase acquittal from censure by any present acquiescence. At all events, he would rather be the party defeated by their injustice, than one of a majority which took advantage of circumstances to triumph over a political opponent.—Mr. D'ISRAELI confessed, that on a former evening he had made a great and grievous error, and he now rose to make a frank and hearty apology for it. He regretted that he had mentioned the circumstance, and no language that he could command could adequately express the pain which he sincerely felt for having hurt Mr. Bonham's feelings. The statement which he had made was quite unpremeditated. A taunting cheer from Sir R. Peel had called to his remembrance a rumour which he had heard, and which he thought would not be very pleasing to the right hon. gentleman who taunted him. It was a weakness and indiscretion of which he was sorry that he had been guilty.—Sir J. HANMER declared his intention of supporting the amendment of Lord Howick, which had been suggested to his own mind as the most fitting course to be pursued even before his lordship had proposed it. He thought that the observations which Sir R. Peel had just offered to the House impugned the independence of Parliament, for they intimated that no difference of opinion could be tolerated in those independent members who upon principle generally supported his administration.—Sir G. GREY perceived symptoms of mutiny against the compulsory principle amongst the usual supporters of Government. He reasserted the right of Mr. Duncombe to his proposed committee of inquiry, in order to vindicate his character, and uphold the character of the House.—Mr. JERVIS considered that Mr. Duncombe was entitled to the same justice as had been rendered to Mr. Bonham. His character should be vindicated; and as it was a breach of privilege to open the letters of a member without a warrant, the House should be satisfied respecting the allegation.—Mr. MUNTZ had not yet recovered from the shock to his feelings produced by the first intelligence of the disgraceful practice. He supported the amendment, not as a censure on the Home Secretary, but to mark his condemnation of the power.—Mr. DUNCOMBE replied. Justice to Sir J. Graham did not require injustice to him. Had they avowed that they had opened his letters, but had found nothing criminating him, he would have censured their conduct, but have forgiven it. But as the matter stood, he was left with a stigma fixed on him. He would hereafter submit a motion, that the officers of the Post-office be called to the bar, in order to prove that his letters had been detained and examined. Seeing that his present motion was not generally approved, he would ask it to be withdrawn, and that Lord Howick's amendment should be substituted for it.—The House then divided, the amendment being put as a substantive motion—For Lord HOWICK's motion for a committee of inquiry into Mr. Duncombe's case, 145; Against it, 240; Majority against it, 95.—Mr. DUNCOMBE then gave notice of a motion for an early day, that the officers of the Post-office be called to the bar, to give information as to the authority on which his letters had been opened.

Monday.—In reply to a question from Lord MAHON, Sir R. PEEL replied that negotiations with Prussia on the subject of international copyright had been renewed, and, in the event of their being brought to a satisfactory conclusion, they might form the basis for the renewal of negotiations with other countries. If the result of the negotiations with Prussia should not be satisfactory, he would have no objection to lay the correspondence before the House.—On the motion for going into committee of ways and means, on the Sugar Duties, Mr. M. GIBSON moved as an amendment, "That no arrangement of the Sugar Duties will be satisfactory and permanent which does not involve an equalisation of duty on foreign and colonial sugar." The hon. member, in support of this abstract proposition, contended that the protective duties did not increase the revenue; that, while they imposed a tax upon the great body of consumers, only a portion of that tax went into the Exchequer—the greater part of it going into the pockets of private persons; that the duties did not benefit imports, nor encourage exports; and that the continuance of them was at variance with the principles laid down by philosophers and political economists, and adopted by the Government. Their sole object was to aid the colonial proprietor, and the plea for them was the impracticable attempt to extinguish a slave-trade which flourished in spite of all our efforts. He called on Government to abandon this injurious system of legislation, and, by throwing themselves on the good sense of the community, irrespective of Whig or Tory, free themselves from the domination of the monopolist classes, to the lasting benefit of the country.—Mr. EWART seconded the amendment.—Mr. JAMES, as a West India proprietor, thanked the Government for the relief which their propositions afforded to the colonial interest, even though still unaware whether or not it would be of such an extent as to enable them to cultivate their estates to profitable advantage.—Mr. RICARDO saw nothing in sugar to exempt it from the operation of those principles of free trade which Sir R. Peel had laid down in his financial statement; yet on sugar he actually contemplated what would constitute 19 rates of duty, having differences without distinction, ad valorem rates which would be inoperative, and causing a sacrifice of revenue without any advantage. By another arrangement, he might have obtained a surplus sufficient to enable us to dispense with the Income-tax. It was unworthy of the great financial abilities of Sir R. Peel thus to go out of his way in dealing with the articles of corn and sugar, and such was now the prevalent feeling in all commercial circles. With a bolder course, though he might encounter some murmurings, he would be enabled successfully to carry out his principles to their legitimate conclusion.—Sir G. CLERK admitted that protection might be carried too far, and be greatly abused, especially if employed to bolster up the production of any article unsuited to soil and climate. But this was wholly different from protection to great interests which had grown up under the burden of our national debt and our large expenditure. The principle of Government was the maintenance of a fair moderate protection both to home and colonial interests, abandoning at the same time the old exploded system of monopoly; he was satisfied that the propositions of the Government would afford to the consumer an ample supply of sugar at a much more moderate rate than hitherto; and he hoped that the House would not sanction any project, which, under the pretence of no ill-will to the West Indies, would confiscate the property of the colonial proprietors.—Mr. VILLIERS considered that no answer was given to the demand for the reasons on which the colonies claimed this compensating protection. Let them produce their account. Talk of disturbing interests, why they were doing so every day in every financial proposition or speech they made. How was it that the magical sum of 10*s.* 6*d.* was considered as exactly hitting the precise amount of protection required? The people of this country objected to that odious portion of the Income-tax which fell on precarious incomes; and here was 2,300,000*l.* wasted, which might have been applied to its reduction, or of the duty on tea, or other important articles of consumption. In a few days the ladies of the aristocracy were going to dance at a grand ball for the benefit of the distressed needlewomen; and yet the weekly extra expense to London alone from the enhanced price of sugar was 4000*l.* Our colonies required increased military protection, and we were about to add to that additional expense a sum of 2,300,000*l.*, to be given to a body of men whose claims nobody could produce.—Mr. MILES admitted that sugar cultivation, in former years, was characterised by reckless extravagance; but necessity has long since put an end to it. He hoped that Sir R. Peel would see the necessity of continuing the duties now proposed for at least three years. The equalisation of the duties on foreign and colonial sugar would enhance the difficulties of the West Indies, and neutralise all our efforts to extinguish slavery.—Lord HOWICK asked, what was the object of a differential duty? Was it not, as in the present instance, to raise the natural price by 10*s.* the cwt., or 10*l.* the ton? Yet this was called protection to British industry! He would call it spoliation of the British consumer. At the present time he understood that Brazilian sugar in bond was 18*s* 6*d.*, and colonial of the same value was 26*s.* Now the effect of our fiscal regulations on this difference in price was to compel the British consumer to exchange the products of his industry for 18½ tons of sugar, instead of 26, which he might otherwise obtain. He was as sensitive to the horrors of slavery as at the time when it was defended by those whose new-born philanthropy now taunted them with the desertion of their principles; and in advocating the present amendment, he did so as much with the view of benefiting the colonies, as releasing the home consumer from a heavy burden.—Mr. GLADSTONE, after passing an eulogy on the late Sir T. F. Buxton, did not think that this was a happy opportunity for taunting with "new-born philanthropy" those parties who were carrying out his views. Undoubtedly an extra amount was paid, on account of the differential duty, which might be called a tax, if we pleased; but though he did not defend a differential duty per se, as applied to the East Indies and the Mauritius, he considered that substantial grounds could be advanced on which to rest the case for protection to the West Indies. Scarcity of labour was only one cause of dearness of production in these colonies; scarcity of proprietors, or absenteeism, was another, and a more material one. But what rendered absenteeism possible? Slavery, that system created by the Legislature, which enabled them to command cheap labour, and the abrogation of which, by the same authority, had so changed circumstances as, during the last few years, to place the West India proprietors on the wrong side of the account. But let it not be said that they were maintaining monopoly. They reduced the amount of the differential duty from 27*s.* to 14*s.*, thus gradually abating the burden on the people of England; but so long as those circumstances existed, which disabled the colonial sugar grower from competing in the open markets of the world, they could not at once equalise the duties.—Mr. LABOUCHERE, though disapproving of the propositions of the Government, was not prepared to support the amendment, the effect of which would be suddenly and injuriously to withdraw all protection from the colonies.—Mr. COBDEN considered, that whatever might be the free trade concessions of the budget, we stood on worse ground than last year with respect to the protective duty on sugar. Ministers must not deceive themselves by supposing that on this question they carried the bulk of the anti-slavery party with them. He had a large acquaintance with that party, and he knew that they suspected their motives, and accused them of hypocrisy. Why, the constituencies that were most active in the anti-slavery agitation were those who returned the larger portion of free traders. Slavery was entirely opposed to those economical arrangements by which excellence and cheapness were combined; give to his workmen only the competition of slaves, and he would insure them the monopoly of the world. The assertion, therefore, that they proposed to ruin the colonies, was a bold and audacious fallacy. He read documentary evidence to prove that residence, good management, and industrial improvement were sufficient to render estates profitably productive, and told the House that the Government proposition would prove no settlement of the question.—Mr. CARDWELL treated it as a stale device to debate "abstract" questions on which both sides of the House were agreed. Slavery was the bane of our colonies; and he hoped the day was coming when free labour would beat slave labour out of the field.—Mr. BRIGHT urged the unproductive nature of protection as the reason for its abandonment, and expressed his satisfaction that not only were the days of the sliding-scale drawing to a close, but all monopolies were sliding to their termination. He regretted, however, that the Government should now take up a worse position on the Sugar Duties than had been done last year. But the public mind would not tolerate much longer this gross injustice; the advocates of free trade were rapidly augmenting, while those of the monopolists were diminishing; and ere long they would be required to give a substantial reason for their conduct.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, reserving his observations to another period, intimated that a letter, which Mr. Cobden had quoted as to the rising prosperity of the West Indies, proceeded upon the assumption that a differential duty of 10*s.* was to be kept on. Lord SANDON remarked on the great reduction which has taken place on the discriminating duty, which has been lowered from 63*s.* Supply and demand was the true measure of production, not the amount of duty.—On a division there appeared—For the amendment, 84; against it, 211. Majority, 127.

Tuesday.—The House had a morning sitting, from 12 to 3 o'clock, when the Railways Consolidation Bill, up to clause 65, was considered in committee.—At the 5 o'clock sitting, in reply to Mr. O. STANLEY, Sir R. PEEL stated that, in the event of the passing of the Bill for constructing a railway between Chester and Holyhead, the Government hoped to propose a vote for the improvement of Holyhead Harbour.—Mr. WILLIAMS brought before the House the amount of business done yearly by the Court of Session in Scotland, and the nature and extent of the duties of the Judges composing that Court; and asked leave to bring in a Bill to repeal so much of the Act 1 William IV, c. 69, as provides that there shall be 13 Judges in the said Court; and to extend the jurisdiction of the stipendiary county Judges, called Sheriffs, by giving them the power of awarding the punishment of transportation, in the event of the Judges in the Court of Session being reduced below the number of 13.—The LORD-ADVOCATE opposed the Bill, on the ground that no case had been made out. It would, he thought, be most objectionable to give the proposed penal power to the Sheriffs, which would be, in fact, creating 31 new Judges; and it would be very unwise thus to lay the foundation of great discrepancies in the decisions of the Scotch tribunals.—Mr. F. MAULE also opposed the bringing in of the Bill.—The motion was consequently withdrawn.—Sir R. H. INGLIS, in moving for certain papers relative to the new regulations for the negroes captured by our cruisers, and landed at Sierra Leone, drew attention to the hardship inflicted by them. Pursuant to an order from the Colonial Secretary, a proclamation was issued by the Governor, on the 12th June last, encouraging emigration to the West Indies, and depriving those of the liberated Africans who preferred the option of remaining at Sierra Leone of all the allowances hitherto granted, by which they were left without food, clothing, or implements of industry, strangers in the midst of strangers, and utterly unable to help themselves. This was particularly severe on the children, upwards of one hundred of whom were easily induced by the government agent to emigrate to Jamaica, and the adults had as little option as the children, the choice being between emigration and starvation, while the disproportion of the sexes sanctioned by the regulations aggravated the evil. He was not opposed to the free introduction of labour into the West Indies; but a boon to the planter should not be conferred at the expense of the negro. The revival of the slave-trade between the coast of Africa and the Mauritius would also be a consequence of the new regulations for the introduction of negroes into the latter named of our colonial possessions—a result against which honour and good faith, as well as humanity, warned us.—Mr. HOPE, Under-Secretary for the Colonies, in seconding the motion for the production of the papers, said that the proclamation of the Governor of Sierra Leone, though intended as a means of notifying to the negroes the intention of withdrawing from them all government allowances, nevertheless left him an option to act according to circumstances. The age at which young persons were permitted to emigrate was twelve, which was, in a tropical climate, no immature period; and tracing the hundred boys who had been induced to emigrate to Jamaica, he observed that their voluntary removal had been of immense advantage to them. In Sierra Leone civilisation was at a low ebb, labour was scarce; the disproportion of the sexes was greater than in the West Indies; and every precaution was taken to insure the comfort and protection of the emigrants. From recent arrivals it appeared that no Africans had yet been imported into the Mauritius, under the bounty system, from the coast of Africa, and no encouragement had, therefore, been given to the slave-trade. To effect the civilisation of Africa by means of emancipated and educated negroes, it was necessary to introduce them into a new world, to make them acquainted with the wonders of art and science, and then to return them to their own country, in order to diffuse the civilisation they had been taught.—After remarks from Mr. Aglionby, Lord SANDON, Mr. HUTT, Mr. J. S. WORTLEY, Mr. MANGLES, Sir T. D. ACLAND, and Mr. PLUMPTRE, the motion was agreed to.—Dr. BOWRING moved for the correspondence relative to the issue and withdrawal of an ordinance of the Governor of Hong-Kong, dated the 21st August last, for the registration of the population of that colony, and for establishing a poll-tax on the inhabitants, to cover the expenses of the said registration.—Mr. HOPE objected to its production, on the ground that he had not yet received all the necessary information on the subject. The character of Mr. Davis, the Governor of Hong-Kong, was sufficient guarantee that in such an ordinance he had acted with discretion.—The motion was withdrawn.—Sir J. GRAHAM then moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the better regulation of Medical Practice throughout the United Kingdom. The first object in his late Bill was the establishment of a Council of Health, which would superintend medical and surgical education, and would constitute a board of easy and useful access to Government on sanatory questions of public importance, such as epidemics and fevers, &c. The second object was to abolish all monopolies, to secure to all medical practitioners throughout the United Kingdom facility of practising throughout those kingdoms, and to enact that there should be in the possession of all such practitioners an equality of attainments, equal attainments giving to all of them equal rights; and the third object was, that there should be a registration which should give notoriety to the names of the parties who had undergone examination, and that public offices should be given only to such practitioners as submitted to that registration. To these three great objects he still adhered, and they would all be found in his present Bill. In his Bill of last session he had proposed to repeal the Act which gave to the Fellows of the College of Physicians in London the exclusive privilege of practising as physicians in the city of London and within 7 miles of it. Instead of this clause he proposed another, which would exempt the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge from the operation of this Bill. These Universities wished to preserve to their graduates in medicine all their present privileges. Negotiations were in progress, from which it might be hoped that an arrangement would be made for a closer union between those Universities and the College of Physicians in London; and if that were effected, the exempting clause might be struck out at a subsequent stage of the Bill. With regard to the Apothecaries' Act, he had come to the conclusion that it was not expedient to propose the entire repeal of it. He should therefore only propose to repeal it so far as the parties regulated under his Bill were concerned. A great complaint against his Bill of last session was, that it contained no protection against empirical practitioners, and that it repealed existing penalties. His present Bill left those penalties untouched, and continued to the Apothecaries' Company the power to levy them if it so thought fit. He also made it a misdemeanour for any person to assume the title of physician, doctor, surgeon, or any other title given by the present Bill. He also repealed so much of the Apothecaries' Act as rendered it necessary that the examiners should be members of any specific guild in the city of London. He thought that on the first passing of his Bill two of the examiners should be two apothecaries of ten years' standing, and that hereafter they should be licentiates of ten years' standing under the Act. There was another alteration to which he attached great importance. He thought that on their first entrance into the medical profession there should be one examination common to all candidates. After having gone through that examination, he thought that they ought to make choice of the branch of the profession which they would pursue. He found insuperable objections to this proposition on the part of the profession. Physicians attached importance to a university education, and contended that examination at an early age would be inconsistent with the pursuit of the ordinary studies of the university. He had, therefore, fixed the age at which physicians should undergo their examination at 25. To surgery this remark did not apply. An academical education was not part of the course required for the acquisition of surgical science. As far as his inquiries had gone, there was no reason to expect any objection from the College of Surgeons to the clause that no one should qualify as a surgeon under 25 years of age, unless he had previously submitted to examination as a licentiate of surgery. No provision in his last Bill was made for any examination of practitioners in midwifery. He had introduced a clause into the present Bill for the institution of such an examination, and for placing a distinguishing mark on the names of those who passed that examination. A request had been made to him that the clause which related to general practitioners in his last Bill should be withdrawn from the present one. He would not enter into any observations upon that point until the profession had had time to consider the alterations which he had already proposed. He had intended to obliterate the Apothecaries' Company from the list of medical incorporations; but he had now deparated from that intention. He then referred to a request which had been made to him to withdraw the recent charter granted to the College of Surgeons, and to institute a College of General Practitioners distinct from the College of Surgeons. He was most anxious to sustain the character of the general practitioners; but he doubted whether it would be for their own interest and honour to dissolve the connection which existed at present between them and the College of Surgeons. He was anxious that they should deliberate upon the changes which he had proposed that evening, that they should reconsider the request which they had made to him, to have a separate incorporation for themselves, and should discuss among themselves whether they ought not to remain content to belong to that institution, which had produced the best surgeons and possessed the best museum in Europe. After stating some minor details of his Bill, he proceeded to explain his intentions with respect to the constitution of the Council. Unconnected with his present position as a Minister of the Crown, his deliberate judgment was, that the safest plan was for Government to have the power of nominating the Council; but having brought forward last session a measure of mixed nomination and election, he adhered to it at present, leaving it open to future discussion. He reserved however to the Crown the power of nominating six members of the Council, who must be practitioners and fellows. There was no power in the Bill of last year to remove from the registry persons who had misconducted themselves. He had now introduced into the Bill a clause which would give power to make that removal. He had also given by his last Bill power of licensing in medicine and in surgery to the faculty of physicians and surgeons in Glasgow. He had given that power under a misapprehension, and he therefore withdrew it from his present Bill. These were the principal alterations which he had made in the Bill of last session, and he now committed his present Bill to the candid consideration and examination of the profession.—Mr. WAKLEY had heard Sir J. Graham's exposition of his Bill with the greatest satisfaction, and now believed that the alterations which he had introduced into it would meet every objection which had been urged against his last Bill.—Sir J. GRAHAM had seen with delight the spirit in which his proposition had been met by Mr. Wakley. It led him to hope that it would be met with the same spirit by the members of the profession generally. He promised not to propose the second reading of the Bill till after Easter.—Leave was then given to bring in the Bill, as also another Bill, to enable Her Majesty to grant new charters to certain Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. At a later hour, Sir J. Graham brought in both these Bills, and had them read a first time. He fixed the second reading for the 7th April.—Mr. BELLEW then drew attention to the circumstances attendant on the dismissal of the Earl of Lucan from the Irish Magistracy, and subsequent restoration; and moved for copies of the correspondence relating thereto, and a copy of the Earl's commission appointing him to the Lord-Lieutenancy of Mayo.—Sir T. FREMANTLE said that there was no objection to the production of the papers, and after some discussion the returns were ordered.—On the motion of Mr. WYSE, the Select Committee on Art-Unions was re-appointed.

Wednesday.—Lord J. RUSSELL, on the motion for going into Committee of Ways and Means, brought forward his amendment on the Government propositions respecting sugar. After reviewing the economical portion of the Government plan, and showing that, in spite of artificial distinctions, which could not prevent the introduction of slave-grown produce, as in the case of the importations from Venezuela, at least one-half of the differential duty went into the pockets of the planters, he proceeded to the anti-slavery question. Unquestionably, the act of Negro Emancipation raised obstacles of a temporary nature, which, in his mind, prevented the immediate application of the principles of free trade. One consequence of the abolition of compulsory labour was the promulgation of plans for the introduction of free labourers, and this was attempted to be attained by taxes laid on even the articles used by the labourers themselves. He did not doubt that a gradual introduction of labourers would be beneficial; but their importation from Africa into the West Indies in large masses, with the view of suddenly cheapening labour, might be attended with a great many disadvantages, one of which would be to create a preponderance of the black over the white population, leading to consequences of possibly fearful result. Nor did he see any financial wisdom in the Government plans. He would rather see them adopt the principle of a gradual reduction of duty. By their present proposition they were unnecessarily sacrificing a revenue of 2,300,000*l.*, which might have been applied to the reduction of the silk or spirit duties, or other articles, which would tend greatly to the extension of our commerce, and this to an extent not merely great in itself, but not involving any loss to the revenue. Deprecating the class legislation which puts money in the pockets of certain individuals, at the expense of both the Exchequer and the community, he proposed, "that it is the opinion of this House, that the plan proposed by Her Majesty's Government, in reference to the Sugar Duties, professes to keep up a distinction between foreign free labour and foreign slave labour sugar, which is impracticable and illusory; and, without adequate benefit to the consumer, tends so greatly to impair the revenue as to render the removal of the Income and Property-tax, at the end of three years, extremely uncertain and improbable."—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER remarked that the case of Venezuela, used, as it had been, as a peg on which to hang an argument, was not applicable. In that country a law existed which rendered every slave grown individual free, who was born subsequent to 1822, so that shortly, in the ordinary course of human life, slavery would be extinct. He ridiculed the idea that the price of sugar was raised to the consumer by the whole amount of the differential duty. No doubt some burden was imposed, which was cheerfully borne, for the sake of that great principle for which we had already made so many sacrifices. But if we forced into competition the cheaply produced sugar of slave countries, it would lead to the abandonment of the sugar estates of the West Indies, which now produce one-half of the entire consumption of the world, and the consequence would be such a vacuum in the supply, as ultimately to raise the price of sugar to the British consumer to an extravagant extent, and at the same time immeasurably to increase the slave-trade and enhance its horrors. Between the Government and the noble lord there was no difference as to the necessity for a present moderate protection to the West Indies, and the propriety of a reduction of duty. But he objected to a gradual annual reduction, as tending to unsettle the sugar trade. The Government proposed an immediate and effectual abatement, which would benefit the consumer to the extent of three halfpence the pound. Without undertaking to predicate what would be the commercial or political events of three years hence, he drew from past experience an assurance that the elasticity of our national resources, relieved as they would be by the proposed remission of taxation, would so increase the revenue as to enable them to deal with the Property and Income-tax on independent grounds; and this would be obtained without the abandonment of any principle, or the adoption of a course which would at once ruin the West India colonies, and aggravate the slave-trade.—Mr. LABOUCHERE taxed the Government with gross inconsistency in applying their professed principles. He doubted very much whether they would be able, by the way they proposed, to exclude foreign sugar; and he defied them to decide whether the foreign sugar introduced into this country was the produce of free or of slave labour.—Mr. GLADSTONE declined to go into a discussion of the Income-tax, but it seemed somewhat curious to him that Lord J. Russell should be so anxious to express or rather suggest a rather strong opinion as to the continuance of the tax. Whether or not the noble Lord thought that, in the mean time, some revolutions in the wheel of fortune would take place, so that he and his friends might have to provide for the public revenue, he could not say; but certainly the expressions which had fallen from the noble Lord on the subject possessed a meaning that was intended to go beyond the present time. With regard to the distinction drawn between slave and free grown sugar, he granted that, literally and technically, they had not the power to enforce any such distinction. The real and practical question was, whether they should exclude sugar raised in particular countries, those countries being in the practice of carrying on the African slave-trade. He would not argue that the Premier's plan was the best possible for the consumer, but he contended that the universal competition, and the very high average value of the Havannah sugars would, on the whole, subject the British planters to the most severe competition if they were to remove the distinctions which now existed. Though he did not wish to cast ridicule on any principle of political economy, he did protest against the application of those principles to practice, when that practice overlooked and overleaped a number of circumstances which qualified the principles in a most essential manner. This question was not one of commerce or finance, but of humanity and honour.—Mr. MACAULAY did not consider that we were under any moral obligation to convert our fiscal code into a penal code, for the purpose of correcting the vices of other nations. Such a principle would throw the whole commercial system of the world into confusion; and if adopted into the budget, would make it one vast mass of inhumanity and injustice. He would not have two standards of right and wrong, nor strain at a gnat and yet swallow a camel. But this was exactly what the Government was at the present time doing; for they not only took the tobacco of the United States, which was the produce of slave-labour, but they also interdicted the free labourer of Ireland from cultivating it in his own country. Why was this? Because they got a duty of 600—nay, 1200 per cent. on the foreign tobacco, the produce of slave-labour, and would find a difficulty of deriving any revenue at all from the home-grown. If then moral obligation were to yield sometimes to fiscal regulations, why were they to be debarred from the importation of Brazilian sugar? But Sir R. Peel, at the very moment in which he debarred the country from this importation of Brazilian sugar because it was slave-grown, took off all the duty on cotton imported from the United States, which was slave-grown also. A distinction was drawn between slavery and the slave-trade, but in that very United States, whose productions the budget encouraged, there was a slave-trade as atrocious as that between Africa and the Brazils. Virginia was to Alabama and Louisiana, what Congo was to Rio Janeiro; and the labour of the sugar-mill in Louisiana sent, in a few years, the stoutest African to his grave. There was, in fact, in that republic a slave-trade as regular as the traffic in pigs between Dublin and Liverpool, or in coals between Newcastle and London; and if he were called upon to say in which country, the United States or the Brazils, the condition of the African, a hundred years hence, would be most advanced, he would name the latter. Our efforts to maintain a maritime police to suppress the slave-trade was an honour to humanity, but the Right of Search had failed, mainly through the conduct of the United States, which seemed to think that slavery and the slave-trade was so holy a cause as to warrant every scheme for its maintenance. Yet, refusing to admit the sugar of Brazil, because the Brazilians use their slaves so ill, the Government took off the tax on cotton. Our own country was to be preferred, though not in a narrow sense, to that of any other; and he did not understand that generalisation of humanity which would lead to the interference of the Emperor of Russia with our factory children, and our passing a Bill for the emancipation of Russian serfs. He had some right to plead his past exertions on behalf of the negroes. In 1833, at a time when office was as much an object to him as to any man, he had placed his resignation in the hands of a Government to which he was much attached, because he had differed with it on the subject of apprenticeship. But our slavery niceties in distinction reminded him of the pious silversmith in Gil Blas, who abhorred sacrilege, and would not buy stolen church plate, but willingly melted it for a consideration, consoling himself that as he had not touched the accursed thing, he had turned an honest penny in the fear of God. Amid all the veering, however, of the party opposite in opinion with respect to sugar, cotton, or tobacco, there was one thing to which they had constantly adhered, that of protection to the West India interests.—Sir J. GRAHAM confirmed the statement of Mr. Macaulay, as to his having, in 1833, honourably and independently placed his resignation in the hands of the then Government, when his conscientious views differed from their plans with reference of the negro population. He himself had also ever pursued a consistent course on the question of slavery; but in dealing with it he could not forget the situation in which we had placed the West India proprietors by our legislation. He argued at some length that the moral, social, and industrial condition of the colonies required the distinctions now proposed to be maintained, both with reference to their improving ability to compete with other countries, and the necessity for abasing the Slave-trade.—Mr. C. WOOD supported the amendment.—Sir R. PEEL was surprised at the nightly attacks on the Income-tax, and the disposition to vote in its favour. Why did they not oppose it? The fact was, that, looking forward to possible events, they wished, in 1848, to be able to refer back to their recorded opinions in 1845, in favour of an impost which produced 5,200,000*l.* a year. He was making a bold experiment; negotiations with other countries for commercial treaties were unsatisfactory; and would Lord J. Russell venture on a reduction of taxes to the extent of more than three millions without the aid of the Income-tax? The noble lord's speech, in great part at least, would have warranted his voting for the amendment of Mr. M. Gibson the other night; but oscillating as he was between the Ministerial and the Opposition benches, he had come to the conclusion that the West Indies required some protection. It sounded very well to announce that "protection was the bane of agriculture," yet at the close of last session Lord J. Russell had intimated that local burdens required some protection to agriculture; and he had disturbed the agricultural mind by vague expectations that he would propose the repeal of the Malt-tax. Notwithstanding which, he had no doubt that the noble Lord would vote for the proposed reduction on glass and cotton, and, moreover, in spite of the support of his agricultural friends, would aid the Government in resisting the repeal of the Malt-tax. The eloquence of Mr. Macaulay had not removed in his mind the material distinction between the slave-grown sugar of Cuba and the Brazils, and the slave-grown cotton of the United States. Commercially and financially the propositions of Government were open to objection; but morally we were bound to keep up the distinction. Our own abandonment of the slave-trade had caused its horrors to be kept less vividly and constantly before our eyes; but those who imagined that the anti-slavery feeling of this country was extinct or dormant would find that if we opened the British market to Cuba and the Brazils it would revive in great discontent with our conduct. He feared that, notwithstanding the increased vigilance of our cruisers on the coast of Africa, the number of slaves landed in Cuba and the Brazils was not diminished. But we had entered into engagements with these countries which, though not hitherto fulfilled on their part, would be broken up, and thereby the horrors of slavery immeasurably aggravated, if we admitted their sugars. True, there was an apparent inconsistency in the admission of slave-grown cotton and the refusal of slave-grown sugar; but it was difficult to take any course which was not open to the charge of inconsistency. An anti-slavery feeling was spreading all over the Continent; and though this country was the only one which made active exertions to suppress slavery, the sincerity of our motives was not questioned, and our example was likely to be imitated. Admit the sugar of Brazil and Cuba, and we will descend from our moral position, and make a practical confession that our great experiment in the emancipation of our slaves had been a failure.—Lord PALMERSTON commented on the inconsistency of the Government admitting, duty free, copper ore from Cuba, raised by slave labour, and refusing its sugar. Our persevering efforts to put down the odious traffic in slaves were neutralised by the loss of that mutual right of search which the present Government had thrown away, and the want of which could not be compensated by any increase in our cruisers and sailors. The attempt to discriminate between slave-grown and free-grown sugar was a distinction without a difference; by maintaining it we withdrew the stimulus of wholesome competition, and gave a protection which was injurious to our home interests, without any countervailing advantage to the colonies.—Sir C. NAPIER was satisfied that the slave-trade could not be put down without watching the entire coasts of Cuba and Brazil, as well as those of Africa. On a division there appeared—For Lord J. Russell's amendment, 142; against it, 236; Majority, 94.

Thursday.—The House held a morning sitting at 12 o'clock, at which the Companies Clauses Bills, and the Railways Bill up to clause 44, were considered and forwarded. At the five o'clock sitting Mr. BRIGHT moved for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the Game Laws. In a speech of great length, he quoted a vast number of facts, opinions, and conversations, to show the evil effects of the Game Laws on the farmers and labourers, and the incentives afforded by them to crimes of all sorts. He begged the House to remark that, whilst they were expending large sums of money in elevating the moral and improving the social condition of the poor, they were, by maintaining the present laws, entirely countervailing the effect of those benevolent exertions; and it was with the greatest satisfaction he observed that there never was a time when all political classes, both in and out of Parliament, so earnestly and seriously exerted themselves for the improvement of the condition of the poor and labouring classes of the country as the present. The hon. Member did not suggest any remedy, but simply asked for an inquiry into the whole subject.—Sir J. GRAHAM conceded that grounds had been shown for instituting an inquiry, and admitted that, in the course of the last year or two, a variety of lamentable circumstances especially connected with the preservation of game had forced themselves in an unusual degree on the notice of the Government. No inquiry had been made since 1823, and considering that crime, commitments, and punishments had of late greatly multiplied, he believed a fresh examination of the whole subject to be necessary. A committee impartially nominated would, he hoped, be able to point out a remedy for the evils complained of, and even if no improved change in the law were to be the result of its labours, he did not despair of its producing a great moral effect; and he could assure the hon. gentleman that every assistance which the Government could give in promoting this inquiry, or in the conduct of it, should not be wanting.—Mr. F. H. BERKELEY said, that by the agitators against the Game Laws both agriculturists and sportsmen seemed to be denounced classes. According to their statements, pheasants, hares, and partridges could not have a moment to spare from the destruction of grain. Now, most hon. gentlemen present were aware, that for six months in the year pheasants and partridges could hardly be called granivorous. He could tell the hon. member for Durham that he had seen pheasants on their nests tempted with grain and turn away from it. He would ask if any one had ever seen a pheasant after the month of April go near a stack of barley? No; they then fed on insects, grubs, and especially on the wire-worm; and no one ever heard of a pheasant touching the ears of corn before they were cut. Indeed, it was well known that, if he might use the expression, the pheasant was a gleaner, and not a reaper. How absurd, then, was the conduct of those gentlemen who had addressed the Anti-Corn Law League on this subject, and who had stated that on opening the crops of pheasants they had found in one so many barley-corns, and in another so many grains of wheat! Lord Normanton had come in for his fair share of abuse; and Mr. Henry Baring had been described as a sort of Robinson Crusoe, going about to destroy game with four guns on his shoulder. Those were the statements of the Anti-Corn Law League.—Mr. VERNON SMITH thought it would have been much more consistent if the Government, appreciating the difficulties of this question, had brought in a Bill embodying their views, instead of throwing the subject on the hands of a committee.—Mr. GRANTLEY BERKELEY adduced some prison statistics, to controvert the notion that the Game-laws were a peculiar source of demoralisation. By abolishing the Game-laws, we would deprive a certain class of employment, without benefit to any other. He was favourable to inquiry, but would not submit to imputations on the aristocracy, as being tyrannical and harsh to the poor.—A desultory discussion ensued, in which Mr. DARBY, Capt. ROUS, Mr. LIDDELL, Mr. AGLIONBY, Colonel SIBTHORP, the Hon. G. BERKELEY, Mr. ESCOTT, Mr. MASERLY, Mr. NEWDIGATE, Mr. COBDEN, Mr. WODEHOUSE, and Mr. COLVILLE, took part.—Sir R. PEEL said, that having met that day a large body of the agricultural members of the House, they had unanimously resolved that there should be a full and dispassionate inquiry, even though they did not anticipate so very temperate a speech as had been made by Mr. Bright. He would look forward rather to moral and social benefits from the inquiry, than any positive enactment, and that it would lead to specific contracts between landlords and tenants on the subject of game. The old system of sporting pursued by our forefathers was more congenial, for the real delight it afforded, than those large accumulations of game which held out temptations that flesh and blood could not stand. Even if no alteration of the law be the result, it might lead landlords to make beneficial changes in their system of management.—The appointment of the committee was then agreed to.—Lord DUNCAN postponed his motion for a repeal of the Window-tax until Thursday, the 13th March.—The Property-tax Bill was read a second time.

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols closed at 99⅞; Reduced Three per Cents., 100¼; Three and Quarter New, 104; Exchequer Bills 58 to 61; India Bonds 74 pm.; Bank Stock, 213.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—J. H. DANSDEY, Glasshouse-street, tailor—J. BROWN, Cheapside, perfumer—L. DAVIS, Ewhurst, Sussex, wine agent—W. H. SUMNER, High-street, Hoxton Old Town, grocer—C. LEES, Wakes Colne, Essex, miller—J. GRAY, Manchester, upholsterer—C. MURCOTT, Birmingham, factor—J. WELCH, Holloway, and Chaigrave, Bedfordshire, victualler—J. and C. GREEN, Borough-road, Southwark, corn dealers—J. B. GORDON and R. GORDON, Poplar, coopers—W. DIXS, J. DIXS, and J. HOGG, Newcastle upon-Tyne, and Darlington, builders—MARY RAWLINGS and F. J. RAWLINGS, Cheltenham, upholsterers—J. RALPH, Bath, innkeeper—J. DALTON, Salford, Lancashire, joiner—E. BAYLEY, Chesswardine, Salop, apothecary.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. DAVIDSON, Riccarton Mains, Edinburgh, baker—J. M'LAREN, Coupar Angus, merchant—W. JACK, Falkirk, shoemaker—A. G. MACDONALD, Annat, Argyllshire, coach contractor—H. KENNEDY, Content-upon-Ayr, grocer—J. KERR, Greenock, merchant—R. RAMSAY, Glasgow, hosier—W. STEWART, Tullylumb, Perthshire, farmer.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Custom House Frauds.—Since the trials in the Court of Exchequer, noticed in this Paper a fortnight since, the Crown have recovered a verdict of 1200*l.* from Mr. Thomas Clay, the amount of duties on silk goods imported by him in the way of his trade as a silk merchant, without payment of the full duties. They have also recovered the sum of 739*l.* 3*s.* from a man named Riley, being the value of the supposed contents of a case which he had fraudulently set aside as the agent of a person named Wilson, who was the clerk of Cordingly and Co., of Paternoster-row, on whose behalf, as the Solicitor-General said, it was believed the goods were really imported.

The Graveyards of London.—The Clerkenwell Police Court on Tuesday was crowded by respectable inhabitants of Clerkenwell, in consequence of an application to Mr. Combe for his interference to put down the abuses of Spa Fields burial-ground. Mr. Watt, of Exmouth Street, the back of whose premises is immediately contiguous to the burial-ground, said that the ground did not contain more than two acres. It had been employed for interment upwards of 50 years, and the average yearly number buried there was between 15,000 and 16,000; 30 burials had taken place there in one day, and the nuisance arising therefrom was so great, that it affected the health of the neighbourhood, and it was impossible for them to live in their houses. Parties were in the habit of disinterring the bodies shortly after they were buried, and burning the bones and coffins. Mr. Combe said, if the place was such a nuisance the parish ought to indict. The Inspector of Police stated that he had frequently seen fires in the burial-ground with fresh sound coffin wood, and the plates of coffins strewed about. Mr. Combe recommended the applicants to petition the Board of Guardians, and if they would not interfere to apply to the Poor-Law Commissioners; and, if they refused, to apply to the Secretary of State. Several witnesses deposed that it was the practice to exhume the bodies shortly after interment, burn them in the bone-house, and after drying the coffin boards, cut them up and sell them for fire-wood. Persons living in the neighbourhood spoke to these and other disgusting details, as having personally witnessed the facts. It was stated that within 6 years, 10,000 bodies have been buried in this piece of ground, and there are now coffins there only 9 inches beneath the surface. The magistrate repeated his advice to the parishioners, and the parties left the Court with a determination to apply to the Board of Guardians.

Meeting of the Electors of Finsbury.—On Wednesday evening a public meeting of the electors of Finsbury took place at White Conduit House, to take into consideration the opening of Mr. Duncombe's letters under an order from Sir J. Graham, and to demand of the House of Commons an inquiry into the facts. The chair was taken by Mr. Richard Taylor. A letter from Mr. Duncombe was read, declining to be present, as he considered the matter a personal affair, but stating that, "The expression of your independent opinion, I hope, will assist me in obtaining that satisfaction, without which, I am convinced you will agree with me, I cannot continue a member of the present House of Commons, with either advantage to you or credit to myself." The meeting was addressed by Mr. Turton, Mr. Hodgskin, Mr. Walker, Mr. G. Rogers, Sir C. Napier, Mr. Blewitt, M.P., and Mr. Wakley, M.P., who expressed themselves strongly against the system of postage espionage, and against Sir J. Graham individually, and resolutions in accordance with the speeches were carried unanimously.

Society for the Protection and Employment of Distressed Needlewomen.—A fancy-dress ball was given on Wednesday night at the London Tavern, in aid of the funds of this institution, and was very numerously attended. The money collected at the ball in the shape of tickets, and the contributions of those who were unable to attend, amounted to a considerable sum.

The Archæological Association.—Lord Albert Conyngham, the President of this Association, which met last summer at Canterbury, has resigned his position as head of the Association. A public meeting of the Society is about to be held in consequence of some unpleasant squabbles in the committee.

The Convict Dalmas.—Our readers may remember that this convict, while under sentence of death for the murder on Battersea-bridge, exhibited such real or pretended insanity, that, with the concurrence of Dr. Munro, and Dr. Sutherland, he was reprieved during pleasure, and sent to Milbank Prison. The medical officers of that institution agreed in considering him insane, and he was consequently removed about 9 months since to Bethlehem Hospital. It appears, however, that the real state of the case has been at length discovered, for the medical officers of Bethlehem state that during his residence in that asylum, Dalmas has exhibited no symptoms of insanity. The Secretary of State, on receiving notice of this fact, issued an order for his removal from Bethlehem to his old quarters at Milbank Prison; and he will now be transported for life to one of the penal settlements.

The Dock Robberies.—The four men who were taken into custody a few weeks since, for the extensive robberies of tobacco from the warehouses of the London Docks, were found guilty at the late sessions of the Central Criminal Court, and transported for 10 years.

Camberwell.—The inquest on the bodies of the tradesman and his wife, who were poisoned last week at Camberwell, has terminated in a verdict that they were killed by arsenic in their tea, but there was no evidence to prove by whom it was placed there.

Robbery at Kew Church.—The village of Kew has since Sunday last been the scene of great excitement, in consequence of some thieves having effected an entrance into the church, and carried off an iron chest containing the parish registers, from 1717 to the present time. The churchwarden has offered a reward of 10 guineas for the apprehension of the offenders.

Murder at Hampstead.—On Friday se'nnight, about half-past 7, a murder and highway robbery was committed in the Hampstead fields, near the stile where the path from Chalk Farm divides into two branches, the one leading to Belsize-park, the other to the Swiss Cottage, on the Finchley and Barnet-road. A cry of murder proceeding from the spot was heard by persons passing along the road towards the Swiss Cottage, and a search having been made, the body of a man, respectably dressed, was discovered about three yards on the Hampstead side of the stile, lying on his face in a pool of blood quite dead. His pockets were turned inside out, and his money and watch had been stolen. An inquest was held on Monday, when it was proved that deceased was Mr. James Delarue, a teacher of music, aged 33, lately residing at 55, Whittlebury-street, Euston-square. The landlord stated that he left home on Friday evening, to keep some appointment he had made, and it appeared from a note found in his pocket, that he had been in the habit of meeting a young woman near the spot for some time past. The surgeon who had examined the body stated that the skull was not fractured, but the scalp was extensively lacerated and blackened, and the temporal muscle was totally destroyed by a blow. The injuries, however, were not of such a nature as to cause immediate death; and the only conclusion that could be come to was, that the alarm and loss of blood, coupled with concussion of the brain, had caused it. After a consultation with the officers of the detective police, during which the public were excluded, the coroner, Mr. Wakley, adjourned the inquest, stating that the day for its meeting again must depend on the information obtained by the detective force. Various rumours have been current during the week, but as most of them have proved to be mere fictions, it is needless to advert to them further than to say, that suspicion at first pointed to three labourers, who were seen by more than one person in the evening, endeavouring to sell a hone for sharpening razors. It has since, however, been ascertained that a schoolmaster, called Hocker, residing at Portland Town, was intimate with the deceased; and, from circumstances which were communicated to the police, he was apprehended with his brother and examined on Wednesday before the magistrate. Some of deceased's property was found in the possession of the prisoner, and his clothes were saturated with blood. The adjourned inquest will be resumed this day, and both prisoners will be fully examined by the coroner.

Provincial.

Cambridge.—Notwithstanding Sir Jenner Fust's judgment, which decided against the erection of the stone altar in the Round Church, and notwithstanding the expected dissolution of the Camden Society, by whose auspices and expense the altar was raised and defended, it appears that the churchwarden has appealed against the recent judgment. A good deal of correspondence on this subject and on the proposed dissolution of the Camden Society has been published in the local papers. Among other plans it has been suggested not to dissolve the Society but to change its name and constitution, and model it after the plan of the Oxford one, for the simple purposes of church architecture. It has also been urged that the title of the Camden Society was a misnomer, no one knowing what it meant—whether it was assumed in honour of the late Chancellor, during whose term of presidency over the University the Society was formed, or whether it derived its name from the author of the Britannia, there being in London a Society altogether different from this, already bearing that title. As a further inducement to the re-modelling of the Society, it is suggested that, unless a new Society be formed, the valuable collections of books, drawings, models, plans, &c. of the old Society will be dispersed.—It is stated that Thorwaldsen's statue of Lord Byron, which was denied a place in Westminster Abbey a few years ago, and which has remained since then buried in the vaults of the London Docks, is about to be disinterred, and an honourable place afforded it within the bosom of this University.

Croome.—The Worcestershire magistrates have concluded their protracted investigation of the Croome poaching affray, by committing all the remaining prisoners to take their trial. Including the two men, who were committed under the Coroner's warrant for the murder of the unfortunate gamekeeper, there are now no less than ten men in the county prison, charged with being implicated therein. They are all from Pershore, which nearly adjoins the Earl of Coventry's property, on which the affray took place, and most of them are decent mechanics, who, it appears, prefer the practice of poaching to legitimate labour, for it is notorious that they have not been driven to these bad courses by distress. The consequences of this are, that their wives and children are now thrown upon the workhouse.

Falmouth.—The differences between the Rector and Curate of this town and the parishioners, which have been so often before the public, have been satisfactorily settled. The Curate, the Rev. John Symonds, has addressed a letter to the churchwardens, stating, that acting under the authority of the Rector, who is still abroad, he has been enabled to concede the various points demanded by the parishioners, including the discontinuance of the surplice in preaching.

Plymouth.—The Victoria and Albert, royal yacht, Capt. Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, with the Surveyor of the Navy, and Captains Austen and Sandom on board, Black Eagle, Master Commander Cook, with a Russian Admiral and Captains Codrington and Robb, and Commander Coffin on board, and the Rattler, Commander Smith, with Mr. Smith, the patentee of the screw-propeller with which she is fitted, arrived in this port last week, and sailed on the same day for the Irish Channel. In the passage from Portsmouth to Plymouth the royal yacht beat the Black Eagle five miles, and the Rattler eight. The yacht is said to be very much improved in her steering. The Flying Fish and the Espiègle, the former built by the Surveyor of the Navy, the latter by the School of Naval Architecture, have returned from their second trial-cruise, in which they experienced some heavy breezes, that afforded ample opportunities for testing their several qualities. It is said that the Flying Fish, on most occasions, manifested a decided superiority over her opponent. The number of trials are stated to have been eleven, out which the Flying Fish claimed nine. Her motions are described as easy and regular—she strained very little, and carried nothing away, while the Espiègle sprung several of her spars.

Railways.

The following are the returns for the past week:—Birmingham and Gloucester, 1872*l.*; Bristol and Gloucester, 1032*l.*; Eastern Counties, 3280*l.*; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 2061*l.*; Great Western, 13,267*l.*; Grand Junction, 7154*l.*; Glasgow, Paisley, and Ayr, 1387*l.*; Great North of England, 1776*l.*; London and Birmingham, 14,168*l.*; South Western, 4285*l.*; Blackwall, 787*l.*; Brighton, 2910*l.*; Croydon, 339*l.*; Liverpool and Manchester, 4279*l.*; Manchester, Leeds, and Hull, 6285*l.*; Midland 8836*l.*; Manchester and Birmingham, 3111*l.*; Newcastle and Carlisle 1482*l.*; Newcastle and Darlington, 1020*l.*; South Eastern and Dover, 3967*l.*; Sheffield and Manchester, 578*l.*; York and North Midland, with Leeds and Selby, 2215*l.*; Yarmouth and Norwich, 204*l.*—The London and Blackwall Railway Company held their meeting last week. The report showed an improvement in the revenue of the Company. The receipts had been 30,433*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, and the total expenditure, including interest on debentures, 24,706*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*; which, with the balance from last year of 1730*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, leaves at disposal 7457*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*, from which the directors recommend the payment of a dividend of 3*s.* per share (clear of Income-tax), amounting to 7200*l.*; the remaining sum, after deducting Income-tax, being carried to the current half-year's account. The passenger traffic showed an increase of 510,139 in the numbers carried, and of 3231*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* in the receipts. The report added that the increase during the winter months was still progressing. The report next stated, that, notwithstanding the large addition in the traffic, there was no increase in the actual working expenses of the railway, although the sum of 659*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* had been expended in deepening the wall at the Minories, and in extraordinary repairs of machinery. Dr. Bowring said, that although the company had much to congratulate themselves on, yet their property was, owing to a large mortgage, in a worse state than any in the market. After the adoption of the report, a proposal to take into consideration the propriety of investing the directors with power to apply for an extension of the railway to Epping was agreed to.—The Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Company held their meeting on Monday. The report stated that the directors had completed the arrangement with the Brighton Company, who were now registered proprietors of 3500 shares. The directors on the 23d December made a call of 5*l.* per share, payable on the 1st February, of which the sum of 1440*l.* only remained unpaid. After recounting at some length the contracts into which the directors had entered, the report stated that the various schemes suggested by the South-Eastern Company with a view to compete for the Hastings and London traffic had received careful consideration in respect of the lines proposed between Tunbridge and Hastings, and also a revival of the Headcorn line. The engineer's report stated that between Lewes and Brighton, where the heaviest works were to be encountered, great progress had been made, particularly on each side of the Fulmer tunnel, six hundred yards in length. Between Fulmer and Brighton, five occupation bridges had already been built, and the public road, bridge, and viaduct over the London-road would soon be put in hand.—At a general meeting of the Cornwall and Devon Central Company on Monday, it was resolved to make another endeavour to effect an amicable arrangement with the coast-line; and in the event of the attempt being again unsuccessful, the directors were empowered to petition Parliament against that line, on the ground of non-compliance with the standing orders. If this should succeed, the directors recommended the postponement of their application to Parliament for their entire line until next session. If unsuccessful, the shareholders would be called upon to determine on the course to be taken. The report was adopted; and a resolution was passed, authorising any shareholder to withdraw his deposits, on allowing 7*s.* per share for expenses already incurred.—At the Hull and Selby meeting on Saturday, the report announced a considerable increase of traffic. Out of the balance of 17,581*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*, a dividend was declared of 35*s.* a share, being at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. By these means the sum of 358*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* would remain applicable to a reserved fund. The directors had taken every preliminary measure with reference to the proposed branch from Hull and Beverley, Driffield, and Bridlington. Upon getting the Act, the line would be completed with all convenient speed, and in all probability a branch would soon be proposed to Market Weighton.—The Taff Company announced a dividend at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable on the 5th March. The Aberdare Valley Railway is to be carried out at the expense of private parties. The working of the Taff line shows an increase during the last six months of 4278*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*—The Maryport and Carlisle Company have declared a dividend of 5 per cent. for the past year, although the works are unfinished. The traffic in coal has been considerable, amounting to about 1000 waggons weekly to Maryport, and has now commenced eastward as far as Carlisle. With the trade carried on from the north of Ireland the company expect to receive benefit. —The Board of Trade announced in the Gazette of last night that they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Whitehaven and Furness Junction, the Kendal and Windermere, the Lowestoft, the Aberdeen, the Dundee and Perth (line on the north bank of the Tay) the Edinburgh and Northern, the Scottish Midland, the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston; and against the Glasgow and Ayr—Barrhead and Neilston Branch.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Report of the Landlord and Tenant Commission is the leading topic of the Irish papers. The Conservative journals praise its moderate tone and the practical character of its recommendations, while the Repeal organs condemn it, though with less unanimity than was expected.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday at Conciliation Hall, Mr. R. A. Fitzgerald, the new member for Tipperary, in the chair.—Mr. D. Browne, M.P., gave in a sum of 7*l.* from Liverpool, and proceeded to defend the conduct of the Repeal representatives in attending the meetings held in Conciliation Hall in preference to the House of Commons. Because they honestly held the opinion that they could best serve their country by so doing, every little angry ape was to void his rheum upon them. They were abused by the Irish Whigs represented by Mr. Bellew—by the English Radicals represented by Mr. Wakley—and by the representative of all that was ill-conditioned, petulant and dyspeptic in every party, in the person of Mr. Roebuck. That individual at one time vented the gall of the Tories on the Whigs; at another, the gall of the Whigs on the Tories, and he now thought proper to pour all the acerbity of a sour and disappointed mind on the Repeal representatives. Why was he sour and disappointed?—because having sought emolument and popularity from all parties, he had been repudiated by all, and his appetite for notoriety not being satisfied, he had fallen into a state of political indigestion, so that when even a good measure was proposed to him it was rejected by his nauseated constitution. In fine he was a little angry wasp buzzing on the floor of the House of Commons, which when it could not collect honour or office from any quarter, left its little would-be baneful sting in all parties.—Mr. O'Connell brought forward a motion to the effect that a petition be prepared and presented to Parliament, praying for a repeal of the clauses of the Emancipation Act, which affected the Jesuits, and other monastic orders. In the 28th section of the Act, these orders were first adverted to, and it stated that it was expedient to make provision for their gradual suppression and final extinction. The Act then went on to require that all individuals belonging to the various monastic orders existing in the kingdom should register their names, in order to avoid the penalties prescribed by the Act; and it further enacted, that any one taking vows after it became law, should be liable to banishment for life; and if found in the country after being so sentenced, to transportation to a penal settlement. He proceeded at considerable length to eulogise the Jesuits, and other monastic orders, and to contend that the portions of the Emancipation Act to which he had referred should be repealed upon the double ground of justice and expediency.—Mr. Davis seconded the motion, because he thought that the clauses in question could have no other effect than to insult both Catholics and Protestants.—Mr. S. O'Brien, M.P., supported the motion. He disapproved not only of the clauses affecting the regular clergy, but of other portions of the Act, which created a distinction between Protestants and Catholics. So long as any vestige of ascendancy remained, so long as there was a particle of difference in the position of Catholic and Protestant, he would fight by their side in the endeavour to establish perfect equality. The hon. gentleman then addressed the meeting at some length upon public affairs in general. He contended that the increase of agitation, and not its decline, was the cause of the introduction of railways into this country, and that only for the exertions of the Repeal Association, they should have had an Income-tax in Ireland.—Mr. H. Grattan, M.P., also spoke in support of the resolution, and then commented on the speech of the hon. Member for Bath. He denied that either he or Mr. O'Brien had uttered language in that hall, which, as had been asserted, they would not have used in another place, and he appealed to the Government reporters to say whether such was the case or not. Both he and Mr. O'Brien would insist on being treated as gentlemen although they had not thrown away their muskets. The motion was then adopted.—Mr. O'Connell next addressed the meeting upon the subject of the Report of the Land Commission inquiry. When he first heard of the appointment of the Commission he had entertained hopes that some good might be produced by it, but the Report showed the folly of such an expectation. But every one who looked coolly at the Commission when it was first formed must have seen that its composition was grossly defective. One of its duties was to inquire into the causes of discontent among the agricultural population—a discontent admittedly produced by the misconduct of landlords, and yet there was not a single tenant on the Commission. They had also to inquire how much evil resulted from absenteeism, and their Chairman was an absentee. Accordingly, they had produced, as their Report, the most ridiculous piece of insipidity he had ever read: what Cobbett would call political cat-lap. The only important fact in it, was the admission it contained of the pauperised and destitute condition of the people of this country. Mr. O'Connell then read some extracts from a pamphlet of Mr. Arthur Young, the English agriculturist, for the purpose of showing that previously to the Union, the peasantry of Ireland were comfortable in their circumstances, and contrasted the state of things described in that pamphlet, with the description of the badly fed, badly housed, and badly paid condition of the Irish labourer set forth in the Report of the Land Commissioners, as existing for forty five years after the Union. In referring to their sufferings, the Commissioners gave it as their decided opinion that the quiet and patient endurance of the people was deserving of commendation. Now, he begged to ask, would commendation pay them fair wages, thatch their cabins, or clothe them comfortably, as they were in the good old days of Arthur Young? The Commissioners also said that this conduct merited the greatest attention from the Legislature; but in his opinion Parliament should have been always attending to their circumstances, and thus have prevented the growth of the evil it was now necessary to remedy. He pledged himself, however, that so long as he lived the patient endurance referred to should continue, but when he was in his grave, and his voice could be heard no longer, let not England dare to continue this oppression—this impoverishing, withering union. Mr. Roebuck had accused them of cowardice. What a giant-killer he is. Tom Thumb Roebuck creates giants for the purpose of destroying them. It had been his intention, should Her Majesty visit this country, to overwhelm her with addresses, detailing the grievances and sufferings of her Irish subjects; but he had altered his mind on the subject, and he would not be guilty of such a want of courtesy. He would not ask her to do what she had not the power to concede. She possessed no more political power than a policeman in coloured clothes. The Minister who possessed a majority in the House of Commons was virtually the King of England. Should her Majesty come to Ireland she would be received with all the respect and veneration due to her high station and exalted virtues. It was not her fault that the present Government were in power; it was with regret she parted with the Melbourne administration. Mr. O'Connell then implored of the people to preserve tranquillity—to abstain from crime, and above all from illegal Societies; and having recommended the adoption of a peaceable combination, by which he had carried Catholic Emancipation, he moved that it be referred to the Parliamentary Committee to inquire into facts and representations contained in the land commissioners' report.—Mr. J. O'Connell expressed his gratitude to Mr. Sheil and Sir Winston Barron for their manly defence of the Irish members, in the late debate on Mr. Roebuck's motion, and regretted that it would be inconsistent with their professions of not identifying themselves with the proceedings in Parliament, to propose a vote of thanks to those gentlemen.—Mr. O'Connell announced the rent for the week to be 366*l.*

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—The Court of Session on the 27th Jan. assented to an application for an interdict, at the instance of certain proprietors of portions of the Old Calton burying-ground, against the managers and incorporation of Calton, to whom that ground originally belonged, from granting an unoccupied stance within it for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of Muir, Fyshe Palmer, Margarot, Gerald, and Skirving, commonly called the "Scottish Political Martyrs," who were transported for sedition in the years 1793-94, and against the committee for the said monument from erecting any such structure within that inclosure. The principal ground on which the Lord Ordinary granted the interdict was, that the monument is a political testimonial for persons who are not buried in the churchyard. The respondents appealed last week to the First Division of the Court against this interdict; and after hearing the pleadings, the Court took time to consider its judgment. —A vacancy has again occurred in the Professorship of Music at the Edinburgh University, for which such a spirited contest was carried on only last year between Mr. Pearson, Dr. Gauntlet, and Mr. Sterndale Bennett, terminating in the election of the former gentleman. Mr. Pearson not having as yet entered on his duties, the Senatus have declared the chair vacant.

Glasgow.—A public dinner was given a few days ago in this city to Mr. Neilson, inventor of the Hot-blast. The Lord Provost presided, and was supported by Lord Belhaven, Sir J. Campbell, the Lord Rector of the University, Mr. Oswald, M.P., and about 80 gentlemen.

Law.

Middlesex Sessions.—The Case of Miss Osborne.—This case, which has excited so much interest at Fulham and its neighbourhood, and the particulars of which are already known to our readers, has fallen to the ground, in consequence of the absence of a material witness. Throughout the whole of Tuesday the court and its avenues were crowded to excess by persons anxious to hear the result. The bench also presented a thronged assembly of magistrates, amongst whom were the Hon. F. Byng, the Hon. C. Lennox Butler, Sir Moses Montefiore, and other gentlemen of distinction; but they were doomed to disappointment, as the indictment charging the lady with felony was not presented before the grand jury, owing to the absence of the witnesses. In the early part of the day the judge inquired if the prosecutor, Mr. Allum, was present? Being answered in the affirmative, he ordered him to be called into court. Upon making his appearance, the judge asked him if he had engaged counsel? He said he had engaged Mr. Ballantine. Mr. Ballantine addressed the court, and said it was impossible, as he had been retained for the defence three days ago. The Judge (to the prosecutor): You had better get together your witnesses, as the bill cannot be presented until all the witnesses are present. The prosecutor then left the court for the purpose of collecting the witnesses, but so soon as he had left, the policeman, who is also a witness, went in search of the prosecutor; and so on throughout the entire day, one going in search of another, until at last there was not one witness to be found, with the exception of the policeman. At eight o'clock the grand jury entered the court with the last bill found. The Judge remarked that it was an extraordinary circumstance that the witnesses in Miss Osborne's case were not forthcoming. An officer of the court said there had been one in court a short time since, but he was half drunk. He went away again, and said he was going to look for some other witnesses. The Judge: It is an extraordinary proceeding. Let the whole of their recognisances be estreated, with the exception of the policeman; and the prosecutor can, if he like, press the indictment at the next sessions.—Alleged Cruelty.—Matthew Paris and his wife were indicted for having unlawfully neglected to provide proper and sufficient food, clothing, &c., for their infant children. As the particulars of this case appeared in our Metropolitan News last week, a repetition of them is unnecessary. The prosecution was instituted by the officers of the Strand Union, in whose district the prisoners resided. The prisoners withdrew their plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty, and were ordered to enter into their own recognisances in 20*l.* to appear and receive the judgment of the court when called upon.

Miscellaneous.

The New Tariff.—The following is a List of the Gardening and Farming Articles which, by the proposed modification of the Tariff, will henceforth be imported free of duty:—

Alkali, not being Barilla
Alum
,, rock
Ashes, pearl and pot
,, soap, weed, and wood unenumerated
Bark, for tanners' or dyers' use
Basket rods, peeled and unpeeled
Bones of cattle and other animals, and of fish (except whale fins), whether burnt or not, or as animal charcoal
Brimstone, refined in rolls
,, in flour
,, not refined
Chalk, unmanufactured
Flax and tow, or codilla of hemp and flax, dressed and undressed
Flower roots
Greaves for dogs, and tallow greaves
Guano
Gypsum
Hemp, dressed
,, rough or undressed, or any other vegetable substance of, the nature and quality of undressed hemp, and applicable to the same purposes
Hides, not tanned, tawed, curried, or in any way dressed, dry and wet
Hides or pieces of hides, raw or undressed, and unenumerated
Hides tails, buffalo, bull, cow, or ox
Hides, tanned, not otherwise dressed
Hoofs of cattle
Hoops of wood
Horns, horn-tips and pieces of horns
Manures, unenumerated
Prussiate of potash
Rags, old rags, old ropes, or junk, or old fishing-nets, fit only for making paper or pasteboard Rags pulp of ,, woollen
Saltpetre
Seeds, viz.:—acorn; beans, kidney, or French; burnet; cole; forest; garden, unenumerated; grass, unenumerated; lettuce; linseed and flaxseed; parsley; rape; shrub or tree; tares; hemp.
Skins, goose, undressed
,, hare, undressed, otter, undressed
Staves, not exceeding 72 in. in length, 7 in. in breadth, nor 3¼ in. thickness
Straw or grass for platting
Tar
Walnut wood
Wood, birch, hewn, not exceeding 3 feet long, nor exceeding 8 in. square, imported for the sole purpose of making herring barrels for the use of the fisheries

A Mummy from Ichaboe.—Some time ago we described a mummy specimen of the monkey genus, which had been dug up from some twenty feet below the surface of the guano at Ichaboe, and which must, therefore, have been buried for centuries, although it was in a perfect state of preservation. A human mummy, preserved in the same substance, recently reached Liverpool by the Colchester, from Ichaboe. Capt. Withers informs us that the body in question appears, from the name and date inscribed upon the stave of a flour-barrel found along with it in the hammock, to have been that of Christopher Delano, a Portuguese sailor, one of the crew of an American whaler, who was buried in 1791. The body was originally discovered in March last, but was buried again at the back of the island, from whence it was finally removed by Capt. Withers, who has brought it home with him for the benefit of some of our scientific institutions. The body was found about six feet three inches below the surface. Every part of it was in a state of perfect preservation. Even the pig-tail formerly worn by sailors is complete. The hempen hammock and linen found with it were perfectly sound and strong, whilst the wool and flannel about it crumbled to pieces at the touch. The tongue of the mummy is as thin as a wafer, and the end of it wrapped over the front teeth, and the nose is slightly flattened, but in all other respects the body is perfect. It is about five feet nine inches in length, and appears to have been that of a young man. —Liverpool Paper.—With reference to Ichaboe, the daily papers state that Capt. Wilson, of the George and Richard, left that place on the 2d Dec., at which time a few vessels were filling up with the refuse and rubbish which had been thrown aside. Nothing now but the bare rock is left, where for some time past they have been gathering riches. Vessels were then leaving with half cargoes, and others had sailed in ballast for the Brazils and elsewhere. The havoc done to the shipping engaged in this wonderful affair will form a very serious item in the cost of this acquisition. In a few hours in one morning 15 sail were totally dismasted and cut down by crushing each other to the water's edge, and many have gone down. The composition of this guano is asserted by Capt. Wilson to be unquestionably the bodies of penguins, seals, and other marine animals, and the eggs of sea-fowl, the layers of which were easily distinguished. Capt. Wilson states that his opinion is decidedly against the supposition of a further supply from places adjoining, and that the guano of Saldanha Bay is comparatively worthless, like pipe-clay.

BIRTHS.—On Saturday, at Royal Clarence Victualling Yard, Portsmouth, the lady of J. H. Hare, Esq., Her Majesty's ship St. Vincent, of a daughter—5th ult., at Rome, the lady of the Rev. W. Garratt, of a daughter.

DEATHS.—On the 18th ult., at Anerley Bridge Tavern, Penge, Surrey, Mr. T. Colson, late Superintendent of Works of the London and Croydon Railway, aged 62—19th ult., at Corsygedol, B. Lloyd, Esq., brother of Lord Mostyn, and uncle of the Earl of Lichfield, aged 74—19th ult., at Bury St. Edmund's, Vice Admiral Wollaston, aged 78—20th ult., at Edmonton, A. M. Northover, relict of the late T. Northover, Esq., cashier of the Bank of England, aged 78—21st ult., at Odington Rectory, Gloucestershire, Mary Louisa, youngest daughter of the Dean of Gloucester—21st ult., in Grafton-street, Piccadilly, G. L. Prendergast, Esq., late of the East India Company's Civil Service, formerly Chief of Surat, Member of Council at Bombay, and M.P. for Lymington, aged 65—22d ult., at his house in Grosvenor-square, the Earl of Mornington, aged 82—At Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, Colonel G. White, K.T.S., late H.M.'s Receiver of Revenue for the colony of Gibraltar, aged 62—26th ult., Anna Davison, the only daughter of Mr. Veitch, of the Mount Radford Nursery Exeter, aged 21.

WILLIAM CROSSKILL. BEVERLEY IRON WORKS, NEAR HULL, YORKSHIRE.

By inclosing four postage stamps, W. C. will send a List, just published, of the names of upwards of 300 Purchasers of "Patent Clod Crushers" in 1844, with a book of Testimonials, proving that by rolling growing crops of Wheats, Oats, Barley, &c., early in the Spring by his PATENT ROLLER, more healthy plants are produced, and an increase in the yield of One to Two Sacks per Acre; and that whole crops of Corn, Turnips, Beet, &c., are annually grown upon Land which could not be cultivated without it. By trial it has proved itself to be the "Farmers' Friend," in saving his crops from the destructive ravages of the Wireworm and Grub.

CAUTION.—Ten Pounds Reward is offered to any person who will give the Patentee such information as shall lead to the conviction of any person making, selling, or using the PATENT CLOD CRUSHER without licence from the Patentee. A model of the Roller is exhibited at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, London.

Cash Price, with Travelling Wheels complete, delivered in Hull, 6 ft. 6 in., 21*l.*; 6 ft., 19*l.* 10*s.*; 5 ft. 5 in., 18*l.* Should the advanced price of Iron continue until June 1, the price of Clod Crushers will be 24*l.*, 22*l.*, and 20*l.* for the above sizes.

CROSSKILL'S AGRICULTURAL MACHINE SHOW-ROOM, 42, QUEEN STREET, HULL.

Improved One-horse CARTS, with Patent Wheels and Iron Axletrees, price 10*l.* 10*s.* and 12*l.* 12*s.*, and every other Implement known in Agriculture may be had at this Manufactory.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose—1*s.* An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, which do not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The Genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties' profits and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge. Only at METCALFE'S Sole Establishment, 130*B*, Oxford-street, one door from Hoiles-street.

Caution—Beware of the words "From Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.
Patronised by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances, without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the corns altogether unnecessary: (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth;) it adheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate corns and bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or three in one for 2*s.* 9*d.*, and to be had of C. KING, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine vendors in town and country. The genuine has the name of JOHN FOX on the stamp.

A 2*s.* 9*d.* box cures the most obdurate corns.
Ask for "PAUL'S Every Man's Friend."

VAUXHALL COMPOSITE CANDLES, 8½*d.* per lb.
PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES, 10½*d.* per lb.

These are the London cash prices, but the Country ones vary with the distance from town.

Both sorts burn exactly as well as the finest wax, and are cheaper, allowing for the light, than Tallow Moulds.

Sold wholesale to the trade, by EDWARD PRICE & Co., Belmont, Vauxhall; PALMER & Co., Sutton-street, Clerkenwell; and WM. MARCHANT, 253, Regent-circus, Oxford-street.

Until these Candles become generally sold throughout the country, EDWARD PRICE & Co. will supply any private families unable to obtain them in their own neighbourhood, with a quantity not less than 5*l.* worth, direct from the factory. On a line being addressed to Belmont, Vauxhall, inclosing a Post-office Order for 5*l.*, (payable to Edward Price & Co., not to Edward Price, or Mr. Price), they will forward a box of the Vauxhall Composite, or of the others, or a mixed box, as may be directed, to that exact amount.

WIRE WORK, IRON AND WIRE FENCES, &c.

JAMES GROOM, No. 2, KING-STREET, KENSINGTON, begs leave most respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, &c., he continues to manufacture every description of Wire Work, Iron and Wire Fences for Lawns, Parks, Pleasure Grounds, &c. against cattle, or to exclude hares, rabbits, foxes, cats, or rats; flower-borders, arches for walks, trainers of various descriptions for climbing-plants, trellis for houses, &c.; also larders, pheasantries, verandahs &c. in wood or iron, executed in a superior manner.

J.G. was apprenticed to the late Mr. John Parker, of Knightsbridge, and many years foreman of the country work; and as a workman is well known in most counties of England.

MONEY.—£14,000 Trust-money to be lent on mortgage at Three and a-Half per cent.; not less than 4000*l.* in one sum.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Bailey, Law Stationer, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn.

Under the Patronage of His Royal Highness Prince Albert.

THE NEW SPORTING MAGAZINE for MARCH is beautifully embellished with "A CALL FOR THE CLIPPERS," engraved by S. Allen, from a Painting by H. Alken; and BRUSH, a celebrated Retriever, engraved by E. Hacker, from a Painting by A. Cooper, R.A.

CONTENTS:—Carting Game, by Beeswing—A Call for the Clippers, by Castor.—Leatherlungs the "Leg," by the Editor.—Brush, a Retriever.—Thoughts on Fox-hunting, by Observer.—On the Game Laws, Shooting, &c., by Cecil.—Blackmoor Vale Hunt Country, by "Fiat Justitia."—The Field and its Associations, by an Old Englander.—On Training the Racehorse, by Cotherstone.—Cariboo Hunting; or, a Sporting Ramble in New Brunswick, by a Subaltern—Game and the Game Laws, by D.—A few Days in the Vale of Berkeley, by Lord William Lennox.—Stallions for the Season.—A Run with Sir Watkin Wynn's Hounds.—Literature.—Public Amusements of the Metropolis.—Monthly Miscellany.—State of the Odds, &c. &c. &c.

The NEW SPORTING MAGAZINE may be had of all Booksellers.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

JONAS WEBB'S PORTRAIT.—THE FARMERS' MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST, for March, 1845, is embellished with splendid Steel Engravings of JONAS WEBB, the celebrated Southdown Breeder, and a HEREFORD BULL, the property of Mr. Perry, for which the First Prize was awarded at the Royal Agricultural Society's Show, at Southampton, besides numerous Illustrations of Agricultural Implements, &c., and contains a Memoir of Jonas Webb, of Babraham. Remarks on Ploughing, with numerous Engravings, by T. Sullivan, Esq. On the Practical Use of Guano for Spring Crops of Grain and Roots. The Influence of the Atmosphere on the Health of Animals.—By Cuthbert W. Johnson, Esq., F.R.S. Report of Experiments with Special Manures in 1843.—By Mr. John Dickson. Corn Rents. Paper or or Gold for a Currency? The Weather of 1844. Report on Experiments with Guano.—By. M. M. Milburn. Agricultural Chemistry Association. Landlord and Tenant.—By a Tenant Farmer. Gloucester Farmers' Club. Burton-upon-Trent Cattle Assurance Association. The Epidemic among Cattle. The Malt Trade.—By John Barleycorn. General Agricultural Protection Society. Great Dinner at Freemasons' Hall. On Malt for Feeding Cattle.—By Augustus Stafford O'Brien. Breeding and Management of Horses on a Farm.—By John Burke, Jun. The Grape-Vine for Domestic Vintage.—By J. Towers. Leases and Corn Rents. Disease in Cattle. Review—Hillingdon Hall; or, the Cockney Squire. Tithe Commutation. Royal Agricultural Society of England. Farmers' Club House. Poor and County Rates. Disease among Horses.—By Medicus. Meteorological Diary. Calendar of Horticulture. Agricultural Queries. Answers to Agricultural Queries. Agricultural Reports. Review of the Corn Trade. Averages—Prices of Seeds, Hops, Potatoes, Wool, &c.

The FARMER'S MAGAZINE, Vol. XI., is just published, with 12 fine Steel Engravings, and may be had by order of all Booksellers. OFFICE, 24, NORFOLK-STREET, STRAND.

TO FARMERS.—Read the First Number of the AGRICULTURAL MAGAZINE, AND JOURNAL OF SCIENTIFIC FARMING, published this day, at 1*s.* 6*d.*, which contains splendid Engravings of His Royal Highness Prince Albert's celebrated Scotch Ox; Plans of Mr. Warnes's Bullock Boxes, &c., &c., besides a variety of Practical Agricultural information, not to be found in any other Periodical. Published by SCRIPPS and SON, 13, Southmolton-street, Bond-street, London; and may be had of all other Booksellers.

HOOD'S MAGAZINE for MARCH, price 2*s.* 6*d.*, contains a finely executed Portrait of THOMAS HOOD, engraved by Heath in a new manner, after a calotype by Collins, from a bust by Davis: also—

1. Phantoms and Realities of a Starlight Night, by F. O. Ward.
2. Dante and Beatrice, by Walter Savage Landon.
3. Continental Railways, by R. Monckton Milnes, M.P.
4. A Note from my Note-book, by T. Hood.
5. The Tomb of St. Praxeds, by Robert Browning.
6. Moloch, or the Song of the Furnace, by Edward J. Selwyn.
7. Epigram, by T. Hood.
8. Beggar Jacob, by R. Monckton Milnes, M.P.
9. Railway Sonnets, by Richard Howitt.
10. Luke Hensellin's Hammer, by Mr. Whitehead.
11. The Pastor and his Son, by the Mountaineer.
12. Elinor's Pilgrimage, by Miss Lawrence.

Also a Bout with the Burchen—Gideon Shaddoe—Good Deeds—Review—Reynard the Fox—Echo.

London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

In 8vo. boards, with very numerous woodcuts, price 10*s.* 6*d.*

LINDLEY'S ELEMENTS OF BOTANY STRUCTURAL, PHYSIOLOGICAL, SYSTEMATICAL, AND MEDICAL.
Being a Fourth Edition of the "Outline of the First Principles of Botany."

Contents of the Work—I. STRUCTURAL and PHYSIOLOGICAL BOTANY:—1, Elementary Organs; 2, Compound Organs; 3, Root; 4, Stem; 5, Leaf-buds; 6, Leaves; 7, Food and Secretions; 8, Flower-buds; 9, Inflorescence; 10, Floral Envelopes; 11, Male Organs; 12, Disk; 13, Female Organs; 14, Ovule; 15, Impregnation; 16, Fruit; 17, Seed; 18, Acrogens, or Flowerless Plants

II. SYSTEMATICAL BOTANY:—1, Linnean Sexual System; 2, Analytical Method; 3, Natural System; 4, Natural System of De Candolle (this Part illustrated with Numerous Figures of the details of the more important Natural Orders); 5, the Alliances of Plants. 6, Sketch of a New Distribution of the Vegetable Kingdom.

III. MEDICAL BOTANY; consisting of a Classified List of the Principal Medical Plants that are known in a living state in Europe; with an Explanation of the Purposes to which they are applied Medicinally.

TAYLOR and WALTON, and all Booksellers.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE, patronised by "Her MAJESTY," H.R.H. Prince ALBERT, the Royal Family, and the several Courts of Europe. A FRAGRANT WHITE POWDER, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue, for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives a sweetness and perfume to the breath, bestowing at once cleanliness, and the appearance and reality of health. Price 2*s.* 9*d.* per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp thus,—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed to each Box. Ask for ROWLAND'S ODONTO. Sold by them, and by Perfumers and Chemists.

 All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.

PROTECTION AGAINST RAIN.—WATERPROOF CAPES, suitable for GARDENERS and others exposed to the weather, from 5*s.* 6*d.* to 25*s.* each, are made by J. GROSE, 94, Tooley-street, London, where also may be had his approved Patent Waterproof Coats, Trousers, Leggings, Driving Capes, Chaise Aprons, &c.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 30, who has a thorough knowledge of his profession in all its branches, having devoted the whole of his life to his business, and can have an unexceptionable character from his present and former employers.—Direct to T. H. P., Mrs. Hawkins, Augusta Cottage, Hounslow, Middlesex.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A Married man, who understands his business in all its branches; has lately left a place where he had a great deal of Early Forcing of every description to manage; likewise a first-rate collection of all kinds of Plants; and can have a good character of four years from the gentleman he has lately left. Wages not so much an object, if a comfortable situation. Direct to G.Z., Mr. Chapman, Nurseryman, Bedford-lane, Clapham, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A Middle-aged married Man, with a family, who well understands his business in early forcing and framing, and the management of Wall-fruit. Can have 10 years' good character from his present employer. Direct, R. Brand, Chadwell Heath, Ilford, Essex.

AS GARDENER.—An industrious Single Man, aged 35, who understands his business in the Greenhouse, Frames, Vines, and Flower Garden, and can milk a cow if required. Can have an unexceptionable character. Direct to Y. O. U., Flanagan & Son, Seedsmen and Florists, 9, Mansion House-street, near the Bank.

AS GARDENER.—A Married Man without family, aged 36, who perfectly understands the management of a Greenhouse, Vines, forcing Cucumbers and Melons, Flower and Kitchen Garden, Meadow-land, &c. His wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have 5 years' good character; leaving on account of his employer removing.—Direct to JOHN HEWETT, Mrs. Deacon Hume, Great Dood's House, Reigate, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—An active, industrious, married Man, aged 40, without incumbrance, who has a practical knowledge of his business, including Hothouse, Greenhouse, and Early Forcing; Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower-garden, with care of meadow land if required. His character for honesty, sobriety, ability, and general good conduct will bear the strictest investigation.—Direct to F. L., Mr. Frazer's Nursery, Lea-bridge-road, Essex.

AS GARDENER or UNDER-GARDENER, a respectable married Man, aged 30, with good character; has no objection to look after a horse and gig, or a cow.—Direct to E.A.M., Post-office, Tring, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A steady, industrious, married Man, aged 33, who is practically acquainted with the routine of Forcing, Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower garden, and can obtain an unexceptionable character of long standing.—Direct to H. T., Post-office, Buxted, Uckfield, Sussex.

AS GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF. A married Man, aged 33, who has a thorough knowledge of Gardening in its different departments, and can have an excellent character of 6 years from the situation he has now left. Direct to A. B., P. Stein, Nurseryman, Highgate.

AS GARDENER.—D. FERGUSON, Stowe, Buckingham, with confidence recommends to the notice of any nobleman or gentleman in want of a Gardener, where a married man is kept, ISAAC PASSFIELD, 26 years of age, who has been employed as one of the foremen in Stowe Gardens nearly 4 years, during which time his conduct has been very satisfactory.

AS GARDENER.—J. SCOTT having left his situation, would be glad to engage with any nobleman or gentleman who is in want of a Gardener. J. S. thoroughly understands his profession, is married, aged 34, and can be well recommended by his late employer, Sir H. FLETCHER, Bart., with whom he lived as Gardener 8 years.—Direct to J. SCOTT, Walton-on-Thames, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A Single Man, who has had extensive practical experience in the approved system of forcing Pines, Vines, Peaches, Cherries, Strawberries, Melons, Cucumbers, Mushrooms, &c. &c. Also the Cultivation of Stove, Conservatory, Greenhouse, and Orchidaceous Plants; the forcing and keeping of a regular supply of flowers during the winter months, for the conservatory and drawing-room. Has held situations of responsibility in some of the most scientific and ornamental flower-gardens in Europe. The highest testimonials will be given from some of the most practical men of the present day, for the above abilities, as well as general conduct. Any Nobleman or Gentleman requiring the services of a first-rate practical man, will find the Advertiser an acquisition in his establishment. Is 30 years of age, and a native of Northumberland.—Direct to P. E., 21, Robert-street, Hampstead-road, London.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 30, who has had extensive Practice in the Cultivation of Pines, Vines, and Forcing generally, Flower and Kitchen Garden. Can give 4 years' reference as to character, abilities, &c.—Direct J. F., 20, Percival-st., Northampton-square, London.

AS GARDENER.—An active single man, aged 32, who is well acquainted with his business, and can have a good character from the place he has just left. Address to A.B., Mr. Cripps's, Florist and Seedman, Tunbridge Wells.

AS SECOND GARDENER, or a Single-handed place where there is a Greenhouse, a young Man, aged 20, who can have 2 years' good character.—Direct to A.B., Bedford Nursery, Brixton.

AS FARMING-BAILIFF or AGENT.—A Man of great and general experience, whose character will bear the strictest inquiry, and who has been for many years (and is at present) a practical farmer, wishes to retire from business on his own account. He has a small competency, and would accept a confidential situation in the service of a gentleman engaged in Agricultural pursuits or landed property. The Advertiser is of active habits, and willing to make himself useful in the labour of a farm. Unexceptionable references can be given, and his terms would be moderate.—Direct to W. J., Post-office, Worcester.

AS BAILIFF.—A married Man, aged 45, who has been accustomed to farming from his infancy; has lived upwards of 20 years in his last place (in Middlesex), as Gardener and Bailiff; would not object to managing a Kitchen Garden with a Farm; his Wife could manage the Dairy, if required. The most satisfactory testimonials will be given by his late employer. Direct to A.B., Mr. Ronaldson, Nurseryman, Brentford.

AS COACHMAN and GARDENER, or UNDER-GARDENER, a Young Man from the country, age 27, who can have four years' good character from his last place. Direct to S. W., J. Bailey's Livery stables, 57, London Wall.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1845.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.

The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l*.

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 3 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.

Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Thomas Farncomb, Esq., Alderman, Chairman.

William Leaf, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Richard E. Arden, Esq. — J. Humphery, Esq., Ald., M.P.
William Banbury, Esq. — Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq. — Thomas Kelly, Esq., Ald.
Thomas Camplin, Esq. — Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
James Clift, Esq — Lewis Pocock, Esq.

Physician.—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.

Surgeon.—W. Coulson, Esq., 2, Frederick's place, Old Jewry.

Consulting Actuary.—Professor Hall, of King's College.

Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.

Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l*., the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l*. per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l*.

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term.
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured.

A Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.

A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

BRITISH AMERICA.—HER MAJESTY'S PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

TO EMIGRANTS.—THE NEW BRUNSWICK and NOVA SCOTIA LAND COMPANY (empowered by Royal Charter and Act of Parliament) have resolved to SELL portions of their LAND on the following terms, for Lots of 100 Acres each, viz.:—

3*l*. to be paid down.
[No payment required in the Second Year.]
3*l*. to be paid on or before 1st Dec. in the Third Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Fourth Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Fifth Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Sixth Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Seventh Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Eighth Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Ninth Year.
3*l*. do. do. in the Tenth Year.
4*l*. do. do. in the Eleventh Year.

Total 31*l*. sterling, without any charge for interest.

The territory belonging to the Company is upwards of half a million acres, situate in Her Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, between the Rivers St. John and Miramichi. Several other rivers run through the tract, on one of which, the Nashwaak, is situated the Company's principal town and settlement of Stanley. Here is a church, schoolhouse, corn and saw mills, and many houses belonging to resident settlers. The Chief Commissioner and the Company's Establishment are at Stanley, and there is also a resident surgeon.

The passage from the chief port in the province St. John) to the Company's town of Stanley may be made in 24 hours, at a very moderate expense.

For further particulars (gratis) apply (if by letter post paid) to the Secretary, 3, Cornhill-court, London; or to Mr. I. I. BIRCHAL, 16, St. Mary's Gate, Manchester.—London, March 8.

PROTECTION AGAINST RAIN.—WATERPROOF CAPES, suitable for GARDENERS and others exposed to the weather, from 5*s*. 6*d*. to 25*s*. each, are made by J. GROSE, 94, Tooley-street, London, where also may be had his approved Patent Waterproof Coats, Trousers, Leggings, Driving Capes, Chaise Aprons, &c.

NEW WORK BY MRS. LOUDON.

This month will be published, fcap. 8vo, with an Engraving on Steel, and Illustrations on Wood,

THE LADY'S COUNTRY COMPANION;

OR, HOW TO ENJOY A COUNTRY LIFE RATIONALLY.

By Mrs. LOUDON, Author of "Gardening for Ladies," &c.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.

Shortly will be published, in one vol. 8vo, with a Memoir of Mr. LOUDON, by Mrs. LOUDON, and a Portrait,

SELF INSTRUCTION FOR YOUNG GARDENERS, FORESTERS, BAILIFFS, LAND STEWARDS, AND FARMERS;

In Arithmetic, Book-keeping, Geometry, Mensuration, Practical Trigonometry, Mechanics, Land Surveying, Levelling, Planning and Mapping, Architectural Drawing, and Isometrical Projection and Perspective; with Examples, shewing their applications to Horticultural and Agricultural Purposes. By the late J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S., H.S., &c.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

HOT WATER FOR BOTTOM-HEAT.

J. WEEKS AND DAY, ARCHITECTS, &c., Gloucester Place, King's Road, Chelsea, HORTICULTURAL BUILDERS, and Hot-water Apparatus Manufacturers, invite the attention of Horticulturists to their Improved Plan of Bottom-Heat, now becoming so universally adopted.

From the extensive Practice they have been honoured with for 20 years in designing and building CONSERVATORIES, GREENHOUSES, HOTHOUSES, PITS, &c. &c., and erecting their HOT-WATER APPARATUS to every description of Buildings to which heat is applicable, J. WEEKS and DAY have the greatest confidence in recommending their BOILERS as the most efficient of any yet invented, their largest being capable of heating a range of Forcing Houses 300 feet in length, with a comparatively small quantity of fuel, and only requiring attention once in 10 hours. To be seen in use at most of the London Nurseries, also at their Manufactory; and a variety of Horticultural Erections, Models, Plans, &c. &c.

Just published, 4th Edition, greatly enlarged, 8vo, with nearly Two Hundred and Forty Illustrations on Wood, 21*s*. cloth,

ELEMENTS of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE; comprehending the Cultivation of Plants, the Husbandry of Domestic Animals, and the Economy of the Farm.

By DAVID LOW, Esq., F.R.S.E.

Professor of Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh.

"The best work on farming in our language."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

By the same Author, just published,

ON LANDED PROPERTY and the ECONOMY of ESTATES.

8vo, with numerous Wood Engravings. 21*s*. Also,

THE BREEDS of the DOMESTICATED ANIMALS of GREAT BRITAIN.

2 vols., 4to, with 56 Coloured Plates, 16*l*. 16*s*.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

WORKS BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.

A New Edition, corrected, with a Supplement, containing above 160 additional pages of Letterpress and nearly 300 New Engravings, in 1 very thick vol. 8vo. of above 1300 pages, and 2000 Engravings on Wood, 3*l*. 3*s*. cloth,—An

ENCYCLOPÆDIA of COTTAGE FARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE and FURNITURE; containing Designs for Cottages, Villas, Farm Houses, Farmeries, Country Inns, Public Houses, Parochial Schools, &c.; with the requisite Fittings-up, Fixtures, Offices, &c. and general Estimates of the Expense.

By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.

 The NEW SUPPLEMENT separately, 7*s*. 6*d*. sewed.

By the same Author,

ARBORETUM et FRUTICETUM BRITANNICUM. 8 vols. (4 of letterpress and 4 of plates), new and corrected impressions of the plates, 10*l*.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA of TREES and SHRUBS. 2000 Woodcuts, 2*l*. 10*s*.

HORTUS LIGNOSUS LONDINENSIS. 7*s*. 6*d*.

ARCHITECTURAL MAGAZINE. 5 vols. 6*l*. 6*s*.

THE SUBURBAN GARDENER. Numerous Woodcuts, 20*s*.

REPTON'S LANDSCAPE GARDENING and ARCHITECTURE, 30*s*.; with the Plates coloured, 3*l*. 10*s*.

On the LAYING-OUT and PLANTING of CEMETERIES, and the Improvement of Churchyards. 60 Woodcuts, 12*s*.

GARDENERS' MAGAZINE. Complete in 9 vols. numerous Woodcuts. 9*l*. 17*s*.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE

BRUSSELS BRITISH GAZETTE.

Established in 1837,

5 frs. per quarter, postage free, for Belgium, France, and England.

This weekly paper, which contains a careful digest of British, Irish, Colonial, Belgian, and Foreign news, as well as Literary Reviews and other original matter, is now the largest one published in Belgium.

As there are about 15,000 British residents in that country, it is clear that the BRUSSELS GAZETTE is an excellent medium of publicity for British and Continental advertisers.

Published at Browne's English Library, 73, Montagne de la Cour, Brussels. Agent in London, Mr. DEACON, Walbrook.

 Orders received at all the Post Offices on the Continent.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s*.

London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

THE HORTICULTURAL MAGAZINE.—A new Periodical on Practical Gardening and the Cultivation of Flowers, Fruits, and Vegetables, published on the 1st of every Month. Price One Shilling; and Sold by all Booksellers. Advertisements, Books for Review, and Communications for the Editor to be sent to the Publisher, T. HOULSTON, 131, Strand, London.

In 12mo, price 2*s*. 6*d*. cloth, the Second Edition, revised and improved, of STRACHAN'S AGRICULTURAL TABLES, for computing the Weight of Cattle by Measurement; the Quantity of Hay in Ricks of different Forms; the Value of Land, &c.; the Measurement of Drains and Dunghills. Also a few other Practical Tables; with Rules, Examples, and Directions for using the Tables.

OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co. London.

MECHI'S LETTERS ON AGRICULTURE.

On Thursday, March 20th, will be published, small 4to, 1*s*. 6*d*. sewed; or 3*s* cloth,

A SERIES OF LETTERS ON

AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT; with an Appendix. By JOHN JOSEPH MECHI. With Four Plans of the Farm and Machinery.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

PARKER'S COLLECTIONS IN POPULAR LITERATURE.

This Day, 3*s* 6*d*.

A SKETCH OF THE MILITARY HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By the Rev. G. R. GLEIG, M.A., Chaplain-General to the Forces, and Chaplain to Chelsea Hospital.

 A List of the Works published in this Series may be had on application.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

This Day.

PSALM TUNE BOOKS, without Words, containing Eighty-Two Tunes from the Psalter. Edited by JOHN HULLAH, Professor of Vocal Music, King's College, London.

The Tunes Harmonised for Three Equal Voices, 2*s*. 6*d*.

The Tunes Harmonised for Four Voices (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass), 3*s*.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

PARKER'S COLLECTIONS IN POPULAR LITERATURE.

This day, with numerous Woodcuts, 4*s*. 6*d*.

AMUSEMENTS IN CHESS: I. Sketches of the History, Antiquities, and Curiosities of the Game. II. Easy Lessons in Chess; a Selection of Games, illustrative of the various Openings, analysed and explained for the use of Young Players. III. A Selection of Chess Problems; or, Ends of Games won or drawn by brilliant and scientific Moves. By CHARLES TOMLINSON.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.

OFFICE FOR PATENTS OF INVENTIONS AND REGISTRATIONS OF DESIGNS, 14, LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

THE Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, (or by letter, prepaid,) to Mr. ALEXANDER PRINCE, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields.

News of the Week.

On Friday last Mr. Duncombe again brought before the House of Commons the question of opening his letters at the Post Office, and moved that Col. Maberly be ordered to attend at the bar for the purpose of giving evidence on the subject. Sir J. Graham opposed the motion, as unjust towards himself, after he had been acquitted by the secret committees of both Houses: but admitted that no circumstances connected with Mr. Duncombe's conduct had come to his knowledge in the discharge of his official duties which was in the least degree inconsistent with Mr. Duncombe's loyalty, or with his duty as a member of Parliament. Lord J. Russell and other members of the Opposition considered that this admission removed the stigma of suspicion from Mr. Duncombe, and therefore declined to support the motion. After a long debate, which Mr. D'Israeli made remarkable by a bitter attack upon Sir. R. Peel, for what he described as political tyranny towards his supporters, the House negatived the motion by 186 to 113. The question, however, will not be allowed to rest, for on Monday Mr. Duncombe gave notice that after Easter he will move for leave to bring in a Bill to secure the inviolability of letters passing through the Post Office, and Mr. Sheil gave notice of a resolution expressing the regret of the House that the letters of foreigners residing in this country had been opened without their knowledge, and that information respecting disturbances in the Papal States had been communicated to a foreign power. On the same day the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the sugar resolutions, in accordance with the scheme developed in Sir R. Peel's financial statement: but several practical objections having been made to the proposed classification of sugars, the Government consented to postpone them for further inquiry.—On Tuesday, after a series of resolutions had been adopted respecting Committees on Railway Bills, Mr. Cowper obtained leave to re-introduce his Bill of last session, to promote the letting of field-gardens to the labouring poor. Mr. Cowper's speech, and the discussion which followed, will be found at length in our parliamentary report, and will doubtless be perused with interest by all classes of our readers. It will be observed that Sir J. Graham, on the part of Government, considered the Bill an improvement on that of last session, more particularly in regard to the limitation of the allotments to half an acre. Sir J. Graham also said, that the attention which Mr. Cowper had bestowed on the subject did him infinite honour, and he was sure that any measure which could reasonably be expected to add to the comfort, welfare, and enjoyment of the agricultural peasantry, must be regarded by the House with respect and attention, and with a wish for its success. On Wednesday the House went into Committee on the Property Tax Bill. After negativing by 96 to 23 an amendment for throwing out the measure altogether, the House rejected by 69 to 17 another amendment, limiting the tax to two years instead of three. The first clause was then agreed to, continuing the tax for three years longer. A desultory discussion on the other clauses ensued, during which several suggestions for removing the inequalities of the tax were made by different members; but Sir R. Peel objected to any alterations, and all the clauses were ultimately agreed to. Mr. Spooner, however, and other Members, gave notice that on bringing up the report they should move amendments allowing persons to deduct the sums paid for life assurances, &c., from the amount of income returned for assessment. On Thursday, Mr. Ewart obtained leave to bring in a Bill to enable town councils to establish museums of art in country towns; Lord John Russell stated that after Easter he will bring under the consideration of the House the state of the labouring poor; and Sir R. Peel announced that in the course of the present session he will introduce a Bill to repeal the civil disabilities of the Jews, so far as municipal and corporate offices are concerned. It will be seen by our Parliamentary Report, that the Lord Chancellor introduced this measure last night in the House of Peers, and that it was read a first time.

The Overland Mail of 1st Feb. has arrived this week. The Punjaub is again in a state of anarchy, and it is supposed that the Indian Government will find it necessary to take possession of the country. The Governor-General was expected to visit the North-west provinces in May, and the collection of a numerous army on the frontier suggests the impression that war is considered imminent. Accounts from Switzerland are said to have been received in Paris, stating that the Extraordinary Diet have decided, by a small majority, that the Jesuits shall be expelled not only from Lucerne, but from the whole of Switzerland. This result was anticipated from the tenour of the discussions which had already taken place in the Diet, but until we have direct intelligence from Zurich, the statement must rest on the authority of the French papers. It is certain, however, from a communication made by Lord Aberdeen to our Minister in Switzerland, that any change in the federal constitution, by whatever party it may be effected, will lead to the intervention of the great European Powers.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family continue at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty has taken horse exercise in the riding-school, and her usual walks in the Palace Gardens during the week. The Prince has transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall, and presided at a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission. Her Majesty and His Royal Highness have also honoured with their presence during the week the French Plays and the Haymarket Theatre. On Wednesday the Queen held her first levee for this season at St. James's Palace, which was very numerously attended.—Colonel the Hon. C. Grey has succeeded Col. Bulkeley as Equerry in Waiting to the Queen, and Major-General Sir E. Bowater has succeeded Colonel Wylde as Equerry in Waiting to Prince Albert. Colonel Bowles, first Aide-de-Camp to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and Comptroller of his household, has received the appointment of Master of the Household to Her Majesty, in the room of the Hon. C. A. Murray.

The Vacant Garter.—It is understood that the garter vacant by the death of the Marquis of Westminster has been conferred on the Marquis of Camden.

Parliamentary Movements.—On Monday Mr. Deedes was elected member for East Kent without opposition, in the room of Sir E. Knatchbull. Mr. R. B. Sheridan was returned for Shaftesbury on Wednesday unopposed.

The Cabinet.—It is confidently reported that Mr. Gladstone will return to the Cabinet, and hold an office in the Administration yet higher than that from which he recently seceded. The right hon. gentleman has, it is said, reconsidered the subject of the increased grant to Maynooth, and has intimated that he is prepared to support both that grant and the other projected educational institutions of a liberal constitution in Ireland.

Death of Lord Wynford.—This nobleman, the Right Hon. William Draper Best, first Baron Wynford, died on Sunday morning, at his seat, Leesons, Kent, in his 78th year. In 1794 he married the second daughter of Jerome Knap, Esq., who has been some years dead, and by whom he had 10 children, four of whom only, however, survive him, namely, the Hon. William Samuel, who succeeds to the title, born 1798, and married the youngest daughter of William Hoytt, Esq., of Berkshire; the Hon. Captain Best, R.N., married to the second daughter of Lord Kenyon; the Hon. and Rev. Samuel Best, rector of Abbot Anne, Hants, and married the youngest daughter of Sir James Burroughs, one of the Judges of the Common Pleas; and the Hon. Grace Anne, married to P. L. Godsal, Esq. The late peer held for some time a confidential office in the household of George IV., when Prince Regent, and was afterwards for many years a distinguished advocate in the Court of Common Pleas as Sergeant Best. In 1819, he was appointed one of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench, and in 1824 was raised to the Chief Justiceship of the Court of Common Pleas. In 1829 he was elevated to the peerage, and then retired from the bench, but was soon after, in consideration of his legal acquirements, named one of the Deputy Speakers of the House of Peers. Lord Wynford had for many years suffered severely from rheumatic gout, to the extent of totally paralysing his lower extremities, but so zealous was he in the performance of his parliamentary duties, that he has frequently had himself rolled in a chair to his seat in the House, when the privilege was always, under these circumstances, accorded to him of speaking without rising.

Death of Baron Gurney.—We regret to announce the death of Sir John Gurney, late one of the Barons of Exchequer, which took place on Saturday in Lincoln's-inn-fields, in his 78th year. In 1793 he was called to the bar, and in 1797 he married the daughter of W. Hawes, M.D. In 1816 he was appointed King's Counsel, and in 1832 was promoted to the bench, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. It will be recollected that he resigned his judicial office on account of ill-health a few weeks since. The habits of Sir John Gurney were in perfect harmony with the reputation for benevolence which so many members of his family enjoy. It is said that his clerk was in the habit of dispensing several hundreds a-year in small donations upon cases carefully selected and liberally relieved. Sir J. Gurney was eminent for his attention to religious duties. In early life he was a member of a Baptist congregation at Clapham, and as he advanced in years he manifested an evident leaning towards Unitarian opinions; but before his elevation to the bench he joined the Church of England.

Official Appointments.—The office of Lord Warden of the New Forest, vacant by the death of the Right Hon. W. Sturges Bourne, has been conferred by Her Majesty upon His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. It is rumoured that Sir Eardley Wilmot, Lieutenant-Governor of Van Diemen's Land, has been offered the option of succeeding Sir G. Gipps in the government of New South Wales; and that in the event of such an arrangement General Napier, now Lieut.-Governor of Jersey, will take Sir E. Wilmot's present appointment, together with the command of the forces in all the Australian colonies.—The Hon. William Cust, commissioner of Customs, died on the 4th inst. Mr. Cust's death places a commissionership of Customs at the disposal of Government.

The Attorney-General.—Sir William and Lady Follett, accompanied by their two eldest daughters, arrived in Park-street on Saturday night from Italy. The Attorney-General's health has greatly improved, indeed it is said to be restored. He came from Italy by way of Marseilles and Paris to this country.

New Commissions.—A commission has passed the Great Seal, appointing the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan, Thomas Starkie, Esq., Q.C., Robert Vaughan Richards, Esq., Q.C., Harry Bellenden Ker, Esq., and Andrew Amos, Esq., to be Her Majesty's commissioners for digesting the criminal law, and James John Lonsdale, Esq., to be secretary to the commission. The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Coleridge, the Hon. J. S. Wortley, F. Kelly, Esq., W. Whateley, Esq., J. Greenwood, Esq., Sir W. Heathcote, Bart., E. Denison, Esq., and T. G. B. Estcourt, Esq., to be Her Majesty's commissioners to inquire into the expediency of altering the circuits of the Judges in England and Wales.

Legal Promotions.—Messrs. Lee, Parry, and Wood, of the Equity Bar; Messrs. Humfrey, Hayward, Batt, and Gurney, of the Common Law Bar; have been sworn in as Queen's Counsel. Sergeants Manning and Channel have received patents of precedence. Mr. Chambers, it seems, is not included in the promotion.

The Church.—The Rev. J. E. Tyler, B.D., Rector of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, is to have the canonry vacant by the death of the late Rev. Sydney Smith. The stipend, by the recent Act, is reduced to 1000*l.* a year.

National Debt.—Accounts have been issued from the National Debt Office, showing the results of operations undertaken from 1822 to 1844 for reducing the charge on the debt, and the terms on which the reduction has been made. The total annual interest saved during that period amounts to 3,051,800*l.* Also, accounts of the unredeemed public debt, from 1817 to 1844, and the amount of unfunded debt in Exchequer-bills, from which it appears that in 1817 the capital of the unredeemed funded debt was 796,200,191*l.*, and the annual charge 29,842,014*l.*; while in 1844 the former was 772,169,092*l.*, and the latter 28,516,882*l.* The amount of capital in Exchequer-bills in 1817 was 44,650,300*l.*, and the interest 2,173,927*l.*, while in 1844 they were respectively 18,407,300*l.*, and 594,051*l.*

Wheat and Flour Returns.—Numerous returns and papers relative to the subject of corn and wheat, all bearing more or less upon the question of the corn-laws, have been published since the opening of Parliament. Among them is one in the shape of an account of wheat imported from the United States of America into Canada, and of wheat, and wheat-flour, imported into Great Britain and Ireland from the United States and Canada. The following is the gist of the information thus procured. The total quantity of wheat imported from the United States into Canada, from the 11th October, 1843, to the 31st July, 1844, amounted to 31,2[illegible]5 qrs., the amount of duty received thereon being 4689*l.* The quantities of wheat imported into the United Kingdom from the United States (for home consumption), from 11th Oct., 1843, to the 5th July, 1844, amounted to 2421 qrs., paying a duty of 204*8l.*; and of wheat-flour, 30,950 cwts., paying a duty of 9579*l.* The quantities of wheat and wheat-flour, the produce of Canada, imported into Great Britain and Ireland (for home consumption), from 11th Oct., 1843, to 31st Dec., 1844, amounted as follows:—wheat, 50,139 qrs., paying a duty of 2627*l.*; and wheat-flour, 882,261 cwts., paying a duty of 15,173*l.* Another Parliamentary return has been issued, containing accounts of wheat delivered from warehouse or vessel, duty free, under the Act 5th and 6th Victoria, cap. 92, of flour, &c., substituted for Wheat; and of the delivery of flour and biscuit so substituted, showing when and where delivered, &c. From a summary of the various accounts presented, it appears that the total quantity of wheat delivered from warehouses or vessels, duty free, under the new Corn Law Act, amounted to 118,089 quarters; the quantities of fine wheat flour deposited in warehouses, to 119 947 cwt.; the quantity of captains' biscuits to 20,895 cwt.; the quantity of standard navy biscuit to 95,925 cwt.; and the quantity of common ship's biscuit to 268,185 cwt.; only 8743 cwt. of fine wheat flour were delivered for home consumption. The remaining portion, together with the total quantity of all the other biscuit, was either taken out for exportation as merchandise or stores, or remained in warehouse on the 5th Jan., 1845.

The Colonies of Great Britain.—On the 6th June, 1844, an address was made to the Crown by the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. Hume, for various returns relative to the colonies, and the population and trade thereof. The result of this address has been the presentation to Parliament of an interesting paper, which was ordered to be printed a few days ago. We annex the following particulars, gleaned from the statistical information afforded by the returns before us:—Of our colonies in North America, including Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward's Island and Newfoundland, it appears that the gross total amount of the population amounted in 1842, or at the last census, to 1,621,152 souls; that the official value of their imports into the United Kingdom amounted in 1842 to 1,391,255*l.*; that the total exports thereto from the United Kingdom amounted (according to the official value) to 4,445,525*l.*; of which 3,874,160*l.* consisted of English and Irish produce and manufactures. The declared value of the British and Irish produce and manufactures so exported amounted to 2,280,481*l.* The number and tonnage of their vessels entered inwards in the United Kingdom were respectively 1552 and 540,448 tons, and of those cleared outwards, 1329 and 445,570 tons. Of the West Indian colonies, the population amounted to 901,082; the official value of their imports 6,015,765*l.*, and that of the exports thither from the country to 5,376,521*l.*, of which 5,017,664*l.* consisted of British and Irish produce and manufactures. The declared value of the latter was 2,591,424*l.* The number of vessels entered inwards amounted to 714 (191[illegible] tons), and the number of those cleared outwards to [illegible] (261,344 tons.) Of all our separate colonies, taken together, including Gibraltar, Malta and Gozo, the Cape, Sierra Leone, Gambia, the Gold Coast, Ceylon, Mauritius, New South Wales, Van Diemen's Land, Western Australia, Southern Australia, New Zealand, the Falkland Islands, St. Helena, and Hong-Kong, the population amounted to 2,152,101 souls; the official value of the imports into this country to 3,087,999*l.*; the official value of the exports thither from the United Kingdom to 7,496,624*l.*; of which 6,859,080*l.* consisted of British and Irish produce and manufactures. The declared value of the British and Irish produce and manufactures amounted to 3,198,812*l.* The number of ships entered inwards therefrom was 522 (128,593 tons), and the number cleared outwards hence 852 (204,119 tons). The general details show that of our vast and extensive colonial possessions in all parts of the globe (of course without including India), the population amounts to 4,674,335 souls (one-fourth of the population of Great Britain); the value of their imports into the United Kingdom to 10,495,019*l.*, and of their exports from the United Kingdom to 17,318,670*l.*; the declared value of the exports thereto of the produce and manufactures of Great Britain and Ireland to 8,070,717*l.*; the number of their ships entered inwards to 2788, tonnage 860,72[illegible], and the number cleared outwards, to 3077, tonnage 911,033. Taking the declared value of our produce and manufactures exported to the colonies, it will be found on inquiry that the Canadas take 1,589,169*l.*; Jamaica 1,161,146*l.*; Gibraltar, 937,719*l.*; Malta, 289,304*l.*; the Cape, 369,076*l.*; New South Wales, 598,645*l.*; and Van Diemen's Land, 268,730*l.* The trade with Hong Kong is this year undistinguished from the general trade with the Chinese Empire. Almost all our colonies are governed by a governor, council, and assembly, by an of Parliament, and by orders in council. Honduras alone is governed by a superintendent and magistrates. It may be interesting to state the manner in which some of these colonies came into our possession. The Canadas capitulated in 1759 and 1760, and were ceded by the French Government at the peace of Paris in 1763. The other American colonies were originally fisheries and settlements, established soon after their discovery in 1479. Antigua and Barbadoes, Montserrat, St. Nevis, St. Kitt's, Tortola, Anguilla, the Bahamas, and Bermuda, are settlements made during the 17th century; Dominica and Grenada were ceded by France in 1763; Jamaica capitulated to the naval forces of Cromwell in 1655; St. Lucia capitulated in 1803; St. Vincent and Tobago were ceded by France in 1763; Trinidad capitulated in 1797, British Guiana in 1803; Honduras was obtained by the arms of a treaty made in 1670; Gibraltar capitulated to Sir G. Rooke in August, 1704, Malta in 1800, the Cape in 1806, Ceylon in 1795, Mauritius in 1810; St. Helena was ceded by Holland in 1673; Hong-Kong, by the Chinese treaty, in 1842; and the colonies of New South Wales, Australia, and New Zealand, were settlements formed between the years 1787 and 1839; New South Wales was made a settlement in 1787, Van Diemen's Land in 1803, Western Australia in 1829, and South Australia in 1834.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—In Saturday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the debate on the Bill for the Reorganisation of the Council of State was brought to a conclusion, and, a ballot taking place, the Bill was passed by 197 to 170. Some importance is bestowed by the Ministerial papers on this majority of 27, owing to the resistance which the principal and main clauses of the Bill had encountered, and to the efforts made to prevent its articles from being discussed. On the other hand, the Opposition prints consider the majority a small one, which would have been smaller still had not several members of that party been absent. Much more attention is bestowed on a resolution of the Committee on the Estimates, which met on Monday to deliberate on the question of the conversion of the Five per Cent. Stock, and decided, with but one dissentient voice, that the measure could be carried into execution during the present session. The resolution is a very important one, and will, no doubt, lead to reduce the price of that stock still further in the market. M. Laplague Barris read to the Chamber of Peers, on the same day, the report of the Committee appointed to examine the Secret Service Money Bill. The reporter stated that the commissioners had given their entire adhesion to the foreign and domestic policy of the Cabinet, and recommended the adoption of the Bill. The discussion was then fixed for Wednesday.—The Commerce publishes the following paragraph:—"We have reason to believe, from a certain source of information, that the Queen of England will visit France in the month of April next. Her intention is not to come so far as Paris. She reckons upon stopping at one of the Royal palaces, where, as we are assured, preparations are already being made for her reception."—The Débats publishes the authentic and official text of the treaty concluded between France and China, asserting that it differs in several essential points from the copy published at Paris before the arrival of the First Secretary of the China Legation, and that, far from placing French commerce on a footing inferior to English and American trade, it has, on the contrary, extended the advantages obtained by the two latter countries. In a short but able article, the same paper renders full justice to Lord Aberdeen on the affair of the unfortunate sons of Admiral Bandiera. The Bordeaux papers mention a report that there is to be a camp for military exercises this year in the environs of that place, and that it will be visited by the Duke and Duchess de Nemours. The National announces the departure of Marshal Bugeaud and the Duke de Montpensier for Algeria on the 20th of next month. An expedition is preparing against the Kabyles. The result of the census of Paris in the year 1841 has just been published, from which it appears that in Paris, properly so called, including the garrison (23,228 men), the number of inhabitants was then 935,261. The next census takes place at the end of the present year. The Presse states, that there has just been terminated at the Royal manufactory of the Gobelins an immense carpet, intended to cover the floor of the ambassadors' hall at the Palace of Versailles. This splendid work was commenced in the year 1783. The border is ornamented with garlands of flowers. At the four corners are four large bunches of roses, copied from paintings in water-colours, executed by Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI., and comprising all the species of roses known in France at the end of the 18th century.

SPAIN.—We have accounts from Madrid to the 25th ult. It was reported that the Queen would repair to Seville to assist at the religious ceremonies of the Holy Week, and make another excursion to Barcelona in June next. The Gazette contains a royal decree, ordering the Minister of Finance to place funds at the disposal of the clergy to enable them to celebrate in a becoming manner the solemnities of Easter.—An inquiry had been instituted by the Government respecting the military plot detected at Vittoria, and was actively proceeding. It was at first supposed that the projected movement was an ultra-liberal one, and that plots were to have broken out at the same time in Aragon and Catalonia. It was, however, rumoured at Madrid that, instead of aiming at the recall of Espartero, the conspiracy had been an Absolutist one. It was said that the party who acknowledged the Marquis de Viluma as their leader were actively tampering with the army, and proof of it was found in recent occurrences at Valencia, where the artillerymen were said to have killed several soldiers of the line to the cry of "Long live the Absolute Queen! Advices from the neighbourhood of Navarre and the Basque Provinces, dated the 26th ult., mention reports of an impending movement on the part of the Carlists. It was said that it was to take place simultaneously at Pampeluna, Onate, Tolosa, and Vergara, and the General who was to command it was even named. It was also affirmed that the movement was concerted with the Carlist leader, Tristany, who was in the mountains of Catalonia, near the French frontier. The surveys of the railway from Barcelona to Mataro, the first constructed in Spain, have just been completed.

PORTUGAL.—Accounts from Lisbon of the 26th ult., state that Her Majesty was likely to carry into effect her anxious desire to grant an amnesty to the persons engaged in the late revolt, and now in exile in Spain and elsewhere. The accounts of Her Majesty's health continued favourable. The baptism of the young Infanta took place on the 20th ult.—The Bill for the Abolition of the Conservatorial Courts, in its definitive form, had been laid before the Chamber of Deputies. A project of law for the abolition of slavery in all the Portuguese possessions, in the case of children born after the date of the promulgation of the proposed law, was presented to the Chamber of Peers, and transferred to the Special Anti-Slavery Committee.

GERMANY.—A Berlin letter, of the 7th inst., states that an old chorus-singer of the Grand Opera, named Bredersck, has spontaneously confessed that he was the incendiary of the Opera-house, burnt down in August, 1843—that he did it in revenge for a severe reproof given him by the leader of the chorus, and effected it by scattering lighted tinder in the wardrobe and other parts of the theatre. He further declared that, a few months ago, he murdered an artilleryman by pushing him with such force, while crossing over the bridge of the Spree, that the soldier fell into the river, and was drowned. This likewise was an act of revenge for an insult given to him by the artilleryman at a ball. It was for a time surmised that the prisoner had been driven mad by remorse, but this has been ascertained not to have been the case, and the prosecution is going on against him with all possible despatch.—We have already noticed the secession going on in Northern Germany, under the direction of M. Ronge, the Catholic priest who was excommunicated for writing against the late exhibition of the Holy garments at Treves. The following is the confession of faith adopted by the followers of this reformer:—"1. We throw off the allegiance to the Bishop of Rome and his whole establishment. 2. We maintain full liberty of conscience, and contemn every compulsion, falsehood, and hypocrisy. 3. The basis and the contents of the Christian belief are the Bible. 4. The free investigation and interpretation is not to be restrained by external authority. 5. As the essential contents of our faith, we lay down the following symbols:—'I believe in God the Father, who has created the world by his omnipotent word, and who governs it in wisdom, justice, and love.'—'I believe in Jesus Christ our Saviour, who, by his doctrine, his life, and death, has saved us from bondage and sin.'—'I believe in the working of the Holy Ghost on earth, a holy universal Christian Church, forgiveness of sin, and life everlasting. Amen.' 6. We recognise only two sacraments as instituted by Christ, baptism and the Lord's Supper. 7. We uphold infant baptism, and receive, by solemn act of confirmation, as self-acting members of the congregation, those persons who are sufficiently instructed in the doctrines of faith. 8. The Lord's Supper will be distributed to the congregation, as instituted by Christ, in both forms. Auricular confession is rejected. 9. We recognise marriage as an institution ordained by God, and therefore to be kept holy by man; we maintain for it the sanction of the Church, and consider, with regard to the conditions and restrictions applying to it, the laws of the State alone as binding. 10. We believe and confess that Christ is the only mediator between God and man; we reject, therefore, the invocation of saints, the adoration of relics and images, the remission of sins by the priest, and all pilgrimages. 11. We believe that the so-called good works have only value in so far as they are the emanation of Christian sentiments; we reject, therefore, all commands of fasting. 12. We believe and confess that it is the first duty of the Christian to manifest his faith by works of Christian love." The commotion which this new doctrine has produced in Germany and Poland is on the increase. M. Ronge has already been burned in effigy, with as many copies of his manifestoes as could be collected, by fanatical peasants in the vicinity of Coblentz.—The German papers mention the continuance of severe weather in nearly all parts of the Continent. Letters from Trieste, of the 21st, state that winter has returned with the utmost severity. There had been a continued succession of wind and snow storms, and the thermometer had at times been as low as 5° below zero. Such a degree of cold was felt there the more sensibly, as neither the houses nor the clothing of the people are prepared for it; and the searching wind there is colder than the most intense frost in northern countries.—The Government of Saxony is about to establish throughout the kingdom agricultural schools, similar to those which have been founded in Prussia.—Intelligence reached town on Thursday from Germany, announcing the demise of the Landgrave Frederick of Hesse, who expired on the 24th ult., after a short illness, on his estates of Panker, near Lutgenburg, at the age of 74.

SWITZERLAND.—We have accounts from Zurich of the proceedings of the Extraordinary Diet, which met for the first time on the 24th ult. Previous to this event, Mr. Morier, the British Minister in Switzerland, communicated to the President a despatch from Lord Aberdeen, pointing out the serious evils of the present agitation, and the probability that any change in the federal constitution, by whatever party it may be effected, would lead to foreign intervention. It is also stated that M. de Pontois, the French Ambassador in Switzerland, has been instructed to declare to the Vorort, that in the event of the democratic cantons attempting to obtain a modification of the federal compact of 1815 by force, Austria, in accord with England, France, and Prussia, will put down the present disturbances by an armed intervention. The proceedings of the Diet were opened by a speech from the President. It was exceedingly moderate, breathing throughout a love of order, and calling upon the Deputies of all parties to sacrifice personal opinion to considerations of patriotism and public peace. The Diet then discussed a motion for the admission of the Deputies from the canton of Vaud, and after deciding it in the affirmative, a long discussion arose as to whether the Diet should proceed at once to the question of the Jesuits, or that of the necessity of keeping down the violence of the free corps. It was decided by a majority of 12 states and 2 half states, to 8 states and 2 half states, that the question of the Jesuits should be considered first, on the ground that the cause of excitement ought to be taken into consideration before the excitement itself. The discussion of the question commenced on the 27th. An immense crowd filled and surrounded the town-house of Zurich, where the Diet sits. The proceedings were opened by the Chancellor laying before the Assembly the petitions praying for the expulsion of the Jesuits, signed by 120,000 persons. The discussion then commenced, and the deputies spoke in the order that the respective cantons which they represented ranked in the confederation. The opening of the debate, therefore, fell to the lot of M. Neuhaus, the deputy for the canton of Berne, who is considered the leader of the liberal party in Switzerland. After stating that, by the 8th article of the federal compact, the Diet was authorised to adopt such measures as were necessary for the internal and external safety of Switzerland, he said that the question was whether Jesuits had endangered and still endangered the safety of the country. M. Neuhaus then reiterated the various charges long brought against the order, and concluded by declaring that the instructions of his canton were to demand that the Jesuits be expelled from every part of Switzerland, which decision, if adopted by 12 or more states, the minority of the cantons must submit to. M. Siegwart, Deputy of Lucerne, next addressed the Assembly at great length, urging that the Diet had no right to come to such a decision, because it would be the most serious attack upon the sovereignty and religious independence of the cantons, and that Lucerne, far from being disposed to sacrifice its rights to chimerical apprehensions, was determined not to revoke the decree whereby it had called in the Jesuits. The Deputies of Uri, Schwytz, Unterwald, Zug, and Friburg, successively spoke and sided with Lucerne, pronouncing the imputations cast on the Jesuits mere calumnies, and using some threatening expressions in the course of their speeches. Much attention was commanded by M. Munzinger, the Deputy of the Catholic canton of Soleure, who inveighed against the Jesuits, and stated that he was instructed to demand that they be driven out of the cantons which had received them, and that they be not suffered to enter the others. Glaris, Outer Appenzell, and Bale, expressed the same opinion as Berne; and the discussion, which had taken up seven hours, was then adjourned. The debate was resumed on the 28th ult., and was extremely animated. The first speaker was the Federal Colonel, Luvini, a Catholic Deputy of the canton of Tessino. His speech was one of the most violent delivered against the order of the Jesuits, and their being suffered to remain in Switzerland. He concluded with the following words:—"The maintenance of peace is desired, and therefore it is that the deputation of Tessino, after being commissioned to uphold the Federal competence on this question, has been instructed to vote, at first, for the addressing of an amicable and pressing invitation to Lucerne, in order that it may renounce calling in the Jesuits; but if Lucerne refuse, if it obliges us to make use of the instructions we have received, in the event of a refusal, the responsibility for the consequences will fall but on itself." Three other Deputies spoke on the same side, but the cause of the Jesuits was vigorously upheld by M. De Colveten, Deputy of Valais, who thus defied the cantons that demand their expulsion:—"Just come to Valais and try to coerce us: we shall receive you with arms in hand. You wish to reinstate fallen government, and you find no better means than the imposing your pleasure on a people who will know how to resist your pretensions." This speech, which excited alternate applause and clamour, concluded the sitting. On the 1st inst., the Diet divided on the question, "That the Jesuits be expelled the Confederation," when the numbers stood thus—for the expulsion, 10 cantons and 2 half cantons; against it, 8 cantons and 2 half cantons. Two cantons (St. Gall and Geneva) declined voting, but recommended that the cantons in which the Jesuits had established themselves should be called upon to remove them. This decision leaves the matter unsettled, for a majority consisting of at least 12 cantons is necessary to render valid any vote. The consequence may therefore be regarded as menacing, although it is said that the Jesuits themselves intended voluntarily withdrawing from the states of the confederation. Never had the sittings of any Diet been watched with deeper interest. The Zurich Gazette says that the utmost activity is displayed at Lucerne, which town resembles a fortress, and that every measure has been adopted there to repel an attack. The inhabitants of Valais were also preparing to defend themselves.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.—The King of Sweden and Norway opened the Storthing of the latter country at Christiana on the 10th ult. In his speech on this occasion, after paying an affecting tribute of veneration to the memory of his father, he assured the assembly that his dearest wish was to realise all the paternal views of the deceased Sovereign for the welfare of his people, and the cordial union of the two countries on principles of strict justice and equality. The correspondence from these parts states that the frost is so severe in the north of Europe that the Sound is closed up with ice.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.—We have accounts from Constantinople of the 12th ult. The last news received from Lebanon is very serious. The Druses and Maronites have come to open war. The Maronites, with a force of 2000 men, attacked the Druses, and a great number of lives were lost on both sides, without any decided result either way. It was thought probable that England would be obliged to consent to the proposition made by the Porte of sending an armed force into the country. The weather had been extremely severe at Constantinople. The floating ice passing down the Dnieper had become fixed upon the shores of the Black Sea, so as to have completely obstructed the port of Odessa. A Russian steamboat coming from Constantinople had not been able to get into the port, or even to put herself in communication with the town.—From Egypt we learn that a smart shock of earthquake was felt at Alexandria early on the morning of 21st ult.—a very unusual thing in Egypt. It is said that Mr. Galloway, the engineer, has orders to make the survey for the long talked of railroad between Cairo and Suez. As regards the postal treaty between England and the Viceroy, it is confidently stated at Alexandria that the British Government has declined to ratify the terms agreed upon between Mr. Bourne, the representative sent out by the Post-office, and Artin Bey, the Prime Minister. A letter from Cairo, of the 21st Jan., announces that a letter has been received from M. d'Abadie, dated Aden, Oct. 17, in which he says that he has discovered the source of the White Nile, in the Ganira country.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Overland Mail of the 1st Feb. arrived in town on Thursday. The intelligence it brings relates chiefly to the revolution in Lahore, where British intervention is now considered to be inevitable. The conflicting leaders of that country, after the many murders by which they have successively obtained power for the moment, are now at the mercy of the Khalsa troops, who are the true rulers of the Punjaub. The great principle of union amongst those licentious soldiers is their dread of the conquest of the country by the British. They see themselves masters of their own Government, but they have neither discipline nor officers, nor will they obey any leader save their own sordid desires. The internal state of the Punjaub is most critical; its different parts are ready to fall to pieces. Akhbar Khan is anxious to seize Peshawur and the right bank of the Indus; the hills around Cashmere are in revolt; Ghoolab Singh is willing to secure himself and his principality at all risks; the Mahommedan population is praying for the British to enter their country, and to free them from the oppression of the Sikh soldiery, and of the religious fanatics called Akhalees, who adopt the Gooroo religion, and are neither Hindoos nor Moslems, but have a sort of half system of both those creeds. The different leaders pretend that the Indian Government will not move its troops against them; and they, by way of showing their fitness for self-rule, have perpetrated another bloody change of Government. In the meantime the Governor-General has taken care to send many regiments towards the frontiers, as if to be prepared for the expected opportunity of entering that country. The latest news from Delhi states, that the Governor-General was expected in the north-west provinces in May. The Commander-in-Chief and the other generals were busy in reviewing all the corps in those districts, and every preparation was making, as if war was imminent.—The news from Scinde is satisfactory. The banks of the Indus, which must be regarded as the greatest of the arteries of the Punjaub, are tranquil. Sir C. Napier started in the middle of January from Sukkur, to proceed into the country near the hills, and in order to punish some of the predatory tribes, which, although subject to the rule of the Khan of Khelat, do not hesitate to plunder the territories belonging to the British. Prior to his departure, Sir C. Napier issued a manifesto to all the neighbouring tribes, in which he clearly explains the reasons of his going into these districts. The great drawback in Scinde was the ill-health of the 78th Highlanders, which had lost 420 men from sickness at Sukkur, and were coming down the Indus, for the purpose of being removed to Bombay. It is not known to what this great mortality is owing, particularly while the Bombay troops there enjoyed comparatively good health. In the interior of India tranquillity prevails. The only exception to peace is the small district in the Southern Concan, called Sawunt Warree, where the thick jungle or wild-wooded country enables the inhabitants to carry on a sort of guerilla warfare, and to embarrass the movement of the troops. There are now about 10,000 men engaged in the pacification of those districts, where 3 officers were killed in January—viz., Capt. Taynton, of the Madras Native Infantry, and Lieut. Campbell and Ensign Faure, of the Bombay European—and 7 others wounded. The fighting is reduced to almost single shots in the jungles, for the rebels refuse to show themselves in large bodies in any place where they can be attacked. Col. Outram was engaged in scouring the country and burning the villages, but the rebels still remain concealed. It was thought that the jungles would be set on fire in March, when sufficiently dry to burn incessantly. In Calcutta there had been considerable anxiety respecting the fate of the Runnymede and Briton, used as transports for troops, the one from Australia, and the other from England; they had been wrecked side by side on the Andaman Islands. No lives were lost; but the ships were fairly sent into the jungles by the high sea. The inhabitants of those islands being cannibals, great apprehensions were at first entertained by the crews, but they were not molested, and with the soldiers have been safely removed to Calcutta. A steamer has begun to ply between Calcutta and Singapore, touching at Penang, &c.—The great point of interest in Bombay was the formation at that presidency of a railway company, whose object is to connect that fort and island with the mainland, and ultimately with the city of Poonah and the Deccan.—The news from China comes down to the 19th December, but is not of remarkable interest. The Chinese at Hong Kong were quietly engaged in their labours, and altogether submissive to the British regulations.—The Bengal papers notice a meeting of the Indian shareholders of the Assam Company, which had passed off satisfactorily. The property of the concern was stated to be unencumbered, and the available means for carrying on operations during the current year were estimated at 2,79,159 rupees, independent of the sale or profit derivable from the Company's steamer. The outlay was calculated not to exceed 1,50.000 rupees, so that there would be left in Sept., 1845, a balance of 1,29,159 rupees, together with a crop of the estimated net value of 2,00,000 rupees. This better state of affairs has been arrived at with a reduction in the amount of expenditure. The trips of the Company's steamer gave a clear profit of 26,280 rupees. The report of the sales in London seems to have been received with perfect satisfaction. With reference to the crop of 1844, a deficiency of 9 per cent. in weight was admitted, but this was fully compensated by the fine quality of the leaf. On the whole, this meeting affords a more sanguine expectation of the eventual success of the Company than former proceedings were calculated to produce.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Cape papers to the 21st of December have arrived, but they give little intelligence of interest. It is stated that the Boers are again resisting the authority of the British, and many have refused to take the oath of allegiance required by the Government. The old story of Swellekemp, the Dutch supercargo, interfering in behalf of the disaffected is revived; but whatever may be the result, Captain Smith appears quite prepared to meet them should any rupture occur. A letter from the captain of a vessel which recently arrived at the Cape from St. Paul's, contains the following curious paragraph:—"On my voyage out, being off the island of St. Paul, I went ashore in a boat to make observations. We heard at St. Paul's, that that island, and the island of Amsterdam, were taken possession of on the 23d July, 1843, in the name and at the instance of Adam Mixowstawsky, a Polish exile, who now exercises his authority on both islands. The establishment consists of 56 persons, among whom are 6 soldiers and 20 negroes and negresses, who have the care of domestic affairs; the men are employed in the whale fishery; the oil is boiled in the island, and 4 vessels (schooners and brigs) are constantly employed in conveying it to Bourbon."

UNITED STATES.—By the packet-ship Cambridge, which reached Liverpool on Monday, we have New York papers one day later than those brought by the steamer. There is scarcely an item of intelligence worthy of note. The proceedings of Congress are totally uninteresting. The debate in the House of Representatives on the Oregon Occupation Bill was suspended, the excitement in connection with the success of the annexation scheme had experienced a lull, and altogether affairs remained in statu quo. The Washington correspondent of one of the journals, under date the 30th ult., remarks that the democracy of the House had become rather alarmed at their belligerent position with regard to England, and expressed on that day a willingness to have the Oregon Bill modified, so as to make it conform to the treaty stipulations; and that their amendment not being prepared, the debate was arrested for that purpose.—The New Orleans Bee contains an account of the trial of a female slave named Pauline, belonging to a person named Rappeneck, for brutal treatment of her mistress. The disclosures on this trial place the slavery of the southern states in a very revolting light. The master had promoted the slave in his household. Having occasion to leave home on business, Pauline, in her master's absence, assumed the command of the house—confined, whipped, seized by the hair, and otherwise cruelly ill-treated her mistress and her three children, aged respectively, two, four, and eight years. The mayor of the city, in consequence of information conveyed to him, arrested the slave, and the jury before which she was tried sentenced her to death! She is to be executed on the 28th March.

WEST INDIES.—The royal mail steamer Trent brings dates from Jamaica to January 24; Demerara, Jan. 20; and Barbadoes, Jan. 25. The admission to consumption in England of Venezuelan sugar at the same rate of duty as sugar the produce of free-labour countries, had caused much excitement among the agricultural interests in Jamaica. Fears were entertained that, in consequence of the admission of this sugar, the products of Cuba and Porto Rico would find their way through the United States into the British markets, at the lowest rate of duty. A meeting, the purpose of which was to memorialise Her Majesty and Parliament on the subject, had been held in St. Andrew's, and it was supposed that similar meetings would be held in every other parish in the island. It was argued that it would be better that the sugar question should be definitively settled, even though the worst fears of the planters should be realised, than that this excitement, which begets doubt and disappointment, should continue. The island was perfectly healthy. The weather had been rather warm for the time of the year, but it was favoured with a salubrious sea breeze, which, in the phraseology of the colonists, is not inaptly termed "the doctor."—From Demerara, Trinidad, Barbadoes, and the rest of the islands, there seems to be no novelty to notice.—A vessel, which had recently arrived at Jamaica from Aux Cayes, reported matters as being perfectly quiet in Hayti.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, returns relative to the Sugar Duties were ordered.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of his Bail in Error Bill.—Lord CAMPBELL complained that the Lord Chancellor had stolen his bill as a bantling, and now produced it as a child of his own.—The LORD CHANCELLOR explained, that he had objected to the Bill originally proposed, not so much on account of certain provisions which it differed from that he now submitted to the House, as it was at the time evidently brought forward with a view to a particular case—that of Mr. O'Connell and his friends, which was then pending. As to his adoption of the measure, he had done so at the request of Lord Campbell himself, and all he had entitled to do was slightly to alter its dress, and to make such alterations as he thought necessary in committee.—After a few words from the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, Lord BROUGHAM and Lord DENMAN, in favour of the Bill, it was read a second time.—The Constables (Scotland) Bill was read a first time.

Monday.—On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the Courts of Common Law Process (for England and Ireland) and the Court of Session (Scotland) Bill were read a second time.—In reply to the Earl of CLARENDON, the Earl of ABERDEEN said that proper representations had been made to the Government of the United States of America, relative to the injury inflicted on British merchants by the operation of certain parts of the American tariff. What the result of these representations would be he was not able to say.—The Constables (Scotland) Bill was read a second time.

Tuesday.—The Duke of RICHMOND presented a number of petitions from owners and occupiers of land, and farm labourers, complaining of agricultural distress. His Grace took occasion to remark that he had heard, with feelings of the deepest regret and of the bitterest disappointment, that of the relief that was to be afforded to the country, none was to be extended to those who were in distress, but to those who, he rejoiced to see, were in the enjoyment of prosperity. His Grace then gave notice that whenever the new tariff came up to their Lordships' House, he should feel it to be his duty to move the expunction of those clauses of it which would operate in favour of the unlimited foreigner, and against the British labourers and their families.—Lord ASHBURTON presented a petition from tradesmen in Westminster, complaining of the operation of the act of last session, abolishing imprisonment for debts under 20l.—Lord BROUGHAM said that he was framing a measure to remedy the act of last session more beneficial, by enabling creditors to get access to the wages or salaries of debtors who might have no other effects.—Lord DENMAN presented a petition from a person who stated that he had been 3 years in prison owing to a conscientious objection to taking an oath; and that the same scruple prevented him from obtaining the county allowance, by which he was reduced to a state of positive destitution.—The LORD CHANCELLOR promised to take the matter into consideration, with the view of ascertaining if any remedy could be provided for such cases.—Lord CAMPBELL asked the Lord Chancellor if it was the intention of Government to introduce a Bill to reform the Ecclesiastical Courts. In putting the question, his lordship was proceeding to make a speech, when he was interrupted by the LORD CHANCELLOR, who said that the questions of his noble and learned friend assumed the shape of bills in Chancery. There was no chance of an end of them. But as to the present question, all he could say was, that he had no intention of introducing any such bill.—Lord CAMPBELL proceeded to make another speech, when he was stopped by the Duke of WELLINGTON, who rose to order. His Grace said that if the noble and learned lord made a speech he must conclude with a motion; if he intended to conclude with a motion, the practice and courtesy of the House was that he should have given notice of it.

Thursday.—On the motion of Lord COLCHESTER, a copy of the report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of Harbours of Refuge was ordered. The noble lord added his opinion to the recommendation of the Commissioners, that it was necessary for the safety of the south-eastern portions of this kingdom that means of powerful naval protection should be provided for it.—On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the three Courts of Common Law Processes Bills passed through committee, with an amendment to the effect that the processes should be served on persons resident abroad, either by British subjects or regularly-constituted notaries-public. The Constables (Scotland) Bill was committed.

Friday.—The Earl of MINTO gave notice, that on Monday he should move for a copy of any communications which have been received during the last 12 months by the Government from the commanders of the Basilisk and Hazard, relating to the island of Tahiti.—The LORD CHANCELLOR brought in a Bill for relief of persons of the Jewish religion elected to municipal offices. The Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday next.—The Marquis NORMANBY moved for certain returns connected with the appointment of the deputy inspector of the constabulary in Ireland. The appointment had taken place contrary to the understanding of all parties and to the recommendation of the Inspector General, and he hoped to receive an assurance that such an occurrence would not take place again. He trusted he should receive that assurance from some member of her Majesty's Government, and should receive it with the greater pleasure and satisfaction from the Noble Duke opposite.—The Duke of WELLINGTON: But you won't have it.—The Marquis of NORMANBY said, that notwithstanding the interruption of the noble Duke, he should not be deterred from going into a full statement of the case which he intended to lay before their lordships. The noble marquis then went into a long detail of the circumstances connected with the appointment of Major Priestley, contending that Major Brownrigg was in every respect better qualified for the discharge of the duties of the office.—The noble marquis said, in order to save the time of their lordships, he would take the present opportunity of moving for a return of the number of troops in Ireland on the 1st of January in each year for the years 1835 to 1845 inclusive. The question having been put, The Duke of WELLINGTON said he had to apologise to the noble Marquis for the interruption which he had given to his observations, which interruption was certainly irregular, but he thought that it might save the time of their lordships if he stated, as early as possible, that he was not authorised to grant the returns asked for by the noble Marquis. [Left sitting.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—Lord DUNCAN gave notice, that instead of moving the resolution which he had put upon the paper, he should, on the 17th instant, move for a committee to inquire respecting the Window-tax.—Mr. E. B. ROCHE said he had come over express from Ireland to question Mr. Roebuck relative to certain remarks reported in the newspapers to have been made by that gentleman in reference to the absent Irish Members.—The SPEAKER interrupted the hon. member with the information that he could not refer to a newspaper for what was said in that House.—Mr. E. B. ROCHE made two or three attempts so to shape his question as to come within the forms of the House, but failed.—On the order of the day for going into a committee of ways and means, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE again brought forward the question of the opening of his letters at the Post-office. He said that his connection with the Chartists commenced in 1841, when he presented a petition to that House for the amnesty of all political offenders, signed by 1,700,000 persons. In the next year he presented the national petition, signed by more than 3,000,000 of the working classes. He founded motions on both these petitions, and both were rejected. In the autumn of 1842 an outbreak commenced in the Staffordshire Potteries, and extended afterwards to the manufacturing districts. It was admitted that there was no political object in that strike. His letters, which were opened at that time, could not therefore have been opened for any political purpose. He had looked over them all; he found no treasonable correspondence among them, and only one of a suspicious character. That letter was from Mr. Feargus O'Connor, and related to the Nottingham election, when Mr. Sturge was a candidate. He held that letter in his hand, and in the phrase of the Post-office, it bore marks of having been operated upon. If he should prove that his letters had been opened by the servants of the Post-office, then they must produce a justification for it. If they did produce one, then the question would become a question between himself and the Secretary of State; if they did not, the officers of the Post-office had been guilty of a breach of privilege. He pledged his word, as a member of the House, that the parties connected with the Post-office whom he should call to the bar as his witnesses, had not been corrupted by him. He likewise pledged his word that he had employed no discarded servants; but there were persons in the Post-office who would tell the House that they were disgusted and felt degraded at being compelled to open letters. As an humble but independent member of the House, he called on the country gentlemen, who were always boasting of their independence, to support his motion for inquiry. What was his case to-day might be theirs to-morrow. He concluded by moving that Colonel Maberly be ordered to attend at the bar of the House, and that he bring with him a certain book, called the "President's order book" for the year 1842, together with another book, called the "Inspector's order book" for the same year.—Mr. D'ISRAELI seconded the motion. It was not a personal, but a national question; and he was surprised that any Minister of the Crown should have ventured to declare that it was only prompted by personal motives. The country required that, if a warrant had been issued to open Mr. Duncombe's letters, it should be produced in order that its legality should be tested; but there was no mode of obtaining that warrant if the House did not call for its production by sanctioning the present inquiry. It had been said that foreign nations exercised this power of inspecting correspondence. True; but then foreign nations never believed that we exercised it. The question, therefore, resolved itself into this—"Would they be governed, as they now were, by a popular Government, or would they be governed on a system of police?" When he recollected the course of the last debate, and the elaborate misrepresentations which were then made, he was not surprised that Mr. Duncombe should be afraid that the discussion of that evening would not be free. After the last general election, when the balanced state of parties ceased, it was evident that party feeling must eventually evaporate, and that among 658 members, gentlemen who had formerly been divided from each other by party feeling, would often take the same views of questions which were not party questions, and would divide in the same lobby. He showed that this had been going on for some time past, and that it had excited some irritation in the mind of the Ministerial leader; and the consequence had been, that on a recent occasion Sir R. Peel had risen as if the Government had been in the throes of dissolution, and had insinuated that some gentlemen on his side of the House had condescended to factious political intrigue. That was not fair; on the contrary, it was a tyranny equally degrading to those who exercised and those who endured it. Sir J. Hanmer had expressed an opinion on a former evening that the case of Mr. Duncombe could not be passed over. It appeared that there was a chance of a division, which could not be embarrassing, but which might be more disagreeable to the Ministry than they had anticipated. The division came on; gentlemen were implored to come to the support of a Ministry which was not endangered, as if it were in peril; and the consequence was, that a great party triumph was obtained, where not a single party principle was at stake. He thought that Sir R. Peel should be the last man in the world to be a political martinet. He had a large and powerful party around him, whilst his opponents, not undistinguished for talent and number, were not celebrated for their powers of adhesion. He was, therefore, in a position to be indulgent towards his supporters, who sometimes differed from him. Had he a right to say "Give me a fair foe, but let no friend assail me on my right flank?" Why, he forgot that the foe before him never wished to fight, and that it was easy to obtain a victory when there was no one anxious to oppose him. He thought that Sir Robert should not forget that many of his supporters were elected under different circumstances from the present. He himself had been sent to that House to swell a Tory majority, and to support a Tory Minister. Whether the House had still a Tory Minister, he did not know, but it had still a Tory majority; and if any one should have to cross sides within it, it would not be the Tory majority but the Tory Ministry. He had heard it said that Sir Robert was wearied of his old party, and was seeking new allies. He did not believe it; he had only to remain where he now was, for he had found the Whigs bathing, and had walked away with their clothes. He had taken advantage of their position, and had become a strict conservative of their left-off garments. He had therefore no occasion to desert his present position, for he had been the Tamer of the Shrew, Liberty, and the political Petruchio who had outbid all her other wooers. He recommended the right hon. Baronet to tame his testiness, and to reprove his friends "on his right flank" with more mildness. If he would not deal in obloquy, but would stick to quotation, he would find the latter the safer weapon. He was a master of it too, for his quotations were always happy. He knew well how important it always was, and how electrifying it sometimes was in that House to introduce the name of a great genius, and especially of a man who had to struggle all his life with supreme prejudice and with sublime mediocrity, with inveterate foes and candid friends. A quotation on the subject of friendship, written by Canning and spoken by Peel, was sure to succeed. The theme, the poet, and the speaker, were all in accordance; and if the quotation were addressed to him, all that he had to do was to congratulate Sir Robert Peel on his ready memory, and his courageous conscience.—Sir J. GRAHAM rejoiced that if Mr. D'Israeli had thought the day come when resistance was necessary, he had also shown that the day had arrived when rebellion was open and avowed; and that the Ministers of the Crown should know henceforth, whatever might be the place in the House which the hon. gentleman might think fit to occupy, where open and avowed rebellion was to be found. With respect to the amendment before the House, he should oppose it as unprecedented and unjust towards himself, who had already been fully acquitted of any malpractices by the two secret committees. He disclaimed all personal vindictive feelings towards Mr. Duncombe, avowed that they had been intimate friends, though not in a political sense—that they had spent many pleasant days and convivial nights together; and that he still regarded him, notwithstanding all that had passed, with respect. Sir J. Graham added that he was bound to say that no circumstance of that hon. member's conduct which had come to his knowledge in the discharge of his official duties was in the least degree inconsistent with loyalty to Her Majesty or with his duty as a member of that House.—Lord J. RUSSELL said, that as the Home Secretary had removed the stigma of suspicion from Mr. Duncombe, he could not vote for the motion. He had read with pleasure Lord Aberdeen's speech the other night in the House of Lords, as he considered it a satisfactory proof that Government were not open to the charges brought against them by Mr. Mazzini.—Lord HOWICK considered that Sir J. Graham's tribute to Mr. Duncombe's character completely absolved him from the imputation cast upon him, but at the same time everything he had stated tended to prove the fact that his letters had been opened. A desultory discussion ensued on the justice of reopening the question after the report of the secret committee, in which Lord SANDON, Mr. WARBURTON, Mr. M. MILNES, Mr. WATSON, Mr. HUME, Mr. AGLIONBY, Mr. J. JERVIS, the Earl of LINCOLN, Mr. BERNAL, Captain HARRIS, and Mr. WAKLEY took part.—Sir R. PEEL expressed his pleasure at Lord John Russell's declaration, that he was perfectly satisfied with the explanation of Lord Aberdeen on the case of Mr. Mazzini. He indulged the hope that that explanation would also be satisfactory to Mr. Duncombe, and would induce him to retract his very painful charge that the blood of the Bandieras and their associates was on the head of Her Majesty's Ministers. He would not enter into the question of the legality of these warrants. They had been issued by the Secretaries of State in every Government for the last century; and if all those Ministers had exercised the power of issuing them wrongly, Parliament, not Ministers, was in fault; and either a declaratory act ought to be brought in stating that no such power existed, or an act stating that, if it did exist, it ought to be subject to certain limitations. It had been said that further inquiry was necessary at the bar, because the Government had placed Mr. Duncombe before the public in the situation of a defendant against a degrading charge. The Government had not placed Mr. Duncombe in that position; he had placed himself in it. There was no difference between the claim of Mr. Duncombe for inquiry and the claim of the meanest citizen in the land; and if you granted inquiry into his case at the bar, you must grant inquiry into the case of every other person who could make out a primâ facie case like that of Mr. Duncombe. He then repeated the arguments which he had urged on a former evening against further inquiry, and then proceeded to reply to the speech of Mr. D'Israeli. He hoped that that hon. gentleman, having now discharged himself of the bile which had been accumulating for the last year, felt himself more at ease than he had been for some time. If so, that ease need not be disturbed by the fear that he had interfered at all with his peace of mind. He would not reciprocate hostilities with the hon. gentleman, either now or after the lapse of a week. He admitted the advantage which Mr. D'Israeli had over him in such a contest, for he had not leisure to premeditate his attacks. He should not have noticed Mr. D'Israeli's attack on him the other night, had he not said that he seconded Lord Howick's amendment in a friendly spirit to the Government, and had he not accompanied those words by a violent personal attack on his friend Mr. Bonham. He did not wish to fetter the independence of Mr. D'Israeli or of any other man; every man must be the guardian of his own independence; but, on the other hand, he would court no man's favour by unworthy arts. He was proud of the confidence which was reposed in him, but he would run the risk of forfeiting that confidence, rather than give up any line of conduct which he considered to be advantageous to the public interests. He would steadily pursue that course which he conceived best for the public advantage; and if in pursuing it he exposed himself to the vituperation of Mr. D'Israeli, and to the diminished confidence of his associates, he was ready to pay that penalty, and to submit to its consequences. Mr. D'Israeli had referred to the relationship in which he stood to the late Mr. Canning; and professed to think that, on the grounds he adduced on that point, he was entitled to withhold his confidence from him. It was not a quotation from a poem of that eminent person that should have opened the eyes of the hon. gentleman on that subject. The hon. gentleman's eyes must have been quite as open in 1841 to any conduct in respect to Mr. Canning as he was then; and that knowledge, and not an accidental quotation from a poem, should, in justice, have disentitled him to his confidence at an earlier period.—The House divided, and there were, for Mr. Duncombe's amendment, 113; against it, 188; majority, 75.—In reply to a question from Lord J. RUSSELL, the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER stated he did not think parties who had sugar in the King's stores, on which duty was paid, were entitled to any drawback. He intended however to fix the commencement of the new duties for the 14th March.—Mr. HOGG moved his amendment on the order of the day—"That it is the opinion of this House that there ought not to be any discriminating duty between sugars, Muscovado and clayed, not being refined; and that any such duty would interfere with the measure of equalisation between sugars, the produce of the East and West Indies."—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER and Sir R. PEEL admitted the practical difficulties of the question.—Mr. HOGG then withdrew his amendment, on the understanding that Government would reconsider the matter.

Monday.—A great many Railway Bills were forwarded a stage.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE gave notice that immediately after Easter he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to secure the inviolability of letters passing through the Post-office.—Mr. SHEIL gave notice that on the 11th inst. he should move a resolution expressing the regret of the House that letters of foreigners residing in this country had been opened in the Post-office without their knowledge or sanction, and that information with regard to disturbances in the Papal States should have been communicated to a foreign power.—In reply to a question by Mr. ROEBUCK, Sir R. PEEL declined to disclose the state of the negotiations between the Government in this country and that in the United States of America, respecting the Oregon territory.—The House resolved itself into a committee of ways and means; and a resolution granting 8,000,000*l.* out of the consolidated fund was agreed to.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the sugar resolutions, the operation of which he proposed should take place on the 14th inst.—Several members objected to the time named, and also to the classification of sugars.—Sir R. PEEL said that Goverment had put themselves into communication with commercial authorities, brokers and others, on the subject of classification, and were not at present in a condition to state what course they would take on the subject. But two days' notice would be given of the committee on the Bill, so as to enable members to be in full possession of whatever changes might be adopted. He urged the importance of not postponing the period when the new duties are to commence. Some further conversation followed, and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER ultimately consented to the postponement of the resolutions, with the understanding that when brought forward, in whatever shape inquiry might suggest to the Government, the discussion would be taken upon them at once, and that no unnecessary delay will be interposed to the progress of the Bill to be brought in founded on them. The resolutions were, consequently, postponed till Friday, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER repeating that in so doing they were neither pledged to alteration nor precluded from it.

Tuesday.—The House met at 12 o'clock, and sat till 3 proceeding with the Companies and Railways Consolidation Clauses Bills. At the 5 o'clock sitting, Lord G. SOMERSET brought up the report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the best mode of consolidating the Railway Bills. The resolutions, recommended by the Committee on the 22 resolutions, recommended that a committee of the House should suggest the appointment of a Committee for each Railway Bill, to which shall be referred the group of lines or competing railway projects, with many other details, to enable the Committee of Selection to constitute Committees on Railway Bills of members free from personal or local bias, and able to secure their steady attendance during the investigation of the project or projects which they may be appointed to consider. The first four resolutions were put and agreed to without remark; but a discussion arose on the fifth, which provides that every member of a Railway Committee shall sign a declaration that neither he nor his constituents possess any local or personal interest in the particular line or lines on which he is called upon to decide. It was urged by different members, that the exclusion of members possessing local knowledge would be a great disadvantage.—Mr. GREENE objected that to place members having local influence on Railway Committees would either be partial and unjust, or else it would be necessary to resort to the old bad practice of placing every member on a committee who might be connected with the district; and this, in the case of such a line as that from London to York, would be impossible.—Sir J. HASTHOPE took a similar view, adducing his own personal experience on committees in proof of the injurious effect produced by the appointment of members having local influence or interest. After a protracted debate, turning mainly on the point of whether or not selected members of Railway Committees should be called on to "sign a declaration that his constituents have no local interest, and that he himself has no personal interest for or against any Bill referred to him," the fifth resolution was agreed to. The remaining resolutions were proposed seriatim, with occasional remarks from different members, in the course of which Mr. BERNAL said he was one of those who would transfer the private business of the House to a separate tribunal, with a judge or judges.—Mr. WARBURTON protested against entertaining such a motion.—Sir R. PEEL asked what would be the character of this proposed tribunal? Was it to be representative, its constituency to be as extensive as that of the House? He warmly declared that if the House so transferred its powers, he would be ashamed to enter it. By shrinking from discharging duties devolving on them, affecting vast masses of property, even though their acts were revised, they would speedily fall in the estimation of the country, and convert the House of Commons into a mere registering body. Sooner than this, let members on both sides resolutely address themselves to their duties. He, for one, occupied as he was, would sooner sit four hours a day on Railway Bills, than see the House degrade itself by any transfer of its powers. A year would not elapse before they would see the result in the downfall of their character. He had as strenuously resisted parting with their jurisdiction in the case of contested elections as he did now. A young member would do more to raise his reputation by actively discharging his duties on a committee, than by making a smart speech in a party debate. He firmly believed that they would exalt themselves in the opinion of the country far more by sedulously attending to the interests confided to their care, in the shape of private business, than by sitting till September occupied with party debates, of eight hours each day, and extending over six nights at a time. The resolutions were agreed to, after a protracted and desultory discussion.—Mr. COWPER then moved the re-introduction of his Bill of last session, to promote the letting of field gardens to the labouring poor. The object which he had in view was to extend the benefits of the allotment system as widely as possible. Every one must know that the condition of the poor in this country was one of the utmost privation and suffering—that a fearful state of things now existed. The House must know also that many of the labouring classes looked to the House of Commons for relief, as they knew no other quarter from which they could hope to receive it; and he should greatly regret it if it became necessary to tell the poor that the House of Commons could not redress their grievances. One of the points at which he should aim in the preparation of his intended measure would be to cement the connection between the working classes and the land. The connection of the labourer with the land proved at all times an important ingredient in the social system of this country. Formerly all cottagers possessed small allotments of land; all the peasantry above the rank of serfs enjoyed rights of commonage, though he would not take on himself to say that he could point to the precise time—

> "——— Ere England's griefs began,
> When every rood of ground maintained its man."

But it was quite certain that before the 16th century there was a very large proportion of the land of this country in the hands of the labouring poor. Since that time, however, various causes were at work to alter that state of things; there was first the French Revolutionary war, then a discontinuance of the practice of granting leases for lives, and until small allotments had been of late years made the connection between the labourer and the land might be said to have been quite severed. In the course of the experience which had been already obtained with respect to the practical working of the allotment system, it was found that half an acre was the maximum in general of land that could be advantageously cultivated in that way, and it was therefore not unreasonable to say that a quarter of an acre was the quantity of land which might be allotted under any extensive adaptation of the system, as being most likely to prove beneficial to the labourer, while its limited extent would prevent such an allotment from proving prejudicial to the large proprietors or cultivators. But the principal value which the allotment system possessed, in his estimation, and in that of its supporters, was the moral effect produced by it upon the labourers themselves. And, first, he would look at it under the head of amusement and recreation in leisure or unemployed hours. The labourers of the present day were under great disadvantages compared with their predecessors of past ages. They no longer had the old recreations to fall back upon, or to relax their minds and limbs after the fatigues of the day were over. The old forest sports and pastimes of England no longer were at their command. These means of enjoyment might be read of in the poets, but they no longer existed for the poor labourer. The village maypole had no votaries for the dance at the present day; indeed, it would require a different race of men to the peasantry of England, in order that such boisterous exercises as those should be properly enjoyed and entered into. Books required more intellectual cultivation than was usual amongst the labouring classes. There was, however, one species of amusement which he was not inclined to speak lightly of, knowing how eloquently and how sincerely it had been advocated by Lord J. Manners; but he believed his noble friend would agree with him that cricket required too much skill as well as too great a degree of agility to be within the reach of any but an extremely limited number of the working classes. But all these difficulties and objections vanished in the application of a system such as that which he proposed. For if voluntary occupation in cultivating a piece of ground were found to be not only productive of amusement, but also enabled a labourer to derive some portion of his sustenance from thus employing his recreative hours, and if it was considered that the land, but for such an allotment, would lie dormant and useless in a great measure, whilst a drunken and lawless character might be reformed and rendered a sober and industrious and honest man, he did really consider that the universal adoption of this system would at once offer an amusement, combined with a rational, a harmless, and a profitable employment. The great importance which was attached to the possession of a garden might be discovered in the extreme desire manifested by the labouring classes to obtain a plot of ground for cultivation. There was not a greater anxiety existing amongst the higher classes to become landed proprietors on a large scale than was to be witnessed amongst the humbler labourers for the possession of an allotment. Not only did this feeling exist amongst the agricultural villages, but it was very widely spread in towns and cities, and particularly in the manufacturing districts. The system of allotments had long been practically known amongst the agricultural villages. But it was only beginning to be known and appreciated in the manufacturing towns and districts. Leeds afforded a gratifying example of its good effects, and of the eagerness with which the operative classes availed themselves of its benefits, and the manner in which some of the millowners in that town had stepped forward to promote the system was highly creditable to them, more particularly to Mr. Marshall and Mr. Gott, who had been the foremost in procuring allotments there for their operatives. The example set in Leeds had proved beneficial, as showing that the system of allotments was practicable even in large towns, and amongst other than the agricultural classes. The weavers repaired to their grounds during the hours of their meals, or after they had finished their labours, and they enjoyed a great gratification in their cultivation, whilst they had an opportunity for breathing the fresh and invigorating air, which, if they had not been tempted by their allotments, they would not have done. He remembered an instance in which a friend of his was walking on a fine moonlight night, and he perceived a man working in his garden, it being then about half-past 10 o'clock. His friend asked the man why he was at work so late? to which the other replied, that he was a weaver, and that his whole day was passed at the loom, so that he could only work by the light of the moon. The man, moreover, said he was planting his potatoes by moonlight, and he hoped to be able to gather them in the same manner. In the large manufacturing towns there were considerable numbers of the population most desirous of obtaining allotments, but great difficulties existed in the way of providing a sufficiency of land at such a convenient distance as would render it available for that purpose. There certainly were numbers of benevolent persons who were most desirous of aiding in this scheme, and who had taken the trouble of establishing allotments on their own grounds. He believed a great many persons who felt interested in the well-being of the peasant classes had adopted and introduced the system more or less. But on looking round, it would be seen that only a small proportion of the great mass of landed proprietors had as yet followed this example. There were labourers' gardens in the immediate vicinity of their own residences established by the large landed proprietors, but the outlying parts of their estates, being less under their observation, were left unprovided in this respect with allotments for the cotters. The non-resident landlords were likewise neglectful of this matter; in many villages there were no squires and no great landed proprietors to encourage the system, either by example or precept; and lastly, there were vast numbers of landowners who had not taken the trouble to make any efforts, or to inquire into the system. He thought however if the public attention were once called to the beneficial results which had attended the system of allotments wherever it had been fairly tried, that, notwithstanding all the difficulties of procuring land, the present generation would not pass away before it was universally adopted. There were many reasons why allotments had not been generally established. Amongst them was to be reckoned the competition that existed for land, which was so great as to preclude the poorer classes from all chance of success. It was very well known that, notwithstanding all the complaints of agricultural distress, if a farm fell in from any cause, there were always dozens of applicants for its tenancy, notwithstanding all the farmers cried out that they could not cultivate the land at a profit. Another difficulty with respect to allotments existed in the alterations and fresh dispositions of the land, which was rendered necessary by the establishment of such a system on an estate. Besides landlords were compelled to consult, and often give way to the prejudices of those with whom they were connected as their tenants or their neighbours—the farming classes. At the same time he had heard of instances where farmers had themselves voluntarily given up portions of their land for the purposes of allotments. The landlord also feared the additional risk and trouble which would result from his having to receive his rents from a great number of tenants instead of from one or two only. But, whatever the reasons might be, the fact was nevertheless that the landlords, though always kindly disposed towards the labouring classes, were averse in the majority of cases to let out their lands in allotments. There existed a mode of establishing them by the institution of voluntary associations, but the legal as well as the practical difficulties attendant on this plan had hitherto prevented its general adoption. The great want in such associations was found to be a person to act as security between the tenants and the landlord, and in the majority of cases they had failed from not having a sort of middle man. The Bill which he held in his hand was calculated to remedy these wants, and to cure the defects which had been found to operate against the establishment of allotments. Its provisions and objects were altogether of an auxiliary character. If any benevolent person desired to aid an association such as he had referred to in carrying out an allotment system, the Bill which he proposed to bring in with the permission of the House would afford them the means of so doing with safety to themselves and to the satisfaction of the landlord; and the main provision of it rested entirely upon a parochial organisation. The first proceeding under the Bill which he proposed would be, to consider, at a meeting in vestry, of the propriety of establishing allotments in the parish, and that being assented to, the next step would be to elect officers who would have the power of carrying out the system amongst the cottagers. There would also be a provision respecting inclosure acts, and one for the security of the rents to be paid for the allotments; another provision of the bill would give the power of making the poor-rate responsible for the rent of the allotments. The system of allotments was a perfectly secure one, but the tenant who was unwilling to pay the rent of his plot of ground should not be left in possession of it, and a provision to that effect should be made in the Bill. It was not necessary to say anything to recommend a measure to the House which had for its object the rendering of the labouring population more independent than they were. The bill was calculated to effect that object, and he must say of the subject, that no one who had tried the system of allotments could say it had failed. There might be, and there were indeed, certain theoretical objections to allotments, such as that which related to their interfering with the division of labour, and the impossibility of a man serving two masters, but these were what he must call mere theoretical objections: for the real effect of the allotment system would be to raise the labourer's wages. No one could say that a labourer's wages were sufficient for his support. He must, therefore, eke them out by cultivating his allotment. It had been urged, that the labourer who had an allotment would do less work for his employer during the day, that he might reserve his strength to work for himself afterwards. Experience contradicted this. The allotment labourers had been generally found to be the most moral and industrious men on the farms. This was, no doubt, the consequence of the change in their position. Another objection to the system was, that it tended to diminish the circulation of labour throughout the country. But this argument would apply equally to all attempts to elevate the condition of the labourer; and its legitimate consequence must be that the landlord ought to endeavour so to fix the pressure of poverty and suffering on the labourer as to drive him from his parish. No doubt, where there existed a surplus population in any particular district it would be doing the labourer a service to induce him to seek employment elsewhere; but that was a very different case from endeavouring to create such circumstances around him as would force him to do so. Nor was it surprising that the labourer should cling to his parish. There were many circumstances which rendered migration undesirable to him. Not the least was the law of settlement, and the chance that, if driven back to his own parish, a careless board of guardians might leave him without relief till too late. The man of capital could emigrate in search of better occupation, and could afford to wait; but to the labouring man every day's work was his day's subsistence. Starvation might come on him before he gained his object. For all these reasons he could not suppose the allotment system would be opposed, because the refusal of an allotment might make the labourer more ready to migrate. He contended that, by analogy, the Legislature were bound to interfere to help the labourer to the attainment of land. The Legislature had facilitated the establishment of loan societies, where the poor man could borrow money, and they had established savings-banks, where he could lay it up. Upon the same principle he contended that they ought to afford the labourer every facility and security in acquiring small portions of land. On the other hand, he would be very sorry that the Legislature should interfere at all with the obligation which lay on individual proprietors. The direct relation between the landlord and the poor tenant was the most beneficial to both, and ought by no means to be put an end to. This Bill would not interfere therewith. It was only to come into operation in places where it would be absolutely necessary, and then he really believed it would confer a great and effectual benefit on the working man.—Mr. MILES seconded the motion.—Mr. HUME feared that this measure would hold out expectations that could not be realised. He doubted much whether the allotment system would succeed; he feared it would only tend to the vast increase of population and of poverty, until it produced the effects here which the same system had already brought about in Ireland. He also dreaded giving the parish authorities the power of levying money on the community to carry out this system.—Mr. B. ESCOTT was glad to hear that there was to be nothing compulsory in the measure, though he could not well see how its provisions could be carried out without some such power. As it was, every landowner had the full power to make allotments, if he thought fit. Wherever the allotment system had been adopted it appeared to have succeeded; but he believed this to have arisen from its having been voluntary; and he feared that the intervention of the Legislature would do away with this great source of good. The most beneficial operation of the system had been where gardens were given with the cottages, but not called allotments. He could not help fearing, if allotments were increased, as allotments, it would be only opening the door to those evils which existed to so great an extent in Ireland. The great object of the Legislature should be to increase and extend the demand for labour, and also to so educate the poor as to enable them to make a better use of the wages they got.—Lord J. MANNERS agreed that it was better for the poor man to get his cottage and garden from the resident landlord. But this Bill was intended to apply to cases where there were no resident landlords. He would instance particularly the case of the framework-knitters, who could not at present get land under any circumstances. To their case this Bill particularly applied, and if Parliament passed this Bill it would confer a great benefit on them. He thought that the feelings and opinions of the people themselves on such a question ought to be respected; and there was no question, he believed, on which the sympathies and feelings of the people were so much excited as on this. He believed they were unanimous, and they asked for a measure to facilitate as much as possible their getting land in the manner proposed by his hon. friend.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD denied that the poverty of Ireland was to be attributed to small holdings. It was small holdings at exorbitant rents, as in the case of the conacre tenants, that produced the distress of the people. Where the holdings were direct from the head landlord, and at a fair rent, the system worked well, and the people were in comfort. He could mention particularly the estates of the Marquis of Londonderry as an instance of the good effect of small holdings under those circumstances. There the land was let at a reasonable rent, and every attention was paid to the comfort of the tenant. So administered, small holdings tended to the prosperity of the community. The half-acre system, however, would only work well when the labourer had other employment. He was glad to see the subject before Parliament. The labouring man at present had no prospect of ever being able to improve his condition—of raising himself in the social scale. This system would afford him the opportunity; and he had himself witnessed its good effects on the peasantry of his own country.—Sir W. JAMES supported the Bill, but objected to some of the details.—Mr. ROEBUCK said, this was a Bill which proposed to change so completely the whole condition of the labourer in this country, that he thought it demanded the serious attention of the Government. The right hon. baronet the Home Secretary would bear in mind, that this Bill was to make use of the machinery employed in collection of the poor-rates. He hoped the Bill would not be allowed to go into committee without a declaration from the Government whether they approved or disapproved of it, and how they would make it square with their other legislation for the poor.—Sir J. GRAHAM reminded the House that in the course of last session he had supported the second reading of a similar Bill. On that occasion he had at some length stated his opinion upon it, and had particularly referred to that provision which made the poor-rates a security for the payment of the rents of these allotments. To that provision he still entertained a decided objection. He understood the hon. member for Hertford to state that his measure was only permissive, or auxiliary, as he said, in order that facilities might be given for hiring land. He quite agreed with what had fallen from Lord J. Manners, that when landlords voluntarily gave garden-ground with cottages, that system was infinitely preferable; but he was not prepared to say that small allotments in the vicinity of the labouring classes might not be attended with advantage. He could not possibly object to the introduction of the Bill, which, as far as he understood, was an improvement on the measure of last year, which proposed allotments of one acre, while the present Bill did not profess to go beyond half an acre. The hon. gentleman, to his infinite honour, had bestowed so much attention on the subject that he thought it would be highly indecorous in the House to hesitate to give him permission to introduce the Bill. On a former occasion he had expressed what he felt, that from a consideration of what was due to the condition of the labouring classes, any measure proposed by an hon. member who had attended to the subject was worthy the attention of the House. The distress and poverty of the agricultural peasantry constituted a question which could not be safely overlooked by the House, and he was sure that any measure which held out a reasonable expectation of any addition to their comfort, welfare, and enjoyment must be regarded by the House with respect and attention, and with a wish for its success. He was disposed to give a careful consideration to the Bill of the honourable member, and to view it with favour, and a hope that some successful issue might result from his labours.—Mr. MANGLES said he lived in a purely agricultural district, and he knew that during the winter, and except at the height of the corn and hay harvests, a considerable number of labourers were without employment for many weeks, and others could only obtain it occasionally. During the recess he had made inquiries as to the effects of allotments in reference to the well-being of the labouring classes. He had consulted many gentlemen, and many ladies too; among others Mrs. Davies Gilbert; and on no subject of equal magnitude had he ever found the testimony so unanimous in its favour. Mrs. Davies Gilbert informed him that the allotment system had not failed in a single instance under her management, and she wrote to him, if he recollected right, stating that at one time she had 400 allotment tenants, and for 11 years not one had failed in paying his rent. That was important testimony. He knew that the labourer was in favour of the system. After a county meeting on this subject in West Surrey, a group of gentlemen remained discussing the subject in a banking-house. While they were so engaged, a man came in to change a note, and hearing opinions expressed against the allotment system, he restrained himself for some time in the presence of his superiors. At last he could bear it no longer, and he broke out with, "Gentlemen, you may say what you like, but I know it's a good plan, for it has made a man of me." Being struck with what the man said, he visited his place, and found he was raising three pigs in his sty, and had a field with a crop of potatoes. There was at his door a chaise cart with two men in it, who were bargaining with him for some potatoes, and this man, who only four or five years before was a common day labourer on 10s. a-week, was then in a condition to be able to refuse the price offered for his potatoes as insufficient. The same man showed him another field, which he was renting, though he had not got it direct from the landowner, at the rate of 3l. per acre, and said he was making a large profit from it.—Mr. LOCKHART had heard with satisfaction the statement of the right hon. baronet the Home Secretary, and expressed his concurrence in it. Leave was then given to bring in the Bill, which was read a first time; and ordered to be read a second time after Easter.

Wednesday.—MR. THORNELY asked the Government if certain sugars, recently arrived from New Orleans, the produce of Louisiana, and therefore the produce of slave labour, would be admissible on the same terms as the sugars of China, Manilla, and Java?—Sir R. PEEL had not received any official information of the arrival of this cargo of sugar, which he apprehended could not at present be admitted without an order in Council, for which no application had yet been made. But he had no hesitation in admitting, that under our reciprocity treaty with the United States, by which we are bound to admit its produce on the same terms as those of the most favoured nation, such sugar must be admitted on equal conditions with free-labour countries.—Mr. THORNELY understood that Louisiana sugar could be imported with a considerable profit, and he congratulated the Government on the important trade thus rising up.—To questions put by Mr. R. YORKE, the Earl of LINCOLN replied that the cost of the new houses of Parliament would not greatly exceed the estimate; that is, the whole amount would be 928,913*l.* He had every reason to believe that the houses would be ready for occupation by the session of 184[illegible].—Sir J. GRAHAM announced that it was not his intention to bring in a general Bill this session on the subject of turnpike roads.—To a question from Lord MAHON, Sir J. GRAHAM stated that he had not been able to frame any measure, which, in his mind, would operate satisfactorily to remedy the evils arising from interments in cities and towns.—On the order of the day for going into committee on the Property-tax Bill, Capt. B. OSBORNE moved as an amendment, that the House resolve itself into a committee on the Bill that day three months.—Mr. MUNTZ supported the amendment, because he believed that the tax, as at present imposed, was most unjust, and would be perpetual. It was true, he said, that the Premier had relieved the industrious classes belonging to the manufacturing interest, but he had done this by laying additional burdens upon the agricultural interest. Now he called this robbing Peter to pay Paul; but he wanted to know who was to pay Peter? Sir John Tyrrell had said the other day that Sir R. Peel was a difficult bird to put salt on his tail, but it was quite clear that the right hon. baronet had put salt on some of their tails.—Mr. F. T. BARING supported the proposition of the Government, because he did not think the Income-tax could be dispensed with without the imposition of additional taxes to the amount of two millions. He was ready, he said, to submit to any taunt for expressing this opinion, because he believed it to be a sound one. Whatever might be said of what had passed, he was determined, with respect to the future, that he would never be a party to leaving the revenue of the country in a state of deficiency. He found fault with Government for leaving themselves so small a calculated surplus as 100,000*l.*, and that too dependent on the more than doubtful produce of the sugar duties. He also quarrelled with them for not preferring reductions on tea, soap, tobacco, and coffee, to those they had made. He had little expectation of the termination of the Property-tax in the time promised; and declared that he did not think it very satisfactory to have it announced, that half a million more would be required this year for the army and navy estimates, than was demanded for the same purpose during the last year of "Whig misrule and mismanagement."—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER defended the soundness of his financial calculations, and explained that the reason why reductions on tea, tobacco, and soap had not been preferred was, that any reductions which the revenue would allow of on these great articles of consumption would benefit the consumer very little, if at all.—Mr. EWART supported the principle of direct taxation, but thought a distinction should be drawn between property and income. He likewise suggested that money paid for life insurances should be exempt.—Mr. D. BARCLAY supported the Government proposal, but recommended the reduction of the tax by 1½*d.* in the pound per year until they would entirely slide out of it.—Mr. HAWES supported the amendment.—The House divided, when the amendment was rejected by 96 to 23.—The House went into committee on the Bill, and in Clause 1, the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER moved that the blank be filled up with the words "three years."—Mr. CURTEIS moved the insertion of "two" years instead of three. On this the committee divided, when the amendment was negatived by 69 to 17. The first clause was then agreed to, continuing the tax for three years longer. On clause 2 a discussion arose upon the unequal manner in which the tax, as at present levied, pressed upon various classes.—Mr. WAKLEY wished local commissioners to have a power to remit the tax in cases where a tenant had absconded, and where the landlord had not a chance of receiving his rent.—Mr. SPOONER desired that persons should be allowed to deduct poor rates, and other parochial and local rates paid in respect of premises used for the purpose of trade, also the amounts paid for insurances upon lives.—Lord J. RUSSELL thought that as the tax was likely to be a permanent one its inequalities ought to be removed as far as possible, and a difference made between permanent and fluctuating incomes. He likewise thought that premiums paid for life assurances should be exempted.—Lord SANDON thought the time had come when there ought to be a Property-tax, and from his connection with a large commercial town he had been the more convinced of the propriety of that tax. They were now getting into a condition of society where direct taxation was more convenient and easy; and where indirect taxation was less convenient. The objection to the Income-tax originally was, that it would have a tendency to drive capital out of this country. But when it was seen that this tax of three per cent. had raised the large amount of between five and six millions, he thought that the allegation was shown to be unfounded. What they had now to do was to find subsistence for an enormous population. How was that to be done but by procuring for them the means of industry? And what hurt industry but the taxes imposed by the Customs and Excise? That which would enable them to get rid of these taxes, imposed as the Customs and Excise, would enable them the more easily to feed and maintain the growing population. Looking at the question in these points of view, he thought they ought to have recourse to direct taxation; and he, for one, should be very sorry if Government were to pledge themselves that they would not continue this tax longer than three years.—Lord Ebrington said he heard with delight the sentiments uttered by Lord Sandon, and rejoiced to find that Liverpool was added to those towns which advocated the principles of free trade.—To all the proposed alterations, Sir R. Peel replied, that it would be an ungracious thing to say, on the part of the Ministry, that he should resist any alteration in the measure, but he certainly must say that he had the strongest possible impression that it was true policy to keep the Bill in its present form. If once alterations were submitted to, they would have so many proposed that there would be no time to discuss them by the 5th April next.—Lord J. Russell said that if he thought the Bill was only for 3 years, he should at once acquiesce in all the objectionable parts of it. But as he could not suppose that to be the case, he was perfectly ready to agree to any proposition which would have the effect of making it less unequal in its operations.—The second and all the remaining clauses of the Bill were agreed to, and the Bill was ordered to be reported on Friday, on which day Mr. Spooner gave notice that he should move his amendments.—The Stamp Duties Assimilation Bill was read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—Several clauses of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill were agreed to in committee at an early sitting.—At the usual evening sitting, Mr. Blewitt gave notice that, on an early day after Easter, he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the several Acts of Parliament which prohibited the growth and curing of tobacco in Great Britain and Ireland.—Mr. Gisborne gave notice that he should, on an early day, call the attention of the House to the subject of the powers of the Board of Trade with respect to railways.—In answer to Mr. Borthwick, Lord J. Russell stated that it was his intention to bring forward the question of the distressed condition of the labouring population shortly after Easter, with the view of proposing some legislative remedial measure.—In reply to Mr. Belawney, Sir R. Peel announced that he hoped at an early period of the Session to bring forward a Bill for the removal of the civil disabilities of the Jews, at least so far as municipal and corporate disabilities extended.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer postponed the bringing up of the report on the Sugar Duties to Monday next, when the discussion was fixed to take place, and intimated that he had no intention to alter the classification of the Sugar Duties already proposed.—Mr. Ewart moved for leave to bring in a Bill to enable Town-councils to establish museums of art in corporate towns. The object of his measure was to diffuse specimens of art throughout the country: to send them to the museums of Manchester, of Glasgow, of Birmingham, of Coventry, and of all the large manufacturing towns; and to enable the Town-councils to defray the expenses necessary for these museums by the imposition of a small borough rate, so as to admit the population upon the easiest possible terms. Many persons, he said, were ready to aid in the formation of these museums, either by the subscription of money, or by presenting them with works of art. It was to encourage these exertions that he ventured to propose the present measure.—Mr. Wyse seconded the motion, enlarging on the importance of diffusing a taste for the fine and elevated in art.—Sir W. James alleged that the reformed Town-councils, when first elected, had, in many instances, brought to the hammer at public auction, valuable works of art, pictures, articles of plate, and so forth, which had been handed down through successive generations. He was glad that a better spirit now prevailed, and that we are about to redeem our national character, by showing the natural union between art and commerce.—Mr. M. Philips and Mr. Hume, in supporting the motion, adverted to public parks and walks, in conjunction with museums, as necessary for effecting the combined object of improving the health and the taste of the people at large.—Mr. Bernal gave credit to his hon. friend for his perseverance in so good a cause as that which he intended to promote by his Bill, and expressed his belief that the right hon. baronet at the head of the Government was equally warm in promoting that cause. But a thing of this kind ought not to be done in a hurry; and therefore he very much wished, however desirable it might be to establish places of recreation for the public, that his hon. friend would not endeavour to embrace the suggestion of the hon. member for Montrose upon the present occasion, lest it should embarrass him and be fatal to the final success of his Bill. It certainly was gratifying to find that though one or two outrages had been committed, which were much to be regretted—such as the destruction of the Portland vase, for instance—the working classes were free from any charge of damaging the valuable works exposed to their inspection. The few outrages that had been committed were committed not by the labouring classes, but by persons moving in superior walks of life. He trusted this country would not be behind the King of the French in the example he had set in promoting a taste for the Fine Arts. He congratulated the right hon. baronet, who was one of the trustees of the British Museum, on the many improvements made in that establishment. He remembered when Magna Charta was stuck alongside the war-club of a New Zealander, so little attention was paid to the relative value and classification of articles. He implored the right hon. baronet to turn his attention to the condition of the relics of the middle ages, many of which appeared to be going to decay.—Sir R. Peel said, the subject last mentioned by the hon. gentleman had not altogether escaped the attention of the trustees of the British Museum. At the same time, he must observe that there were many suggestions of the kind made, and it was absolutely necessary to make some selection. During the recess the trustees had applied themselves to the improvement of the geological department; and there were hopes that an application to Parliament to stimulate the progress of that object would not be unsuccessful. He agreed with the hon. member for Dumfries as to the importance of the object he contemplated, but he would advise the House to pause before they agreed to any extensive municipal taxation, whether for purposes of art, or for establishing places of recreation; seeing that in the course of the present session a proposition was contemplated of creating local taxation for the purpose of securing a most important object—the ventilation and cleansing of towns. The House should take care not to create a prejudice against improvements by making them unpleasant and burdensome to the people. He would suggest that, instead of giving the Town-council too extensive powers to tax the people for the purposes contemplated by the hon. gentleman's Bill, they should first endeavour to obtain by voluntary contributions sufficient money to provide the museum, the edifice being erected by such means on the clear understanding that it would be henceforth maintained by local taxation. Such a plan would insure the permanency of the museum, and afford a guarantee and an encouragement to the rich and liberal to come forward in order to establish the museum. The same experiment had been tried successfully in respect to the endowment of new churches. If the Town-council should obtain the power proposed, he hoped they would thus make it subservient to local liberality and improvement. He had no doubt the effect of such a plan would be to lead many of the resident gentlemen of each neighbourhood not merely to assist in rearing the edifice, but in supplying it with valuable presents. He hoped the hon. gentleman would consider these suggestions.—Lord J. Manners approved of Mr. Hume's suggestion, and thought it desirable that there should be places provided for the recreation of the people. He would very much wish that Government could be induced to undertake the proposition, and bring in a Bill for that purpose, and he was sure that every member in that House would support it. He believed that the people were very grateful for any opportunity given them of visiting public exhibitions, and their conduct in every respect deserved it. He heartily supported the motion.—Mr. Brotherton concurred in support of the motion; and Mr. Hutt advertised to the beautiful works in stained glass, bronze, &c., produced in Newcastle, Birmingham, and Sheffield, as evidence of what Englishmen were capable, with proper instruction.—Mr. Labouchere had been told by Sir F. Chantrey, who had sprung from a humble rank in life, that owing to the want of opportunities during his youth of studying models of great works of art, it was late in life before his eyes became educated. There was no doubt of the great importance and utility to a commercial and manufacturing country of schools of design and museums.—Mr. Shell added a few observations, and then leave was given to bring in the Bill.—Mr. Ewart then moved that it is expedient that inquiry be made as to the expediency of enabling defendant's counsel in civil, and the prisoner's counsel in criminal cases, to address the jury on the close of the evidence.—The Attorney-General, who appeared for the first time since his return to England, and evidently in improved health, pointed out the inconveniences of granting the motion, and suggested that it be referred to the criminal law commission. The motion was therefore withdrawn. The next motion was one by Mr. Williams, for documents relating to the sale of Crown property in Cardiganshire, sold by private contract to the Duke of Newcastle by the Woods and Forests—the property being adjoining to his Grace's Hafod estate. Mr. Williams, however, was absent, and the motion was made by Mr. Hume, who did so without comment.—The Earl of Lincoln, as head of the Woods and Forests, and son of the Duke of Newcastle, complained of the absence of Mr. Williams, who had placed on the notice paper a motion involving a grave charge of corruption against himself, as a servant of the Crown. He therefore thanked Mr. Hume for giving him the opportunity of defence and explanation. The property in question was bought from the Crown in 1832, when Lord Duncannon was at the Woods and Forests, by the devisees of Colonel Johnes; and when the Duke of Newcastle bought the Hafod estate adjoining, he necessarily took upon himself the prior contract, to which he had been no party. The right of the Crown was disputed all through the negotiations, and the Duke of Newcastle considered that in the matter he had been subjected to very sharp practice. But when he (the Earl of Lincoln) came to the Woods and Forests, he felt that it was due to his own character, as well as for the satisfaction of his father, that if the Duke of Newcastle were] to obtain the property at all, he must submit to the terms demanded by the Crown, although, had it been the case of any other individual, he would have been disposed to have re-considered the contract. Throughout the whole matter, he was so conscious of having acted with the most rigid integrity, that he was ready to produce every letter and paper connected with the transaction.—Mr. Hume considered the vindication of the Earl of Lincoln to be complete, and asked leave for the motion to be withdrawn, but the Earl of Lincoln preferred the production of the documents, which was ordered.—On the motion of Capt. Pechell, a correspondence respecting the Post-office arrangements at the Scilly Islands was ordered.—Some other unopposed returns were ordered.—The Bastardy Bill and the Consolidated Fund (8,000,000*l.*) were read a second time.

Friday.—Mr. Deedes and Mr. R. B. Sheridan took their oaths and their seats, the former for East Kent, the latter for Shaftesbury.—Mr. Wodehouse gave notice that when Mr. Cobden brought on his motion relating to the grievances of tenant farmers, he should move several amendments which would show that the interests of landlords and tenant farmers were identical.—Mr. S. O'Brien gave notice that on the same occasion he should move, as an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of agricultural distress. Mr. Shaw gave notice that on Thursday next he should move for a Select Committee to inquire into the plan of Atmospheric Railways.—Mr. Bright gave notice that on Monday next he should name the Committee on the Game Laws.—Mr. S. O'Brien asked when it was intended to take off the duty on agricultural seeds, and if clover-seed would be included?—Sir R. Peel said the duty on agricultural seeds would be reduced either in May or the beginning of June; but he wished to state that the duty on clover-seed would not be reduced.—Mr. Wortley said that the French papers had stated that the English Government had offered to Santa Anna a sum of 25,000,000 dollars for the province of California in 1837, and that that beautiful province was on the point of being given up to Great Britain. The paragraph stated that that was another proof of the undermining ambition of Great Britain; and it also stated that 5,000,000 dollars had been offered by the American Government. Now, though that was a paragraph in the newspapers, it professed to have some foundation, and considering the avidity with which all statements of that kind were laid hold of, both in France and in the United States, tending to raise prejudices against the policy of Great Britain, he wished to ask, first, whether the right hon. gentleman was aware of any correspondence on this subject having taken place? 2dly, whether there was any foundation whatever for such statement?—Sir R. Peel begged to state in the most distinct and explicit manner, in answer to the question put by his hon. friend, that he was not aware of the existence of any such correspondence, and he believed the report alluded to was as utterly without foundation as any report that ever existed. There were a great many reports respecting the undermining ambition of Great Britain, but he believed such reports were often spread as a palliation for the insertion of others. He was not aware of any such correspondence being carried on, and he could find no trace of such a correspondence, so that the report was utterly destitute of the shadow of a foundation.—Lord Palmerston said, on behalf of the late Government, that they had never offered in 1837, or any other year, 37,000,000 of dollars, or any other sum for any Mexican province.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer postponed bringing up the report on the Property Tax Bill until Monday.—On the order of the day for going into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Williams entered into a long explanation of the reasons which induced him to place his notice of motion on the paper last night respecting the purchase of Crown lands in South Wales, by the Duke of Newcastle.—The Earl of Lincoln repeated the observations that he used on Thursday night. He wished the fullest inquiry. It was most unfair and most unjust to make such insinuations as those uttered by hon. members opposite. It was a personal matter, and he would not trouble the House with details, but he would produce all the papers and documents relating to the purchase of the estate near Hafod by the Duke of Newcastle. He trusted, however, that the hon. member for Coventry would not be satisfied with the production of the papers, but that he would follow up his notice with a specific motion on the subject. He should be quite ready to meet it.—Mr. Hume regretted that the hon. member for Coventry was not in the House when his motion was called on. In his absence, however, he (Mr. Hume) kindly consented to make the motion, and he must say, that he never, in the course of his parliamentary experience, ever heard so satisfactory an answer given as that given by Lord Lincoln. The answer of the noble lord was most satisfactory.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in answer to a question, said, if the debate on the Property Tax Bill in committee was concluded on Monday night, he should next move the consideration of the alterations which was intended to make in the export duties. [Left sitting.]

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols for the accounts closed at 100⅛; Bank Stock for account, 214; Exchequer Bills 63 to 65. p.m.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—L. J. Nicolay, Woolwich, draper—T. Matcham, Southampton, plumber—J. Hart, Greenwich, builder—W. Hardwick, Holborn, draper—R. Clark, jun., Rotherhithe, wharfinger—E. W. Crowther, Scammoden, Yorkshire, woollen cloth manufacturer—F. Wray, Southampton, boot and shoe maker—W. Spencer, Wallingford, Berkshire, brewer—C. Jacobs, Farringdon Market, fruit salesman—J. Wilson, Jermyn street, St. James's, boot maker—J. Strickett, Wye, Kent, grocer—J. S. Herring, Cornish-place, Spa-road, Bermondsey, builder—G. Salmen, City road basin, timber merchant—W. Lawton, jun., Salisbury-street, Strand, wine merchant—J. Harry and G. Harry, Wisbech St. Peter, Cambridgeshire, grocers—T. K. Garrett, Hedford place Commercial-road, bookseller—J. R. Day, White Hart-street, Drury lane, victualler—D. Maclay, Liverpool, master mariner—W. Bennett, Sheffield, grocer—W. C. Whitehead, Leeds, cheese factor—W. Pell, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Weather.—During the past week the weather in the metropolis has been unusually severe. An intense frost set in on Friday night and has continued during the week with increased severity, accompanied with frequent snow storms. Such weather during the first week of March has not been known for years. On Wednesday night, in Hyde Park, the thermometer was at 8°, and on Thursday, at noon, it stood at 32° in the sun, and 26° in the shade. The wind has been strong and piercing from the north-east.

Royal Exchange.—The recommendation of the merchants frequenting the Royal Exchange respecting the severe draughts they were exposed to when on 'Change in the merchants' area, has been adopted by the Gresham Committee, workmen being now engaged in erecting screens and doorways at the north and south entrances. The marble statue of Her Majesty, to stand in the centre of the area, is in a forward state, and it is said will be placed on its site early in the summer. The subscription for the statue of Prince Albert, to commemorate his laying the foundation-stone, already amounts to several thousand pounds.

University College.—The annual general meeting of the proprietors of this College was held last week, the Earl of Auckland, vice-president, in the chair. The report stated that during the past year there had been 834 pupils, including 183 students in arts and law and 312 in medicine; being an increase of 10 as compared with the number attending those classes last year. The classes of the Faculty of Arts were at present 64, and in the aggregate 129. There was an increase in the amount of fees of 210*l.* 2*s.*, as compared with last year, which showed that the entries for general education had been much more numerous. The increase of the Mathematical Class was from 58 to 79. The schoolmasters and ushers on the endowment foundation were 27. The Junior School this term had 245 pupils. At the examination of the University of London in Arts, Law, and Medicine, the students of this College had maintained a high reputation, and had received a large share of distinctions and rewards. The receipts of the past year were 21,498*l.* 1*s.*, and the expenditure, including the investment of 5500*l.* in Consols, and an Exchequer Bill of 500*l.*, amounted to 20,522*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.*, leaving a balance of 975*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* The report further stated that several of the proprietors of the College had agreed with the Council that their shares therein should, at their death, be given up, to be bestowed as rewards on meritorious students. The report having been received, Lord Brougham was re-elected president, the Earl of Auckland vice-president, and six gentlemen members of the Council.—The annual dinner of gentlemen educated at the College, and officially connected with the institution, took place on the 26th ult., at the Freemasons' Tavern; Mr. Aldham, M.P., in the chair.

The Russia Company.—The Members of this company celebrated its anniversary on Saturday, by a dinner at the London Tavern. The attendance was a full one, as usual, and included, in addition to Baron Brunnow the Russian Ambassador, who was the principal guest, some members of different departments of Government, and of the leading civic establishments, with many gentlemen of mercantile eminence and of scientific and professional reputation. Mr. Astell, M.P., Governor of the Company, presided. The health of the Emperor of Russia was drank with great applause, and acknowledged by Baron Brunnow, who expressed in the warmest terms the Emperor's gratification at his recent visit to this country. The health of Her Majesty's Ministers was acknowledged, in the absence of the members of the Cabinet, by Sir George Clerk.

The Foreign Cattle Distemper.—An order has been issued to the Customs authorities by the Lords of the Treasury, directing them to impress upon the landing officers the necessity of paying the strictest attention to the state of the cattle imported into this country, in consequence of the violent disorders at present raging in many parts of the Continent; and in the event of their appearing to be infected with any disease, to prevent their being landed until they have the opinion of a competent authority as to their soundness, and the sanction of the commissioners for their admission.

Thames Tunnel.—The annual meeting of the Tunnel Company took place on Tuesday, Mr. Hawes in the chair. The report stated that the works were in a good condition, but that there was at present no prospect of a dividend. There had been received 6137*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* from foot-passengers, making about 1,473,100 who had gone through, which was a less number than the previous year. The receipts amounted to 15,686*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*, including 620*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* from the stall-keepers; and after paying all the charges there remained a balance in hand of 1947*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* The chairman said that there were 3 roads in contemplation on the south side to the Tunnel—from Deptford, the Commercial-road, and the Elephant and Castle; that from Deptford had been begun. An analysis had been made of the water in the Tunnel by Professor Faraday, who had ascertained that the water was from land-springs, and not from the Thames. With respect to the structure, he believed that it would last many hundred years. A plan had been submitted by the late Mr. Samuda, who proposed to form a railway through the Tunnel for the conveyance of carriages and carts, one side being for foot-passengers and another for vehicles. The apparatus for the railway would cost about 10,000*l.* When it was sufficiently matured, the plan would be laid before the proprietors. The directors had done all in their power to reduce the expenses, and in doing so had diminished the allowance granted to them from 1000*l.* to 200*l.* a-year. The sum they had received from the Government was 246,000*l.*

The Rev. Mr. Oakeley.—We noticed in our Paper of the 22d ult., the letter written to the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford by Mr. Oakeley, minister of Margaret-street chapel, in reference to the late proceedings against Mr. Ward. It appears that this letter attracted the attention of the Bishop of London, who considered it necessary to take official notice of the sentiments it avowed. The Standard last week announced that the bishop had suspended Mr. Oakeley from the ministrations of his chapel; but on the next day Mr. Oakeley wrote a letter to that journal, requesting the editor to insert his "explicit contradiction of the fact," adding that "no change whatever has been made with respect to the ministrations of the chapel." From what, however, has since been published, it appears that the Bishop of London considered the letter of Mr. Oakeley to the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford as one deserving of grave notice, and that the question of revoking his licence for Margaret Chapel was under consideration. But the licence never was revoked, nor was Mr. Oakeley ever suspended in any technical sense; though he did, by a voluntary arrangement with the bishop, abstain from officiating for five days. In the meantime the bishop, with the view of avoiding an extreme exercise of authority, suggested to Mr. Oakeley the resignation of his licence. To this request no answer was formally returned. In the further consideration of the subject it was found that, though a revocation of the licence would have displaced Mr. Oakeley from Margaret Chapel, that gentleman holds a prebendal stall at Lichfield, from which he cannot be removed except by a process in the Ecclesiastical Court; and as the case against Mr. Oakeley was not one of immorality, the bishop is said to have felt reluctant to adopt summary proceedings against him. On the other hand, representations, strongly in favour of the reverend gentleman's ministerial conduct and teaching, were made to the bishop by all the regular attendants of the chapel. The bishop's chaplain has since made an official communication to the daily papers, stating that Mr. Oakeley has been allowed to continue his ministrations in Margaret-street Chapel, ad interim only, till the bishop shall have obtained the opinion of his legal advisers as to the proper course of proceeding in so grave a case, and also that there is no foundation for the report that the bishop has received a communication from the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford on the subject of the letter addressed to the Vice-Chancellor by Mr. Oakeley.

The Spa-fields Burial-ground.—In consequence of the publicity given to the abuses alleged to be committed in Spa-fields Burial-ground, Clerkenwell, Sir James Graham, the Poor-law Commissioners, and the parish authorities of Clerkenwell, have taken up the matter. On Sunday last Captain Hay, Assistant Commissioner of Police, with several officers of the force, the parish officers of Clerkenwell, and a committee of the inhabitants, assembled in Exmouth-street, Spa-fields, in order to take the depositions of parties in reference to the state of the graveyard, and the abuses carried on there, for the purpose of laying them before Sir J. Graham. Several parties were examined. Their evidence was a repetition of what has already appeared in the newspapers. Capt. Hay and the whole of the parties attended on Monday before the Board of Guardians, when the depositions were laid before the board, and it is the intention of the vestry clerk to indict the persons concerned in the burial ground at the sessions.

The use of the Surplice in the City.—A vestry meeting of the parishioners of St. Lawrence Jewry, and St. Mary Magdalen, Milk-street, was held last week, to receive the report of a deputation appointed to wait on the vicar, to endeavour to induce him to discontinue the use of the surplice, the reading of the offertory sentences, and the prayer for the Church Militant. To these two last points the rev. gentleman adhered, although he professed himself willing to yield the surplice and resume his gown. A lengthened debate took place, and eventually resolutions were adopted appointing a committee to wait on the Bishop of London, requesting his interference with the vicar.

Metropolis Improvements.—The Commissioners of Woods and Forests have issued their plans for letting on building leases 35 plots of ground on the line of the new street between Oxford-street and Holborn, which is to be called "Oxford-street," its length being about 1800 feet, width about 60 feet. The fronts of the houses "are to be enriched architectural elevations, faced with such materials as the commissioners may approve," and "no objection will be made to buildings of the architecture known as Elizabethan." The carcase of each house is to be built by or before Christmas-day, 1845, and the houses and other buildings are to be fit for habitation by or before Midsummer-day, 1846, under penalty of the forfeiture of the lease." The ground excavated for the basement stories, if required by the commissioners, is to be deposited to fill up the loose ground around the Milbank Prison. No tenant is to carry on the business of publican, or any noxious, noisy, or offensive trade, without the consent of the commissioners. The houses are to be erected subject to the inspection of the architect of the commissioners, and no change of the architectural decorations are to be granted without consent of the commissioners.—A minute account was published in the daily papers last week of a new street to be formed from St. James's Palace to the Regent's Park, through St. James's-street and Albemarle-street. It appears, however, that no such plan is in contemplation.

New Steamers on the River.—A new steam-boat company has been formed for the purpose of building a faster and more superior class of steamers for the above-bridge trade, with a capital of 34,000*l.* Ten new iron steamers are building for this company at Blackwall. Each vessel will be divided into four compartments, with water-tight bulk-heads, and will be propelled by two of Penn's oscillating engines, of 12-horse power. The new fleet will be distinguished by the name of Citizen, and lettered A to N inclusive. They will begin steaming between the City and Chelsea on Whit-Monday.

Lincoln's Inn.—It appears that the improvements in Lincoln's Inn are not to be confined to the erection of the new hall, library, &c., now approaching completion, but that the area of New-square is to be inclosed, and a grass plot laid down and planted with shrubs. An outline of the intended inclosure has been marked out in the square, by which it appears that a carriage-way will be left of about 24 feet in width, to admit the free approach of carriages to the chambers.

Fatal Explosion at Blackwall.—On Wednesday morning a dreadful explosion happened at Blackwall, at the works of Mr. Samuda, whose brother was so recently killed by the explosion on board the Gipsy Queen. By this accident three men met with instant death, while several others were so seriously wounded that one of them has since died on board the hospital ship. It appears that a stationary engine is used for the general purposes of drilling iron, &c., and the boiler exploded, destroying everything in its immediate vicinity, and causing the destruction of numbers of windows for a considerable distance. The boiler had been purchased by the firm from Mr. Fairburn, of Mill-bank, about a month ago, and having been previously tested, had been erected by Messrs. Samuda on their premises, in Orchard-place, which are occupied principally for the manufacture and building of iron steam-boats, and the iron work of the atmospheric railway, for the purpose of working their machinery. The boiler was in the open air, without any covering; the steam-pipe, which conveyed the steam to the cylinders, was 24 feet in length, and only 4½ inches in diameter, and it is supposed that, owing to the exposure of the pipe to the frost, and the smallness of its dimensions, the steam became condensed too fast, and was converted into a highly inflammable gas, which blew up the boiler. Three men were killed on the spot, and seven or eight others severely injured. The explosion was distinctly heard along the whole line of the Blackwall Railway, from Fenchurch-street to the East India Docks, and in Greenwich, Woolwich, Bow, Bromley, Stepney, and Limehouse. The mischief done on the premises and in the immediate locality was very great. The engine-house was reduced to a heap of ruins, and the principal part of the materials hurled to a considerable distance. The premises of the Plate Glass Works, the Crown Tavern, and numerous tenements adjoining, were damaged, and the window-frames blown out. Portions of the boiler were found in the Plaistow Marshes, on the opposite side of the Lea, about 150 yards from the factory. In the same place the body of one of the unfortunate sufferers, which had been blown across the creek, was picked up in a mutilated condition. It is believed that he was on the top of the boiler, and in the act of easing the safety-valve, when the occurrence happened. The other bodies were found close to the spot where the boiler stood, and they appeared to have been killed instantaneously.

Base Coin.—The circulation of base coin in the metropolis is now practised to a great extent, particularly of shillings and sixpences. The spurious coin are manufactured in a superior style, being double plated, and the sound excellent, and are supposed to be made in Birmingham. The detection can, however, be made by weighing them against real coin.

The Adelaide Gallery.—The valuable collection of scientific instruments and curiosities, consisting of steam-engines, gas microscopes, and steam gun, a colossal lens, dissolving orrery, dissolving views, gasometers, a large quantity of models and figures, the electro-magnet, a variety of electrical apparatus, comprising about 500 different articles, were disposed of last week by auction. The property was stated to have been purchased by a company originally, at an expense of nearly 20,000*l.* Upon some of the company dying and removing out of the country, the survivors parted with the property, when it was sold at an enormous sacrifice. During the tenure of it by the present proprietors, it has returned between 10*l.* and 20*l.* a week, and the week before last above 80*l.* was realised by the exhibition. The premises belong to the Crown, to which they will revert at the termination of the lease. The auctioneer asked 2000*l.* for the collection, when 400 guineas were offered, and it was knocked down for 490 guineas.

London and Westminster Bank.—At the meeting of the shareholders of this Bank, held on Wednesday, a dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum was declared, the profits for the past year, after paying current expenses and income-tax, and making provisions for all bad and doubtful debts, amounting to 51,081*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* The reserve fund, with the addition of 3081*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, the surplus of the dividends, will now amount to 69,904*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*

Destructive Fires.—An unusual number of serious fires has occurred in the metropolis during the last ten days. Last week the premises of Messrs. Cornfield and Taylor, crape-manufacturers, in Gutter-lane, Cheapside, were burnt down, and property destroyed to the amount of nearly 10,000*l.* The inmates were saved with great difficulty, by means of the jumping-sheet of the Fire Brigade and the escape-ladder. Several of the [illegible] and adjoining buildings were extensively injured by fire and water.—On Sunday a fire broke out in the premises of Mr. Evans, manufacturer of account-books, &c., in Berwick-street, Oxford-street, occasioned by a child playing with lucifer matches. The flames extended to the adjoining houses, and destroyed the contents of the factory of Mr. Leader, containing several carriages of the nobility, and damaged four houses in Noel-street.—On Sunday night the extensive premises of Messrs. Lawrence, the South-Sea merchants, and patentees of the new-manufactured rope, were destroyed by a fire more disastrous in its ravages than any which has occurred since the burning of St. Olave's church and Topping's wharf, about 18 months since. Of the main factory, which was a fine building, overlooking the Thames, in fact, the most prominent object on that side of the river between Greenwich Hospital and Woolwich, nothing was left but its lofty walls, which in the course of the next day were blown down by the wind. The machinery it contained was perhaps the most extensive of any factory in the metropolis, and its completion had occupied ten years. The whole was destroyed, together with the greater portion of the stores, which were about 70 feet in length. The rope gallery, adjoining the manufactory, is a quarter of a mile in length; about 100 feet were destroyed, and but for the firemen cutting off the communication, the whole would have been levelled to the ground. The amount of insurances effected on the property does not exceed 6000*l.*, while the total loss is between 40,000*l.* and 50,000*l.* Upwards of 250 workmen are thrown out of employment by this fire.

The late Murder at Hampstead.—We stated in our last that a schoolmaster, named Thomas Henry Hocker had been taken into custody, with his brother, on suspicion of being the murderer of Mr. De la Rue. Since the apprehension of the prisoners, the daily papers have been filled with lengthy accounts of the adjourned examinations which have taken place before the coroner and the magistrate of Marylebone. On these occasions, the evidence of the different witnesses was given at great length, but the proceedings before the magistrate were for the most part a repetition of what took place before the coroner. The facts however may be briefly stated. On Saturday at the adjourned inquest, a long discussion arose on the non-production of the prisoner, the governor of the New Prison being unwilling to incur the risk of producing before the coroner a prisoner who had been remanded by a magistrate, as the visiting justices had passed a resolution forbidding the practice. Sir J. Graham, as Secretary of State, had given permission to the governor, but in the absence of definite instructions from the magistrates, the governor declined to act on his own responsibility. The inquest was accordingly adjourned to Monday, when the prisoner and his brother were brought up in custody. It was proved by several witnesses that the watch, ring, and other property of Mr. De la Rue were in the possession of the elder prisoner when he was apprehended, and that the clothes worn by the prisoner on the night of the murder were saturated with blood. It was also proved that the letter signed "Caroline," which was found in the pocket of Mr. De La Rue, and supposed to have been written by some female whom he had been in the habit of meeting in the Hampstead fields, was in the prisoner's handwriting; the inference being that he placed it in the deceased's pocket after the murder, for the purpose of misleading the persons who might discover the body, and putting the police on the wrong scent. The account given by the prisoner of his movements on the night of the murder was proved to be false, and the evidence of the prisoner's family completed in many important points the evidence of the other witnesses. There appeared, however, to be nothing which implicated the brother James Hocker, who was consequently discharged and admitted a witness for the prosecution. The jury then returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who was committed to take his trial. During these investigations the prisoner manifested the most complete indifference, and his composure was never shaken, except when his father and a young girl to whom, it is said, he was paying his addresses, were giving their evidence. He answered the questions put to him with extraordinary coolness and self-possession, and frequently offered his snuff-box to the persons standing round the dock.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 1:—West districts, 175; Northern, 241; Central, 228; Eastern, 224; Southern, 305; total, 1153; males, 595; females, 538. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1480: males, 760; females, 720.

Provincial.

Bolton.—At a meeting of the factory delegates in this town, on Monday, it was unanimously agreed, "That the most efficient means of promoting the real interests of the factory operatives is the adoption of a good Ten-hours Bill, and that we shall never cease our labours until such a Bill is granted by Parliament."

Colchester.—The Ipswich Express states that the adventures of a second Robinson Crusoe, in the person of Charles Goodridge, who has family connexions in this town, have just been published, and present one of the most singular narratives ever recorded. The author, with his fellow-shipmates, was wrecked when on a sealing voyage in 1821, and cast ashore upon one of the Crozet Islands in the South Seas—uninhabited by any human being, and without a tree or shrub growing upon its barren soil. A part of the crew landed upon another island some miles distant, each party believing the other to have perished. In this situation they furnished themselves with such accommodation as pieces saved from the wreck afforded, subsisting on birds, the sea-elephant, and fish. After the lapse of about two years they were rescued from their situation by an American schooner, the captain and the mate of which afterwards quarrelled upon the voyage, and the former determined to leave the latter upon one of the numerous islands in those seas, and abandon him to his fate. The mate's situation met with sympathy from those who had been so recently released from their captivity, and our author, with 8 others, declared they would accompany the mate in his exile if the captain persevered in his determination. The captain did keep his word, and so did the others, and all were left together upon an uninhabited island by the captain. After a lengthened sojourn, and after passing through many scenes of privation and suffering, they were taken off by a vessel, carried to Van Diemen's Land, and eventually returned to England. The truth of the narrative is well attested.

Ely.—The local papers mention that the inflammatory attack on the chest under which the Bishop of Ely has recently laboured has abated, but his Lordship remains in a very weak state.

Exeter.—During the past week the quiet village of Bradninch, about nine miles from this city, has been the scene of considerable excitement, in consequence of the following circumstance:—A short time ago a husbandman residing there lost his wife in childbed. The infant was taken into the country by a female relative, who took charge of it. On the day of the wife's funeral, this person came to Bradninch to attend it, and during the performance of the ceremony left the child in the care of its father, who had been indisposed, and was receiving sick-pay from his club, being confined to his bed. He had previously provided himself with a bottle of spirits of hartshorn, unknown to his nurse, by sending a visitor for it during her absence. He took the child into bed with him, whilst the funeral of his wife was going on, and administered the hartshorn to it, hiding the bottle in a crevice of the floor. The relative, on returning from the funeral, found it foaming at the mouth, and very ill. She was much alarmed, and took it to the minister of the parish to be baptised. That gentleman caused the infant to receive medical attention, but it died shortly afterwards. An inquest was held on the body, when the father was committed for trial on a charge of wilful murder.

Folkestone.—On Saturday last the French mail was sent, for the first time, from Boulogne to Folkestone, instead of from Calais to Dover. The General Post-office has made arrangements for the future management of the mails, thus showing that the Government intend to avail themselves of the quickest and shortest route.

Hertford.—An inquest was held on Saturday at the mansion of Sir R. Chester, near this town, on the body of Miss Jane Chester, aged 84, sister of Sir R. Chester. It appears that deceased on Tuesday week, had gone into the kitchen, where her shawl caught fire, and she was immediately enveloped in flames. Her cries for assistance were heard by the servants, who endeavoured to extinguish the flames, but could not do so until the unfortunate lady had been most dangerously burned about the arms, face, chest, and lower part of the body. The deceased continued in the greatest agony till 12 o'clock at night, when she expired. Verdict "Accidental death."

Liverpool.—On Sunday the American ship Franconia arrived in this port, bringing, as part of her cargo, 12 hogsheads of Louisiana sugar. This is the first arrival of American-grown sugar in this country, and it is supposed that it is only the beginning of a trade which will, in a few years, become a very considerable one, if the new sugar duties of Sir R. Peel should pass in their present form. The sugars received by the Franconia must necessarily have been shipped before anything was known or suspected of the reduction of duties now proposed, and must therefore have been sent here for the purpose of ascertaining whether they could be imported with profit at a duty of 36*s.* per cwt., so that if there was any chance whatever of their succeeding under such a duty, they cannot fail to pay handsomely, now that the duty is reduced to 24*s.* per cwt. It is said that the sugar crop in Louisiana was last year much the largest ever known, and the price so moderate, that a gentleman who was on one of the sugar plantations between New Orleans and Belize, about 3 months ago, was offered any quantity of sugar at the rate of $3\frac{7}{8}$ cents, that is, at less than 2*d.* per lb.—On Thursday week, Miss Bell, a young lady of Melling, near Lancaster, who was spending her birthday at the house of J. Aspinall, Esq., in Rodney-street, in this town, was passing in front of the drawing-room fire when her dress came in contact with the grate, and she was instantly enveloped in flames. The company who had assembled to celebrate her birthday rendered all the assistance in their power, but Miss Bell was so severely burnt that she expired a few days after.—The local papers mention that the Herculaneum property, including the dock, &c., was sold last week to the Birkenhead Dock and Warehouse Company, at 25*s.* a yard. It is said that the Birkenhead company having met with great hostility from the Liverpool Dock committee resolved to make a dock for themselves, for which purpose the property has been purchased.

Manchester.—A special meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce was held on Monday, to consider a resolution of the annual meeting, whereby Mr. Birley, the proprietor of the extensive manufactories of Macintosh fabrics, and other articles in caoutchouc, was excluded from the Board of Directors, of which he had been an active member, on the ground of his having acted as chairman of the Conservative Candidates Committee, at the last election for South Lancashire. A resolution condemning Mr. Birley's exclusion on political grounds, and the introduction of politics into the chamber, was proposed and seconded, when an amendment for an adjournment was moved and carried by a majority of 19, thus confirming the resolution of the annual meeting, and the rejection of Mr. Birley from office on account of his politics. — The Anti-Corn-law League held a meeting in this town on Wednesday. Mr. Wilson, Chairman of the League, presided; and the meeting was addressed by Mr. W. J. Fox and Mr. G. Thompson.—The local papers state that Mr. Van Amburgh has decided upon retiring from his singular profession, and returning at once to America, and that his whole establishment of elephants, giraffes, lions, leopards, and stud of 60 horses, will be brought to the hammer, at Manchester, in the course of the present month.

Oxford.—A correspondent of the Standard announces that Mr. Meyrick, Scholar of Corpus Christi College, whose withdrawal from the University of Oxford followed immediately upon the condemnation of Mr. Ward, has joined the Church of Rome. The same paper a few days since announced that Mr. Ward was about to be married, and that he would therefore necessarily vacate his fellowship. This statement has produced a letter from Mr. Ward to the daily papers, in which he desires to explain his views on the subject of religious celibacy. Mr. Ward says, "First, I hold it most firmly as a truth even of natural religion that celibacy is a higher condition of life than marriage. Secondly, I most fully believe that vows of celibacy, when duly taken, are perpetually obligatory; and Thirdly, I incline most strongly to the opinion, that under a really effective church system, the priests would be, if possible, wholly selected from those who have taken such vows. On the other hand, it appears to me of the utmost importance to remember, that in cases where no vocation is felt for a life of celibacy, he who leads such a life forfeits a great spiritual blessing, and he who makes a resolution, much more a vow to lead such a life, involves himself in a fearful snare. I can hardly fancy a much more serious evil than that the Catholic doctrine on 'counsels of perfection' should be revived, while the correlative Catholic doctrine on 'vocation' remains dormant; and any one incurs a most serious and grave responsibility who swells a current of public opinion which should tend to deter from marriage those who have not had the opportunity of carefully considering in which direction their real call lies. These have been very long my opinions, and more than one of my friends remember my having from time to time expressed them. How any one can imagine that I have ever professed any vocation to a high and ascetic life, I am utterly at a loss to conceive. At the very outset of my work I mention that my dissatisfaction with the English system arises from 'the absence' in it 'of such helps as may support an erring and sinful mind in the most ordinary path of salvation', (p. 8), and speak of myself as having 'no more power in understanding and sympathising with moral goodness than would be given by acting for a single day, with reasonable constancy, in disregard of other inclinations, and with a single eye to duty'—(p. 5): while in the preface I most earnestly draw the attention of my readers to these disclaimers.—(P. viii.) I suppose persons consider these to have been merely graceful expressions of humility at starting, just as some, with the kindest intentions, have represented me as not fully realising the various severe expressions which are to be found in my work. But I am really in the habit of saying what I mean, whether I speak of the 'deep and burning hatred' which I feel towards the English reformation, or of the very unfavourable light in which I regard my own moral attainments. One newspaper, I am told, supposes that I must deny the validity of the English ordinations. This is really unintelligible. The strongest ultramontane Roman Catholic would repudiate the doctrine that priests are forbidden by divine law to marry; while, I need not say, no ecclesiastical law exists on the subject in our own Church. On the other hand, I do not at all deny, rather I deeply feel, that under a pure and really effective church system, a person so wholly destitute as I am of such a vocation, would never have been admitted into priest's orders. In that part of the Roman Church (by far the greater part) where the discipline of priestly celibacy exists, nothing can exceed the care that is taken of ascertaining in each individual case whether there be really such a vocation. The only remaining question is, whether such a person as myself could have any right to express a confident opinion on theological subjects—in other words, whether I do not rate too highly the value of mere intellect in such inquiries. The Quarterly Reviewer of my work thinks the very reverse—that I rate it too highly. My own opinion of course is, that I rate it neither too highly nor too lowly. I think that a writer who, like myself, makes it a matter of the most conscientious duty never to deem a religious opinion false which religious men hold, until he has satisfied himself that they hold it either as an intellectual inference from, or an intellectual analysis of, their spiritual perception, and that it is itself no part of those perceptions—I think that such a writer may conceivably bring to light truths of the very utmost value and importance, however miserably deficient his own moral character. Whether I have myself brought to light such truths, depends of course upon the question, whether my intellectual powers be really valuable or not—a question which has plainly no reference to the point now at issue—or, viz., whether I have, or have not, a vocation for a single life."

Portsmouth.—The experimental cruise of the royal steam yacht, Victoria and Albert, the Black Eagle, and the Rattler, has terminated greatly in favour of the royal yacht. In the run from Plymouth to Milford she beat the Black Eagle by 2¼ hours, and the Rattler by nearly 12 hours, with a strong head-wind and heavy sea. The Rattler, however, fully proved the efficiency of the screw-propeller. Among our other naval news, we may mention that the Hibernia, 120, the oldest vessel of that class in the service, has been commissioned at this port for the flag of Sir W. Parker, the new commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean; and the Erebus and Terror experimental vessels were commissioned at Woolwich, on Tuesday, for the new Polar Expedition, and the following officers appointed to them:—To the Erebus, Captain Sir John Franklin, K. C. H., to have the command of the expedition; Commander James Fitzjames (1842), formerly commander of the Clio, 16-gun sloop, on the East Indian station; Lieut. Henry T. D. Le Vesconte (1841) formerly serving in the Clio; Mate, Charles F. Des Voeux (1844), from the Excellent, gunnery-ship at Portsmouth; Second Master, H. F. Collins, from the Shearwater steam-vessel, employed by Captain Washington in the surveying service; Clerk, G. F. Pinhorn; Gunner, J. G. Robinson; Boatswain, J. G. Terry; Carpenter, W. Weeks. To the Terror, Captain F. R. M. Crozier (1841); Lieut. Edward Little, (1837); Lieut. G. H. Hodgson, (1842); Carpenter, Thomas Honey. The 50-gun frigate, which is ordered by the Admiralty to be built from the drawings of Mr. White, of Cowes, is to be laid down at Deptford Dockyard. The name selected for her is the "Arrogant." She is to have an auxiliary screw-propeller.

Rugby.—The monument which was subscribed for by the friends of the late Dr. Arnold has been for some time in the chapel at Rugby. It was executed by Mr. Thomas, in Caen stone; the figure is recumbent, under a rich Gothic canopy, and has given so much satisfaction to the committee that they have rewarded the artist with 100*l.* beyond the sum agreed upon.

Railways.

The meeting of the Chester and Holyhead Company was held last week. The nature of the agreement with Government for the conveyance of the mails was explained to be 30,000*l.* per annum for a fixed period of five years, subject to further arrangement for a subsequent seven years. Capt. Moorsom has been appointed resident director to superintend the making of the line, and some of the contracts have already been let below the engineer's estimate. It was also stated that the Bill for the purchase of the Chester and Birkenhead Railway was now before Parliament, and the rumour of the contract being broken off contradicted. The declaration by Sir R. Peel in favour of Holyhead as a harbour for Irish traffic was dwelt on with much satisfaction. To carry out the requisites of the line fully, it is proposed to form a single branch line to Mold at a cost of 120,000*l.*—The Bristol and Exeter Company at their meeting announced a dividend of 1*l.* 8*s.* per share free from Income-tax. The half-year's receipts under the arrangement with the Great Western amount to 45,091*l.* There seems to be every confidence among the proprietary of the prosperity of the undertaking. A special meeting is to be held for receiving the Bills presented to Parliament for the various branches and schemes in progress.—The Hull and Selby Company have announced a dividend of 35*s.* per share, leaving a reserve fund of 3580*l.* The receipts for the half-year have greatly increased, and the available balance for the purposes of distribution amounted to 17,581*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* The negotiations for amalgamation with the Manchester and Leeds Company are not to be further proceeded with till the report of the Board of Trade on the subject has appeared. Branches to Beverley, Driffield, Bridlington, and Market Weighton have received the consideration of the Board, and are proposed to be prosecuted forthwith.—The Edinburgh and Glasgow Company have declared a dividend of 25*s.* per share, original stock, and 6*s.* 3*d.* on old quarter shares, or at the rate of five per cent. on the general stock of the company. This dividend is free from Income-tax, and after discharging it, there remains 2500*l.* to be carried to the depreciation fund, and 1848*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to the credit of the next half year's account. The receipts have been 30,263*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, an increase upon those of the same period last year of 4000*l.* The works on the extension to North Bridge are in a forward state; and this part of the line, with the Leith and Granton continuation, is expected to be ready for traffic early in the summer of 1846. To protect the interests of this company against the competition of the projected Caledonian and other Scottish lines, the directors have included notices in their intended Bill for a branch at Dykehead (between Castlecary and Falkirk) to Stirling, with a subsidiary branch to the Falkirk station, for the accommodation of the Edinburgh and Stirling traffic, and with short branches to Bannockburn and to a point opposite Alloa.—At the meeting of the Birmingham and Gloucester Company on Tuesday, the proposed lease of the line to the Midland Company in perpetuity, on the payment of 6 per cent. to the shareholders, with the option of purchase at the end of three years, was unanimously adopted. The dividend declared for the half-year was at the rate of 40*s.* on the 100*l.* shares, which left a balance of 1479*l.* to the credit of the new account.—At the meeting of the Manchester and Birmingham Company last week, a dividend of 20*s.* per share, payable on the 20th March, was declared. The Chairman stated at considerable length the nature of the arrangements entered into by the directors with the London and Birmingham, and after some discussion it was put and carried unanimously, that the proposed arrangement with the Manchester and Birmingham, and London and Birmingham, for an immediate amalgamation of the stocks of the two companies, on the principle explained in the report, be confirmed, and that the sanction of Parliament be obtained thereto, with a view to the completion of the proceedings.—At a meeting of the directors of the Grand Junction last week, it was resolved to accept certain overtures which had been made to them by the London and Birmingham Company, by which they agree to withdraw all opposition against the Churnet Valley Line, and the union of the several companies with the London and Birmingham.

TRAFFIC AND PRICES, by permission, from the List of Messrs. C. and H. HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending betwn. Feb. 28 & March 4.	Corr. Week 1844	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Dividend Per Share.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£	£	£ s. d.	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		1,735	100	all	1 5 0	134 6
Bristol, Birmingham	3,077
Bristol, Exeter			100	70		88-4
Bristol, Glo'ster			50	30	1 7 6	59 60
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	50	5	*	8-8½
Eastern Counties	8,611	8,185	avr.	14	0 3 0	18
Eastern Union			50	10		19-20
Do. Extension			25	1½		3½-4
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,154	1,795	50	all	1 5 0	61-3
Grand Junction [Div 3 mo]	7,462	6,911	100	all	2 10 0
Great North of England	1,583	1,166	100	all	3 0 0	187-9
Great Western	13,033	11,320	100	80	3 4 0	177-8
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	50	5	*	11½-12
Do. Extension	*	*	50	2½	*	7-7½
Hull, Selby			50	all		97-9
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	50	15	*	33-4
Liverpool, Manchester	4,443	3,795	100	all	4 10 0
London, Birmingham	14,436	12,770	stk.	100	5 0 0	127 9
London, Blackwall		598	avr.	16⅔	0 3 0	7 7½
London, Brighton	2,811	2,382	50	45	1 10 0	65
London, Croydon	820	21 9	avr.	13⅓	0 5 0	18½-19
London, Greenwich			avr	12½		10½-11
London, South-Western	4 950	4,828	50	41⅔	2 0 0	79-80
Manchester, Birmingham		2,622	70	40	1 0 0	65-7
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	873	688	125½	93	2 14 0
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,434	5,967	100	73	2 9 0	143-50
Midland	9,053	7,155	stk.	100	2 2 6	127-9
Do. Birmingham, Derby			stk.	100		96-7
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,548	1,295	100	all	4 0 0
Newcastle, Darlington	1,103		25	24		47-8
North British	*	*	25	7½	*	16-17
Northern, Eastern			50	45	1 2 6	60
Norwich, Brandon			20	10		16½-17
Preston, Wyre	346	210	50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	581	458	100	87½
South Devon	*	*	50	10	*	16-17
South-Eastern, Dover		2,437	avr.	33⅓	0 10 6	40-1
Yarmouth, Norwich	191		20	all	0 10 0	27-8
York, North Midland	2,116	1,339	50	all	2 10 0	103-4
Do. Scarboro' Branch			25	20		42-3
Do. Selby			50	20		46-8
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	20	2	*	11-½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	20	2	*	16-17
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	20	x	*	9½-10
Paris, Orleans		3,517	20	all	0 5 9½	50-1
Paris, Rouen		3,528	20	all	0 19 2	45-½
Rouen, Havre			20	14		32

Ireland.

Dublin.—We gave in a recent Number the conclusion of the Report of the Landlord and Tenant Commission; and we now insert the following brief sketch of the Report itself. It commences with a statement of the course adopted by the Commissioners, in order to procure the information detailed in the document; it next gives an historical sketch of landed property in Ireland; and then proceeds with a review of the former official reports upon the subject. The nature of the tenure of land in Ireland, with reference both to landlord and tenant, is next dealt with at considerable length, embracing the topics of permanent improvements, the mode in which they are generally effected, the power of the landlord to charge estates for them, the consolidation of farms, and the different methods of effecting such consolidations. The Report strongly recommends that a law should be made to secure remuneration to the tenant for the outlay of capital or of labour in effecting permanent improvements. The next subject referred to is the recovery of rent by distress and by ejectment. The Commissioners advise that it shall be provided by law that no distress should be legal unless by virtue of a warrant in writing signed by the landlord or his agent, in order that the personal attention and judgment of either shall be brought to bear upon the actual circumstances of every case in which the process may be resorted to. It is recommended also that the costs of a distress shall be limited by law, as in England. The abolition of civil bill ejectment is not recommended, but several amendments of the law are suggested. With a view of encouraging leases, the Commissioners recommend that in all cases where the rent does not exceed 50*l.* per annum, and the term is not less than 14 or more than 31 years, the stamp duty be reduced to 2*s.* 6*d.*; but that the leases shall be prepared according to a specified form, providing that the tenant shall not sublet or subdivide, and that the landlord shall make allowance for improvements. The Report then proceeds to the subjects of agency and the sale of estates, and recommends that every facility shall be given for bringing encumbered estates to an early sale, when under the administration of the courts of equity, and for making out titles to land. With respect to agricultural instruction, the establishment and maintenance of agricultural schools by landlords or agents are recommended. Emigration to a certain extent is approved of, but the Commissioners state, "We should be sorry to see the system of emigration pushed beyond the extent to which it is called for by the population, or forced upon any persons who do not look to its adoption as a means of providing for themselves or their families." In reference to waste lands, it is urged as worthy of serious consideration whether the State might not very usefully make some advance at a moderate rate of interest for the reclamation of the extensive unreclaimed tracts connected with many of the largest estates in Ireland. The Commissioners also state that while they are not advocates for indiscriminate grants of public money, they are desirous of impressing upon the Government that cases frequently occur in which it is consistent with a wise economy to make grants for public works from which no direct return is to be expected, considering that the ultimate effects produced by such works have been extended cultivation, improved habits of industry, a domestic colonisation of a population in excess in certain districts, a diminution of illicit distillation, and a very considerable increase to the revenue. With regard to the Public Works Act, amendments are advised to the effect that advances for agricultural improvement shall be made on the same terms which are prescribed in other cases. The condition of the agricultural labourer has evidently engaged the anxious consideration of the Commissioners, who advise, in addition to other important recommendations, that a summary jurisdiction should be given to magistrates at petty sessions to adjudicate upon disputes respecting con-acre, where the plot of ground shall not exceed half an acre, and that no person letting a cabin shall be entitled to recover his rent by any legal process if it can be shown that he has not kept it in tenantable repair. With regard to the principal charges upon land in Ireland — the poor-rate and the county cess—the Commissioners state that they did not enter into a minute inquiry as to the effect of the former, as the law can hardly be said to be in operation; with reference to the latter, the Commissioners do not recommend that the landlord shall be (as some of the witnesses examined by them have urged) the sole cess-payer. They advise a revision of the grand jury system, so as to provide for a constant superintendence of the fiscal affairs of counties; the transfer—of the constabulary charge to the consolidated fund—of the support of charitable institutions to the respective unions—and that the cost of erecting permanent county buildings should be borne by the proprietors. They are also of opinion that the constabulary should be treated as a part of the national force, and that the Irish counties should not be taxed for its maintenance.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation Hall. Mr. Mulloy, barrister, presided.

Mr. O'BRIEN, M.P., read a letter addressed to him by some labourers employed on the works in progress upon the Shannon, complaining that their wages had not been paid to them, in consequence of the insolvency of a contractor, and soliciting his assistance. He moved that the letter be referred to the Shannon Improvements Commissioners.—Mr. O'CONNELL seconded the motion, and observed, that this was one of those occurrences which showed the beneficial influence of a native Parliament, which would take care to intrust the execution of public works to solvent persons only. He then handed in several sums of money, amongst which were 65*l.* contributed by the Roman Catholic priests of the diocese of Elphin, and 126*l.* from those of the archdiocese of Tuam. He next stated, that he had read with much satisfaction the bill recently introduced by Mr. Watson, the member for Kinsale, upon the subject of the penal laws of the three kingdoms. It would be most important that that bill should be carried into law, and he announced from that place, that it would be considered in Ireland a measure of concession and conciliation, and a proof of the sincerity of the professions of Peel and Graham, repealing, as it did, many statutes which, though fallen into desuetude, might still be brought forward by any common informer or provoking Attorney-General. The bill also would have the effect of placing the monastic orders of the clergy on the same footing as the secular. This was exactly what the people of Ireland desired. They wanted no superiority or privilege for them beyond the privilege of worshipping God according to the dictates of conscience, and praying as much as they pleased. He did not believe, however, that the bill would be adopted by Government, because he was convinced that neither Peel nor Graham was sincere in the declarations made by them of a desire to confer benefits on this country. When Mr. Watson introduced his bill, Sir J. Graham stated his readiness to repeal those laws some time or another; but when was that time to be? He had just appointed a commission to inquire into the state of the penal law of the three kingdoms, which would report perhaps in five, but certainly not before two years. On the last day of meeting he had recommended the adoption of a petition on behalf of the monastic orders, but he would now substitute a motion for a petition in favour of Mr. Watson's bill, and he trusted that it might have appended to it at least two million signatures.—Mr. FITZGERALD, M.P., seconded the resolution, which was adopted.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL, M.P., addressed the meeting on the subject of the financial grievances of Ireland, and the fiscal extortions of England. He contended that the new Irish Stamp Act was more than an equivalent for, and bore heavier on Ireland than an income or property tax, and moved that a committee be appointed to take its provisions into consideration.—Mr. O'CONNELL stated that the committee appointed to consider the report put forth by the Land Commissioners, found it impossible to complete their observations in reply to that document in time for the present meeting, but hoped to be ready on that day week. Having repeated the substance of the report of the Commissioners, he proceeded to say that he had allowed himself to think that there was enough of kindliness in England to cause one shout of horror from one end of that kingdom to another at the consequences of the misgovernment of this country, as developed in the report, and a strenuous demand that something should be done to alleviate the misery and the sufferings described. But he had been mistaken, for the response of the English people was but a scanty one. There was no sympathy for Ireland to be found in the Imperial Parliament. Whigs, Tories, and Radicals were equally and perseveringly opposed to the advancement of her interests or the upholding of her rights. It had been said that they ought to appeal to the Queen, and he had no doubt that Her Majesty would, if the constitution allowed her, remedy the grievances of Ireland—but she had no such power. The real monarch of England was the prime minister, and the Crown a mere bauble in his hands. The English people had shown at all times an undying hatred towards his [illegible] and therefore he considered it fruitless to apply to [illegible] dress. They should trust to themselves, and [illegible] felt confident, ultimately crown their efforts. [illegible] graceful to England to have it said, that there were [illegible] in Ireland, an integral portion of the richest and most [illegible] country in the world, in a state of greater misery than [illegible] country on the face of the habitable globe.—Mr. E. W. [illegible] barrister, then moved the following resolution:—"That the Association is desirous to impress upon the people of Ireland the paramount importance of an earnest and persevering exertion to effect a general and immediate registration of electors, with a view to secure at the next election the return of members who will aid our national struggle for the legislative independence of Ireland."—Mr. O'CONNELL seconded the resolution and briefly dwelt on the necessity and importance of an immediate registration.—After some further business had been disposed of, Mr. O'CONNELL announced the rent for the week to be [illegible].

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—Sir Henry Bishop, Mr. Guynemere, Mr. Donaldson, Dr. Wesley, and Dr. Gauntlett, have declared themselves candidates for the vacant professorship of music, and the names of other gentlemen are mentioned in connection with the appointment. The election will take place in about six weeks.—The case of the Scottish Political Martyrs, which has excited so much interest, came before the Court by reclaiming note of the Incorporated Trades of Calton and others, against the Interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary granting edict prohibiting the erection of the proposed monument to the memory of the "Scottish Political Martyrs," Muir, Palmer, Gerald, &c. Counsel were fully heard on both sides, as formerly reported; and the Judges having taken time to consider, met on Tuesday for the purpose of delivering their opinions. The Judges were, the Lord Justice-General, Lords Mackenzie, Fullarton, and Jeffrey. The Judges reversed the decision of the Lord Ordinary, Lord Robertson, and refused the interdict. Unless the case should be carried before the whole Judges, and this opinion negatived, the monument will be erected in the Calton burying-ground, as proposed.

Aberdeen.—On Saturday the election of Lord Rector of the Marischal College, for the ensuing year, took place, when Mr. Sheriff Alison, of Lanarkshire, was chosen by a considerable majority of all the nations over the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay.

Arran.—About a fortnight since the tower of Brodick Castle, near Arran, fell with a terrible crash. The old Castle had been injured by the late storms, and several of the lintels had been rent. Workmen were employed in repairing the damage, and no fewer than 16 were working on it on the previous day.

Law.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—APPEALS.—Hammersley v. De Biel.—This was an appeal against an order of Lord Chancellor Cottenham, affirming an order made by the Master of the Rolls, in a case which arose out of the following circumstances. Miss Sophia Poulett Thomson, daughter of John Poulett Thomson, Esq., of Waverley Abbey, in the county of Surrey, and sister of the gentleman who afterwards became Lord Sydenham, was in Germany in the year 1825, when proposals of marriage were made to her by the Baron de Biel, a German nobleman, who was possessed of an entailed landed estate at Zierow, in the duchy of Mecklenburgh Schwerin. On the 22d December, 1825, the two brothers of the lady, and the Baron, had an interview to arrange the terms of the settlement, when they informed him that the fortune of the sister was to consist of 10,000*l.*, to be paid down on the day of the marriage, and an allowance of 200*l.* per annum during her life to be paid by her father. It was further intimated that it was the intention of the lady's father to leave her by will the further sum of 10,000*l.*, to be settled on her and her issue. The other parts of the arrangement were fully complied with, and the question in the cause whether this last-mentioned matter was a positive stipulation, or only an indefinite intimation, depending for performance on the volition of the party making it. This question arose upon a written memorandum of the arrangement drawn up by one of the brothers. The memorandum, after providing for the payment of the 10,000*l.*, proceeded thus:—"Mr. J. P. T. proposes for the present to allow his daughter 200*l.* per annum for her private use, subject to a possibility of a reduction in that sum, in case politics or other causes should diminish his income, and also intends to leave a further sum of 10,000*l.* in his will to Miss Thomson, to be settled on her and her children, the disposition of which, supposing she has no children, will be prescribed by the will of her father." It was upon this last clause in the memorandum that the question arose. The memorandum itself was neither dated nor signed. The Baron entered into certain stipulations as to securing his wife 500*l.* per annum out of his estates should she survive him, and these were like the stipulations as to the payment of the 10,000*l.* at the time of the marriage, and the allowance of 200*l.* a year punctually performed. The marriage took place, and the Baroness had one son, the present respondent. She died on the 27th September, 1827, leaving her husband and son surviving. The annual allowance of 200*l.* was paid during the life of the Baroness, and for one year after her death, namely up to the 27th September, 1828. In a few years afterwards the Baron married again, and finding that he had a second family coming on, he applied to Messrs. Thomson to assure to his son by his first wife the full benefit of what he considered as a settled agreement. He was answered that the second sum of 10,000*l.* was not positively stipulated to be paid, that it depended altogether on the will of Mr. Thomson, the father, and that his own Mr. Thomson's) second marriage, had put it out of his power to fulfil the original intention. Mr. Thomson died in 1838, and left a will confirming the settlement made on the baroness' marriage, but not making any legacy to her issue, nor mentioning the 10,000*l.* in question. In March, 1839, the Bill in this cause was filed by the present respondent against Mr. Andrew Henry Poulett Thomson, Mr. Charles Poulett Thomson, and Mr. Hammersley who had married another of Mr. Thomson's daughters), the three executors of Mr. Thomson's will. The first-named defendant filed his answer in April, 1839, and the answer was put in by the two other executors with the defendants. The defence in substance was, that the memorandum was a mere note of an intention, and was not a binding agreement, and that not being signed, it was void within the Statute of Frauds. The Master of the Rolls rejected these defences, and made a decree in favour of the claim, and on appeal his decree was confirmed by Lord Chancellor Cottenham. The present appeal was then brought. Mr. Anderdon and Mr. Kelly, for the appellants, contended that no authority was given by the father to the two brothers to bind him to leave 10,000*l.* by his will to Miss Thomson, that no agreement for that purpose was entered into by them, that if any such authority existed it was given to them jointly, whereas the memorandum was in the handwriting of one only, and did not appear to have been adopted by the other, and because it was void under the Statute of Frauds. A further argument arose also upon the correspondence which had taken place when the baron first made his claim. Mr. Turner and Mr.

Bethell were for the respondent, but were not heard. The Lords considered this a positive agreement, subject only to the condition of settling the money according to Mr. Thomson's discretion, in case his daughter should not have any children. The decree of the Court below was, therefore, affirmed.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.—Wood v. Ledbetter—This case was tried before Mr. Baron Rolfe and a special Jury, at the sittings after last Trinity Term, when a verdict was found for defendant. Subsequently a rule to set aside that verdict was obtained by Mr. Jervis, and that rule was argued in the course of the last term, and the Court took time to consider. Mr. Baron Alderson now delivered the judgment of the Court. This was an action for assault and false imprisonment, and the only plea upon which any question arose was, that at the time of the alleged trespass plaintiff was in upon a certain close belonging to Lord Eglinton, and that defendant, as the servant of his lordship, and by his command, had laid hands upon plaintiff in order to remove him from the said close, using no unnecessary violence. Defendant in his replication, had averred that at the time he was in the said close he was there by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. The leave and license was traversed, and therefore issue was joined. At the trial it appeared that the place from which plaintiff had been removed, was the inclosure attached to and surrounding the Grand Stand of the Doncaster racecourse—that Lord Eglinton was steward of the races in the year 1843—that tickets of admission had been sold in Doncaster, at the sum of 1 guinea each, and that such tickets entitled the purchasers to admission into the Grand Stand, and the inclosure surrounding it every day during the races. These tickets had not been printed or signed by Lord Eglinton; but it must be assumed, first, that they were issued with his Lordship's privity; and further, that plaintiff, by the purchase of such ticket, had obtained admission to the Grand Stand during the races of 1843. Now, it appeared that the plaintiff was there or in the inclosure whilst the races were going on, and that defendant, by the order of Lord Eglinton, had desired him to depart, and had given him notice that if he did not go away force would be used to turn him out; and that, after such notice, although plaintiff did not misconduct himself, his remaining within the inclosure would be an act not justified by the purchase of his ticket. Plaintiff had refused to go, whereupon defendant, by order of Lord Eglinton, forced him out, but without using any unnecessary violence. Baron Rolfe, in directing the Jury, told them that, assuming the ticket to have been sold with the sanction of Lord Eglinton, it would be still lawful for his Lordship, without returning the guinea, and without assigning any reason, to order plaintiff to quit the inclosure; and if the Jury were satisfied that a notice to depart had been given to him, and that a reasonable time had been suffered to elapse during which he might conveniently have gone before violence was resorted to, that plaintiff was not, at the time of the removal, on the place in question by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. The Jury, upon this, found a verdict for defendant. In the course of Trinity Term, Mr. Lewis had obtained a rule to set that verdict aside, on the ground that, under the circumstances, Lord Eglinton must be taken to have given leave to plaintiff to come into and to remain in the inclosure during the races; that such leave was not revocable, at all events without returning the guinea paid for it; and, therefore, that at the time of plaintiff's removal he was in the inclosure by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. During last term cause was shown, and the question argued at length, but in consequence of the conflicting authorities cited, the Court took time to consider the judgment. His Lordship said that, acting upon the authorities relative to "license" laid down in Brooks's Abridgment, and by Mr. Justice Vaughan, which had been sanctioned by modern cases, in which the Courts had acted on the same principle, the Court had come to the conclusion that the direction of Mr. Baron Rolfe to the Jury at the trial was correct, and consequently that the rule to set aside the verdict and for a new trial must be discharged.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Richard Elliott and Richard Vincent, remanded from last session, were indicted, Elliott for breaking into the house of Mr. Cox, clerical robe-maker in Southampton-street, Covent-garden, and stealing therefrom 9 yards of silk and 461 yards of white linen; Vincent for feloniously receiving the same, knowing it to be stolen. It appeared that Mr. Cox left his house on the 24th December for Tunbridge Wells, and that on his return he missed the property. The shopman swore that he left the shop on the 24th shut up, and the door locked, and that on the Thursday following, when he returned to open the shop, he found that the lock had been tampered with, and sent for a locksmith to open the door, and when he got in he found the rollers on which the silk had been rolled bare, and a great quantity of linen gone. Inspector Shackell said that seeing two men coming out of a public-house in Drury-lane, he followed them, but in consequence of an obstruction he lost sight of them. He went into the public-house on the Monday following, and asked the landlady whether she had bought any silk or linen. She answered that she had bought 17 yards of silk, for which she paid 5*s.* 6*d.* On the same day he saw the prisoner Vincent coming from the direction of the house of the prisoner Elliott, with a bundle in his hand, which turned out to contain some of the linen stolen. Vincent said he had got it from the other prisoner, Elliott, who was then taken into custody, his house searched, and most part of the property found there. Elliott was the man who was tried some months since at Oxford and acquitted for the robbery of the Oxford coach at Benson. Mr. Justice Patteson summed up the evidence, and the jury found the prisoner Elliott guilty, and acquitted Vincent. The judge sentenced Elliott to transportation for 15 years.—The Bethnal Green Murder.—James Tapping, aged 22, was tried for the murder of Emma Whiter, a young woman to whom he had been paying his addresses. The facts of the case were noticed in our Paper of Feb. 1. It is sufficient, therefore, to state that the jury found the prisoner Guilty, and Baron Parke pronounced sentence of Death, which the prisoner heard with complete indifference.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.—NORTHERN CIRCUIT, CARLISLE.—Thomas Robertshaw, a quack doctor, was convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to four months' imprisonment, for having prescribed jalap and corrosive sublimate for a man called Coultard, who had died from the effects of the dose. The facts were fully proved, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, recommending the prisoner to mercy. Mr. Justice Coltman, after commenting on the danger of such ignorant persons dealing with such medicines, sentenced the prisoner to be imprisoned four calendar months.—NEWCASTLE.—Anthony Stephenson and Robert Patrick, who had been acquitted on the previous day of the charge of shooting at the gamekeeper of Mr. Bell, at Woolsington, were tried on an indictment charging them with night poaching. They were convicted, and sentenced to be imprisoned for six calendar months.—WESTERN CIRCUIT, WINCHESTER.—John Paul, accountant of the Fareham Savings Bank, was indicted for embezzling money, the property of the trustees, found guilty, and sentenced to ten years' transportation.—OXFORD CIRCUIT—OXFORD.—Tollitt v. the Hon. J. H. Astey.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a well-known horse-dealer at Oxford, to recover the sum of 25*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, being the amount claimed for the hire of horses and gigs used by the defendant during his residence as a gentleman commoner at Christ Church. Defendant was at that time a minor, and it was contended on his behalf, that the articles charged for were not necessaries befitting his rank. At the close of the plaintiff's case, it was asserted by Sergeant Talfourd, on the authority of several cases which he cited, that the plantiff must be nonsuited, and the Learned Judge appeared to be of the same opinion; but, as plaintiff's counsel insisted on the case going to the Jury, the Learned Sergeant addressed them on the part of defendant, commenting on the absurdity of looking upon hunters as necessary to a student at college, and reprehending the inducements to profligacy held out by the system of credit that prevailed throughout the University. Mr. Baron Platt, in his charge to the Jury, informed them as to the legal acceptation of the term "necessaries," and expressed a very strong opinion that the articles in question were not necessaries under the circumstances of the case. The Jury, after remaining a considerable time in deliberation—true to the invariable practice of Oxford juries in actions of this nature—found a verdict for the plaintiff to the full amount claimed. The Learned Judge, in discharging the Jury, observed that their verdict was contrary to law—that they might, one day, have a verdict contrary to law and fact recorded against themselves, and that they deserved it. —READING.—The Thatcham Murder.—Robert Jennings was indicted and found guilty of the wilful murder of his child, Eleazer Jennings, in the parish of Thatcham. It was clearly proved that the child was poisoned by arsenic, and that the father placed the poison on the poor child's plate at dinner, making him believe it was salt. The prisoner, in his defence, tried to throw the charge upon his niece, a young girl who had been taking care of his children. The jury, however, returned a verdict of Guilty; and Baron Platt, after dwelling upon the diabolical nature of the crime, which was aggravated by the attempt he had made to throw suspicion upon an innocent child, concluded by passing sentence of death in the usual form.—HOME CIRCUIT—HERTFORD.—W. Sheffield, farmer, was indicted for setting fire to a barn and other farm-buildings, in his own occupation, with intent to defraud his mother, Jane Sheffield, and others. It appeared that the circumstances under which the charge was brought against the prisoner were of rather a singular character. The charge was supported solely by the declarations made by him at the time of the fire, and it was suggested that he was induced to commit the act out of revenge, because his father, to whom the farm he occupied belonged, had not left it to him at his death, which the prisoner anticipated he would have done. From the evidence of the witnesses, it appeared that the prisoner was a man of most intemperate habits, and continually intoxicated. Mr. Baron Alderson said it appeared to him there was nothing to support the charge except the conversations and hallucinations of a man drunk and almost insane, and he put it to the Jury whether they would think it safe to convict under such circumstances? Mr. Clarkson observed that everything that was destroyed appeared to be the property of the unfortunate man himself, none of which was insured, while the building, which belonged to others, was insured. The Jury expressed themselves satisfied, and at once returned a verdict of Not Guilty.—Stephen Boswell, George Warboys, and Frederick Jeans, were indicted for being unlawfully, in the night time, armed with guns, and other offensive weapons, upon certain inclosed land belonging to the Marquis of Salisbury, for the purpose of poaching. The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty against the two first, and acquitted Jeans. The prisoner Boswell, who had, it appeared, been several times before in prison, was sentenced to twelve, and Warboys to six months' imprisonment and hard labour.—Thomas Andrews, Joseph Bail, and Samuel White, were indicted for a similar trespass upon the land of the Earl of Essex, at Watford. The prisoners pleaded guilty. Mr. Baron Alderson, on sentencing the prisoners, said he had looked over the depositions, and he was very glad to see that the prisoners had not committed any violence, which was a circumstance that had always great weight with him in passing sentence in cases of this description. He thought that a great distinction ought to be drawn between cases where there was violence used towards the keepers and where none was resorted to, and he considered the first a grave offence, and the other a very pardonable misdemeanour. When he made use of this expression, however, persons in the situation of the prisoners must not imagine that they could commit such offences with entire impunity. They were offences of a very dangerous kind, for it frequently happened that although persons might in the first instance go out with no other intention than to destroy game, yet, when disturbed by the keepers, and they came into collision with them, or with the officers of justice, human life was often destroyed, and the expedition ended in the commission of murder. The learned Judge then sentenced the prisoners to be kept to hard labour for four months. CHELMSFORD.—The Case of Miss Richardson.—It will be recollected that at the last assizes a charge was preferred against a young lady, named Richardson, the daughter of a gentleman residing at Brentwood, of stealing some silk, the property of a tradesman at that place, and the case, from the station in life of the accused, and the circumstances connected with it, created a great deal of interest in the county. Upon the application of the counsel for Miss Richardson, grounded upon the fact of her being too ill to take her trial, the case was postponed to the present assizes. It should be stated that the charge was originally preferred at the Quarter Sessions, and a true bill found against her; but the trial was postponed to the Assizes, when it was again put off on the ground above stated. The Deputy-Clerk of Assize now called upon Ellen Mackrel Richardson to surrender in discharge of her recognisances. No answer, however, was returned, and the defendant did not appear. Mr. Ryland then rose, and said that in this case he appeared for the third time in support of the prosecution. The lady was out on bail, and as she had not thought proper to surrender, in accordance with the conditions of her recognisances, he submitted that they should be estreated. Lord Denman inquired whether the learned counsel had received any communication upon the subject of the trial from the friends or legal advisers of the accused? Mr. Ryland said he had not; and he believed no counsel had been engaged for the defence. All he knew upon the subject was that his witnesses were all in attendance, and he was prepared to go on with the prosecution. The defendant was then formally called upon her recognisances, and as she did not surrender, they were ordered to be estreated.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—SITTINGS IN BANCO.—Baron de Bode v. the Queen.—In our Paper of the 1st ult. we gave the arguments in this case as far as they had then gone, and stated that they were adjourned to Monday week. On that day Mr. Kelly concluded his argument, quoting a great many ancient authorities to show that no petition of right would lie, except for lands or chattels real, which had been taken into the manual possession of the Crown, as the form of the judgment in all cases where the suppliant succeeded, was that the Crown should remove its hands from the occupation and detainer of the subject matter in question. To hold that such a mode of redress was available against the Crown for unliquidated damages, or even for a debt ascertained, would immediately open a door to such a vast variety of similar proceedings, that he had no doubt that the Court, before they deliberately sanctioned such a doctrine for the first time, would assure themselves that such a decision was in accordance with all the existing authorities upon the subject. Mr. Waddington followed upon the same side, and contended, that supposing a petition of right at all to lie in respect of such a claim, it could lie only for a British subject; that the suppliant in the present case was not a British subject within the meaning of the conventions or the Act of Parliament upon this subject, regard being had to all the peculiar circumstances of the birth and parentage of the Baron de Bode. Mr. Hill was heard for the Baron de Bode, and expressed his surprise that there should have been any attempt to argue that the petition of right could not lie, except for land or chattels, real or specific chattels. He was prepared to contend, on the authority contained in the speech of Lord Mansfield, in Macbeath v. Haldinand, that the petition of right lay for credits, and if these credits for services were given to the Crown, then the remedy could be thus enforced; but if given to Parliament, then the Parliament must satisfy the creditor. Here the credit was given to the Crown, under the authority of treaties and of Parliament, to disburse a particular fund, and the Crown must duly discharge the task. He contended that the authority of Lord Somers, as well as that of Lord Mansfield, showed that the petition of right was not so restricted as the other side desired to represent. The difficulties and expense imposed on an individual who had thus to contest a matter with the Crown, were quite sufficient to explain the rarity of cases of petition of right. That rarity of cases did not, however, impeach the principle which allowed such a remedy to the subject, and which, if not admitted and acted upon, would leave him without a remedy where he had suffered a wrong. To restrict this remedy to cases where title to land was concerned would be absurd. Then it was said that the Baron de Bode was not a British subject, within the meaning of the treaties between France and England on the subject of this compensation. There was nothing to support that denial of the claimant's right. The jurors had found the facts, that the claimant was born in Staffordshire in 1777, and that his father was a German, who married an Englishwoman. These things showed that at his birth he was clothed with the rights of a British-born subject. The Court took judicial notice of a state of war. If so, it would take judicial notice of a state of peace. Then the Court would take judicial notice that in 1777 England was at peace with Germany, and consequently that the Baron was born in England of an English mother, and a father who was an alien friend. He maintained that in an indictment for treason, for being found with arms in the ranks of a foreign army, the prosecution would only have to prove the place of birth of the person accused, and it would be for the prisoner to show that he was the son of an ambassador, or that he fell within some other exception, which would save him from owing allegiance to the country of his birth. Eneas Macdonnell's case justified this doctrine. The presumption of law was, that an alien was a friend. Then it followed here that the Baron was a natural subject. But then the counsel on the other side said that he had not continued a subject within the meaning of these treaties, that he was domiciled abroad, and, being so domiciled, must be taken to be a foreigner. But that ought to have been pleaded, for the prima facie case of being a British subject was set up by the fact of birth, and could only be got rid of by some positive act of the party, or of the government, which fact must be shown on the face of the pleadings. It was then said, on the other side, that the property of the Baron had been duly confiscated, because, being a French subject, he joined the Austrian army. But what was there to show that the Austrian army was a force hostile to France? There was no finding on that point, and it should not be made matter of presumption. If he went to the record he received no information upon the point, while if he was referred to history, there he found that at the moment when the Baron, who was said to be a French subject, joined the Austrian army, the King of France, the sovereign to whom he was a subject, was under the protection of that very Austrian army. It was clear, therefore, that upon that point there was no ground for denying that the property was unduly confiscated. But if that was so, then the title of the Baron to compensation was fully made out, and he ought to receive the judgment of the court in his favour.—Mr. Sergeant Manning followed on the same side, and was followed by Mr. Young, Mr. Meller and Mr. Anstey. The Solicitor-General was about to reply, when a short consultation took place between their lordships; after which Lord Denman said, that it would be vain to think of proceeding any further in the argument at that time. The judges would confer among themselves upon the actual position of the case and would make such arrangement for any further discussion as they might think necessary. No step would, however, be taken by the Court without giving full notice to all parties concerned.—The Queen v. Douglas.—[Before Lord Denman and a Special Jury.] This was an information preferred against the defendant for having received money from two Princes of India, the Rajah of Tanjore and the Rajah of Poodoocottah. The offence was alleged to be against the peace of the Queen, and against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. There were other counts, varying the mode of laying the offence, and charging the defendant with receiving money from the ministers of these princes. Another count charged the defendant with receiving the money under colour of its being a gift. The defendant had pleaded not guilty. The Solicitor-General, in stating the case to the jury, said that the defendant was appointed resident at Tanjore in November, 1839, and continued till the early part of 1841. At that time he went on sick leave to the Neilgherry Hills. He was succeeded in his office by Mr. Bayley. That gentleman, on getting to Tanjore, found many rumours of what had taken place, and communicated the matter to the Government. Of course an immediate inquiry was instituted. It was not the fault of the Government that this trial took place at this distance from the scene of the offences laid to the defendant's charge. The Government sent to the Neilgherry Hills to seek the defendant, but he had quitted that place, without leave, and without notice, and had embarked for England. It was with great difficulty that he was found in this country, but he was found, and arrested. The proceedings attracted great attention at the time, and the present information was the consequence. Several letters were put in and read, in one of which the defendant admitted the charge. Sir T. Wilde followed on behalf of the Crown, and several witnesses were examined. Mr. Kelly addressed the jury for the defendant. Lord Denman summed up, and said that if the jury believed the evidence, the verdict must be for the Crown. The jurors intimated their belief of the evidence, and expressed their readiness to pronounce the verdict. A discussion then ensued as to the counts on which the verdict should be taken, and certain counts were selected for that purpose. The verdict was then entered for the Crown. Lord Denman, on the application of Mr. Kelly, reserved to the defendant leave to move to enter a verdict for him, in case the Court should think that the objections taken in the course of the trial by Mr. Kelly were sustainable in law, or that the evidence was not sufficient to support the information.

Theatricals.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Italian Opera opens this night, and the programme which Mr. Lumley has put forth promises a season of great brilliancy. Grisi remains are prima donna, and Moriani and Mario are both engaged as tenors, in opposition to the current report that Mario would not be one of the company. The inimitable Lablache is still primo basso, Fornasari is the baritone, and Corelli, a tasteful and elegant vocalist, will be a second tenor. For the contralto parts we have Brambilla. Madame Persiani will not appear. Among the new engagements appear the names of Madame Rossi Caccia, who has made a great sensation at Lisbon; Madame Anaide Castellan, of St. Petersburg; Madame Rita Borio, of Madrid; and Signor Botelli, of La Scala, Milan. A temporary "star" of the season will be Signor Baroilhet, of the Grand Opera of Paris, who will appear for a limited number of nights. The orchestra will be on the same scale as last year, Signor Costa being the conductor. The first opera of the season will be the "Ernani" of the new composer Verdi, a work that has created a sensation on the Continent. Moriani and Fornasari are to appear before Easter, and as Easter falls early this year, the brilliant portion of the season will be of longer duration than usual. The ballet will, as usual, be a great feature. Lucile Grahn, who appeared last year at Drury-lane, will lead off; and Cerito, Carlotta Grisi, and Taglioni (who is to appear for a few farewell nights) will follow. Perot and St. Leon will be the chief male dancers, and the thirty-six Viennese dancing girls, who have made an extraordinary sensation at Paris, will come in as a reinforcement, in a new ballet entitled "Eoline."

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—Mr. Forrest, the American actor, who seven years ago performed at Drury-lane Theatre, has been re-introduced to a London audience in the part of "Othello" and "Macbeth." Miss Cushman, an American actress, has appeared in the characters of Emilia and Lady Macbeth, while a third American actor, Mr. Hackett, has been playing at Covent Garden. Mr. Forrest, on his re-appearance was of course welcomed as an old acquaintance with hearty cheering, but his acting of the Moor somewhat took the audience by surprise by its total difference from his former manner. The impression that he left behind him seven years ago was that of a strong reliance on physical force, and on great displays of energy. Now he subdued his power, and seemed as if constantly determined to counteract that impression, and to appear as the careful, deliberate reader, with a sense of the dignity of Othello. A quiet impressiveness rather than a stormy appeal to his hearers was his object, though he occasionally brought out his bursts of passion with strong effect, and startled by the sudden contrast. Excessive carefulness in delivery, amounting to monotony, as if every word should be weighed before utterance, seems to be a peculiarity with the American actors of the present day. It marks alike the Falstaff of Mr. Hackett, and the Othello of Mr. Forrest. Miss Cushman has obtained great applause by her performance of Emilia, raising the character from one of merely subordinate interest to a prominence unknown for years. All her violent addresses were delivered earnestly and suddenly, as if dictated by a rude sense of right, and all told on the audience. It was a nature indignant at wrong and treachery, that poured forth its wrath reckless of consequences. The appeal to heaven when she fell on one knee, and raised her clasped hands with an air of intense confidence, was electrical—one of those effective "hits" that are rare at the present day.

Miscellaneous.

New Comets.—This appears to be the age of comets, for so many have seldom been seen as astronomers have observed within the last few months. The last accounts from the United States mention that a new and brilliant comet had been seen from the observatories of Philadelphia and Yale College. It was visible a little south of the constellation of the whale, and was moving at the rate of about three degrees per day towards E.N.E. It was very visible to the naked eye, and had two tails—one towards the sun, and one in an opposite direction. The same comet had also been seen at St. Domingo, Mobile, &c. We also learn by the Overland Mail, which has arrived this week, that a comet with two tails had been seen in India, and had caused much speculation. It had been visible for some nights. In addition to the comet recently seen at Berlin, Paris, London, and Dublin, M. Colla, the astronomer of Parma, announces that he has discovered another; and in the log of Captain Hilaire Gautier, who has arrived lately at Marseilles, a third is mentioned. The latter is said to be placed between the two stars No. 11 of Eridanus, and 16 of the Atlas of Harding. This comet disappeared at the moment when Captain Gautier approached the equator. Mr. Hind, on Tuesday last, obtained an observation of the large comet seen in the southern hemisphere in January. He saw it from Mr. Bishop's observatory in the Regent's Park, and states that it was extremely faint, and discernible with great difficulty; none but very powerful telescopes will show it, and it is therefore an object of little general interest. Mr. Hind has calculated the elements, which differ materially from those of any comet previously observed. The point of least distance from the sun is situate within the orbit of the planet Mercury.

The Rev. Dr. Wolff.—The following letter has been received this week by Capt. Grover:—Erzeroom, Jan. 17, 1845. My dear Grover—How shall I thank you for your great great kindness?—but I confess that when I heard you were gone to St. Petersburgh, I trembled, for I was afraid you would have gone to Bokhara, with letters from the Emperor. God be praised that the Emperor did not grant you the letters, and that you did not proceed. As long as that horrid fellow, Abd-ool Samet Khan, is at Bokhara, nothing will be of any use. Every Englishman's fate is sealed, he must die. The following persons have been murdered at Bokhara:—1, Lieut. Wyburd of the Indian Navy; 2, Lieut.-Col. Stoddart; 3, Capt. Conolly; 4, One whom they call Freshaw; 5, Il Cavaliere Naselli; 6, a German; 7, five Englishmen, outside Tchaar-Joo; 8, a Toorcoman who came to Bokhara to attempt the escape of Col. Stoddart; 9, Ephraim, a Jew from Meshed, who was sent to Bokhara to make inquiries about Captain Conolly; 10, a Turkish officer. God be praised that you did not proceed to Bokhara. I made the whole journey from Bokhara to Meshed on horseback, with a rupture got at Bokhara, and without a bandage, also from Meshed to Tehran, another 600 miles, and from Tehran to Tabris, 380 miles. At Tabris I was taken ill with a bilious fever, which detained me there 15 days. The Russian Consul at Tabris made me a present of a tuckrawan (litter), which conveyed me to Awajick, 160 miles; but from this place to Erzeroom, the mountains covered with snow, and the horrid precipices, prevent the passage of a tuckrawan, and I was obliged to travel 300 miles under continual agonies, and at night eaten up by lice and fleas. At Hassan Kaleh great was my joy at finding a tuckrawan belonging to the Pacha of Erzeroom, which was sent on through the kindness of our good, benevolent, excellent, kind-hearted, and dear Colonel Williams, whose equal is scarcely to be found in this world. At nine miles from Erzeroom, Colonel Williams came himself to meet me. I was in such a distressed state that I was taken at once to a Turkish bath, and was supplied with fresh clothing, and I was obliged to use mercury five days before I could get rid of the troublesome parasites, and was then so debilitated that I could not stand upon my legs. Thanks be to God for his loving-kindness in sending me such friends as Colonel Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Redhouse, who have taken such tender care of me, that I am now able to record to my friends in England the kindness of those excellent friends. Mr. Brant, the consul, also comes every other day to see me, and Dr. Dixon is exceedingly kind. God be praised! But there is not such a man in the British army as Colonel Williams! It was my intention to have brought with me to England Moolah Mehdee, the kind Jew of Meshed; but Colonel Williams and Colonel Farrant persuaded me to send him back to Meshed. Yours affectionately, JOSEPH WOLFF.

Sir David Wilkie.—At a sale of the works of art, forming part of the cabinet of M. Revil, on Friday last, in Paris, the sketch of Wilkie's "Rent Day," marked "D. Wilkie, 1807," and described on the catalogue as having been bought at the sale of Lord Mulgrave's pictures for 60 guineas, brought nearly 1900*f*. It was bought by Mr. Mawson, picture-dealer, of London. It was said that he had had the indiscretion to say that he would not at any price that the relic remained in France, and that hence arose the opposition he encountered.

BIRTHS.—On the 27th ult., at Hatherop Rectory, the LADY G. BOURKE, of a daughter—24th ult., at Margate, the lady of Capt. H. CURLING, of a son—24th ult., the lady of J. ALLEN, Esq., Londonderry, Ireland, of a son—27th ult., at Edinburgh, the lady of J. P. GOOD, Esq., of a son—27th ult., at Gainsford-street, St. John's, Southwark, Mrs. E. WHITBY, of a daughter—28th ult., at Willow Cottage, Hornsey Road, Mrs. G. B. BERKELEY, of a daughter—2d inst., in Lower Seymour-street, the lady of G. W. GYLL, Esq., of a son—5th inst., at 19, River-street, Bath, the lady of the Rev. E. RAVENSHAW, Rector of West Kington, Wilts, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.—On the 1st inst., by special license, at Great Malvern, W. WOOD, Esq., eldest son of C. Thorold Wood, Esq., of South Thorsby, Lincolnshire, to MARY CHAYTOR, youngest daughter of the late John Clervaux Chaytor, of Spennithorne Hall, Yorkshire, Esq.

DEATHS.—On the 22d ult., at his house, in Green-street, Grosvenor-square, the Rev. SYDNEY SMITH, Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's, aged 74—26th ult., of apoplexy, at her house, 8, Grove-terrace, Kentish Town, and late of Upton Hall, near Northampton, Miss JULIANA DRAUGHT, granddaughter of the late Rev. Stephen Langham, fourth son of Sir John Langham, Bart., of Coddesbrook Hall, and great niece of Sir Thomas Samwell, Bart., late of Upton Hall, in the same county, aged 76.

TANNER'S VITREOUS CLOTH—a SUBSTITUTE for GLASS for HORTICULTURAL PURPOSES.—In the above article is presented to the Horticulturist all the advantages derivable from the use of Glazed Frames, without their defects. The light admitted through the Vitreous Cloth is subdued to such a degree as to be at all times agreeable to the plant; for whilst sufficient light is admitted when in the shade, it requires no extra covering under a burning sun. Being a non-conductor of heat and cold, it is more economical than Glass for Hotbeds, Hothouses, &c., the heat of which is maintained at less expense.

Price—7-8ths of a yard wide, thin, 2*s.* 6*d.* per yard.
Ditto stout, 3*s.* „
1 yard wide . . . 3*s.* 6*d.* „

Prepared by N. W. TANNER, Chemist, Exeter. Sold by Messrs. BUTLER and MUCKLEY, Covent Garden, London; Mr. CUNNINGHAM, Paradise-street, Liverpool; Messrs. LUCOMBE and PINCE, Exeter Nursery.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.
Patronised by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances, without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the corns altogether unnecessary: (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth;) it acheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate corns and bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or three in one for 2*s.* 9*d.*, and to be had of C. KING, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine vendors in town and country. The genuine has the name of JOHN FOX on the stamp.

A 2*s.* 9*d.* box cures the most obdurate corns.
Ask for "PAUL'S Every Man's Friend."

GOOD NEWS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

DR. ROBERTS'S CELEBRATED MEDICINES.—The excellent OINTMENT called "THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND," is confidently recommended to the Public as an unfailing remedy for Wounds of every description, and is a specific for Eruptions that sometimes follow vaccination. Sold in pots at 1*s.* 1½*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.* each.—Also his PILULÆ ANTISCROPHULÆ, confirmed by more than 40 years' successful experience as an invaluable remedy, and presents one of the best alteratives ever compounded for purifying the blood, and assisting Nature in all her operations. They are efficacious also in Rheumatism, and form a mild and superior family aperient, and may be taken at all times without confinement or change of diet. Sold in boxes at 1*s.* 1½*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.* each. By the late Dr. ROBERTS'S will, Messrs. BEACH and BARNICOTT (who have been confidentially intrusted with the preparation of his medicines for many years past), are left joint proprietors of the "Poor Man's Friend" and "Pilulæ Antiscrophulæ," &c. with the exclusive right, power, and authority to prepare and vend the same. The utility of these Medicines is fully testified by thousands of persons who have been benefited by their aid.

Beware of Counterfeits.—No Medicines sold under the above names can possibly be genuine unless "BEACH and BARNICOTT, late Dr. ROBERTS, Bridport," is engraved and printed on the stamp affixed to each package. Sold wholesale by the Proprietors, BEACH and BARNICOTT, at their Dispensary, Bridport; by the London houses; and by most respectable Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

PATENT ELECTRO-PLATED AND ARTICLES in every variety, at the Estab... Patentees, ELKINGTON & Co., West End ... corner of Jermyn-street; City—15, ... Patent Electro processes being extensively ... licence, the Patentees beg to state that they ... Manufacture to goods of a superior and warranted ... which invariably bear their mark, "E. & Co." ... Old articles replated and gilt.

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds announced for promoting the growth of the Hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a ... ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is held on the ... public estimation. The singular virtues of this ... invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to ... comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all ... gether with numerous testimonials constantly ... its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature ... universally preferred, its consequent great demand ... cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend ... ous trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas ... article is wholly the invention and property of A. ROWLAND & SON, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic ... abortive any attempt to discover its component parts ... proving the imposition of all other articles bearing ... "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of ... wrapper, nearly 1500 times, containing 9,025 letters. ... 6*d.*—7*s.*—Family Bottles (equal to 4 small), 10*s.* 6*d.*, and ... that size 21*s.* per Bottle. Sold by the Proprietors at 20, ... Garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

 All other Articles sold under the same name are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.

MONEY.—£14,000 Trust Money to be lent on Mortgage, at Three and a-Half per cent. Not less than 4000*l.* in one sum.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Bailey, Law Stationer, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY, Two Garden Apprentices. They will have the opportunity of becoming acquainted with Propagation, Ornamental Nursery ..., Seed business, and all the higher branches of Horticulture. ... premium will be required.—Apply personally, or by letter, to S. HERRMAN, Florist, &c., Eltham, Kent.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A single Man, aged ..., who has had experience in the higher branches of his business. He has no objection to look after Land, if required. He is a native of Scotland, and can be recommended by his late employer. Wages 65*l.* a-year, ... lodging: a cottage unfurnished will be preferred.—Direct M. W., at the Office of this Paper.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A Single Man, aged ... years; understands the various departments of the ... Kitchen, and Flower Garden; can be highly recommended by his late and former employers. No place accepted unless ... or more men are kept; would prefer a situation out of ... house.—Direct, post-paid, to A. B., Post Office, Sunning-... Berks.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A married Man, who understands his business in all its branches, and has left a first-rate place, where forcing of every description is carried on, likewise a first-rate Collection of Plants, &c. Can have a good character from the Gentleman he has just left. Wages not so much an object if a comfortable situation.—Direct T. H., care of Messrs. Childs, Seedsmen, Thames-st., London.

AS GARDENER, to live in a Lodge or Cottage.—A respectable Married Man, without incumbrance, aged 30, who perfectly understands his business, and can have a good character from the place he is about to leave. Direct W. H., Daced Lodge, East Barnet, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man without family, aged 35, who perfectly understands the management of Greenhouse, Vines, forcing Cucumbers and Melons, Flower, Kitchen Garden, Meadow-land, &c. His wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have 5 years' good character; leaving on account of his employer retiring. Direct to JOHN HEWETT, Mrs. Deacon Hume, Great ... House, Reigate, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—An industrious Married Man, aged 30, without any family, who has a practical knowledge of his business, including Early Forcing and Flower-garden, Kitchen garden, and Wall-fruit, and can give ... years' unexceptionable character from the gentleman he is about to leave. Direct to C. P., at T. R. Kemp, Esq., ... Villa, Loampit Hill, Lewisham Road.

AS SUPERINTENDENT or ASSISTANT in a Nursery and Seed Trades, having been engaged in one of the largest and most respectable concerns in England for ... years. Can give the best of references.—Direct W. ... 11, Exchange-street, Norwich.

AS UNDER-GARDENER.—A young Man, 23 years of age, who can have a good character.—Direct to X. Y. Z., Post-office, Ripley, Surrey.

A THOROUGH PRACTICAL GARDENER is at liberty to engage with any Nobleman or Gentleman requiring a steady persevering person, who can be well recommended by his late employer, and also by some of the first gardeners of the day with whom he has lived. The Advertiser is married, but no family.—Direct D., Post-office, Studley, Warwickshire.

AS FARMING BAILIFF or LAND STEWARD.—Wanted by a respectable married Man, aged 45, without encumbrance, the management of a Farm or Estate. He thoroughly understands every branch of his profession, is ... alternate husbandry, forest-planting, &c., &c., and has had ... practice in cultivation, and the management, fattening, &c. ... live stock. His wife has been accustomed to the charge of ... dairy, &c. Can have the best references as to character ... ability and has no objection to Scotland or Ireland, or ... consideration; England would be preferred.—Direct to Y. ... at the Office of the Gardeners' Chronicle.

AS FARMING BAILIFF or AGENT.—A Man of great and general experience, whose character will bear the strictest inquiry, and who has been for many years and is at present) a practical farmer, wishes to retire from business ... his own account. He has a small competency, and would accept a confidential situation in the service of a gentleman engaged in Agricultural pursuits or landed property. The Advertiser is of active habits, and willing to make himself useful in the labour of a farm. Unexceptionable references can be given, and his terms would be moderate.—Direct to W. J., ... office, Worcester.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1845.

NATIONAL ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION,
No. 4, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, LONDON.

Assurance Department—Policyholders for the whole of life are entitled to the whole profits.

For Investment, shares are issued of Five Pounds; also reduced shares of Five Shillings, designed to enable provident persons to improve savings. Shareholders are not subject to calls nor liable in respect of policy claims. Agents wanted in towns where none are already appointed. The Prospectus and all necessary information may be obtained at the offices of the Association.

WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary.

METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY
ESTABLISHED 1839.

Offices, No. 1, Craven-street, Strand, London. Open from Eleven till Three o'Clock daily.

Loans are advanced by the Company on the security of two responsible housekeepers, in sums of 10*l.* 10*s.*, 15*l.*, 20*l.*, 25*l.*, 30*l.*, 35*l.*, 40*l.*, 45*l.*, and 50*l.*, for periods of twenty-five weeks, at 2½ per cent., or of fifty weeks, at 5 per cent., at the option of the borrowers, to be repaid by weekly instalments. If the securities are approved by the directors at their weekly meeting, the loans are immediately advanced. Amounts exceeding 50*l.* are advanced by special agreement with the directors. Forms of application, containing the rules and regulations, may be had at any hour of the day, price 2*d.*

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.

OFFICE FOR PATENTS OF INVENTIONS AND REGISTRATIONS OF DESIGNS, 14, LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

THE Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, (or by letter, prepaid,) to Mr. ALEXANDER PRINCE, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields.

AGRICULTURAL TRAINING SCHOOL, HODDESDON, HERTS, established for GENERAL and SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION, including every branch of Agriculture.

Resident Head Master—Mr. Haselwood.

Assistant Masters—Mr. Aird and Mr. Tomline.

Agriculture — Professor Donaldson, Author of "British Husbandry," &c.

Botany—Professor Cooper, F.L.S., Author of the "Botany of Essex," &c.

Chemistry—Professor Holmes, five years Lecturer at St. Edmund's College.

Geology and Mineralogy—Professor Richardson, F.G.S., of the British Museum, Author of "Geology," &c.

Management and Diseases of Cattle — Professor Youatt, M.R.A.S., Author of "The Horse," "Sheep, Cattle," &c.

Natural Sciences—Professor Holmes.

Practical Surveying and Levelling—Mr. Haselwood.

The half-term will commence on Wednesday, the 26th of March. Fee: Ten Guineas, which includes Board, Lodging, Washing, Lectures, and every expense (except for Books).

An Experimental Farm of 400 acres, an extensive Library, Museum, and Laboratory, are attached to the School; and a register is kept by the Head and other Masters of the attendance, employments, and general conduct of the Pupils, of which periodical reports are transmitted to their friends.

Applications for the admission of Pupils to be addressed to the "Head Master of the Agricultural Training School," Hoddesdon, Herts, of whom every information may be obtained, and references had to parents whose sons are now in the School, in most of the counties of England.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE
BRUSSELS BRITISH GAZETTE.
Established in 1837,

12*s.* per quarter, postage free, for Belgium, France, and England. This weekly paper, which contains a careful digest of British, Irish, Colonial, Belgian, and Foreign news, as well as Literary Reviews and other original matter, is now the largest one published in Belgium.

As there are about 15,000 British residents in that country, it is clear that the BRUSSELS GAZETTE is an excellent medium of publicity for British and Continental advertisers.

Published at Browne's English Library, 73, Montagne de la Cour, Brussels. Agent in London, Mr. DEACON, Walbrook.

 Orders received at all the Post Offices on the Continent.

Just published, 4th Edition, greatly enlarged, 8vo, with nearly Two Hundred and Forty Illustrations on Wood, 21*s.* cloth,
ELEMENTS of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE, comprehending the Cultivation of Plants, the Husbandry of Domestic Animals, and the Economy of the Farm.
By DAVID LOW, Esq., F.R.S.E.
Professor of Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh.
"The best work on farming in our language."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

By the same Author, just published,
ON LANDED PROPERTY and the ECONOMY of ESTATES.
8vo, with numerous Wood Engravings. 21*s.* Also,
THE BREEDS of the DOMESTICATED ANIMALS of GREAT BRITAIN.
2 vols., 4to, with 56 Coloured Plates, 16*l.* 16*s.*
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

WORKS BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.

A New Edition, corrected, with a Supplement, containing above 160 additional pages of Letterpress and nearly 300 New Engravings, in 1 very thick vol. 8vo. of above 1300 pages, and 2000 Engravings on Wood, 3*l.* 3*s.* cloth,—An ENCYCLOPÆDIA of COTTAGE FARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE and FURNITURE; containing Designs for Cottages, Villas, Farm Houses, Farmeries, Country Inns, Public Houses, Parochial Schools, &c.; with the requisite Fittings-up, Fixtures, Offices, &c. and general Estimates of the Expense.
By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.
 The NEW SUPPLEMENT separately, 7*s.* 6*d.* sewed.
By the same Author,
ARBORETUM et FRUTICETUM BRITANNICUM. 8 vols. (4 of letterpress and 4 of plates), new and corrected impressions of the plates, 10*l.*
ENCYCLOPÆDIA of TREES and SHRUBS. 2000 Woodcuts, 2*l.* 10*s.*
HORTUS LIGNOSUS LONDINENSIS. 7*s.* 6*d.*
ARCHITECTURAL MAGAZINE. 5 vols. 6*l.* 6*s.*
THE SUBURBAN GARDENER. Numerous Woodcuts, 20*s.*
REPTON'S LANDSCAPE GARDENING and ARCHITECTURE, 30*s.*; with the Plates coloured, 3*l.* 10*s.*
On the LAYING-OUT and PLANTING of CEMETERIES, and the Improvement of Churchyards. 60 Woodcuts, 12*s.*
GARDENERS' MAGAZINE. Complete in 9 vols. numerous Woodcuts, 9*l.* 17*s.*
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY MRS. LOUDON.
This month will be published, fcap. 8vo, with an Engraving on Steel, and Illustrations on Wood,
THE LADY'S COUNTRY COMPANION;
OR, HOW TO ENJOY A COUNTRY LIFE RATIONALLY.
By Mrs. LOUDON, Author of "Gardening for Ladies," &c.
LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY THE LATE J. C. LOUDON.
Shortly will be published, in one vol. 8vo, with a Memoir of Mr. LOUDON, by Mrs. LOUDON, and a Portrait,
SELF INSTRUCTION FOR YOUNG GARDENERS, FORESTERS, BAILIFFS, LAND STEWARDS, AND FARMERS;
In Arithmetic, Book-keeping, Geometry, Mensuration, Practical Trigonometry, Mechanics, Land Surveying, Levelling, Planning and Mapping, Architectural Drawing, and Isometrical Projection and Perspective; with Examples, showing their applications to Horticultural and Agricultural Purposes. By the late J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S., H.S., &c.
LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s.*
London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

PAYNE'S STUDIES IN ENGLISH POETRY.
Just published, in fcap. 8vo, price 6*s.* bound in embossed roan,
STUDIES in ENGLISH POETRY, with Biographical Sketches and Notes Explanatory and Critical. By JOSEPH PAYNE, of the Mansion Grammar School, Leatherhead, Surrey. London: RELFE and FLETCHER, 17, Cornhill.

NEW WORK BY HARRY LORREQUER.
On the 27th of March, in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 5*s.*, ST. PATRICK'S EVE; or, THREE ERAS IN THE LIFE OF AN IRISH PEASANT.
By CHARLES LEVER.
With Four Etchings and numerous Woodcuts, by Phiz.
CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

Next week will be published, in one large vol., 8vo, price 2*l.* 2*s.*
THE GRASSES of BRITAIN, illustrated by 140 figures, drawn and engraved by the Author. By RICHARD PARNELL, M.D., F.R.S.E., Author of "The Grasses of Scotland." This work contains a figure and full description of every species of Grass found in Britain, with their uses in Agriculture. &c.—WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London.

FOR NOTHING.—A PAMPHLET on NERVOUSNESS or MIND COMPLAINTS, with Testimonials.—The Nervous are respectfully invited to send to the Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELEY, 9, Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, for the small Pamphlet just published on his most successful treatment of Nervous or Mind Complaints, by which he cures these diseases as certainly as water quenches thirst, and which Pamphlet he will return, if a stamp is sent, free of charge.

MECHI'S LETTERS ON AGRICULTURE.
On Thursday, March 20th, will be published, small 4to, 1*s.* 6*d.* sewed, or 3*s.* cloth,
A SERIES OF LETTERS ON
AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT; with an Appendix. By JOHN JOSEPH MECHI. With Four Plans of the Farm and Machinery.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

PROTECTION AGAINST RAIN. — WATERPROOF CAPES, suitable for GARDENERS and others exposed to the weather, from 5*s.* 6*d.* to 25*s.* each, are made by J. GROSE, 94, Tooley-street, London, where also may be had his approved Patent Waterproof Coats, Trousers, Leggings, Driving Capes, Chaise Aprons, &c.

THOMAS GOODE, late of No. 15, Mill-street, Hanover-square, begs to return his grateful thanks to the noble and other Members of the Horticultural Society, for the liberal support he has received at their hands since the period of resigning the office he held in that Society, and also to inform them that he has removed his business to more convenient premises, No. 19, South Audley-street, Grosvenor-square, where they may depend on the strictest attention being paid to their favours, and on being supplied with CHINA, GLASS, EARTHENWARE, &c., at moderate prices.
China and Glass Warehouse, 19, South Audley-street, Grosvenor-square.

DRAWING-ROOM CLOCKS.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, invite attention to a splendid variety of rosewood, china, bronze, and ormolu Clocks; they go for eight days, and strike the hours and half-hours. Price four guineas, seven guineas, and ten guineas each, and upwards. The performance is warranted. A Pamphlet, with detailed list of prices, and illustrated with sketches, may be had on application, gratis, or sent to all parts of Great Britain and Ireland, postage free, in answer to a paid letter.

News of the Week.

THE proceedings in Parliament during the past week have presented more than their usual interest. On Friday the House of Commons affirmed the sugar resolutions proposed by Government without any material modifications. On Monday, Mr. C. Buller brought forward his amendment for rendering the Income-tax less unequal and inquisitorial in its operation. The amendment was founded on the supposition that Parliament will not have the power of dispensing with its continuance at the end of three years, and was therefore intended to induce the Government to modify those clauses which pressed alike on income arising from capital and on that depending on professional exertions. After an interesting debate, the amendment was negatived by 240 to 112. Mr. Spooner's amendment for enabling tenant occupiers of land to obtain an abatement on any year when their income is less than their assessment, was also rejected by 196 to 92. On Wednesday, on the third reading of the Bill, Mr. Spooner moved other amendments, for the purpose of allowing various exemptions to persons in trades and professions, and also the deduction of money paid for life assurances. These amendments were opposed by Government on the ground that they would open the door to fraud, and were rejected on a division by large majorities. Mr. Wakley's amendment for allowing abatement to landlords who have lost their rents by insolvency or fraud, and Mr. Forster's amendment allowing Mining Companies to make their returns under schedule D, were negatived without a division. Sir R. Inglis then brought forward his amendment proposing that the assessment should be taken on all incomes above 150*l.*, and limiting the exemption to those which do not exceed 500*l.* a-year. This proposal was opposed by Government on the ground that it would cause a considerable defalcation in the revenue, and on a division it was lost by 59 to 25. All the amendments having been negatived, the Bill then passed in its original form. On Tuesday a long and animated debate took place on the affairs of New Zealand. Mr. Somes, as Chairman of the New Zealand Company, Mr. Aglionby, one of the Directors, Mr. C. Buller and other gentlemen adverted at great length to the recent proceedings in the colony, and severely censured the Governor Captain Fitzroy for many of his public acts, which they denounced as frauds upon the Company perpetrated with the knowledge of the Colonial Office. Sir. R. Peel defended Lord Stanley and Capt. Fitzroy, and declared his readiness to meet and rebut any distinct motion that could be brought forward, attacking their general conduct in regard to the colony. Mr. Hope declared, on the part of the Colonial Office, that no deception had been practised, and ultimately Mr. Somes's motion for the production of papers was agreed to, with some verbal alterations. On Thursday, Sir R. Peel intimated that the recent destruction of the Portland Vase had called the attention of Government to the defective state of the law in providing punishment for persons guilty of wanton destruction of public property, and that a Bill will shortly be presented on the subject. On the same day, Mr. Cobden brought forward his motion for the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the existing agricultural distress, and into the effects of protection on the interests of landlords, farmers, and farm-labourers. The motion was opposed by Ministers, and after a long debate, which will be read with interest, was negatived by 213 to 121. —From France we have further accounts of the instability of the Cabinet, which sustained a defeat on Monday in the Chamber of Deputies, on a measure to which they attached considerable importance. The motion for taking into consideration the proposition for reducing the Five per Cent. Stock, to which both the King and Cabinet are said to entertain strong objections, has also been adopted by the Chamber by an almost unanimous vote. The Peers, however, have passed the Secret Service Money Bill by a majority of 67, but even this success has not removed the unfavourable impression created by the proceedings in the lower Chamber.—From Switzerland we learn that the accounts received last week through France were premature. The Diet, it appears, have not yet decided on the expulsion of the Jesuits; but have appointed a committee for the purpose of framing propositions which may reconcile the instructions of the different cantons on that subject. It is supposed that this committee will also be authorised to decide the question of the free corps, which has excited so much animosity in the Catholic cantons.

Home News.

COURT.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Royal Family, continue at Buckingham Palace, and are quite well. The Prince on Friday attended a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission, and afterwards inspected the works of the new Houses of Parliament. On Saturday, Her Majesty and the Prince honoured Drury Lane Theatre with their presence, and Prince Albert also attended the soirée of the Marquis of Northampton, as President of the Royal Society. On Sunday, the Queen and the Prince attended divine service in the private chapel of the Palace, and in the evening paid a visit to Christ's Hospital, to attend the service, and witness one of the public suppers which take place on Sunday evenings during Lent. On Tuesday, the Queen held a Court at which the new Turkish Ambassador, Sarim Effendi, had an audience to present his credentials. In the evening Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the performance of the French plays with their presence. On Wednesday the Queen held her second levee this season at Buckingham Palace, and afterwards held a Chapter of the Order of the Thistle, at which the Duke of Montrose was elected a Knight of the Order, with the usual ceremonies. On Thursday the Queen and Prince Albert walked in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. Viscountess Canning has succeeded the Countess of Dunmore as Lady in Waiting Viscount Hawarden has succeeded the Earl of Morton as Lord in Waiting; Colonel B. Drummond has succeeded Mr. Ormsby Gore as Groom in Waiting. The Hon. Miss Stanley and the Hon. Miss Hamilton have succeeded the Hon. Miss Paget and the Hon. Miss Kerr as maids of honour in waiting on the Queen.

Knighthood.—The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon Capt. John Hamilton, late of Her Majesty's Packet Service, and upon James Cochrane, Esq., Chief Justice of Gibraltar.

Official Appointments.—Mr. E. C. Buckland, son of Dr. Buckland, Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, has been appointed by Sir R. Peel to the junior clerkship in the Treasury, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Van Spegel, who for many years filled the office of chief clerk in that department.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers are full of comments on the division which took place on Monday in the Chamber of Deputies, and which is claimed as a triumph by the Opposition. The ballot on the bill respecting the pensions of retiring public servants was fixed for that day, there not having been sufficient members in the Chamber on Saturday to legalise the vote. The Ministry had sent letters to all their adherents, requesting their attendance to vote in favour of the law; but, notwithstanding all their efforts, they were left in a minority, and the bill was rejected by a majority of 201 to 183 votes, so that the Opposition had a majority of 13. At the moment of taking the ballot, the Ministers endeavoured to rally the Conservatives who objected to the bill, by promising that the measure, if passed by the Chamber of Deputies, would be greatly modified by the Chamber of Peers, but even this promise did not save them from defeat. The Débats of Tuesday and other Ministerial papers say, that the bill was lost not by the efforts of the Opposition, but because it was objected to by many Conservatives, who, though generally supporters of the Cabinet, oppose this measure from their connection with the magistracy. M. Remusat afterwards proceeded to develope his proposition relative to the incompatibility of certain public functions with those of Deputies. M. Guizot combated it on the ground that it was defective in itself, and contrary to the institutions and interests of society. He would accordingly oppose its adoption, but had no objection to its being taken into consideration, because it would lead to a discussion of its merits, which would induce the Chamber to reject it. M. Beaumont complimented M. Guizot on this resolution, and reminded him that he had hitherto opposed even its being taken into consideration. M. Dupin, who spoke next, said that he had always voted against the proposition, but that the recent dismissal of several public functionaries on account of their votes had converted him to its principle. The taking in consideration of the proposition was then put to the vote, and agreed to by the Chamber without a single dissenting voice. M. Muret de Bord, on Tuesday brought before the Chamber his proposition for reducing the Five per Cent. Stock into Four-and-a-half. The Minister of Finance admitted the necessity and utility of the measure, but still maintained that it was not opportune. He did not, however, oppose its being taken into consideration and discussed during the present session. After some observations from the Minister of the Interior, the President consulted the Chamber, and the proposition was taken into consideration by an immense majority. The Secret Service Money Bill passed the Chamber of Peers on Friday, by a majority of 111 to 44, after so angry a discussion that the papers observe upon it with astonishment. The first exchange of personalities was between Count Molé and M. Guizot, but the debate which followed between the Marquis de Boissy and Generals Colbert and Gourgaud was near ending in bloodshed. Their quarrels produced a violent tumult in the Chamber, which adjourned in the utmost confusion; and the three Peers having been called into the private room of the Chancellor, they were persuaded to enter into mutual explanations, and promise that the quarrel should go no further out of doors. The concluding debate on the bill on Friday was marked by further personalities, but ultimately the bill was voted by a majority of 67. Notwithstanding this result the public misgiving respecting the position of Ministers seems not to have been removed. The impression produced by the debate among the Conservative party is decidedly against the two chief speakers, but more against Count Molé than M. Guizot. The former is considered too bitter and too personal. M. Guizot is also thought to have sunk below his general standard in engaging in personalities. Several Conservatives of note see no other means of getting out of the present situation than by a change of Ministry in the interval between the sessions in favour of the Duke de Broglie. They foresee that if the Duke should succeed in the question of the Right of Search, he would be in high favour with the Chambers, and might form a strong Cabinet, such as would be likely to live. They entertain hopes that, notwithstanding his known repugnance to accept office, he would accept the task of forming a Cabinet with the greater portion of the present members of the Ministry, and that M. Guizot would, in that case, accept the part of French Ambassador at London. This combination pleases many Conservatives, because it would have the effect of dispensing with a dissolution of the Chambers. In the Chamber of Peers on Monday the Minister of Marine stated, in answer to some remarks from Viscount Dubouchage, that the question of the home debt of Spain had been examined by the Council of State, where it had been decided that henceforth that species of stock should not be quoted in the Bourse official lists. The Duke de Broglie was to leave Paris for London on Thursday for the purpose of entering upon his conferences with Dr. Lushington respecting the means of revising the treaties relative to the suppression of the Slave-trade.—A duel with pistols took place on the Bois de Boulogne on Tuesday, between M. Dujarrier, manager and proprietor of the Presse, and M. Beauvallon, one of the editors of the Globe, in which M. Dujarrier was mortally wounded. He expired before he could be brought home. It is said that he was a man of very considerable talent, and universally lamented.—The Moniteur of Monday contains a royal ordonnance, by which the pastoral letter issued on the 21st November last by the Cardinal Archbishop of Lyons is condemned for attacking the authority of the laws, and ordered it to be suppressed.—The Armoricain of Brest announces the speedy departure of Admiral Dupetit-Thouars from Paris, on a mission to the Mozambique Channel and the coasts of Madagascar.—The frigate Erigone is fitting out at Brest in order to convey to the Rio de la Plata Baron Deffaudis, who is proceeding there to arrange, in concert with the British Minister, the differences existing between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video.—A grand banquet will be given by the principal merchants of Paris to Marshal Bugeaud, at which the Duke de Nemours, the Prince de Joinville, the Duke d'Aumale, and the Duke de Montpensier will be present, on Sunday, the 16th inst., in the great Hall of the Royal Exchange.—The Government have ordered the engineers of the departments of Ain and Rhone to proceed to lay down a line of railroad communication between Lyons and Geneva, either through the gorges of Nantua, the valley of the Rhone, or that of St. Rambert. The municipal council of Lyons have expressed a wish that the road should pass through the valley of the Isere. Nothing can exceed the frenzy with which the people of Paris are speculating in railways. Poor women, even, notwithstanding the thermometer was at 17° Fahrenheit, last week crowded the precincts of the Bourse, and were seen betting their francs on the different lines. The weather is intensely cold in Paris. "This our third winter," says a private letter, "rivals in severity those that have within four months preceded it. No man has witnessed more trying variations. It is to-day 30° colder than on Monday. Last week the Boulevards exhibited thousands of loungers basking in the sun, seated; this day everybody you meet is wrapped up in furs, or otherwise enveloped in winter clothing."

SPAIN.—Accounts from Morocco have been received through Gibraltar and Madrid, which announce the death of Mr. Drummond Hay, Consul-General at Tangiers. The precise date of Mr. Hay's death is not mentioned; the news of it, however, reached Gibraltar on the 1st. Mr. Hay was an active and intelligent public servant, the author of a very interesting work on Morocco, and during the French attack on the coast he performed a difficult part with much discretion and tact. The disease of which he died was constipation of the bowels. His death was sudden, for though he had been ailing some little time, no serious consequences were anticipated. The same accounts mention the death of Mr. Butler, our Vice-Consul at Tetuan.—The proceedings in the Chambers present nothing of interest to the English reader. It was believed that the session of the Cortes would not last above six weeks more, especially if the Queen accomplished her projected journey to Barcelona. The Progresistas had reappeared at some of the elections. At Ciudad Rodrigo M. Cortina had been returned by an overwhelming majority over the Marquis de Viluma, and at Penaronda de Bracamonte he had obtained 472 votes, and M. Ocana 457, against 10 given to M. Viluma.

PORTUGAL.—We have accounts from Lisbon to the 4th inst., announcing the decision of the superior tribunal of the Lisbon Relacao in the case of the Madeira woman Maria Joaquina, condemned to death several months ago in that island on a charge of heresy and apostacy. That barbarous sentence, by this decision has been commuted to one of three months' imprisonment and a fine of six milreas.—The approaching elections were engaging the attention of all parties. The Opposition party had formed an association for promoting the return of candidates hostile to the Ministry. The decision of a Council of Ministers on the subject of the conversion of a portion of the foreign debt had led to serious misunderstanding between the Ministers of the Interior and of War on one side, and those of Foreign Affairs and Finance on the other. The casting vote of the Minister of Marine determined the discussion in favour of the Barons Folgosa and Junqueiros, in opposition to the capitalist, Romao, supported by Senhor Cabral and the Duke of Terceira. The Baron Folgosa remains charged with the management of this operation, and was expected to proceed to England immediately on this mission. During the week another great compact has been entered into by the Government with the Company of the Public Works of Portugal. This association of 20,000 contos, or 4,500,000*l.* sterling, undertake to construct roads throughout the kingdom, to be commenced [illegible] and completed within eight years: as well as to [illegible] railroad from Lisbon to Bajadoz, to be finished [illegible] 10 years. Other important works are specified in the contract, one being the formation of a [illegible] around the city, with a view to the prevention of smuggling; and a public walk, with ornamental [illegible] &c. The binding document is signed by the [illegible] parties; the Government will pay the company [illegible] cent. per annum on the capital advanced in the [illegible] and 300 contos will be the penalty for non-fulfilment.—Dr. Kalley, who came recently from Madeira to Lisbon, had failed to enlist the sympathies of Lord Howard in his cause, and had, as a last recourse thrown himself on the mercy of the Portuguese Government, to avert the impending sentence of the Relacao Court. He obtained of the Minister for Foreign Affairs an assurance that he might return to Madeira without fear of molestation, provided he entirely desisted for the future from disturbing the island with preaching or proselytising; and with this assurance, contained in an official letter to the Madeira Authorities, he has set sail for the island.—A reprint of the Bible, in monthly parts, is announced for publication. It is the translation by Padre Pereira de Figueiredo, accompanied with notes and the Latin text; and the same that Mr. Borrow met with in the little schoolhouse at Colhares, but to be illustrated with lithographs by Portuguese artists. Beautifully printed and neatly bound volumes of the Epistles (London edition) are commonly offered for sale in the streets and squares of Lisbon.

SWITZERLAND.—The accounts published last week on the authority of the French papers, were, as we anticipated, premature. It appears that the deputies having concluded their preliminary discussion in the order of the cantons, a general debate ensued, when M. Neuman, the deputy for Berne, moved the appointment of a committee to frame propositions that would reconcile as much as possible the tenor of the different instructions given to the deputies, and to examine the questions of the free corps and the amnesty. On the 4th the representatives of the two parties into which the Diet is divided engaged in angry personalities. The deputy of the small canton of Uri particularly distinguished himself by the vehemence of his language. The member for St. Gall intimated that he might ultimately concur in the adoption of coercive measures towards the Jesuits, provided that the Assembly decreed the suppression of the free corps. On the 5th, Berne, Zurich, Soleure, Schaffhausen, Argau, Thurgau, Tessino, Vaud, Bale town and country, Glaris, St. Gall, the Grisons, and external Appenzel, or a majority of 12 cantons and a half against 9 and a half, carried a resolution for the appointment of a committee to devise the means of reconciling the various instructions of the cantons that are more or less hostile to the Jesuits. On the 6th, the Diet decided that the committee should be composed of 7 members. Only 19 out of the 24 deputies voted, viz, Zurich, Berne, Glaris, Soleure, Schaffhausen, St. Gall, Argau, Thurgau, Grisons, Vaud, Tessino, Neufchatel, Geneva. The demi-cantons of Bale and Appenzel neutralised each other. The rest of the cantons abstained from voting. The members of the committee were then named, the majority being chosen from the radical party. After the nomination of the committee, the question of the free-corps was opened. Fourteen Deputies stated their instructions. Lucerne, Uri, Schwytz, Unterwald, Zug, and Fribourg, fully approved of the repressive measures proposed by the Vorort; St. Gall, Grisons, and Appenzel, did the same, with the exception of certain provisions; Berne, Soleure, and Bale country would not give any decisive opinion until after something had been done against the Jesuits. Berne merely demanded that the question should be referred to a committee, without entering into the merits of the question. Lucerne made a long and violent speech in support of its decision in favour of the Jesuits and against the free-corps. Glaris expressed a desire that the committee should discuss and decide both the question of the Jesuits and that of the free-corps, and the debate was then adjourned to Monday.

ITALY.—The Neapolitan Minister of the Interior has just issued the programme for the seventh Congress of Italian savans, which is fixed to commence at Naples on the 20th September, and terminate the 5th October. The President is Don Antonio Spinelli, and among the acting members of the Committee are Prince de Scalea and the Marquis de Castellabato. The King takes a lively interest in the meeting, and every preparation is about to be made to receive the philosophers and their visitors with the greatest hospitality. The King of Naples has just ordered surveys to be made for two more important railroads, which, after having passed the Apennines, are to unite the capital with the two extreme points of his States from north to east. The first of these enterprises, from the north, is a length of 44 leagues, and is to run from Naples to Termoli, on the Adriatic. This line will also have a branch to Chieti. The second line, to the east, is not less than 78 leagues, and is intended to be carried from Naples to Lecce, being 8 leagues from the port of Brindisi, the ancient Brundusium, on the Adriatic. The Grand Duke of Tuscany is also endeavouring to obtain a communication as far as Bevenna or Rimini, with the railroad constructed between Leghorn and Florence. The Sardinian Government is not less active in the formation of plans for railroads through the Sardinian States.

RUSSIA.—Letters from St. Petersburgh of the 14th ult., state that the Emperor is desirous that the railway between St. Petersburgh and Moscow should be completed in 1847, in order that the opening of this communication between the two capitals may be incidental to, and celebrated with the anniversary of the 9th century of the existence of Moscow. The execution of the work is subject to innumerable and immense difficulties. It has to traverse the chain of mountains between Twer and Moscow, six rivers and 20 canals, which in many places are very large and susceptible of inundations almost every spring. The railway will be 600 versts, or about 170 leagues in length. The high road from St. Petersburgh to Moscow is at present about 192 leagues.—M. Koudriaffsky, Attaché to the Russian Legation, arrived in town on Thursday night from St. Petersburgh, with despatches, performing the distance between London and St. Petersburgh in the short period of eight days—a feat, considering the severity of the season, and the dangerous state of the roads, altogether unparalleled in modern travelling.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.—We have accounts from Constantinople of the 18th Feb. The Porte, after agreeing to the appointment of commissioners to settle the Tripoli claims, is throwing so many obstructions in the way of the necessary inquiries, that it is impossible to say when they can arrive at a decision. Mustafa Nouri Pacha, the Governor of Widdin, has been dismissed, and ordered to take up his residence at Adrianople. The only reason given for this act is the enmity felt by Riza Pacha to every one supposed to be in the Sultan's confidence. The Government has resolved upon extending and increasing the poll-tax, an oppressive impost, which already falls heavily upon the unfortunate rayahs.—There is no later news from the Lebanon. The papers state that the Turkish Government has finally resolved upon granting to the Maronites, as well as to the Druses, in the mixed districts, a particular governor for each of these rival races, whose jurisdiction will be so arranged that neither will have authority over the other, but that both will be under the jurisdiction of the Pacha of Saida.—Letters from Alexandria mention that much scandal had been occasioned in Cairo by the expressed desire of a young English lady to be received into the faith of Islamism, in order to marry a young Egyptian who had captivated her. Colonel Barrett, the British Consul, was requested by the young lady's friends to interfere, and fortunately a legal pretext presented itself, the lady being a minor. She is, therefore, to be sent to England.

WEST INDIES.—The Tay steamer arrived on Tuesday with news from Jamaica to the 7th, Barbadoes 9th, and Havannah 10th Feb. The most important news is from Barbadoes, where a destructive fire had occurred on Feb. 3, destroying between 150 and 200 houses. It commenced in the northern extremity of Swan-street, and continued its ravages in a circuitous course as far as Cumberland-street, the whole mass of buildings in these localities presenting one scene of dilapidation and ruin. A vast amount of property was destroyed, and distress occasioned by this conflagration. The weather, in allusion to the prospects of the crop, had been favourable. A productive sugar plantation, in the parish of St. Andrew, had been sold for 35,200*l.* Barbadoes currency. At Trinidad, sugar-making was progressing very rapidly. The crop would be abundant, and sufficiently ample to provide for the deficiency of last year. A meeting of the colonists of Barbadoes had been held, under the auspices of the Bishop, for the purpose of considering the expediency of establishing a railway communication from Bridgetown to the exterior, extending to a distance of about 17 miles, and passing through 3 districts. A sum of money was subscribed towards the expense of the survey, and it was resolved that application should be made to the legislature for its sanction to the undertaking. The mania for railway speculation in England was relied upon as a guarantee for the raising of the sum requisite for the completion of the work, in the event of an amount adequate thereto not being furnished in the island. This is, we believe, the first movement in railway matters that has taken place in the West Indies.—The Tay brings accounts of the taking and trial of Santa Anna, whose sentence, it is expected, will be banishment for life.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The discussion on Lord Normanby's motion for the production of papers relating to the appointment of the Deputy Inspector of the constabulary in Ireland, of which we gave the commencement in our last, was closed by the rejection of the motion, by 32 to 12.—The return of the military force serving in Ireland on the 1st days of January, from 1835 to 1845 inclusive, was unopposed by the Government, and was therefore ordered, with some additions.

Monday.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving the second reading of the Bill for removing the municipal and corporate disabilities of the Jews, entered into a statement of its nature. The circumstances attending the rejection of Mr. Salomons, as an alderman of the City of London, showed the impolicy of retaining a law which excluded from municipal honours a gentleman of the highest respectability, by which all public incentives to honourable conduct and the spirit of citizenship were diminished. The desirable object to be obtained would be effected by omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian" from the declaration required from a Jew on taking office. There were Jews amongst the aldermen of Birmingham, Portsmouth, and Southampton; and there might be amongst the aldermen of London, if the corporation chose, simply by varying the time at which the declaration was made, by which the party might come in under the operation of the annual Indemnity Bill. In this way, by a side wind, parties might be admitted in capacities wholly unrecognised by the law. The Bill before them would get rid of the anomaly, and place all the corporations in the kingdom on a level in this respect. In the cases of Quakers, Moravians, Independents, and Separatists, the words had been omitted; and in adding to the number already exempted that of the Jews, he did not urge the matter as a question of public principle, or as one of doubt or difficulty, but simply on the ground of getting rid of a useless and absurd anomaly.—The Bishop of LONDON said that he had on former occasions opposed measures of a nature similar to the present, principally on the ground that they were likely to be the first step towards the admission of the Jews into Parliament. He felt the same difficulty still; but it was not his intention to offer any opposition to this Bill, because such opposition would only give rise to a discussion which might excite angry feelings, and endanger the boon which they were about to confer on this respectable body of men. In saying this, he hoped it would not be understood that he should at all preclude himself from opposing any measure which might, on a subsequent occasion, be introduced for the admission to Parliament of persons professing the Jewish religion.—Lord CAMPBELL accepted the measure as a first instalment. He trusted that in the ensuing session of Parliament his noble and learned friend on the woolsack would come down and inform their lordships that there was another anomaly in the law which must be swept away. As the law would then stand, the Jew might be Lord Mayor of London, and might, in a criminal court, take precedence of the noble and learned lord himself, should he attend, but would not be allowed to sit as a Member of Parliament. He might be a magistrate, sheriff, or town councillor, and why not be allowed to be a Member of Parliament?—Lord COLCHESTER said Lord Campbell's remarks had almost persuaded him to oppose the Bill. In assenting to it, he wished it to be distinctly understood that he did not think it right or proper to admit to the Legislature persons of the Jewish persuasion.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE and Lord BROUGHAM supported the Bill, which was read a second time.—On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, a Bill to amend the laws respecting pauper lunatics in Ireland was read a first time.

Tuesday.—On the motion of the Earl of CADOGAN, a return connected with the application of the pew-rents of Trinity Church, Upper Chelsea, was ordered.—The Stamp Duties Assimilation Bill was read a second time, on the motion of the Duke of BUCCLEUCH.

Thursday.—The Property and Income-tax Bill, brought up from the Commons, was read a first time.—The Duke of WELLINGTON intimated that on Tuesday next he will move the adjournment of the House, for the Easter holidays, till the 3d April.—Lord BROUGHAM complained that on Tuesday last the decision of the Railway Committee of the Board of Trade on the London and York Railway had been known on the Stock Exchange as early as 12 o'clock, before the appearance of the Gazette, and that a great deal of business had been done in consequence. He moved for a return of the prices of shares of that particular Company at 12 o'clock and at 4 o'clock of the particular day in question.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE minutely explained the proceedings of the Board on this matter, and stated that, on Monday afternoon, there was brought to the Railway Board an official communication from the Direct Northern, stating that they had seen it to be for their interest to coalesce with the Cambridge and Lincoln Company. What was the consequence? Why, when two Companies coalesced against a third, the chances of the two became infinitely better than the one single one. The fact was known on Monday at the time when the operations on the Stock Exchange alluded to took place. Therefore on Tuesday those who knew this sold out from the London and York, and bought into the Cambridge and Lincoln and Direct Northern.—Lord BROUGHAM, under the circumstances, withdrew his notice, but regarded the rumour as to the oozing out of information as a proof of the inaptitude of a secret tribunal for such a country as England.—The House went into committee on the Jews Disabilities Bill, and, on the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, the words "chamberlain and treasurer" were inserted in the clause enumerating the various offices.—The Companies Clauses Consolidation Bill was read a second time, and the 8,000,000*l.* Consolidated Fund Bill was read a first time.

Friday.—Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the school-masters of Scotland, praying for the provision of dwelling-houses.—Lord KENYON asked why the country did not provide for its own schoolmasters?—Lord CAMPBELL remarked, that in every petition which had been presented to the House, this provision had been most expressly requested. The schoolmaster at present had what was called a "butt-end," which consisted only of two small rooms. He could tell the noble lord that these respectable individuals were accomplished in every branch of learning, and that if he had derived his education from one of them, he would have found that their skill in communicating it would have rendered him as accomplished as he now was, and he thought the noble lord might have spared his observation.—Lord KENYON protested that he only asked a question, and that he had not the slightest disposition in the world to express the least disrespect for the body of individuals from whom the petition emanated.—The Earl of MINTO postponed his motion respecting Tahiti, in consequence of the illness of Lord Aberdeen. The Bill for the protection of the freshwater fishery in the Scotch rivers, and the Bill for the abolition of deodands were read a second time.—The Duke of RICHMOND gave notice that he should, after the Easter recess, call the attention of their lordships to the propriety of appointing a committee to inquire whether it would not be proper to make an enactment, for the purpose of enabling the holders of entailed property effectually to drain and otherwise improve their estates.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the third reading of the Jewish Disabilities Removal Bill.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE expressed his hearty concurrence in the provisions of the Bill, and bore testimony to the liberality of Sir Moses Montefiore, Mr. Salomons, and other members of the Jewish persuasion in contributing to the various charities with which he had the pleasure of being connected.—The LORD CHANCELLOR felt highly gratified by the assent of his Royal Highness to the Bill, which was then read a third time and passed.—The Stamp Duties Assimilation (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—After the discussion on the Duke of Newcastle's purchase of the Hafod estate, noticed in our last, the motion came on for going into Committee of Ways and Means on the Sugar Duties. A lengthy discussion was originated by Mr. COBDEN, who contended that the proposed differential duty would increase the price of sugar in this country to the extent of 10 guineas per ton, and that therefore a tax would be inflicted on the British consumers to the amount of 2,416,000*l.* per annum for protection to the colonies. The House then went into committee, and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the sugar resolutions, without any material alteration. He stated that, after the most diligent inquiries, and consultation with Custom House officers, and others experienced in the trade, he had come to the determination to press the proposed classification. With respect to the words of the resolution, he had introduced the words that the distinctive marks should be "white clayed, or equal in quality to white clayed," and this was done with a view to prevent the objection as to colour being taken as a test; and in the Bill which he meant to introduce to give effect to this scale of duty, he meant to introduce this explanation as to quality in order to guard against colour being taken as a test. Under this arrangement, he had reason to believe that the operation of these duties would be equal upon all sugars, whether the produce of the East Indies, the British West Indies, or those foreign possessions which, under the law, were permitted to import their sugars into this country. He concluded by proposing the resolutions affirming the new rates of sugar duties; which are—West and East Indies, per cwt.:—Colonial muscovado, 14*s.*; white clayed, unrefined, 16*s.* 4*d.*; colonial, refined, 19*s.* 8*d.*; double refined, 1*l.* 1*s.*; candy, brown, 1*l.* 6*s.*; candy, white, 1*l.* 15*s.*; molasses, 5*s.* 3*d.* On East India sugar, imported from those parts of the East Indies into which the importation of foreign sugar is not prohibited:—White clayed, 1*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*; brown, muscovado, or clayed, not equal to white clayed, 18*s.* 8*d.* From China, Java, Manilla, or any other foreign country from whence sugar may be imported, the produce of free labour—white clayed, 1*l.* 8*s.*; brown or muscovado, 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* On all other sugars not otherwise charged with duty (i. e., slave-labour foreign):—Refined sugar, 6*l.* 8*s.*; brown or muscovado, 3*l.* 3*s.*; molasses, 1*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*; candy, brown, 5*l.* 12*s.*; candy, white, 8*l.* 8*s.*—Mr. HOGG expressed himself quite satisfied with the course pursued by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.—After a desultory discussion the 1st and 2d resolutions were agreed to.—On the 3d resolution, Sir W. CLAY moved as an amendment that the duty on clayed sugar which was proposed by the Government at 1*l.* 8*s.* should be reduced to 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, and that the duty on the sugar on which they proposed to charge a duty of 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* should be 18*s.* 8*d.* The diminution of duty, therefore, which he proposed was that of 4*s.* 8*d.* on each quality. The committee divided—For the original resolution, 152; for the amendment, 69; majority, 83. This and the remaining resolutions were agreed to, and the 14th March was fixed for the coming into operation of the new duties. The report of the resolutions was ordered to be brought up on Monday.—The House went into committee, pro formâ, upon the Bastardy Bill. Certain verbal amendments were introduced, and the Bill passed through committee.—The LORD ADVOCATE obtained leave to bring in a Bill to simplify the form and diminish the expense of obtaining infeftment in heritable property in Scotland; and a Bill to facilitate the transmission of heritable securities for debt in Scotland; both of which were read a first time.

Monday.—Mr. H. BARCLAY gave notice for an early day to call the attention of the House to the Act of last session for the abolition for debts under 20*l.*, with a view of giving tradesmen some additional protection against fraudulent customers.—On the bringing up of the report on the Property-tax Bill, Mr. C. BULLER moved, as an amendment, the following resolution:—"That the circumstances under which the renewal of the Income-tax is at present proposed are such as to render it exceedingly improbable that Parliament will have the power of dispensing with its continuance at the end of three years; and that it is, therefore, the duty of this House to take care that the tax be imposed in a form in which its operation shall be less unequal and inquisitorial than it now is." The hon. member said he would not object to the continuance of the Property or Income-tax, provided it had been made the means of reducing the duties on tea, tobacco, malt, soap, coffee, sugar, spirits, and such articles of consumption; but he had the greatest objection to it in lieu of the cotton wool duty, the duty on glass, and the other duties which the Government had proposed to abolish or reduce, but which would be of no perceptible advantage to the poor. And yet the budget was called the poor man's budget! Tobacco and foreign spirits were legitimate sources of taxation; but our absurd system not merely deprived us of income, but converted them into the cause of nearly all the crime which arose out of smuggling and other offences against the revenue. He had looked into the reductions to be effected by the abolition of the cotton duty, and found that the poor man would be benefited in fustian by three halfpence, and the poor woman on calico for her gowns to a similar amount, making the entire benefit to them threepence annually. Let the poor therefore be truly grateful! True, there were other articles in the budget—as furniture woods, the reduction on which would be a compensation for the Income-tax, if all England were composed of new married couples, with a thousand a year and upwards. He warned the free-trade side of the House that the reductions on glass and other articles amounted to nothing short of abandoning—at least of weakening—their warfare against all protective duties whatever; and ridiculed the idea that the House would be left, three years hence at "unfettered liberty" to deal with the Income-tax, when the duties on all articles from which a surplus was reasonably to be anticipated were swept away. No preparation was made for the possibility of years of bad harvests and commercial distress. Urging that the Property and Income-tax, in its practical operation, fully justified his allegation that it was inquisitorial and oppressive, he concluded by proposing his amendment.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER criticised the indefinite nature of the amendment, which at this late period proposed to stop the Bill by a proposition which left it open to every Member to suggest what alterations he pleased. He vindicated the financial propositions of the Government, as being calculated to unfetter commerce and manufactures, and to enlarge the field of industry for the labouring population.—Lord HOWICK, though looking upon the Income-tax as a most objectionable mode of raising the revenue, saw no way of modifying it at once justly and effectually. What was the meaning of realised property? The property of the banker, shipowner, and manufacturer, though evanescent, was tangible, and if they attempted to draw distinctions between income from capital and from professional exertion, they would get into inextricable difficulties. He preferred a well-considered system of taxation on expenditure, which would fall equally on all classes, draw its largest amount from luxuries, and afford the greatest benefit to the working man. Protective taxes were now admitted to be taxes on the community for the advantage of classes, and he trusted that before the next general election, which would take place before the re-imposed Income-tax would expire, he trusted that the public mind would be so enlightened as to compel a resort to a more rational system in lieu of this most unequal and oppressive impost.—Sir R. H. INGLIS was in favour of capitalising income, in order to levy the tax more equitably, or failing that, he would resort to his former proposition of confining the tax to all incomes above 150*l.* (making that sum the starting-point), as the benefits of the reductions in taxes would be but little felt by those whose smaller incomes still brought them within the limits of the Income-tax. He also regretted that in the budget so much consideration was bestowed on material wants, while spiritual and moral destitution was overlooked.—Mr. WARBURTON urged the comparative equality of taxing variable and terminable as well as permanent sources of income, and looked upon the Income-tax as one which possessed the great merit of keeping the people jealous and watchful, whereas indirect taxation, as on timber or tea, was apt to render them apathetic, by seemingly shifting the burden.—Mr. M. MILNES, though approving of direct taxation, was unwilling to limit the Exchequer too narrowly to this source, as in that case the sensitive jealousy of the people, as to any increase, might compromise our honour in any emergency with foreign countries.—Mr. HAWES, examining the details of the budget, pleaded that a much larger surplus would be at the disposal of the Government, by which they could deal more largely with taxes on consumption, and obviate the necessity of the Income-tax, which was essentially so unjust and inquisitorial, that nothing but irrevocable necessity would induce him to vote for it.—Mr SPOONER concurred in considering it unjust to tax fleeting on the same terms as permanent income. He would take 150*l.* as the zero of the tax. Differing, however, not as to the principle of a property-tax, but as to the details of its assessment, he could not support the amendment, and would regard it as ungracious on the part of the commercial and manufacturing classes to claim exemption, more especially as a chief reason for the continued imposition of the tax was the relief to be afforded to commerce and trade.—Mr. HUME remarked that property in this country had, as compared with the Continent, been hitherto subjected to a minimum of taxation, while the greatest amount of our revenue was raised from articles of consumption. He was in favour of direct taxation as a means of relieving commerce and industry, and enabling us to compete in foreign markets—and therefore approved of the bold and statesmanlike course adopted by Sir R. Peel in his budget. The Prime Minister had refused to remove the inequalities of the Income-tax, and it was, therefore, of no use bothering themselves about it.—Sir R. PEEL looking to the amendment and the speech of Mr. C. Buller, regarded them as inconsistent. The one was pointed against the tax altogether; the other merely suggested modification. What would be the effect of one modification suggested?—that of making 150*l.* the zero of the tax. It would be equivalent to returning to the 200,000 persons who pay the Income-tax 4*l.* 10*s.* each, or reducing the tax in amount by nearly a million. Government in taking off the duties on raw materials, favoured commerce; in repealing the excise on glass, removed impediments to the application of capital, science, and skill; and some of those who had smiled at Mr. C. Buller's sarcastic description of the small benefit to be derived by the poor from the repeal of the cotton duty, had been amongst the most earnest of those who, in various deputations, had urged upon him the necessity of its repeal. Though the cotton trade was at present prosperous, looking to the fact that one-half of the declared value of our exports in 1844 was in cotton manufacture, he urged the importance of the remission of the duty. Nor were they to judge by the opinions of the glass manufacturers (who were not generally favourable) of the value of the abolition of the excise on glass. It was quite a mistake that great capital was required for the manufacture, a fact which, after the abolition of the excise, would be practically demonstrated. Mirth had been made of their taking off the import duties on the 430 articles of raw materials of the tariff; and they were taunted with admitting alum, in order, as was said, to adulterate the poor man's bread. But alum was an important article in our manufactures, and he thought it strange that they should be derided with having assented to the force of arguments which urged the uselessness of retaining in the tariff articles which only complicated the Customs, and produced nothing to the revenue. Even the repeal of the auction duty would be more beneficial than had been alleged; and he thought that the voice of the country was, on the whole, in favour of the selection which they had made. No doubt other taxes might be named which might be equally, if not more beneficial to the labouring population; but, looking back to the distresses of 1840 and other years, and to the rapid extension of our commerce in 1844 as compared with 1843, he was sanguine as to the favourable results of the remission of taxes bearing on the manufactures of the country. At the end of the next three years it would be for the House to determine whether or not it should be abrogated or still farther applied, in the shape of direct taxation, and the farther repeal of indirect. Hitherto the tax, owing to the valuable aid of the authorities at the Board of Stamps and Taxes, especially Mr. Pressley, had been imposed without vexatious restraints, and without leading either to the withdrawal of capital, or the decline of the assessed and other taxes. On the whole, he urged the House not to enter on the difficult question of modification, but to carry forward the Bill in its present shape.—Mr. SHEIL thought that if Sir R. Peel would only "tax his ingenuity," he might find a substitute for the inequalities of Schedule D, at least on trades and professions. Tax the devolution of property by testament, as legacies were. Great as were the abilities, the eloquence, and the intellectual station of Pitt, he never threatened his adherents with resignation; but Sir R. Peel had but to whisper the cabalistic name of Russell, and all symptoms of mutiny were appeased. There was not a speck of disturbance on the horizon; war in China and elsewhere was stilled; even in the Papal states, by the aid of a very peculiar instrumentality, Conservative institutions were secured. There was, therefore, no pretence for the continuance of a tax which visited all men alike; assessed intellectual effort in the same way as property, and compelled it to contribute as income, which, derived from the funds, was as stable as the state, or from land, as secure as the earth. They taxed the Prime Minister, with 30,000*l.* a year, as they did the individual in the gallery who reported his speech, and whose income depended on health. He concluded by a vehement denunciation of the injustice of the tax.—Mr. COBDEN considered that the quietude of the people was owing to its being cunningly mixed up with considerations of financial reduction. As a free-trader, he repudiated all connection with such an income-tax as this, for the sake of the reductions to be made, which were intended to keep up the delusion that the Government was in favour of free trade. The whole of Sir R. Peel's policy, since he came into power, had tended to the shutting up of two of their greatest markets—that of North America, by the duty on corn; and of South America—the Brazils—by the duties on sugar.—Lord J. RUSSELL, adverting to Mr. Hume's intimation that it was no use bothering about the Income-tax if Sir R. Peel refused modification, thought that if the Prime Minister were the Petruchio of Liberalism, the member for Montrose was unquestionably the Catherine, as he seemed so effectually tamed by the discipline adopted. Though censuring the financial plans of the Government, he would willingly support the Property and Income-tax for three years longer, as a bonâ fide compensation for reduction of duties bearing on commerce and industry. In this view they were bound to render the tax as equitable as possible.—Mr. VILLIERS urged the free-trade view of the Budget, and contended that Sir R. Peel, who pointed out the beneficial effects of the reduction of the wool duty, was equally satisfied of the benefit which would result from the repeal of the corn-laws, with this difference, that the advantage would be to a much greater extent.—Mr. MUNTZ, though condemning the Income-tax, considered that a large portion of the improvement of the country was due to the measures of Sir R. Peel, who had got such a hold over some gentlemen, that if he only pronounced them "free to hang themselves," they would say he was going in the right direction. On a division, there appeared—for the Amendment, 112; against it, 240; Majority, 128.—Mr. MILES then brought forward an amendment, the object of which was to enable tenant occupiers of land to obtain, on appeal, an abatement, on any year on which their income was disproportionate to their assessment.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER could not adopt it. Profit in any given year might be abandoned, in order by outlay to double it in the next. The amendment would operate partially, and it should be recollected that farmers were only assessed on half their rent, and those under 300*l.* were exempted.—On a division, the amendment was rejected by 196 to 92.—On the request of Sir R. PEEL, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Wakley, and Sir R. Inglis postponed their amendments to the third reading of the Bill, and the report was received.—The House then went into a committee of ways and means, and the resolution to repeal the duty on coal exported in British shipping, and in the shipping of foreign nations with which we have reciprocity treaties, was agreed to.—Mr. BRIGHT moved the nomination of the following gentlemen as the select committee on the Game Laws:—Mr. Bright, Mr. Burroughes, Lord G. Bentinck, Mr. M. Gibson, Mr. Bouverie, Mr. Cripps, Viscount Clive, Mr. W. Mackenzie, Mr. Villiers, Mr. Bankes, Mr. Etwall, Mr. Grantley Berkeley, Mr. Manners Sutton, Mr. G. Cavendish, and Mr. Trelawny.—Mr. C. BERKELEY moved, as an amendment, that the names of Viscount Palmerston and Mr. Gregory be inserted in place of Mr. G. Cavendish and Mr. Bouverie. The House divided—For the amendment, 13; against it, 100. Majority, 87.—Mr. BERKELEY then moved that the name of Lord Palmerston be substituted for that of Mr. G. Cavendish.—Mr. BRIGHT said he knew Mr. Cavendish was anxious to serve, and therefore he could not consent to the substitution. The House again divided—For the amendment, 39; against it, 65. Majority, 36.

Tuesday.—At an early sitting the Sugar Duties Bill was read a first time.—The House went into committee on the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, and advanced to the 69th clause.—At the usual sitting, a variety of railway business was transacted.—Sir R. PEEL gave notice that he should move the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess, from Thursday, the 20th inst., to the Monday week following.—In reply to Lord Palmerston,—Sir R. PEEL explained the course of interference adopted by the British and French Ministers at Buenos Ayres, for the purpose of inducing the Governments of Buenos Ayres and Monte Video to suspend hostilities. He admitted that Mr. Mandeville, our Minister there, as well as the Minister of France, had exceeded their instructions in holding out menaces of forcible intervention, but he excused them on the plea of the difficulty of their position. The Premier said that as this country, in concert with France, was about to make fresh representations to those hostile powers, offering mediation, and imploring them to put a stop to their senseless hostilities, he hoped he would not be pressed for unnecessary explanations.—Mr. SOMES briefly moved for the production of correspondence respecting the issue of debentures as a legal tender—the imposition of taxes—the recent outrages—the sale of lands—Lord Stanley's agreement—and other matters relating to the affairs of New Zealand.—Mr. AGLIONBY, as a director of the New Zealand Company, complained of the action of the Colonial Office, and pressed for the publication of the documents. He pointed out particularly the issue of debentures to the amount of 15,000*l.*, depreciating the currency; the conduct of the governor, Capt. Fitzroy, in dealing with the natives after the massacre of Wairau, and the cutting down of the flagstaff at Nelson; the treatment of the company by the Government, in relation to its own affairs, and the general interests of the colony, which, under home and local official mismanagement, was brought to the verge of ruin, instead of being what, with its fine climate and soil, it ought to be, one of the most flourishing settlements of Great Britain.—Mr. HOPE complained that the Colonial Secretary and the Governor of New Zealand were attacked rather by insinuation than direct statement, while the information afforded by documents already before the House was overlooked. The issue of debentures had been disallowed by the home Government, and they had been withdrawn. On the subject of local taxation, or of the more recent occurrences caused by the conduct of the natives, they had not received any information; but with respect to the sale of lands, the necessity for altered instructions arose out of the increasing knowledge of the natives, which precluded them from acting on the same terms with them as hitherto.—Mr. C. BULLER remarked on the paucity of information afforded by the organ of the Colonial-office in that House; he professed to have no despatches relating to occurrences published in every newspaper of this country as far back as December last. But this question of New Zealand was but a sample of colonial mismanagement, from the imbecility of a local governor up to the utter ignorance of the Colonial-office. An intelligent and well-organised despotism he did not contemn; but he deprecated the idea of the fortunes of Englishmen being exposed to a system which had scarcely the shadow of a representative body, and where the mere caprice of the government could exclude from the magistracy, or remove from the council. He wished to speak respectfully of the navy; but the quarter-deck did not qualify for civil services, and a man like Capt. Fitzroy was utterly unfitted for the governorship of a colony. Look to his mischievous and fatal blunder of issuing two shilling and five-shilling debentures, which it was a compliment even to call inconvertible—an act evincing utter ignorance, not merely of elementary knowledge of currency, but of what were the opinions and the policy of the Government at home. He checked the importation of cattle by heavy import duties, which were also laid on rum and other spirits; and to cure the derangement of trade caused by his blunders in taxation, he abolished the Custom-house at Russell, and left the Custom-house regulations in force all over the rest of the island, and this with the view of equalising the revenue! At a recent public meeting, the Duke of Buckingham, or some other eminent agricultural light, was complaining of no mention being made of the agricultural interests in the Queen's Speech, and assured his auditors that the Government treated them "as if they were a colony!" The proclamation of Governor Fitzroy authorising the sale of land by the natives at a less price than that fixed by the 5th and 6th Vic., c. 36, was neither more nor less than reducing, by a stroke of the pen, the value of all the common land in New Zealand, from the fixed price of 1*l.* to 10*s.* per acre. Adverting to the massacre of Wairau, he spoke with much emotion of the memory of his gallant friend, Capt. Wakefield, who after many eminent services, had perished under the tomahawk of a savage in an obscure part of New Zealand; and yet the Governor had extended his sympathy, if not his approbation, to the natives! Forgetting the gentlemanly amenities of civilised life, he had insulted gentlemen; in six months he had deprived Europeans of all confidence in the Government; had found a colony of 14,000 people raising a revenue of 36,000*l.*, and had dissipated it; while Prince Edward's Island, with its population of 47,000, was governed at an expense of 12,000*l.*; but then Prince Edward's Island had a representative government. Recounting the several blunders of Capt. Fitzroy, he said he asked for no severer censure on him than that he was a very foolish and incompetent man, unfit to be intrusted with the management of the most ordinary affairs, and whose recall was requisite, if not for punishment and example, at least for the safety and interests of the colony.—Mr. RICE TREVOR reprobated the most extraordinary, improper, and unjustifiable language in which Mr. C. Buller had thought fit to allude to Capt. Fitzroy's dealings with the colonists of New Zealand. It was the more outrageous from the circumstance that Capt. Fitzroy was absent in the service of that colony and the country—that he was at that very moment devoting all the best energies of his mind to their advantage, and that he could not have an opportunity of defending himself, by reason of the distance, before the meeting of the House in the next year.—Col. WOOD also reproved Mr. C. Buller for using the epithets "foolish and incompetent" to Capt. Fitzroy, at a time when he was not in a position to make good his words.—Sir W. JAMES expressed his indignation at the terms which had been applied to his friend and relative, Capt. Fitzroy. He defied Mr. C. Buller to produce any evidence that he had acted in any way unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.—Sir C. NAPIER said that Capt. Fitzroy had proved himself an excellent surveyor and discoverer—a man of great nautical talent; but a man might be a good surveyor and a capital discoverer, and at the same time a bad governor of a colony.—Sir R. PEEL thought that it would have been but fair to have withheld the attack on Capt. Fitzroy until all the information had been afforded. He admitted that he could not, under any circumstances, consider the issue of inconvertible debentures as a wise act; but as no official information, other than the fact of their issue and disallowance, was possessed by Government, newspaper reports were no ground for insisting on the recall of an officer who was faithfully discharging his duties in a distant part of the world. Deprecating any attempt to place an interdict on the employment of professional men in civil services, he stated that it was no easy matter to get a good governor for New Zealand, the appointment not being a tempting one; and that Capt. Fitzroy, whose personal character, no less than his known scientific and professional merits, were his recommendation and qualification, had gone out, actuated rather by a sense of public duty than of personal expectation. Appointed by Lord Stanley, the New Zealand Company had expressed their approbation of the selection; and it was but fair to an absent man to wait for those unaccountably delayed explanations which, on their arrival, would be freely communicated to the House. Whenever a distinct motion was made, attacking the general conduct of Lord Stanley as Colonial Secretary, he would be prepared to meet and rebut it; justice required that such a motion should be brought forward at the earliest period possible. They were as perfectly competent to consider that motion then, as they would be six weeks hence—the period had arrived when they ought to be prepared to bring forward a motion—if, indeed, they contemplated a motion at all—and whensoever they did bring it forward, he should be prepared to vindicate a friend whose conduct, he asserted, they had most unjustly and unfairly impugned.—Lord HOWICK remarked, that it was not the feelings of Capt. Fitzroy they had to consider, but the interests of some 14,000 or 15,000 British subjects in a distant colony. Seeing that they were in possession of the proclamations and other acts of the Government, it was a matter of surprise that no despatches had been received, or that the Government had not before this sent out some one to relieve Capt. Fitzroy in his duties. But he trusted that ere long the whole affairs of New Zealand would come under the consideration of the House.—Mr. MANGLES affirmed that when the New Zealand Company sanctioned the selection of Captain Fitzroy, it was in ignorance of the fact that he had been secretly and collusively furnished by Lord Stanley with a letter of instructions, in which the agreement between the Company and the Government was entirely explained away. He went into the details of the circumstances connected with the affairs of the colony in support of his allegations.—Sir R. H. INGLIS denied that the natives of New Zealand were to be treated as children. In connection with land, they had ideas of traditional descent which went as high as 25 or 30 generations, which, in the case of England, would carry us back to the Norman Conquest. Defending Capt. Fitzroy, whom he was proud to call his friend, he regarded the New Zealand Company as a purely commercial speculation, and when thereto he saw individuals rising to address the House, some of whom were directors, others shareholders, and one the Governor of the Company, he put it down, not to party politics, but to pounds, shillings, and pence alone. It was a case of these gentlemen wishing to add to their property on the one side, and of Capt. Fitzroy on the other, a man of talent and character equal to them all—to any of them certainly. As a member of the committee of last session which reported on New Zealand, he affirmed that all the resolutions, in any way censuring the Government, were carried by the narrow majority of one.—Mr. HOPE, in proposing certain verbal amendments in the returns moved for, entered into an explanation of the relations between the Colonial Office and the New Zealand Company, with the view of showing that no deception had been practised, but that the whole differences arose out of a difference in interpretation of an understanding, not of an agreement.—Mr. C. BULLER read extracts from the correspondence between the Company and Lord Stanley to show that, in spite of "Colonial Office reasoning," there had been truly an "agreement," which was subsequently and secretly explained away in private instructions to Captain Fitzroy. Such conduct would not be tolerated in the transactions of private life.—After some further conversation, the returns as amended were ordered.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD called attention to the petition from the ratepayers and inhabitants of Rochdale against the introduction of the New Poor Law into their district, and moved that the petition be referred to a select committee.—Mr. FERRAND seconded the motion, and contended that all the pledges which had been made by the promoters of the Poor Law on its introduction had been shamelessly violated.—Sir J. GRAHAM declined to enter into a discussion on the Poor Law; and, as to the question raised by the Rochdale petition, it being at this moment under legal decision, he would not consent to argue it. He therefore contented himself with opposing the motion.—After a short discussion the House divided: For the motion, 16; against it, 59; majority, 43.—On the motion of Sir J. Y. BULLER, leave was given to introduce a Bill to amend the laws relating to the assessing, levying, and collecting of county rates.—The Consolidated Fund (8,000,000*l.*) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Wednesday.—In reply to Mr. E. ELLICE, jun., the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said he hoped means would be found under the Property-tax Act to relieve benevolent Societies, whose funds were lent on mortgage, from assessment to the tax.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE asked if it were true that a copy of the dividend-book of the Bank of England was kept at Somerset-house, exposed to the gaze of thirty or forty clerks, to assist them in assessing the tax.—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER replied that such a copy remained in custody of a clerk of the Bank of England, and was referred to by him only as occasion required.—To a question from Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, Sir J. GRAHAM replied, he had paid especial attention to the subject of colliery explosions, and should be prepared, after the recess, to lay on the table the report of the inspectors of mines, together with the objections of the coal-owners to the rules which they proposed. He added, that he thought some measure might be framed of a satisfactory nature to all parties.—Mr. MACKINNON moved the second reading of the Smoke Prevention Bill.—The Earl of LINCOLN recommended its postponal. One reason why he was anxious to have the Bill postponed for a short time was, that measures of a sanatory character, of much greater importance, and on a far larger scale, were under the consideration of the Government, and he thought the decision of the House, in reference to the present Bill, would be materially influenced by those measures.—Mr. WAKLEY thought that Mr. Mackinnon in his endeavours to benefit the public by getting rid of smoke, was likely to get very well smoked himself. He advised the reference of the Bill to a select committee.—Sir R. PEEL thought, that before they incurred the expense of a new inquiry, they should read the report of the select committee which had already considered the subject.—After some conversation, the second reading was postponed till the 2d April.—On the third reading of the Property and Income-tax Bill, Mr. WAKLEY mentioned the case of Mr. Fielden, the member for Oldham, as one deserving of attention. For 2 years Mr. Fielden had been assessed on 12,000*l.*, but on the third year he was rated at 24,000*l.*, against which he appealed, offering to produce his books, nevertheless, the amount of the increased assessment was demanded from him.—After some conversation, Sir R. PEEL remarked that House that all parties assessed under the Income tax need not be satisfied with the decision of the local commissioners, but could refer their cases to special commissioners, wholly uninfluenced by local knowledge, animosities, or prejudices, and before whom the state of their affairs might be divulged without apprehension.—The Bill having been read a third time, Mr. SPOONER proposed the addition of certain clauses, the object of which was to allow persons in trade or professions to make certain deductions from the gross amount of their income, in order to enable those who employed members of their family in lieu of servants to place themselves on an equality with others; and also to deduct the annual payments for insurance, poor-rates, and other parochial and local charges.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER did not think it would be just to permit the exemptions claimed which, if allowed, would render the assessment more inquisitorial in operation than ever. The deduction for parochial rates and land charges was already allowed by the law.—Mr. SPOONER replied, and, on a division, his first clause was rejected by 151 to 92.—On another clause, moved by the same gentleman, and seconded by Lord J. MANNERS, allowing the deduction of money paid for life insurances, a discussion arose, and the proposition was lost by 97 to 26.—Mr. WAKLEY next proposed an abatement by way of compensation to landlords of houses, where the rents were lost by insolvency or fraud; but, after a brief discussion, the amendment was negatived without a division.—Mr. FORSTER next proposed an amendment to enable mining corporations, now assessed under Schedule A, to make their returns under Schedule D, with the option of privacy. This being opposed by the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, was negatived without a division.—Sir R. H. INGLIS then proposed that the assessment for the Income-tax should be taken on all sums above 150*l.*, limiting the exemption to all whose incomes did not exceed 500*l.* He proposed this because he was convinced that the Income-tax would be perpetual. The proposition was equitable, and would save many from distress, and several from temptation to fraud. Sir R. Peel, on a former night, had stated that his proposition was not practicable, and that if it were practicable, it would be ruinously injurious to the revenue. He maintained that Sir R. Peel had not said a word to convince any rational man of its impracticability, and that he had overstated very much the loss which it would cause the revenue. To meet the latter objection he had modified his original proposition, and he now excluded from the benefit of his proposition all who had incomes above 500*l.* a year. So modified, it would not be injurious to the revenue, and would be greatly conducive to the ease and comfort of many of their fellow-subjects, among whom he specifically mentioned a large number of clergymen with small benefices.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that if there were any class of persons which he should wish to favour more than another, it was the clergy of the Established Church; but he was sure Sir R. Inglis would not call upon him to alter his general scheme of taxation for the benefit of any one particular class. He then argued the clause upon general principles. He could not state precisely what the effect of this modified proposition would be on the revenue; but this he knew, that it would lead to considerable defalcation in it, from the fact that in schedule D alone 600,000 persons had an income of more than 150*l.* a year. How many of those 600,000 persons had incomes under 500*l.* a year he could not tell, but there must be a considerable number.—The amendment was rejected by 59 to 25. On the question that the Bill do pass, Sir W. CLAY urged that indirect taxation merely diminished the power of expenditure, while the Income-tax crippled the power of saving. The miser was in fact the originator of all improvement, for it was by accumulated capital that invention and improvement were rendered practical. He could not let the Bill pass without protesting against its principle.—Sir R. PEEL defended the tax from the parting malediction which Sir W. Clay had cast upon it, and said that the people submitted to it with cheerfulness because it opened to them a wider field of enterprise, and because it was accompanied by a commutation of taxes which they saw would be favourable to the interests of those who at present stood most in need of relief. He then pressed on the consideration of the House many of the topics in favour of the Income tax which he had employed on former evenings, and dwelt on the beneficial results which were likely to be derived from the remission of taxes which he had made and the duties he had removed. Among others he mentioned that he already saw a considerable movement in the glass trade. Already preparations were making for erecting new establishments for this manufacture; and if, as he anticipated, our artisans should succeed in rivalling, and even in surpassing, the glass manufacture of Belgium and Bohemia, thousands and ten thousands of workmen would be provided with employment, who now attempted to procure it in vain.—Mr. HAWES replied to the observations of Sir R. Peel, and took leave of the Property-tax by denouncing it as a barrier to all future fiscal reform, and not as a just commutation of taxation.—After a few remarks from Mr. J. S. WORTLEY in support of the measure, Mr. WARD observed that he had come down to the House to vote in favour of this Bill, but he found that hon. gentlemen who denounced it in the strongest manner were very loth to come to a division upon it. Though he could not say much in favour of the party opposite so far as regarded their consistency, he still must compliment them on the manner in which they carried out the practical application of their principles. What Sir Robert Peel said he did; but what the friends of free-trade on the Opposition side of the House said, they only talked about. He looked forward to a great increase in the export trade of this country in consequence of the commutation of taxes which Sir R. Peel had now proposed.—The Sugar Duties Bill was read a second time, and ordered for committal on Friday.—The Justices' Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bill, the main principle of which is to substitute salaries for fees, was proposed for second reading. A discussion arose, turning rather on the details than on the principle of the Bill, fears being expressed that the change would lead to very inferior persons being appointed as magistrates' clerks. To the objections urged, Sir J. GRAHAM replied at length, and, after a discussion, the Bill was read a second time.—The Bastardy Bill passed through committee, and some clauses were added by Sir J. Graham.

Thursday.—At the morning sitting, the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill was considered in Committee up to the 92d clause. At the usual evening sitting, Mr. S. CRAWFORD gave notice, that he should, after Easter, move for leave to bring in a Bill to enable the tenant, if ejected, to recover compensation from his landlord for any improvements he might have made upon the land, and also to amend the laws regulating the value of property in Ireland.—In reply to Lord MAHON, Sir R. PEEL stated that the law having been found defective in providing adequate punishment for persons guilty of wanton destruction of public property, the Government proposed to introduce a measure on the subject, and the Solicitor-General had already prepared a Bill to lay before the House.—Mr. COBDEN brought forward his motion for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the cause and extent of the alleged existing agricultural distress, and into the effects of legislative protection upon the interests of landlords, tenant-farmers and farm-labourers. The alleged distress of the farmers, resting, as it did, on the authority of "farmers' friends," rendered this a fit and proper time to bring forward this motion. Great discrepancy prevailed as to the value and nature of legislative protection; and, looking to the sudden fluctuation in prices, recently 58*s.* 4*d*, now 45*s.*, it was expedient that all delusion should be expelled by an inquiry before a committee. It was laid down authoritatively that 10*l.* per acre was requisite for successful and profitable farming; yet 5*l.* would be found the average in England. Hence it appeared that a leading evil was the want of capital; and yet in this country, with its "plethora of capital," where people were eagerly anxious to sink money in Pennsylvanian bonds, or at the bottom of Mexican mines, there was a reluctance to invest in the most attractive of all pursuits, based upon the security of the soil. How was this? Capital shrinks instinctively from insecurity of tenure; and insecurity was the consequence of that "vicious circle," which commenced in converting the Corn-laws into politics, and, for the sake of subserviency, pursued a course which ended in increased county rates and general pauperism. Referring to the subject of leases, and remarking on the terms of these "antediluvian" documents, drawn out whenever required, by some lawyer's clerk, from the recesses of a pigeon hole; he hinted that, if the Anti-Corn-law League founded a joint-stock model farm in some rural district, say in Buckinghamshire, it would be an object with them to produce, not merely a model farm, but a "model lease." Where capital and improvement were evident, there was to be found a prosperous and happy tenantry; but where the tenantry were poor, as in North Devonshire, there capital, spirit, and improvement were sure to be wanting. They had adopted a system of legislation professing to be for the advantage of farmers; but after 30 years' trial of that specific, he thought that the present condition of the agricultural interest was in itself a sufficient reason for going into committee, in order to inquire into the causes of its failure. Addressing himself to the agricultural members, he asked them what they proposed to do? It was of no use to quarrel with him. They were sent to Parliament not as politicians but as "farmers' friends;" let them produce their plan. For his part, give him his committee, and he would explode the delusion of agricultural protection. This was the age of improvement; they could not lag behind it; there was a sort of hereditary attachment to the country gentlemen of England on the part of the people; but with the advance of improvement they must keep pace, if they wished to retain their position in the natural regard of those around them; and he besought them, for their own sakes, to grant a full and impartial inquiry into the causes of the distress of their own population.—Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT remarked that no satisfactory result had been arrived at from the inquiries of former committees on similar subjects. That of 1833 presented some exception, and it had reported in favour of agricultural protection. Not only was all the land of the country capable of improvement, but it was actually in process of receiving it; even in Ireland there was rapid progress making, which was much more perceptible to the eye than was the case in England, because the transition was from a lower stage. If this committee were granted, he did not suppose that agitation would cease, that Covent Garden Theatre would be restored to the Muses, or that those who performed the part of tenant farmers would be restored to their more legitimate duties—all waiting on an oracular decision. Yet during all the time of the inquiry, they would be left in alarm and uncertainty; the agriculturists were men of exceedingly delicate nerves, and very easily alarmed; men would not so freely buy and sell land; confidence would be shaken and transactions suspended. There was this difference between agriculture and manufactures, that the farmer could only turn his capital once a year, and frequently could only be profitably repaid once in four; and though one year with another cultivation and expense might be the same, the produce might be very different. He deprecated the idea of the agriculturists coming whining to the House for relief. The Government did not contemplate any change in the present protection; its removal was the avowed object of the inquiry; and as no practical result would ensue, he called on the House to give a decided negative to the motion.—Lord HOWICK referred back to the past history of agricultural protection, and treated the refusal of a committee as a shrinking from inquiry, caused by a consciousness of inability to meet the case. Look at the slow progress of improvement in agriculture; it was impossible to travel by the railroad and witness the state of the land up to the very gates of Manchester, amidst a population where there was a great demand for agricultural produce. Compare Buckinghamshire with the Lothians. Why this state of things? Protection, the "bane of agriculture," paralysed improvement, and want of security enhanced the evil; all the more active and intelligent farmers were in favour of leases. The whole effect of protective duties was to diminish the amount of those articles of prime necessity which are consumed by the community, especially by the labouring classes, and the deficiency of which was the cause of their pinched and impoverished condition. The great importance of this fact had not struck him so forcibly formerly as it had latterly done. He saw the wealthy become richer, the poor more and more depreciated; rents raised and wages depressed; and the awful words of Scripture came back on his recollection—"Behold, the cry of the labourers who have reaped your harvests, and whose hire ye have refused, has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." It never could be the intention of the Almighty Creator that labour should be visited with such a curse; it was to him a proof that there was something wrong in our laws, and which rendered every Member of the House responsible for the use of his political influence. He, therefore, supported the motion as a necessary consequence of rendering justice, not merely to the commerce and trade of the country, but to the labouring population.—Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN entered into an explanation of the amendment he had put on the notice paper, and complained that Mr. Cobden had taken every word of his (Mr. O'Brien's) original motion as gipsies do stolen children, and made them pass for his own. Had he obtained a committee, it would have been a farmers' one, but the committee required by Mr. Cobden was evidently a committee of political economists and free traders. The whole animus of Mr. Cobden's speech was such as to preclude the possibility of an agricultural member acceding to his motion, for it was a speech against the landowners generally of England. He was very sorry that Government had refused the motion, for he had been advised to withdraw his own amendment, and he well knew what was the meaning of such an advice. He regretted, too, that Mr. Sidney Herbert should have talked of the bold peasantry of England coming "whining" to that House. Having read a great number of resolutions passed at protection meetings throughout the country, complaining of the alterations of the Corn Law, the Tariff, the Canada Corn Bill, the Income-tax, and the general disfavour shown by Government to the farming interests, the honourable member said he had been sent to that House to support the system of protection, being returned as a member for that House on protection principles, and from those principles he assured them he never had swerved. He had been too long in that House to commit himself by saying anything that was not in reason, but he believed that his principles were true, and would stand inquiry. At the same time he did not see any cause to grant an inquiry to any one asking for an inquiry in order to serve his own turn, and for his own purposes.—Mr. BRIGHT, adverting to the alleged "peculiar burdens" on land, remarked that the county rates exceeded, for all England, 4*d.* an acre, yet the agriculturists had repudiated a duty of 8*s.* an acre, when it was brought forward by the late Government. He reviewed the condition of agriculture; compared Sir R. Peel, who, as the "governor" of the House, ruled somewhat absolutely, to that noted whisperer who rendered horses, rampant in the field, perfectly tractable in the stable; claimed for the free-trade party the merit of being politically independent; and urged the agriculturists to accede to the motion, if they wished to evince either their regard for the interests of the country or those of the poor.—Mr. WODEHOUSE gave it his decided negative. He thought that men's minds were sufficiently unsettled, and that if such a committee were granted they would never become settled again. He described Lord Howick as a most accomplished ranter, worthy of the days of Cromwell.—Mr. VILLIERS supported the motion.—Mr. BANKES said the distress of the agricultural interest was indisputable, and the cause of that distress, according to his firm belief, was the departure that had lately been made from the principles of protection: therefore, for him the committee proposed would be useless. He admitted the fact of distress, but he could not agree with Mr. Cobden as to its cause. Besides, with upwards of 200 Railway Committees, and with a Committee on the Game Laws sitting, there could be no prospect of coming to any decision likely to lead to practical results.—Lord WORSLEY, remembering the fruitless labours of former committees, could not vote for that now asked. It would be holding out false hopes of relief that could not be realised.—After a few remarks from Lord INGESTRE against, and Colonel ANSON in favour of the motion, during which the latter declared his aversion to the principle of protection, and his conviction that a moderate fixed duty would have been the fairest settlement of the question—Mr. COBDEN replied, and threatened to agitate in future for a large reduction in rents.—The House divided: For the motion, 121; against it, 213; majority against the motion, 92.

Friday.—At an early sitting, the Railway Clauses and the Land Clauses Consolidation Bills were taken into consideration, and both passed with some amendments. At the usual sitting Mr. HOPE gave notice that on Monday next he should produce papers relating to New Zealand. He considered this course necessary, as the conduct of the noble lord the Colonial Secretary had been attacked, and it was unfair that the attack should remain unanswered until after Easter. The motion of the honourable and learned member for Liskeard could not come on before Easter, and every Englishman ought to have fair play.—Mr. HUME wished to know what the specific charge against the Secretary for the Colonies was?—Mr. HOPE said the noble lord had been charged with giving two distinct rules for the guidance of the Governors and authorities of New Zealand, he therefore wished for an opportunity for explanation. All the papers relating to New Zealand should be produced and in the hands of members on Monday. A desultory conversation ensued, in which Lord J. Russell, Mr. Hume, and other members took part. [Left Sitting.]

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols for account closed at 100⅛; Exchequer Bills 66 to 68. p.m.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—J. TAYLOR, Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, draper—A. GRANT, Brighton, apothecary—D. HOLDSWORTH, Stratford, Essex, grocer—A. KNOTT, Brighton, miller—W. HARDISTY, Wakefield, Yorkshire, ironmonger—J. ROBERTS, Bootle, near Liverpool, grocer—T. GRIFFITHS, Llandugwydd, Cardiganshire, auctioneer—P. L. COLE, Fenchurch-street, wine merchant—MARY C. PALMER, Great Peter street, Westminster, grocer—J. GRANT, Pall Mall and Sloane-street, merchant—T. N. D. HOWARD, late of Fenchurch street, glover—W. H. MILLS, Mark-lane, wine merchant—G. WARNER, Bloomsbury-square, draper—W. MARK, Southampton, ironmonger—J. THOMPSON, Wigmore street, Cavendish-square, cheese-monger—S. HEAD Rochester, dealer in china—W. DENNEY, Mistley, Essex, victualler—J. BOTCHERBY, late of Darlington, Durham, coal owner—J. KEWLEY, Liverpool, tailor and draper—T. DIX Liverpool, shoe dealer—S. MARSHALL, Kingston-upon-Hull, builder—C. D. HERN, Manchester, British and foreign broker—J. S. ROWE, Newcastle under Lyne, draper—T. LANE, Hereford, coal merchant—J. SMITH, Rugeley, Staffordshire, money scrivener—J. LANE, Bristol, victualler.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—T. ROBINSON, Glasgow, stable keeper—W. BRAND, Aberdeen, painter and glazier—D. KERR, Dundee, merchant—W. MACDONALD, Glasgow, chemist—J. RANKIN, Dickson's Park, near Edinburgh, contractor—W. ALLAN, Rutherglen, victualler—GRAHAM and WOOD, Galashiels, woollen manufacturers—A. RICHARD, Muirkirk, Ayr, merchant—J. SELLA, Lochee, Dundee, merchant.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Queen's Visit to Christ's Hospital.—The Queen and Prince Albert honoured Christ's Hospital with a visit on Sunday evening, to attend the service, and witness the scholars at their supper. Her Majesty and His Royal Highness, with their suite, arrived at half-past 6 o'clock, and as they entered the hall, the organ commenced playing the National Anthem. Her Majesty and Prince Albert passed up the middle of the hall, followed immediately by the President and the Treasurer, and by the royal suite. The appearance of the hall was very interesting. The building, which is about 200 feet long, 52 feet wide, and 47 feet high, contained near 900 scholars, ranged at long rows of tables, great numbers of governors of the institution occupying the seats on either side of the hall. At the east end was the organ gallery with the scholars composing the choir, and at the west end were a number of raised seats filled with the ladies of the governors and the members of the corporation. Her Majesty sat in the Chair of State usually filled by the President, who sat on this occasion on Her Majesty's left, the Treasurer sitting on the right of Prince Albert. The service commenced by the whole of the scholars singing the first two verses of the 100th Psalm, written copies of the psalm being presented to the Queen and Prince Albert by two of the Scholars kneeling. The reader for the evening, Mr. E. A. Newton, one of the senior Grecian scholars, then read a portion of the tenth chapter of the gospel of St. Luke, beginning with the 21st verse, which was followed by several prayers. The scholars sang four verses of the 139th Psalm, copies in ornamental penmanship being presented to her Majesty and the Prince by the Scholars by whom they were written. Grace having been said, the supper was served. Her Majesty and Prince Albert then rose, and passed down the whole extent of the tables in the hall while the scholars were at their meal. The Queen and Prince having returned to their seats, and supper being ended, an anthem was sung, after which the scholars passed in procession before Her Majesty, the twelve Grecians proceeding to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge passing first, followed by the twelve King's scholars destined for the naval service. The other boys followed with their nurses in the order of their wards. The scholars, having made their obeisance to the Queen and Prince, retired from the hall. The organ continued to play during the procession of the scholars. The Queen and Prince Albert then quitted the hall, attended by their suites; the president and treasurer conducting her Majesty and his Royal Highness to their carriage. The visit lasted half-an-hour.

Visit of Prince Albert to the Zoological Gardens.—On Saturday afternoon his Royal Highness, attended by Colonel Bouverie, arrived at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's-park, on horseback, for the purpose of privately viewing the numerous collection of beasts and birds added within the last fortnight. His Royal Highness was conducted over the gardens by Mr. Miller, the head keeper, and afterwards proceeded to the New Museum erected on the north side of the Regent's Canal. After remaining nearly two hours, his Royal Highness expressed himself much gratified, and particularly by the extreme cleanliness in which every department was kept, and also by the healthy appearance of the beasts and birds. It is the intention of his Royal Highness, during the ensuing spring, to add several valuable presents to the Society.

The Marquis of Northampton's Soirée.—The President of the Royal Society held his second conversazione on Saturday evening. It was in many respects one of the most interesting re-unions hitherto given by the Marquis, and it was the more gratifying on account of the presence of Prince Albert. His Royal Highness, attended by the Marquis of Granby and Sir E. Bowater, arrived shortly after 10 o'clock, and the Prince seemed to take great interest in the proceedings. The rooms were crowded to excess.

The Weather during the past week has continued excessively severe. The water in the parks is frozen over, and snow fell again on Tuesday. The thermometer on Thursday night marked 12°, being 20 below freezing point, and 2° lower than it has been at any period during the present severe winter. The highest point which it reached during the day was only 35°, marking an intensity of cold rarely occurring in the middle of March. We had fine clear sunshine yesterday morning, with a piercing north-east wind.

Agricultural Protection.—A special meeting of the General Committee of the Central Agricultural Protection Society has been held, to consider the effect which the remission of the several duties proposed by Sir R. Peel, in his recent financial statement, are likely to have on the interest of the British agriculturist. After a long discussion, the following resolution, moved by Mr. Fisher Hobbs, and seconded by the Duke of Richmond, was unanimously agreed to:—"That it is the opinion of this Committee that the remission of several of the duties which Sir R. Peel proposes to abolish in his revision of taxation, will tend materially to lessen the employment of the agricultural labourer, and to reduce the price of various productions of the soil. That the principle upon which the Agricultural Protection Society is based is, to maintain protection to British agriculture, not less than that which existed at the time of its formation; and this Committee recommends to the provincial Protection Societies to urge, by deputations or otherwise, their local representatives in Parliament, to support Mr. Miles's motion, and to use their best endeavours to arrest the progress of these free-trade measures." Copies of the above resolutions have been forwarded to the local Protection Societies throughout the kingdom.

Sudden Death of Professor Daniel.—On Thursday night an inquest was held in the Council Chamber of the Royal Society, on the body of Mr. Daniel, professor of chemistry in King's College, and foreign secretary to the Royal Society, aged 55, who had died suddenly in the course of the afternoon, immediately after delivering his usual lecture at the college, just as he had entered the Royal Society's room for the purpose of attending a meeting of the council. It appeared by the evidence of Mr. Bowman, assistant-surgeon to King's College Hospital, that the professor was previously in good health; that apoplexy was the cause of death; and that he was a remarkably temperate man, having taken neither wine nor spirits during the last two years. He fell down, breathed hard a few minutes, and expired. There was no doubt as to the cause of death, and the jury returned a verdict, that he died of Apoplexy. The Marquis of Northampton, Sir W. Burnett, Professor Owen, and other distinguished members of the Royal Society and King's College, were present at the inquiry. Professor Daniel was an excellent chemist, a natural philosopher of high reputation, and the author of some very valuable meteorological works. The importance of his researches to the gardening world was noticed in a leading article of the Horticultural portion of this paper on the 1st inst., and his death will be regretted by a large circle of our readers.

Election of City Pleader.—At the poll which took place last week, the only candidates who finally went to the poll were Sir Walter Buchanan Riddell and Mr. John Locke, all the other candidates having retired. The numbers at the close were—for Mr. Locke, 111; for Sir Walter Riddell, 91. The Lord Mayor thereupon declared the election to have fallen upon Mr. Locke, who who took his seat among the officers of the corporation.

British Archæological Association.—A meeting convened by Mr. Pettigrew as the Treasurer, was held in Liecester-square last week, at which the recent squabbles which have produced a division in this Society were taken into consideration. Several members who took an active part in the late meeting at Canterbury addressed the meeting, and resolutions were passed requesting Lord Albert Conyngham to resume the chair, appointing Mr. Smith and Mr. Crofton Croker secretaries, and adopting laws and regulations for the management of the Society. In the meantime, the other members of the Society, who disapprove of the editing of the Society's Journal being confided to Mr. Wright, a member of the Committee, while he continues the editor and proprietor of another archæological magazine, have issued an advertisement declaring that this meeting is illegal, and that all the proceedings are consequently null and void.

Monuments to Lord Holland and Dr. Watts.—The political friends and admirers of the late Lord Holland have subscribed 5000*l.* for a monument to his memory, to be placed in Westminster Abbey. The committee of management, consisting of Lord J. Russell, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Mr. Rogers, Lord Ebrington, &c., have intrusted the execution of the work to Mr. Baily, the Royal Academician, who has also undertaken to execute a statue in Portland stone to the memory of Dr. Isaac Watts, for the reduced sum of 300*l.* The statue will be 8 feet high, exclusively of the pedestal, and will be erected in Abney Park Cemetery.

The Piccadilly Improvements.—At the Sheriff's Court on Friday, a claim was preferred on the part of Baron Rothschild against the Commissioners of Woods and Forests for the sum of 1000*l.*, by way of compensation for giving up a piece of ornamental garden-ground originally forming part of the Green-park, consisting of about ¾ of an acre, on the south side of Piccadilly, opposite Coventry-house, and held by him as the assignee of a lease granted to the late Earl of Coventry by the Woods and Forests at the rent of 36*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* per annum, of which there were now 19 years remaining unexpired. The ground in question being required to complete the improvements consequent on the removal of the ranger's house in the Green-park, the Commissioners had given notice thereof, and on the claim of 1000*l.* being made, they considered it to be so extravagant, and so much beyond what the Baron was entitled to, that they at once refused to advise any such sum being paid, but offered, to prevent the expense of litigation, to give 200*l.*; this offer being on the part of Baron Rothschild declined, a jury was empannelled to assess the amount to be awarded as compensation. The evidence having been gone into, the jury returned a verdict for 350*l.*

Wooden Pavement.—About 3 years ago, when wooden pavement was the fashion of the day, the inhabitants of Leadenhall-street and Aldgate petitioned the Commissioners of Sewers in its favour. They have now presented a petition, signed by 69 householders, complaining of the bad state of repair the streets are in, and praying the Commissioners of Sewers to remove the wooden pavement, and pave their streets with 3-inch granite, similar to that laid down on London-bridge. The Commissioners have complied with the wishes of the inhabitants.

Robbery of Bullion.—Intelligence was received on Monday by the City-police, that on Friday morning a box containing two bars of gold, value 1600*l.*, was stolen from the luggage train station of the Dover railroad, at the Bricklayers' Arms. The box arrived between 3 and 4 in the morning, and was deposited amongst other luggage, and at 6 o'clock it was missed.

A Fancy Fair under Water.—It is intended to hold a fancy fair and bazaar in the Thames Tunnel, on Monday next, the 17th inst., and two following days. The arches are to be illuminated with gas and various fancy devices in Chinese lamps. The shafts will be decorated with flags and evergreens, and a ball will take place in one of the arches every evening. All the recesses between the eastern and western roadway of the tunnel will be laid out with curiosities and fancy goods, and the Wizard of the North intends to exhibit his feats of legerdemain in the Wapping shaft. Various other exhibitions and attractions have been announced.

The late Explosion at Blackwall.—An inquest was held on Monday on the bodies of the men killed by the explosion of the boiler at Messrs. Samuda's factory at Blackwall. The main facts elicited from the numerous witnesses appeared to show that the safety-valve had not been merely overloaded, but fastened down, so that any escape of steam was impossible. Under these circumstances, the inquest was adjourned for a week, in order that the foreman of the works, who was severely injured by the explosion, may be examined.

The late Murder at Hampstead.—On Tuesday, Mr. Rawlinson, the magistrate of Marylebone Police Court, after a long examination, committed Thomas Hocker to Newgate to take his trial for the murder of Mr. Delarue. Our readers are aware that he had previously been committed on the coroner's warrant. At the last examination a witness proved that on the night of the murder he heard cries from the field, and immediately after met the prisoner running, and out of breath. The witness spoke to him, and asked if he had heard cries of murder, but he made no reply, and ran on. He was confident that the prisoner was the man, for he had seen him before. The stick also with which the fatal blow was inflicted has been found concealed near Macclesfield-bridge, Regent's Park, and has been identified as belonging to the prisoner. Notwithstanding these facts, tending to complete the chain of evidence against him, the prisoner manifested to the last the utmost indifference; and on being conveyed to Newgate, he entered freely into conversation, and offered his snuff-box to the officers with the same unconcern as he had exhibited at the police-court. It appears that the prisoner was educated at the school belonging to Christchurch, Paddington, and that he was subsequently an assistant at a school in Sheffield.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 8:—West districts, 159; Northern, 231; Central, 220; Eastern, 235; Southern, 296; total, 1141; males, 607; females, 534. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1254: males, 639; females, 615.

Provincial.

Eton.—It appears by the Eton List, which was issued on Monday, that the number of boys now at this school is 736, showing an increase during the past ten years, of nearly 300 pupils—the number in 1835 being 446.

Kingston.—One of the most extensive conflagrations that has occurred for a considerable period took place on Monday night, on Tolworth-common, near this town, and which caused the destruction of from 20 to 30 acres of furze, the property of Messrs. Baker and Fuller. Shortly before 8 o'clock the town of Kingston was suddenly illuminated to such an extent as to cause the greatest consternation among the inhabitants, and the superintendent of the fire department instantly ordered his engines out, and started in the direction of the conflagration. After some time the exact scene of the fire was found out, when an extraordinary sight presented itself; the greater portion of the plantation being enveloped in an immense sheet of flame, which was ascending many hundred feet into the air, and large showers of sparks were continually wafted across the country a great distance, causing apprehensions for the safety of the adjoining plantations. Some idea of the extent of the conflagration may be formed, when it is stated that it was distinctly visible from Wandsworth, several miles distant, and engines were despatched from London. For many hours the fire continued to throw its glare over the surrounding country. Fortunately a road had been cut in two sides in the direction of the wind, or the fire might have reached the contiguous plantations. The vicinity of the conflagration was thronged by many hundreds of persons, who came from various quarters. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Lewes.—For some time past the southern districts of Sussex have been infested with a gang of burglars, who succeeded for some weeks in escaping the police. On Friday however, after a pursuit of five days, three of them were captured near the village of North Warnborough, Hants, and after being examined before the magistrates have been committed for trial.

Preston.—On Friday a meeting of operatives was held in this town, at which resolutions were passed thanking Mr. R. Gardner for the numerous blessings he has conferred upon them by the adoption of the plan of making eleven hours a day; and requesting him to join them in petitions to Parliament for an efficient Ten Hours Bill for all hands employed in factories.

Portsmouth.—Intelligence has been received from Antigua, stating that at a Court-Martial held there on the 13th Jan., Lieut. Card, and Mr. Macrea, Surgeon, both belonging to H.M.S. Hyacinth, were dismissed their ship, and placed at the bottom of the list for having fought a duel on the Coast of Africa, contrary to the new naval regulations on the subject. Lieut. G—n who acted as one of the seconds was also tried and sentenced to the same punishment.

Ware.—The papers state that, in accordance with the wishes of the Bishop of London, the officiating clergymen at St. Mary's, the parish church of this town, have resumed the use of the gown in preaching, and abandoned the prayer for the Church Militant, and the weekly collection of the Offertory. The service in the town-hall continues to be well attended, and on Sunday Dr. Alder, the Wesleyan minister of London read the prayers of the Church, and preached to crowded congregations: and it is intended that on Easter Sunday the Sacrament shall be administered in that building.

Wenlock.—An address to the landholders of Salop has been widely circulated during the past week, by the Wenlock Farmers' Club, supported by Sir Francis Lawley, which states that, "Owing to the excessive damage sustained by the tenantry of the country by the undue preservation of game, it is resolved, that a representation to that effect be made to the principal landholders of this neighbourhood, respectfully requesting that they will order the entire destruction of the rabbits, and the partial destruction of the hares on their estates. That, whilst coming to this resolution, this Club wishes to express to their landlords their anxiety to preserve the pheasants and partridges to the utmost of their power, being only desirous of destroying that portion of the game and rabbits which they verily believe will, in many cases, if suffered to continue, end in the utter ruin of the tenantry.

York.—According to the local papers, the Duke of Devonshire, after having disposed of his extensive estates near Ripon and Boroughbridge, has determined on offering his vast and magnificent property at Londesborough, near Market-Weighton, for sale. The value of the Londesborough estates is rated at upwards of 500,000*l.*, and it is said, they have been offered to Mr. George Hudson, of York, the great capitalist and railway proprietor, who is already an extensive purchaser of the noble Duke's property in this county.

Railways.

The Gazette on Tuesday contained an announcement from the Board of Trade, that having had under consideration various schemes for extending railway communication between London and York and in the intermediate districts to the east of the present lines of railway, they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Bedford, London, and Birmingham; Cambridge and Lincoln; Direct Northern (as to the portion between Lincoln and York); Eastern Counties, Brandon and Peterborough Deviation; Eastern Counties, Hertford and Biggleswade Junction; Great Grimsby and Sheffield; Midland Railway, Syston and Peterborough; Midland Railway, Nottingham and Lincoln; Midland Railway, Swinton to Lincoln (as to the portion between Swinton and Doncaster); Tottenham and Farringdon-st. Extension, Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole; and against the Barnsley and Goole, Direct Northern (as to the portion between Lincoln and London); Eastern Counties, Ely Cambridge and Huntingdon; Eastern Counties, Ely and Lincoln Extension; Ely and Lincoln; Goole and Snaith; Hull and Gainsborough; London and York; Lincoln, York, and Leeds; Midland Railway, Swinton to Lincoln (as to the portion between Doncaster and Lincoln); Rotherham, Bawtry, and Gainsborough; Sheffield and Lincolnshire; York and North Midland, and Goole and Doncaster; York and North Midland, and Goole.

The meeting of the Croydon Company was held on Tuesday. The report stated that the revenue of the company, compared with the corresponding period of last year, showed an increase on the following items:—Croydon traffic, 582*6l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*; Brighton toll, 602*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*; Dover toll, 471*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*; sundries, 823*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*: total, 7722*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* The expenses had been 2646*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, leaving an increase of the sum applicable to dividend, as compared with the corresponding half-year, of 5076*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* This, however, was less than the directors anticipated; but it had been diminished, however, by causes which could not be in operation another year. Among these was the unproductive working of the Bricklayers' Arms branch, which had afforded no return; but the South Eastern Company had undertaken to purchase the Croydon Company's share at cost price. The atmospheric line on the Croydon railway was making considerable progress, and there was every reason to believe that in June a portion of it would be at work. With respect to amalgamation, the directors were of opinion that so soon as a fair and secure arrangement could be made with either of the other companies using the Croydon line, it would be prudent to amalgamate. Negotiations for this purpose were pending. The financial statement showed a disposable balance of 17,810*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, out of which it was resolved that a dividend of 8*s.* per share upon 44,000 shares be declared.—The meeting of the West London Company was held on Wednesday. The report announced that the agreement with the London and Birmingham had been executed that morning, and that the Birmingham Company had been induced to except the Kensington Canal and the lands attached to it from the agreement, without altering the amount of the consideration money (60,000*l.*) to be paid by them. The canal would, therefore, remain the sole property of the Company. The balance-sheet showed that the passenger traffic amounted to 77*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, and the expenditure for working the line to 770*l.* The Chairman bore testimony to the fair and liberal manner in which they had been met by the London and Birmingham, who, besides the concessions mentioned in the report, had engaged to allow the West London to estimate their income upon rates and tolls charged upon their own line 50 per cent. higher than those charged upon the Birmingham line. The creditors of the Company had waited patiently, and would now be paid off out of the 60,000*l.* purchase-money coming from the London and Birmingham. The affairs of the Company would be wound up as speedily as possible, and future expenses would be reduced to the lowest limit.—In consequence of the success which has attended the system adopted on the London and Birmingham Railway, enabling persons to travel to and from any place on the line during the same day at a reduction of one-third the ordinary fare, the directors have given orders that the privilege shall be extended to three days instead of one. By this regulation, persons travelling on Saturdays may purchase tickets at the reduced or day-ticket price, which will free them back again from the same station on the following Monday. For instance, the regular fare to Watford by the first-class carriages is 4*s*, but a day-ticket, which may be purchased for 5*s.* 6*d.*, will clear the purchaser on returning the same day or the following Monday, thus holding out every facility and inducement to persons to avoid unnecessary Sunday travelling.—The fast train on the Great Western Railway, which commenced running on Monday, completed the journey from London to Exeter, a distance of 194 miles, in 4 hours and 53 minutes. The journey to Bristol was accomplished in less than 3 hours, including a stoppage of 10 minutes at Swindon. The speed was 40 miles an hour.

TRAFFIC AND PRICES, by permission, from the List of Messrs. C. and H. HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending betwn. Mar. 6 & March 13.	Corr. Week 1844	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Dividend Per Share.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£	£	£ s. d.	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		1,631	100	all	1 5 0	131-133
Bristol, Birmingham	3,318
Bristol, Exeter			100	70		1-7
Bristol, Glo'ster			50	30	1 7 6	67-9
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	50	5	*	8 ½
Eastern Counties	3 512	3,115	avr.	14	0 2 0	21-½
Eastern Union			50	10		1 19
Do. Extension			25	1½		3-½
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,070	1,972	50	all	1 5 0	61-3
Grand Junction [Div 3 mo]	7,917	6,690	100	all	3 10 0
Great North of England	1,722	1,555	100	all	3 0 0	137- 90
Great Western	13,163	11,544	100	80	3 4 0	135-7
G. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	70	5	*	1 ½-12
Do. Extension	*	*	50	2½	*
Hull, Selby			50	all		93-7
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	70	15	*	31-5
Liverpool, Manchester	4,746	2,771	100	all	4 10 0
London, Birmingham	14,336	13,500	s k.	100	5 0 0	231 3
London, Blackwall	695	545	avr.	16⅔	0 3 0	7⅞ ⅝
London, Brighton	2,634	2,382	50	45	1 10 0	64½-4
London, Croydon	806	192	avr.	13	0 8 0	18½
London, Greenwich		614	avr	12½		10½-11
London, South-Weste n	4,494	4,6 0	50	41½	2 0 0	79-80
Manche-ter, Birmingham		2,858	70	60	1 0 0	64 6
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	874	759	12½	93	3 14 0
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,532	5,643	100	73	2 9 0	143 5
Midland	9,180	7,111	stk.	100	3 2 6	137 9
Do. Birmingham, Derby			stk.	100		104 6
Newcastle, Carlisle		1,364	100	all	4 0 0
Newcastle, Darlington	1,095		25	24	4 0 0	46-8
North British	*	*	25	10	*	17-½
Northern, Eastern			50	45	1 2 6	65 7
Norwich, Brandon			20	18		12-13
Preston, Wyre			50	all
Sheffi'd, Manchester	318	195	50	all
South Devon	631	495	100	87½
South-Eastern, Dover	*	*	50	10	*	17-18
Yarmouth, Norwich	4,170	2,509	avr	33½	6 10 6	62½-3
York, North Midland	295		20	all	0 10 0	20-½
Do. Scarboro' Branch	2,221	1,479	50	all	2 10 0	101-3
Do. Selby	*	*	15	20	*	41-3
			50	20	0 12 8	65-7
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	20	2	*	11-½
Rouen, Dieppe	*	*	20	2	*	17-18
Rouen, Bordeaux	*	*	20	2	*	10-½
Tours, Orleans	*	*			*
Versailles, Rouen	3,977	3,776	20	all	0 6 9½	51-3
Versailles, Havre	3,940	3,761	20	all	0 9 2	44-5
			20	14		30-1

Ireland.

Dublin.—It is reported that arrangements are in progress, with the sanction of the Lords of the Admiralty, for the transference of the packet station from Kingstown to Howth harbour, which is one of the safest in the kingdom, and only requires a comparatively trifling outlay in the construction of some fresh works to render it fit for the accommodation of the largest ships of war. It is believed that the alterations will be carried into effect by the time the Chester and Holyhead railroad shall have been completed; and it is calculated that a steamer, by starting from Howth, can make the passage from the Irish to the Welsh coast in an hour's less time than from Kingstown harbour.—Sir H. F. Barrington, elder brother of the late Sir Jonah Barrington, was burnt to death last week while sitting before the fire. He was of advanced age, and not being in affluent circumstances had no regular attendant, and the accident was therefore not discovered until the next morning, when the unfortunate gentleman was found sitting in his chair quite dead. The jury returned a verdict that he died of suffocation caused by his clothes having accidentally caught fire.—On Sunday last three men and seven women renounced the Roman Catholic faith, and embraced the doctrines of the Church of England, in St. Audeon's Church, Dublin.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Alderman Keshan in the chair. The attendance was unusually small. Several contributions were announced from Liverpool, including 11*l.* from Mr. Langan, the pugilist, whom Mr. O'Connell highly extolled, and Mr. Browne, M.P. held up as an example of what an Irishman could do when opposed to an Englishman, adding that with such co-operation in England, the regeneration of Ireland was certain. Mr. M'NEVIN complained that the increased grant to Maynooth was not large enough, but stated his conviction to be, that Sir R. Peel intended it as a bribe to win the Irish clergy from their immemorial fidelity to the cause of their country. He abused Mr. Roebuck for his recent attack on the Irish members, and animadverted upon the report of the Land Inquiry Commissioners, particularly that portion of it which refers to the tenant right in Ulster. The Land Commission he said was admitted on all hands to be a failure, and it was now rumoured that, as a counterpoise, Sir R. Peel had advised Her Majesty to visit her Irish dominions during the present year. He was too well aware of what the duties of a loyal subject were, not to feel delighted at the prospect of that visit, and he understood the dissimulation of manly courtesy too well not to affect satisfaction, even if he did not feel it; but there was a duty which would not bear dissimulation or admit of compromise—he meant the duty and allegiance men owed to the land of their birth. Should any man venture to propose that, as a bribe, not to the Queen, but to the Queen's Ministers, the agitation for Irish legislative independence should be compromised in the event of a royal visit to this country, he told that person that he was a traitor to his country. Did Sir R. Peel imagine that when the Queen came to Ireland she should not hear of his treason to the Conservative party? Would they not tell her that he had sold the Church, and handed over the strongholds of ascendancy to an ambitious Popish party? But no Repealer should do anything having the remotest tendency to induce Ministers to advise Her Majesty not to come to this country. When among them she could not shut her eyes to their wants and wishes. She had heard of the agitation in Ireland through impure channels, as being the offspring of wild impulse, or the creature of gambling demagogues; and it was the duty of Repealers to shape their conduct so as to give the lie to the falsehood, when she came among them.—Mr. FITZGERALD, M.P., fined in 20*l.* from Clonmel, and observed that the Duke of Wellington had been made to say, in the report of the proceedings in the House of Lords, that no petition had been prepared or adopted at any of the monster Repeal meetings. Now this was a most egregious falsehood, which he could refute personally; for he had read a petition to Parliament, and moved its adoption at the Cork monster meeting.—Mr. O'CONNELL said, that in all probability the assertion would prove to be a mistake of the newspapers, for the Duke of Wellington was incapable of asserting anything so untrue. He moved that it be referred to the committee to report on the assertion, and show how egregiously mistaken the Duke or his reporter was.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN, M.P., brought forward a lengthy report from the committee on the removal from England of poor persons born in Ireland, which was adopted after a few observations from Mr. O'Connell and Mr. H. Grattan, M.P.—Mr. O'CONNELL apologised for the non-production of the report by the committee of the Association upon the documents recently put forward by the Irish Land Commissioners. He stated, that the committee laboured assiduously for several hours every day, but were unable to bring their labours to a close on account of the great length of the report which they had been appointed to take into their consideration. They were determined to proceed in the most careful manner, for it was of the utmost importance that the beneficial effects of the tenant right in Ulster should be shown. Although so much disapproved by those commissioners, he trusted the time was not far distant when the people should enjoy that right, not merely in the north, but in every part of the country. If such a right existed, it would be an equivalent for fixity of tenure, and would put an end to those outrages to which the people were stimulated by their wretchedness, and which occurred only in those districts where no tenant-right existed. He then alluded to the rumoured visit of Her Majesty to Ireland, and said they were all agreed on that subject. They would hail with delight and the most thorough devotion the visit of the excellent lady who filled the throne, but there should be no abandonment or postponement of the Repeal, if she came here. Before being sent to gaol, he said there should be no shrinking or compromise. He kept his word, and it was very unlikely that he would suffer himself to be cajoled into what he could not be bullied or frightened into. At the same time, there was no doubt that she would be received with the utmost devotion and respect—even her Ministers would be safe from the contempt and execration they merited, lest the hooting and the hissing of the people might offend the ears of their royal mistress, and be misconstrued by her into a manifestation of disrespect. He hoped, indeed, they would not accompany her here. Why should she bring over Sir James Graham, who had called them convicted conspirators? Oh, he wished that the seal-breaker might come over here, in order that the people might cry "Convicted conspirator, in your teeth, you vile letter-opener!" He hoped that she would leave both Peel and Graham at home, and thus avoid encountering the appearance of disrespect, for they could not help receiving such men with contempt and execration whenever they could do so without offence to Her Majesty. After some further observations, he concluded with the customary appeal to continue to labour for Repeal. The rent for the week was stated to be 477*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*

Cork.—The extensive lofts of the corn store of Messrs. Burke, on Patrick's quay, fell in last week, bringing down with them more than 300 tons of corn, lard, &c., and buried four persons in the ruins. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.

Scotland.

Glasgow.—A heavy failure took place in this city last week, the house of Messrs. Pattison and Co., who are largely concerned in the American trade, having stopped payment. Their liabilities are said to be upwards of 160,000*l.*

York.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.—NORFOLK CIRCUIT, AYLESBURY.—The Salt Hill Murder.—The trial of John Tawell, the Quaker, for the murder of Sarah Hart, commenced on Wednesday. The Court was crowded to excess, and Aylesbury presented more the appearance of a general election than of the ordinary business of the assizes. Mr. Serjeant Eyles opened the proceedings for the prosecution, and after stating the particulars of the prisoner's connection with his former servant, explained the details of the case as they have already appeared in this paper in our account of the inquiries before the coroner. Numerous witnesses were then called to prove the facts. Their evidence was given at great length, but it was merely a recapitulation of what was already before the public. The principal facts stated were those comprised in the evidence of Mr. Champneys, the surgeon, who deposed that deceased died from the effects of prussic acid, and that on an analysis of the contents of the stomach, prussic acid, more than sufficient to destroy life, was discovered. After a long sitting the Court adjourned to Thursday, when Mr. Cooper, the chemist who assisted in analysing the contents of the stomach, was examined. He stated that he first tested them for oxalic and sulphuric acids, for arsenic, opium, the salts of mercury, and other metallic poisons, but found none. He then tested them for prussic acid and produced prussian blue, which is a decided proof of the presence of prussic acid, of cyanogen in some shape. He also tried other tests, which were equally conclusive as to its presence. Amongst the contents of the stomach he found some portions of partially digested apples. He tried an experiment with apple pips. He took the pips of fifteen apples, and now produced the result of that experiment; and from the pips of fifteen apples that was all the prussian blue he produced. The quantity of prussic acid was inappreciable. He did not think any chemist could measure it, or any balance could measure it. On cross-examination, this witness stated that he had never before tested the contents of a human stomach when the person had been killed by prussic acid, but he judged of its effects by reading and analogy. He had no doubt that prussic acid might be present, and yet emit none of its characteristic odour. Other medical witnesses confirmed these facts, and one of them, Mr. Norblad, agreed with Mr. Champneys, the first witness, in stating that on opening the body they smelt the odour of prussic acid. Mr. Thomas, shopman to Mr. Hughes, of Bishopsgate-street, proved that the prisoner purchased prussic acid of him, and stated that he wanted it as an application for a varicose vein, adding that he had been a chemist and druggist abroad. He also stated that he had sent 2¼ grains of cyanide of silver, which would contain rather less than half a grain of pure prussic acid, produced by Dr. Letheby, at the London Hospital, from the pips of fifteen apples. Witnesses were also examined for the purpose of showing, that on a previous occasion deceased was taken ill suddenly after the prisoner had visited her and given her porter to drink.—Mr. Kelly then addressed the jury for the defence, resting chiefly on the fact that the evidence failed to prove that the poison had been administered by the prisoner, and contending that science, with regard to prussic acid, was in its infancy, and that the medical witnesses relied more on books than on their own experience, and that their judgment was founded upon a mere theory. He dwelt strongly on the direct evidence of Mr. Thomas, that prussic acid had been produced from the pips of apples, and then referred to the fact of such pips having been found in the stomach of deceased, arguing that the poison, if taken in a free state, would have been inevitably detected by the smell. They had heard one of the female witnesses, who had told them that she poured a little water down the deceased's throat, and foam immediately appeared at the corner, and she fancied or feared that she would be suffocated if the application were repeated. Now, what was there to show she had not been actually suffocated by that very draught of water? He contended that the prisoner was a kind and benevolent man; but he implored the Jury not to be influenced by the circumstance that the prisoner had once before offended the laws of the country. He had suffered banishment for that offence, and had retrieved his character by his subsequent acts. He did not, however, palliate the immorality of his connection with deceased, but suggested that he could have no motive for depriving her of life to save the small allowance he made her, and thus render her children a burden upon himself. In conclusion, he entreated the Jury to give the prisoner the benefit of any doubt that might arise in their minds, and record a verdict in his favour. Several witnesses were then called, who gave the prisoner an excellent character. At the close of their evidence, Baron Parke said they could not close that night, and again adjourned the Court. Soon after 8 o'clock yesterday morning the Court reassembled, and Baron Parke proceeded to sum up the evidence, which he did with a lucidness well calculated to leave the minds of the Jury in a condition fitted for the discharge of the awful duty which they had to perform. The effect, however, was felt to be, upon the whole, against the prisoner. His lordship concluded in the usual manner, by leaving the decision of the question of the prisoner's life or death in the hands of the Jury, telling them if they had any fair and reasonable doubt, they must give the prisoner the benefit of it. The Jury retired for deliberation at half-past 11, and after an absence of rather more than half an hour, they returned into Court and the Foreman delivered a verdict of "GUILTY," amid the most profound silence. The Judge then proceeded to pass sentence of Death. He told the prisoner that he had been found guilty by a Jury of his countrymen upon evidence which had perfectly satisfied him and them, and he thought every fair and reasonable person who had heard it, that he had committed a most heinous, diabolical, cowardly murder upon his unfortunate victim. He then passed the sentence of death in the usual manner, ordering that his body, after execution, be buried within the walls of the jail. The unhappy man received the sentence with an extraordinary amount of firmness, and betrayed very little emotion, although numbers of persons in Court were in tears, and some of the females sobbed aloud.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT—YORK.—Broughton v. Atkins n.—The plaintiff in this case is a farmer near Doncaster, and the action was brought to obtain compensation for an injury alleged to have been occasioned by defendant, a druggist, in selling plaintiff a quantity of oil as train oil, which proved to be a deleterious compound of other oils, in consequence of which the plaintiff's cattle, in having the mixture administered to them, became poisoned. The evidence was, that in September last the plaintiff sent his servant to defendant's shop with a bottle, to buy a gallon of train oil. The bottle was filled and brought home accordingly. The following morning some of the oil was administered to some calves about 9 months old, belonging to plaintiff, train oil, it appeared, being often used for such purpose in the spring of the year. There was about a gill given to each, and within a few minutes after taking this medicine the animals began slavering at the mouth. They appeared in great pain, and two of them died in a quarter of an hour. Eight others also suffered much, and only partially recovered, and have since continued to be injured by the medicine taken. The calves which had died were opened, and the stomach and intestines were found to be highly inflamed, and leaving no doubt that the appearances were caused by the application of some acrid matter to the parts affected. Mr. West, an eminent chemist of Leeds, had analysed the remaining portion of the oil, and stated that train oil in the trade meant the most cheap and common fish oil of the place and season—that it was fish oil. He would now expect, if asking for "train oil," to be served with southern whale oil. This oil was not train oil; it was a compound which has lately been introduced among the trade under the name of "pine," or "vegetable," oil, being composed of various ingredients, and including, no doubt, a certain portion of fish oil, but also containing a quantity of naphtha, from the acrid qualities of which latter ingredient the present mischief seemed to have arisen. For the defence it was contended that, as plaintiff's servant had merely asked for "train oil," without stating for what purpose it was required, defendant ought not to be held liable for the injury accruing, he having given an article which, in all probability, was described as "train oil" in the ordinary language of the trade, and would have served for all the common purposes for which train oil is used. The jury considered some time on their verdict, and ultimately found for plaintiff.—Damages, 25*l.* LANCASTER.—Thomas Donahoo was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife, at Ulverstone, on the 20th Dec. Deceased was a very intemperate woman, and the prisoner in a fit of passion had treated her with so much violence as to cause her death. The facts were noticed in this Paper at the time. The jury took the lenient view of his offence, and convicted him of manslaughter. He was accordingly transported for life. CARLISLE.—John Gillespie was indicted for a burglary in the house of Joseph Grindal, at Wigton, on the night of the 10th December last found guilty and transported for life.—The Lammonby Murder. Mr. Justice Coltman stated, that he had examined the little girl, the principal witness in this case, and that she was in such a state of ignorance that he could not permit her to be sworn. It would therefore be necessary to postpone the trial to the next assizes, and in the mean time the child should remain in the custody of the gaoler, and be instructed by the chaplain.

WESTERN CIRCUIT—SALISBURY.—Prascall Hinwood was indicted for having feloniously sent a letter to Thomas Slate Whiting, threatening to burn his farm and property. It appeared that at the time the offence was committed, the prisoner was an inmate in the Warminster union. Before that she had lived in the same parish as prosecutor, and had worked with other women on his farm at the wages of 6*d. per diem.* These terms gave dissatisfaction, and some augmentation was made to them, after which prisoner continued to work for the prosecutor for some time. She then left his employ and went into the Warminster union. The writing and sending of the letter was clearly proved. On being called upon for her defence, the prisoner threatened the prosecutor that if she ever was released from her confinement, she would burn down his house and farm things. Mr. Justice Coleridge having summed up, the jury immediately returned a verdict of Guilty. The Judge then proceeded to address the prisoner in a very serious manner, and concluded by sentencing her to 7 years' transportation.—Henry Andrews, George Scammell, John Wyatt, Wm. Palmer, George Goodfellow, and James Read, were indicted for having entered a wood, in the parish of Favant, in the occupation of the Earl of Pembroke, armed by night, for the purpose of taking game. This was a melancholy case, exhibiting some of the worst features connected with poaching. One of the prisoners was still so ill from the wounds he had received, that it was necessary to bring him to the court in a sedan chair, whilst one of the keepers was brought from the infirmary, where he has been ever since the outrages. Three of the other prisoners were very badly wounded, and will carry the marks of the contest to their graves, the effects of which will, in all probability, very materially shorten their days. The facts of the case are very few. On the 25th Feb., the gamekeepers of Mr. Morton, who has the right of sporting over Lord Pembroke's preserves, went about 9 o'clock; they heard nothing till 3 in the morning, when they heard a shot in Favant-wood, towards which they immediately proceeded. As they walked up a path in the wood, they saw Goodfellow walking down the same, carrying a gun in his hand, and looking into the trees as if in search of game. He walked up to them apparently without seeing them, when he was immediately arrested, his gun taken from him, and flung into the wood. Two of the keepers were armed with hangers, and the others with clubs. Goodfellow being thus secured made some signal, and nine or ten men rushed towards the place, and immediately a fight began, the keepers alleging that prisoners were the first to strike the blow. The fight lasted for nearly half an hour, during which the hangers were used, and produced the terrible wounds the prisoners had received. Both parties then gave over and separated. The prisoners were subsequently taken into custody, several of them being too ill to bear removal at the time. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, recommending the prisoners to mercy. After an impressive address, pointing out the dreadful consequences to which poaching led, Mr. Justice Coleridge sentenced the prisoners to 12 months' imprisonment and hard labour.

OXFORD CIRCUIT—OXFORD.—Ann Gardner, 64 years of age, postmistress at Enstone, in this county, was found guilty of having opened two letters, and stolen a third, containing two half-sovereigns, all of which were committed to her care, and sentenced to 7 years' transportation.—William Townsend was charged with night poaching in Rawlinson's Thicket, the property of H. Langston, Esq., at the parish of Churchill, in this county. The prisoner on being detected by the keepers was in company with two other men, and all three committed a murderous assault on the keepers. It did not, however, appear that either he or the others were provided with instruments for taking game, in consequence of which the indictment for night poaching fell to the ground, and under the direction of the Judge the Jury returned a verdict of acquittal. The prisoner was then indicted for the assault. The former evidence was recapitulated, and the prisoner found guilty. The Lord Chief Baron, after commenting on the brutal nature of the assault, sentenced the prisoner, who had been twice convicted of larceny before, to be imprisoned for one year.

HOME CIRCUIT—CHELMSFORD.—Thomas Crush and Thomas Bastick were found guilty of having with other persons, some of them armed with guns and other offensive weapons, unlawfully entered a wood, the property of Lord Petre, at Mountnessing, for the purpose of taking and destroying game. The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and the prisoner Crush was sentenced to be transported for 10 years, and the other to 9 months' imprisonment and hard labour.—James Marchent 20, and William Youngs, 21, were found guilty of feloniously firing a barn, a cart-shed, and other buildings, the property of the executors of Edward Lugar, deceased, at Badley Hall, near Ardleigh, and were sentenced by the Lord Chief Justice to 15 years' transportation.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT—NORTHAMPTON.—Watkins v. Machin.—This was an action on promises, by landlord against out-going tenant, by notice given to him for breach of his agreement in not cultivating the land in a husbandmanlike manner, and putting on proper manure, &c. The amount of damages sought to be recovered was upwards of 170*l.* The defendant by his plea denied that greater damage had been sustained than to the extent of 30*l.*, which sum he paid into Court. The farm was in the hamlet of Drayton. Witnesses were called on both sides; those on the one hand affirming that the land was in an overworked, bad, and foul state when the defendant quitted, and had not been treated according to good husbandry, whilst several most respectable farmers of great experience in agriculture for many years, in the strongest language deposed to the contrary. Defendant had had the privilege of taking hay, straw, &c., off the farm, provided he replaced what was so taken away with an equivalent quantity of manure obtained elsewhere, of his having done which to the full extent of what he had so taken away very strong evidence was presented. He had also expended upwards of 48*l.* on the drainage, of which it appeared that it was customary that the landlord should bear one half. What was most complained of, however, was, that in 1843 he had taken out of a farm of only 98 acres no less than 65 acres of wheat, whereupon he had received his notice to quit. But it was testified by defendant's respectable witnesses, who were competent judges of the matter, that he might well have done this in the course of good husbandry from the state into which, by means of fallow, seed, manure, &c., he had previously brought the land, and that in the first year afterwards the incoming tenant might well have taken 28 acres of wheat off the farm, and 25 acres in every succeeding year, as also that the farm was left by him in a far better condition than usually happens in such cases, and at least in as good, if not a much better, condition than it was when he entered upon it. Mr. Hill, in his reply, dwelt most particularly upon the enormous overcropping in 1843. The Judge having summed up, the Jury, which was composed partly of special and partly of common jurymen, retired for some considerable time, and then returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 20*l.* beyond the sum paid into Court.—Thomas Russell, aged 18, William Mayes, aged 26, and Joseph King, were indicted for having, on the 17th Dec., at the parish of Brigstock, feloniously shot at Solomon Rawson, the younger, with intent to murder him, while night poaching. The latter prisoner was acquitted, and Russell and Mayes sentenced to be transported for 15 years.

Miscellaneous.

The Thames Tunnel Surpassed.—We find the following extraordinary account set forth in a letter from Marseilles in the Débats:—"There has been long known, or believed, to exist at Marseilles, a tunnel, or submarine passage, passing from the ancient Abbey of St. Victoire, running under the arm of the sea, which is covered with ships, and coming out under a tower of Fort Saint-Nicolas. Many projects for exploring this passage have been entertained, but hitherto no one has been found sufficiently bold to persevere in it. M. Joyland, of the Ponts-et-Chaussées, and M. Matayras, an architect, have however not only undertaken, but accomplished this task. Accompanied by some friends and a number of labourers, they went, a few days ago, to the Abbey, and descended the numerous steps that led to the entrance of the passage. Here they were the first day stopped by heaps of the ruins of the Abbey. Two days afterwards, however, they were able to clear their way to the other end, and came out at Port Saint-Nicolas, after working two hours and twenty minutes. The structure, which is considered to be Roman, is in such excellent condition, that in order to put it into complete repair, a cost of no more than 500,000f. will be required; but a much larger outlay will be wanted to render it serviceable for modern purposes. This tunnel is deemed much finer than that of London, being formed of one single vault of sixty feet span, and one-fourth longer."

Mr. Duncan, the African Traveller.—Our readers will recollect of our some months ago stating that Mr. Duncan, a native of Galloway, who had been engaged in the late Niger expedition, had resolved to go upon another expedition of discovery into Africa. He proceeded accordingly to the Cape Coast, and though in very indifferent health when he sailed, we are glad to say he is now much better, and entertains stronger hopes than ever of rendering important service to the cause of science, commerce, and humanity, by his travels and presence among the natives of the interior of Africa, a country rich to an inconceivable extent in its natural productions, and which, when opened up to British enterprise and commerce, cannot fail to be of great importance to this country. Mr. Duncan has great doubts whether the King of Ashantee—if ever he is allowed to come as far as Comassie, the capital of that country—will grant him permission to proceed farther on his journey to the Kong Mountains. To provide against such an occurrence, Mr. Duncan has made preparations to ascend the Volta, an extensive river nearly unknown even at its embouchure, and his hopes are high of his ultimate success.—Wigtonshire Free Press.

A Cow with a Wooden Leg.—A cow belonging to Mr. John Raby, farmer, Great Eccleston, had the misfortune to get her foot entangled in a thorn bush, which produced a compound fracture. The leg was obliged to be amputated two inches below the knee, which was performed by Mr. Hutchinson, veterinary surgeon of that place, and is now doing well. It is the intention of the surgeon to try the experiment of a wooden leg in a short time, if the owner will allow it.—Preston Paper.

The Sword-fish.—The barque Susan recently put back to Malta from her passage to Alexandria; when 250 miles from port she sprang a leak, and made so much water that the pumps could not keep her clear. On being "hove down" she was discovered to have been pierced by a sword-fish, a portion of whose spear was taken out by a ship-builder of Malta.—Times.

Foreign Steam-Vessels.—An important and interesting return has been just published by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Admiral Dundas, of the number and quality of steam-vessels in foreign ports in which Her Majesty may have consular agents. The return, although a few statements have not yet been received, includes most naval stations of importance in the four quarters of the globe. It occupies 20 folio pages of print, and gives the names of the various steamers at the several ports, their tonnage, where built, and when; the length, breadth, horse-power, and draught of water of each such vessels; also stating whether it has an English or foreign engineer, and what armament it is capable of carrying. There are also appended remarks as to the way in which the vessels are occupied, to whom they belong, &c. The following statement will show the number of steamers at each of the ports mentioned:—At Odessa, 25; Stockholm, 55; Gottenburg, 1; Carlscrona, 3; Ystad, 2; Christiana, 10; Copenhagen, 2; Elsinor, 1; Aalbor, 3; Randers, 1; Flensburgh, 1; Kiel, 2; Husum, 5 (besides two building); at Dantzic, 2; Rostock, 2; Lubeck, 4; Hamburgh, 8; Bremen, 7; Embden, 1; Amsterdam, 7; Rotterdam, 31; Antwerp, 4, (including the British Queen, which went twice to New York, and was then sold to the Belgian Government); Calais, 3; Havre-de-Grace, 41; St. Malo, 2; Brest, 6; Nantes, 21; Charente, 4; Bordeaux, 27; Bayonne, 1; Marseilles, 10; Corsica, 4; Corunna, 1; Cadiz, 6; Balearic Islands, 1; Lisbon, 8; Oporto, 2; Genoa, 9; Cagliari, 3; Leghorn, 4; Naples, 4; Palermo, 1; Trieste, 14; Venice, 2; Greece, 1 (the only one in the country); Alexandria, 3 on the sea and 5 on the Nile; Portland, United States, 11; New York, 88; on Lake Champlain, 5; Lake Ontario, 9; Lake Erie, &c., 44; Philadelphia, 18; Baltimore, 11; Norfolk, United States, 2; Charleston, 13; Savannah, 18; Mobile, Alabania, 40; New Orleans, 3; Galveston, Texas, 2; Vera Cruz, 5; Caraccas, Venezuela, 1; Valparaiso, 2; Rio de Janeiro, 27; Bahia, 3.

BIRTHS.—On the 5th inst., in Lowndes-street, the Countess of BECTIVE, of a son—6th inst., the lady of the Rev. P. W. MAVOW, at Barkway, of a son—6th inst., at Guernsey, the Hon. Mrs. SAUMAREZ, of a son—8th inst., at Albury, Surrey, the lady of F. V. WOODHOUSE, Esq., of a daughter—8th inst., at Exeter, the lady of A. B. ABRAHAM, Esq., barrister at law, of a son—8th inst., at Dublin, the lady of G. HUBAND, Esq., Captain Unattached, late Captain of the 8th Hussars, of a son and heir—10th inst., at the Parsonage, Horsforth, Yorkshire, the lady of the Rev. W. H. B. STOCKER, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.—At the parish church of St. Lawrence, Southampton, BARNARD GREGORY, Esq., of North Audley-st., to MARGARET THOMPSON, the last surviving relative of the late John Thompson, Esq., of the Priory, Hampstead, granddaughter of the late Sir William Seton, Bart., of Aberdeenshire, and niece of the late Sir John Patterson, Bart., of Ecclesmachan, M.P. for Berwick, and Lady H. Campbell, eldest daughter of the late Earl of Marchmont—4th inst., at Felton, J. CHANDLESS, Esq., to ISABELLA BURDON, eldest daughter of George Burdon, Esq., of Felton Park, Northumberland.

DEATHS.—On the 20th January, at the Falls of Gairuppa, in the province of Canara, Major-General C. HILL, commanding the Mysore Divsion of the Madras Army, aged 63—5th inst., ESTHER MONTEFIORE, the beloved and affectionate wife of Moses Montefiore, Esq., of 41, Torrington-square, aged 57—5th inst., at Belgrave-place, Tuffnell Park-road, Holloway, Mr. J. MATTHEWS, many years of Doctors' Commons, and resident in Charles-street Somerstown, aged 50—6th inst., at New-street, Covent Garden, M. NUGENT, Esq., for many years one of the Parliamentary reporters of The Times, aged 64.

WANTED, in the immediate neighbourhood of Liverpool, a GARDENER who thoroughly understands the Growth and Management of Pines, Vines, Plants, and Forcing, in all its branches. Wages, 24*s.* per week, with a house (entrance lodge) and coals. No one need apply whose character will not bear the strictest investigation. He must be a married Man, and one without a family would be preferred. Address, with references (post paid), to Mr. CUTHBERT, Seedsman, Clayton-square, Liverpool.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 29, who has had great experience in all branches of his business; has left a place where Forcing of every description is carried on, likewise a fine collection of plants, such as Orchidaceous, Stove and Greenhouse, &c. He can have a good character of three years and a half from the gentleman he has just left, also can be highly recommended by gentlemen who have seen his abilities at the above place.—Direct to A. B., at Mr. Forester's, Bedford Lane, Clapham, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, without family, aged 36, who perfectly understands the management of a Greenhouse, Vines, forcing Cucumbers and Melons, Flower and Kitchen Garden, Meadow-land, &c. His Wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have five years' good character; leaving on account of his employer removing.—Direct to JOHN HEWETT, Mrs. Deacon Hume, Great Doods House, Reigate, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 29, who perfectly understands the cultivation of the Pine, and the early forcing of Grapes, Strawberries, Cucumbers, Melons, &c., also with good practical experience in both Kitchen and Flower Garden. Five years' unexceptionable character from a first-rate establishment. No single-handed place will be accepted. Direct to G. B., Post Office, Whips Cross, Walthamstow, Essex.

AS GARDENER.—D. FERGUSON, Stowe, Buckingham, with confidence recommends to the notice of any nobleman or gentleman in want of a Gardener, where a married man is kept, ISAAC PASSFIELD, 26 years of age, who has been employed as one of the foremen in Stowe Gardens nearly four years, during which time his conduct has been very satisfactory.

AS GARDENER.—An active, middle-aged, married Man, with one son eight years of age. He well understands the business of the Kitchen Garden, Flower Garden, Greenhouse, &c.; was two years in his last situation, and seven years in the one preceding; can have a good character from either. His Wife would have no objection to undertake the Washing of the family, or to manage a small Dairy, Poultry, &c., if required.—Direct to A. B., care of Mr. Poulgiaze, No. 6, Church-street, Woolwich.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 36, who has a thorough practical knowledge of his business, understands Meadow Land, and can take charge of Live-stock, if required. Can have a good character from his last situation.—Direct to G. M., Post-office, Upper Norwood, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A Single Man, aged 34, who understands his business, Greenhouse, Frames, Vines, and Flower-garden. Would prefer a place where one or two are kept. No objection to a single-handed place. Wages, 1*l.* 1*s.* per week; or with board 32*l.* per year. — Direct to A. B., Mr. Lockhart's, Seedsman and Florist, 156, Cheapside, London.

AS FARMING BAILIFF or LAND STEWARD.—Wanted by a respectable married Man, aged 45, without encumbrance, the management of a Farm or Estate. He thoroughly understands every branch of his profession, in the alternate Husbandry, Forest-planting, &c. &c., and has had long practice in cultivation, and the management, fattening, &c. of live stock. His wife has been accustomed to the charge of the Dairy, &c. Can have the best references as to character and ability, and has no objection to Scotland or Ireland, on sufficient consideration; England would be preferred.—Direct to Y. Z., at the Office of the Gardeners' Chronicle.

AS STEWARD or BAILIFF.—A middle-aged Man and his Wife, without encumbrance. He is perfectly conversant with the Cultivation of Land, on the most improved principles; likewise the Management of Stock in Breeding and Feeding. His Wife understands the Dairy well. Undeniable testimonials of his abilities will be given by his late employer. No objection to go to Ireland.—Direct to J. B., 28, Princes-street, Portman Market, London.

AS PROPAGATOR and FOREMAN.—A Man of 30 years of age, with unexceptionable character as to abilities, &c.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Clark's, Seedsman, Bishopgate-street Within, London.

TO NOBLEMEN, LANDED PROPRIETORS, AND GENERAL ESTATE AGENTS.

AS STEWARD, or STEWARD and BAILIFF, or LOCAL AGENT.—An Experienced Agriculturist, well acquainted with the analyses of soils and manures, and has a thorough practical knowledge of the present improved modes of agriculture and management of Estates. Is 34 years of age, and a native of the best cultivated district in North Northumberland (where his father has been the highly respected Agent to a worthy Baronet for upwards of 30 years). The Advertiser has had the entire management of an estate in Yorkshire for nine years. Would not object to occupy a farm on his own account, as an Example Farm. Highly satisfactory testimonials may be had from his present employer, and from several Noblemen, Gentlemen, and eminent Agriculturists.—Direct to AGRICOLA, No. 3, Low Ousegate, York.

APPRENTICE.—The friends of a respectable youth are desirous of apprenticing him to either a NOBLEMAN'S GARDENER, or to a NURSERYMAN, &c., where he would be treated with kindness and attention, and board and lodge with the party; a suitable premium will be given.—Address W. W., No. 4, East Cliff Terrace, Dover, with full particulars, and the amount of premium required.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1845.

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.

OFFICE FOR PATENTS OF INVENTIONS AND REGISTRATIONS OF DESIGNS, 14, LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

THE Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, (or by letter, prepaid,) to Mr. ALEXANDER PRINCE, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,
39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.
Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Thomas Farncomb, Esq., Alderman, Chairman.
William Leaf, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Richard E. Arden, Esq. — J. Humphery, Esq., Ald., M.P.
William Banbury, Esq. — Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq. — Thomas Kelly, Esq., Ald.
Thomas Camplin, Esq. — Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
James Clift, Esq. — Lewis Pocock, Esq.

Physician.—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.
Surgeon.—W. Coulson, Esq., 2, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry.
Consulting Actuary.—Professor Hall, of King's College.

Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.
Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l.*, the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l.* per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l.*

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term.
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured.

A Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.

A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.
The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l.*

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

NATIONAL LOAN FUND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 26, Cornhill, London.—Capital 500,000*l.* Empowered by Act of Parliament.

This Institution offers many important and substantial advantages with respect to both Life Assurances and Deferred Annuities. The Assured has, on all occasions, the power to borrow, without expense or forfeiture of the Policy, two-thirds of the Premiums paid (see table); also the option of selecting benefits, and the conversion of his interests to meet other conveniences or necessity. Assurances for terms of years are granted on the lowest possible rates.

DIVISION OF PROFITS:—

The steady success and increasing prosperity of the Society has enabled the Directors, at the last annual investigation, to declare a second Bonus, averaging 60 per cent. on the amounts invested on each Policy effected on the Profit scale.

EXAMPLES:

Age.	Sum.	Premium.	Year.	Bonus added.	Bonus in Cash.	Permanent reduc. of Premium.	Sum the Assured may Borrow on Policy.
	£	£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
	1000	74 3 4	1837	170 9 9	77 5 1	12 3 9	346 2 3
			1838	144 2 2	64 5 6	9 16 4	296 13 4
			1839	116 16 0	51 5 11	7 11 9	247 4 5

The Division of Profits is annual.

F. FERGUSON CAMBOUX, Secretary.

BRITISH AMERICA.—HER MAJESTY'S PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

TO EMIGRANTS.—THE NEW BRUNSWICK and NOVA SCOTIA LAND COMPANY (empowered by Royal Charter and Act of Parliament) have resolved to SELL portions of their LAND on the following terms, for Lots of 100 Acres each, viz.:—

3*l.* to be paid down.
[No payment required in the Second Year.]
3*l.* to be paid on or before 1st Dec. in the Third Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Fourth Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Fifth Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Sixth Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Seventh Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Eighth Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Ninth Year.
3*l.* do. do. in the Tenth Year.
4*l.* do. do. in the Eleventh Year.

Total 31*l.* sterling, without any charge for interest.

The territory belonging to the Company is upwards of half a million acres, situate in Her Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, between the Rivers St. John and Miramichi. Several other rivers run through the tract, on one of which, the Nashwauk, is situated the Company's principal town and settlement of Stanley. Here is a church, schoolhouse, corn and saw mills, and many houses belonging to resident settlers. The Chief Commissioner and the Company's Establishment are at Stanley, and there is also a resident surgeon.

The passage from the chief port in the province (St. John) to the Company's town of Stanley may be made in 24 hours, at a very moderate expense.

For further particulars (gratis) apply (if by letter post paid) to the Secretary, 5, Copthall-court, London; or to Mr. I. I. BIRCHAL, 10, St. Mary's Gate, Manchester.—London, March 22.

SILVER TEA-SERVICES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, submit the prices of the following SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES. The Cottage Pattern is plain, standing on shell feet, the Tea and Coffee-pot with a flower ornament on the lids. The King's Pattern is richly embossed with flowers and scrolls. The shape of either is new and elegant.

Cottage Pattern.		King's Pattern.
Strong Silver Teapot	£12 0 0	Strong Silver Teapot	£12 0 0
Ditto Sugar Basin .	6 16 0	Ditto Sugar Basin .	7 10 0
Ditto Milk Ewer . .	4 10 0	Ditto Cream Ewer .	5 10 0
Ditto Coffee-pot . .	15 0 0	Ditto Coffee-pot . .	15 0 0
Complete . .	£38 6 0	Complete . .	£40 0 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the show-rooms, where may be selected every article of Silver requisite for the sideboard or plate-chest. Pamphlets of prices, illustrated with sketches of the various articles, gratis, and forwarded, postage free, to all parts of the kingdom.

A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The extraordinary success of this Medicine is the wonder of the age; it has been tried by hundreds of thousands as an aperient, and has in every instance done good; it has never in the slightest degree impaired the most delicate constitution. Tens of thousands have testified that perseverance in the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS will completely cure any disease, and are living witnesses of the benefit received from this invaluable medicine. Sheets of testimonials and the "Life and Times of Old Parr," may be had gratis of every respectable Medicine Vendor throughout the Kingdom.

Beware of spurious imitations of the above medicine. None are genuine unless the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS ON A RED GROUND, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co.," London, on the directions.

Sold in boxes at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 2*s.* 9*d.*, and family packets at 11*s.*, by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street: Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard, London: Mottershead and Co., Manchester; and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and by all respectable Druggists and Patent Medicine Retailers throughout the Kingdom.—Directions are given with each box.

FOR THE PUBLIC GOOD.

DR. ROBERTS'S CELEBRATED MEDICINES.—The excellent OINTMENT called "THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND," is confidently recommended to the Public as an unfailing remedy for Wounds of every description, and is a specific for Eruptions that sometimes follow vaccination. Sold in pots at 1*s.* 1½*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.* each.—Also his PILULÆ ANTISCROPHULÆ, confirmed by more than 40 years' successful experience as an invaluable remedy, and presents one of the best alteratives ever compounded for purifying the blood, and assisting Nature in all her operations. They are efficacious also in Rheumatism, and form a mild and superior family aperient, and may be taken at all times without confinement or change of diet. Sold in boxes at 1*s.* 1½*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.* each. By the late Dr. ROBERTS'S will, Messrs. BEACH and BARNICOTT (who have been confidentially intrusted with the preparation of his medicines for many years past), are left joint proprietors of the "Poor Man's Friend" and "Pilulæ Antiscrophulæ," &c. with the exclusive right, power, and authority to prepare and vend the same. The utility of these Medicines is fully testified by thousands of persons who have been benefited by their aid.

Beware of Counterfeits.—No Medicines sold under the above names can possibly be genuine unless "BEACH and BARNICOTT, late Dr. ROBERTS, Bridport," is engraved and printed on the stamp affixed to each package. Sold wholesale by the Proprietors, BEACH and BARNICOTT, at their Dispensary, Bridport; by the London houses; and by most respectable Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

PATENT ELECTRO-PLATED AND GILT ARTICLES in every variety, at the Establishments of the Patentees, ELKINGTON & Co., West End—22, Regent-street, corner of Jermyn-street; City—15, Moorgate-street. The Patent Electro processes being extensively adopted under their licence, the Patentees beg to state that they confine their own Manufacture to goods of a superior and warranted quality only, which invariably bear their mark, "E. & Co." under a crown. Old articles replated and gilt.

ELECTRO-PLATING AND GILDING.—OLD PLATED GOODS RESTORED and made equal to new by Messrs. ELKINGTON and Co.'s Patent Process. This process being carried on in London only by Messrs. ELKINGTON & Co., it is particularly requested that all goods may be forwarded direct to their Establishments, 22, Regent-street (corner of Jermyn-street); or 45, Moorgate-street, City. New Goods plated upon White Metal in great variety. Books of Prices and Drawings sent to all parts of the kingdom and abroad free.

PROTECTION AGAINST RAIN.—WATERPROOF CAPES, suitable for GARDENERS and others exposed to the weather, from 5*s.* 6*d.* to 25*s.* each, are made by J. GROSE, 94, Tooley-street, London, where also may be had his approved Patent Waterproof Coats, Trousers, Leggings, Driving Capes, Chaise Aprons, &c.

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a limited period, whilst with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. ROWLAND and SON, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL,

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL,

engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper, nearly 1500 times, containing 25,000 letters.—Price 3*s.* 6*d.*—7*s.*—Family Bottles (equal to 4 small), 10*s.* 6*d.*, and double that size 21*s.* per Bottle. Sold by the Proprietors at 20, Hatton Garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

 All other Articles sold under the same name are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.

News of the Week.

ON Monday Mr. W. Miles brought forward his motion for the application of a portion of the surplus revenue to the relief of the agricultural interest. After adducing statistical returns to prove the impoverished condition of the farmers, Mr. Miles proposed that they should be permitted to use malt for feeding their cattle, that a general Inclosure and Drainage Bill should be brought in by Government, that the cost of criminal prosecutions, now chargeable on the county rates, should be defrayed by the Crown, excepting such minor cases as can be decided summarily by the Magistrates; that one half of the expenses of Coroners' Inquests should be charged on the Consolidated fund, and that the expense of printing the registries of voters should be taken off the counties. The total expense of these changes he estimated at 270,000*l.*, or at 350,000*l.* including Scotland. The motion was opposed by Sir J. Graham and Sir R. Peel, on the ground that its object was to censure the financial policy of Government, and to stop their measures. Sir R. Peel declared his belief that the system of prohibition and extreme protection was wrong, and upon this principle he had attempted gradually to abolish protecting duties, and hitherto with the best success. On a future evening, when Mr. Villiers intended to bring forward his motion, he would state his reasons for believing that the Corn-laws should not be abolished, and that moderate protection was necessary, not on principles of commercial policy, but as essential to a state of things where great interests had grown up. Lord J. Russell regarded the tone of the debate as a proof that protection and monopoly must be gradually abolished, and described the motion as an additional indication that "protection was the bane of agriculture." A long and animated debate ensued, during which Mr. D'Israeli made a bitter and sarcastic attack on the different members of the Administration for now opposing a motion which was identical with that which they supported in opposition, when proposed by the Marquis of Chandos. A division took place, and the motion was rejected by 213 to 78. On Wednesday another desultory discussion ensued on the removal of the duty from various articles used in agriculture, and particularly on its removal from grease and lard. The debate on these questions assumed more of an angry and personal character than has usually been the case on agricultural topics; some of the agricultural members deprecated the opposition of their party on matters of secondary interest, and the discussion terminated in the admission of both articles duty-free. On Tuesday Lord Duncan brought forward his motion for the appointment of a select committee on the Window Tax, with a view to its ultimate remission. The motion was opposed by Government, but with an admission that it was a fit subject for consideration, and with a direct promise from Sir R. Peel that it should come under review hereafter. Lord Duncan, however, determined to take the sense of the House on the subject, and on a division his motion was negatived by 93 to 47. On the same day Mr. Hope, Under-secretary for the Colonies, brought forward his motion for the production of the correspondence with the New Zealand Company. Another debate ensued on the affairs of New Zealand, and on the alleged breach of faith on the part of the Colonial Office, and ultimately the production of the papers was agreed to without a division. On Thursday Mr. Morrison brought forward his resolutions for regulating the charges of railway companies. The motion was opposed by Government, chiefly on the ground of the difficulty of dealing with such a subject without mature deliberation. In the course of the debate Sir R. Peel strongly expressed his opinion in favour of the shortest lines between the great provincial towns and the metropolis, and ultimately the resolutions were withdrawn, on the understanding that Ministers would take them into immediate consideration.

From Switzerland we learn that the Diet has resolved on referring the question of the free corps to the committee already appointed to consider the affair of the Jesuits, and that there is every prospect of both questions being settled amicably.—From the United States we learn that the new President, Mr. Polk, was to enter upon his office on the 3d inst, supported by Mr. Dallas as Vice-President. The Texas question was on the point of being decided by the Senate, and it was believed that it would be thrown out by a majority of one. The Oregon question was still under negotiation, and it was rumoured that a treaty on the subject had been agreed upon between the British Minister and the Government of the United States.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred and the Princesses left Buckingham Palace for Windsor Castle on Wednesday, travelling from London to Slough by a special train of the Great Western Railway. During the week the Queen has taken her usual walks in the Palace Gardens. On Friday Prince Albert presided at a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission, and on Saturday honoured the Marquis of Northampton with his company, at the soirée given by his Lordship as President of the Royal Society. On Saturday evening the Queen and his Royal Highness honoured the Italian Opera with their presence. The Duchess of Kent has returned to Frogmore Lodge from Witley Court, the residence of the Queen Dowager. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by the Princess Mary, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, visited the Royal Exchange on Friday, and were conducted through the different parts of the building.

The Queen's Drawing-Room.—Notice has been given from the Lord Chamberlain's Office that Her Majesty will hold a drawing-room at St. James's Palace on Thursday, the 10th April.

Parliamentary Movements.—The Dartmouth Election Committee have been sitting for several days to receive evidence on a petition presented by Mr. Moffat against the return of Mr. Somes, on the ground that he was, when elected, a Government contractor. On Wednesday, the Chairman said the committee had found the case full of embarrassment, both as to the law and the facts; but after full and anxious consideration, they had resolved, that at the time of the last election for the borough of Dartmouth, Mr. Joseph Somes was not disqualified from being elected a member to serve in Parliament by reason of being engaged in any contracts within the meaning of the Act of the 22d Geo. III., c. 45. The Counsel for Mr. Moffat, upon this, declared that he would not offer any evidence on the other allegations of the petition.

Death of the Bishop of Ely.—After a lingering illness, Bishop Allen expired on Thursday at the Palace at Ely. Last week it was hoped that a favourable change had taken place, but a relapse occurred on Friday, and his lordship's strength gradually failed. His death was tranquil in the extreme, and he was perfectly sensible to the last. Dr. Fisher, the Downing Professor of Medicine in the University of Cambridge, was in attendance at the Palace when his lordship died. Dr. Allen was translated from Bristol to Ely in 1836, having previously been appointed to the former See under the administration of Lord Melbourne.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The proceedings in the French Chambers continue to be the chief topic of the Paris papers. The most prominent fact they allude to is the nomination of a committee, on the proposition of M. Muret de Bord, for the immediate conversion of the Five per Cents. Only one of the nine members composing the committee—M. de Tracy, an oppositionist—contests the principle of the proposition. The remaining eight advocate the operation, but are divided on the question of time; some of them contending for the expediency of leaving to Ministers the introduction of the measure, and at their own convenience. The question next in importance is the proposition of M. de Remusat for declaring certain public functions incompatible with those of a member of the Chamber of Deputies. The committee on that subject, chosen on Friday, occasioned a species of trial of strength between the Ministerialists and the Coalition, and terminated so satisfactorily for the former, that had not undeniable proofs of the contrary been shown on many recent instances, Ministers would appear to possess the confidence of a considerable majority of the Chamber. Of the nine members of the committee on the proposition, five are Ministerialists. The votes given on the occasion were—for the Ministerialists, 191; for the Coalition, 155; majority for the former, 36; but this is not admitted by the Opposition prints to prove anything. On Saturday the motion of M. Montlaville, for the abolition of the stamp-duty on newspapers, was withdrawn after a long discussion, during which several amendments were brought forward, and all rejected. On Wednesday the Minister of Public Works presented a Bill for granting no less a sum than 80,000,000*f.* in order to improve the internal navigation, such as that of the Yonne, Lower Seine, Sarthe, Mayenne, and other streams, and on Monday introduced a bill for the formation of a railroad from Paris to Lyons, and from Lyons to Avignon. The Chamber, on Wednesday, adopted the motion of M. Duvergier D'Hauranne, abolishing the ballot, or secret voting, except in cases where it may be demanded by 20 members. In the Chamber of Peers, on Thursday, a bill for closing the accounts of 1842 was adopted, after a short discussion on the subject of the defences of Algiers.—The papers state that nine archbishops and upwards of forty bishops had already signified their approval of the pastoral letter issued by the Cardinal Archbishop of Lyons, condemning M. Dupin's work on the ecclesiastical law, and that the number was daily increasing. The Opposition prints angrily notice an order issued by the Minister of War, for prohibiting all officers and soldiers from connecting themselves with freemasons' lodges. The Duke de Broglie, who was to have left for London on Thursday, had again postponed his departure. The Constitutionnel states, that two systems are proposed as substitutes for the right of search for the repression of the slave trade. The first would consist in stationing an equal number of English and French cruisers at the mouths of the rivers, and before the usual places of rendezvous of the slave vessels, as well at their points of departure as of their arrival. The second plan proposed is the destruction of the slave factories established on different parts of the African coast, and a declaration of war against all the negro chiefs who should thereafter engage in that traffic.—Whilst M. Guizot has been engaged in party contests in the Chambers, his political rival has come forth with a work which must greatly add to his popularity in the country, apart from the high character it may procure him amongst literary men;—M. Thiers has published his History of the Consulate, containing stirring pictures of battles, in which the French culled such undying laurels. The first edition of this work appeared in Paris on Saturday, and was completely exhausted in the course of a few hours. At 4 o'clock 10,000 copies had been sold, and 6000 of a new edition, then in the press, were bespoken.—A grand banquet was given on Sunday by the merchants of Paris to Marshal Bugeaud, in the Great Hall of the Bourse. The number present was limited to 400, among whom were the Dukes of Nemours, Aumale, and Montpensier, the Prince de Joinville, the Prefect of the Seine, the Prefect of Police, &c. M. Cunin Gridaine, the Minister of Commerce, was the only member of the Government who attended.—The Débats devotes nearly half its publication to the details of "a treaty of amity of commerce and navigation concluded between France and the Imaum of Muscat, on the 17th November last, at Zanzibar, the capital of the African possessions of the Imaum, and the place of residence of that Prince." By this treaty French subjects are to be allowed to reside, trade, and travel in that country, and will enjoy all the immunities granted to the most favoured nations. French goods imported will be subject to a duty not exceeding 5 per cent., no article of commerce will be prohibited, and five-franc pieces are to be current at their real value.—The powder magazine at Algiers exploded on the 8th inst., by which 88 persons were killed and 48 wounded. They are principally soldiers of artillery. Marshal Bugeaud left Paris for Algiers on Tuesday.—A great fall of snow took place in Paris and the neighbouring country on Saturday. The winter in France has been the severest known for the last 40 years. M. Arago, in addition to prognosticating the most severe winter which had been known for many years, took a bet of 50,000 francs that the Seine would be frozen over at Paris on the night of the 5th of March, which he has won. The ice last week was so strong as to bear carriages.

SPAIN.—The Madrid papers state that on the 6th inst., the report of the majority of the Committee on the restoration of the Church Property question was read in the Chamber, and was entirely in favour of the Government proposition. The debate on the Bill commenced on the 11th, and on the 13th the views of the minority were submitted to a division and rejected by 117 to 27. Far more interest had been excited by a violent remonstrance which M. Egana had made against the successful resistance of M. Garnier-Pages, M. Odillon Barrot, and other Members of the French Chamber of Deputies, to the Spanish Three per Cents. being officially quoted at the Paris Bourse. M. Egana said that it was France that had reduced Spain to her present state of poverty, by twice invading her territory in the most treacherous manner; and it little behoved a country which had created the assignats, and burned on the public squares the titles of her debt, to speak contumeliously of Spaniards, and reproach them with not paying their debts. M. Mon, the Minister of Finance, who succeeded M. Egana, said that the Spanish Ministers regarded with contempt the accusations directed by those French Deputies against Spain; and afterwards exposed at some length the guarantees on which he relied for the regular payment of the interest of the Three per Cent. debt. The Minister of the Interior introduced on the 11th his new electoral law, by which the number of members in the Chamber of Deputies is to be increased to 306.—General Araoz, who was arrested some months ago, under pretence of being engaged in one of General Narvaez's alleged conspiracies, and for whose execution, without trial, orders had at one time been given, has been brought before a Court-Martial, and fully acquitted.—The prospectus of a Spanish railway, called the "Great North of Spain," the object of which is to construct a line from Aviles, in the Bay of Biscay, to Madrid, has just made its appearance. The Government ordinance under which the company act, grants them a lease for 99 years of such of the public or crown lands as may be required gratuitously, an exemption from import duties on machinery for ten years, and the formation into a compania anonima, by which the liability of shareholders is limited to the amount of their shares. More than a third of the shares have already been subscribed in Spain.—According to letters from Rome, Queen Christina has written to the King of Naples, and urged him to send to Madrid Prince Francisco de Paula, Count de Trapani, in order that he may sojourn for some time in that capital. The Queen says that, as the period of her daughter's marriage approaches, it would be of advantage to the Count to be at Madrid.

PORTUGAL.—Letters from Lisbon of the 11th inst. give an account of a serious commotion in the district of Felgueiras, attended with the loss of many lives, and the incendiarism of several houses. The tumult from which these disturbances arose was occasioned by an attempt to levy and collect a new impost on wines. The continuance of arbitrary acts appear to have produced the consequences that might be expected. Some of those connected with trade were evident enough in the reduction of the imports of British manufactures to nearly one-half the amount of packages of the preceding year. Other regulations, greatly augmenting the port dues, have influenced the Peninsular Steam Company in determining that their steamers should touch at Lisbon and Oporto once only in ten days, after April next.

SWITZERLAND.—M. Pontois, the French Minister at Berne, has presented to the Diet a letter from M. Guizot, in which he repeats the arguments used by Lord Aberdeen in a similar document to the British Minister, and in still stronger terms points out the risk of foreign intervention if the recent outbreak be repeated. The adjourned debate on the free corps was resumed on the 9th, and was very animated. After vehement speeches from the deputies of Argau, Lucerne, and Bâle country, the discussion became so warm that the president was obliged to remind the members that all personalities were expressly forbidden by the standing rules of the assembly. The Catholic deputies, who abstained from voting on the question of nominating the committee on the question of the Jesuits, demanded a distinct committee on that as to the free-corps, upon the election of which it could take part; but this was denied them. The note of M. Guizot was the object of bitter recrimination from the deputies of the Radical cantons. The sitting on the 10th was opened with the reading by the president of M. Guizot's note, but he made no communication of his reply to it further than stating that it was a suitable one. Numerous petitions for the expulsion of the Jesuits were presented and laid upon the table. The deputy for Argau, which has furnished the largest of the free-corps, and is considered to be that which will be the focus of a re-invasion of Lucerne if the Diet is found not to have sufficient power to bring the question of the Jesuits to a solution consistent with popular feeling, spoke with great violence against the recall of the Jesuits to Lucerne, which, he said, threw the whole country into a state of fermentation. The deputy for Thurgau observed that the Diet ought not to consider the measure to be taken as under the compact, and that it would contradict itself, if it did not adopt repressive measures against the interposition of the free-corps, and above all, if it proceeded in the first instance against the Jesuits. He observed that the almost unanimous instructions of the cantons in this respect was a proof that Switzerland clearly understands the question. They had shown that the cantons were perfectly acquainted with the rights of nations, and therefore had not expected that any foreign power would arrogate to itself the right of giving lessons to the Swiss, and that too in a language offensive to the feelings of the nation. The discussion having terminated, the votes were taken. The following cantons voted for referring the question of the free-corps to a committee, viz., Berne, Soleure, Schaffhausen, St. Gall, Argau, Tesino, Geneva, Vaud, Thurgau, Grisons. Outer Appenzell, Bale Town, Glaris, and Zurich, making 12 and two halves. Against this decision were Uri, Unterwald, Zug, Valais, Neufchatel, Inner Appenzell, Friburg, Schwytz, and Lucerne, making 8½. It was also decided that the committee should be the same as that to which the affair of the Jesuits has been referred.

GERMANY.—The accounts from all parts of Germany and the northern division of Europe are most heartrending of the sufferings of the people for the want of provisions, the navigation and communication being in many places quite interrupted by the frost. The mortality both among the people and the cattle is quite fearful. In some places it is said that the deaths are as 6 to 1 to the births. It is now more than three months that Hamburgh has been a sealed port, and the greatest part of the time even Cuxhaven has not been approached. The Elbe above Hamburgh, it is said, is frozen to the bottom, and is one solid mass of ice. Fortunately the Rhine, and all the rivers on the continent, are unusually low in their beds, or great fear would be apprehended from the ice and snow when a thaw shall come. A Berlin letter of the 6th informs us that the memory of the oldest persons does not furnish them with the recollection of a winter in which so large a quantity of snow has fallen in Germany as during the present. The railroads of the Harz and Silesia, and those of Magdeburg to Leipsic, were, at the date of this account, covered with snow to the depth of 3 feet, and therefore impassable.

DENMARK AND SWEDEN.—The Elsinore Journal says the traffic on the ice, between that place and Helsingborg, especially for pedestrians, was greater than was ever remembered. It was reckoned that on the 2d above 2500 Swedes and 2000 Danes had crossed the Sound. The Municipality of Stockholm have unanimously resolved to have an equestrian statue erected in that city, in memory of the late King Charles Johan. The celebrated Bavarian sculptor Schwanthaler has been intrusted to execute the model. The dispute between the order of the nobles and the other orders of the State in Sweden seems to be increasing. We learn, by a letter from Stockholm, that the Committee of the Constitution has come to a resolution to propose to the Diet that in future no noblemen shall be allowed to preside over the electoral assemblies of the agriculturists, and that the privilege possessed by the nobility of accompanying the King when he visits the Hall of the States shall be abolished.

ITALY.—Letters from Naples state that Mr. Charles Dickens (Boz) has been received at Naples with the greatest enthusiasm. They state that his only mistake was coming for three weeks instead of so many months, as he might then, perhaps, have accepted about one-half the invitations he received. On the 21st he ascended Vesuvius, and was extremely fortunate, for on that night a new cone burst forth, and, throwing up red-hot stones and cinders, was awfully grand, the whole mountain from the crater to its base being white with snow, nothing like it having been seen since the eruption of January, 1839. On the 26th, Mr. Dickens started for Rome, to spend the Holy Week in that city, and we learn from thence that he has been admitted to an audience with the Pope.

GREECE.—Letters from Athens state that M. Coletti, on the first question submitted to the Legislature by his Cabinet, has been left in a minority of 97. This unexpected event, however, has attracted less notice than a matter of court intrigue, arising out of the absence of the President of the Chamber of Deputies, when required by the Queen to dance with her at a ball given at the Palace. The President's absence was said to have been intentional, but he gave an excuse which would have been considered satisfactory in any other country, showing that he was obliged to leave the Palace for a time. The Cabinet, however, compelled him, although an old man, a general officer, and the President of a representative body, to ask the Queen's pardon on his knees, and he was obliged to submit to this humiliation!

TURKEY.—We have accounts from Constantinople of the 26th Feb. On the previous day, a hatti-sheriff was promulgated by the Government, which may be considered as a corollary to the celebrated one read a few weeks ago in the Grand Council by the Sultan himself, and in which he rated his Ministers for their gross negligence of improvement in the government and education of the people throughout his dominions. The Ministers assert their anxiety to promote the improvement of the condition of the people, and in order to obtain the necessary information as to what is to be done, they purpose to summon 2 deputies from each town or district, the one a Turk, and the other a Rayah, who shall give evidence as to the condition of the places which they are called upon to represent; and upon a digest of this evidence, a plan will be formed for the improvement of the government, and for its assimilation with the government of European states.—Dr. Wolff arrived at Constantinople on the 22d, and was to leave for London by the Oriental Steam Company's packet.

UNITED STATES.—By the arrival of the Hibernia steamer we have accounts from New York to the 28th ult. Congress was to close its session on March 3d, and on the following day Mr. Polk, the democratic President elect, would enter upon his functions, supported by Mr. Dallas as Vice-President. The President would then deliver his inaugural address on the steps of the capitol, in the presence of the multitude. The question of the annexation of Texas was on the point of being decided by the Senate; and the numbers in that assembly are so nearly balanced, that the defection of a single vote (that of Mr. Bagsby, of Alabama, whose vote had been counted upon for annexation, but who, in a clever speech, had come out strongly against it at the last hour), was looked to with great interest, and would, it is said, give a majority of one against the measure. The discussion in the Senate opened on the 13th ult., and was continued with great spirit up to the 26th, when an adjournment took place. The vote would, it was thought, be taken on the following day. Mr. Polk, the new President, is said to have been using all his influence in favour of the measure, the fate of which was undecided at the latest accounts. As regards the Oregon question, we are apprised by a message from President Tyler that it was still in progress, and that it was conducted on both sides in an amicable spirit, with a probability of its being brought speedily to a close. He, therefore, declines furnishing the correspondence called for. Upon this point the Journal of Commerce remarks, "Under such circumstances the Senate will not, of course, agree to the bill from the House of Representatives for organising a territorial Government in Oregon; but if the negotiation should result in a failure, and the fact be communicated to the Senate before the adjournment, which must take place on the 3d March, a joint resolution would, doubtless, be passed by both Houses, requiring the President to give to the British Government the 12 months' notice required by the treaty." The New York Express says, "Mr. Pakenham and Mr. Calhoun, it was whispered, had agreed upon an Oregon treaty, which had been submitted to Mr. Polk for his opinion." No less than three messages had been sent to Congress by President Tyler, the one above mentioned relating to the Oregon question; another relating to the evils which beset the system for the prevention of the slave trade, and the annoyances to which American citizens are at present exposed; and the third relating to the indemnities which Mexico owes to the citizens of the United States. The papers publish a correspondence between the State Department at Washington and Mr. Everett, United States Minister in London, in reference to seven fugitive criminals, who, it is alleged, committed robbery, arson, and murder in East Florida, and afterwards escaped to Nassau. Their surrender is claimed by the General Government, under the provisions of the Washington treaty. The associated judges refused to deliver up the fugitives, on the ground that the evidence was not such as was required by the Act of Parliament for giving up criminals fugitives from justice. Mr. Calhoun assumes that the refusal is to be attributed to the fact that the fugitives are slaves, and is very argumentative upon the point. Mr. Everett obtained an interview with Lord Aberdeen, who justified the grounds upon which the refusal had been given, and, in conclusion, Mr. Calhoun says the result of the interference is unsatisfactory, and Mr. Everett is instructed to call "the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the subject, and to urge a speedy decision in strong and earnest language." Another case in which the powers of the Ashburton treaty were put in requisition happened at St. John's, New Brunswick, where a Boston thief was arrested and claimed by the American consul. —A new charter of the city of Nauvoo had passed the Illinois House by about 20 majority, and would probably pass the Senate. There are no indications that the example of Pennsylvania, in the payment of its debt, will be followed by any other State.—Canadian accounts report that the Ministry have had two defeats—the 1st, on a local measure, by a vote of 34 to 26; the 2d, on a bill reducing the salaries of certain public officers and funding the fees of office, by 35 to 23. With this exception, there is not one item of news. The Ministry in New Brunswick had also suffered a defeat. The House of Assembly having passed a resolution on a former day, declaratory of disapprobation at the appointment of the son-in-law of the Governor to the office of Provincial Secretary, and waited a week in vain for some action on the part of the Government in reference thereto, and the reorganisation of the Council, on the 20th inst. a vote of "No confidence" was moved, and carried by a vote of 22 to 9. From Mexico we learn that Santa Anna was to be brought to trial as a public defaulter, and not as a traitor to the State; a course of proceeding which would seem to indicate punishment less rigorous than death. His young wife stuck to him in his reversal of fortune, and was the companion of his hours in prison. The Mexican Government, as fixed by the revolution, seems to remain unaltered.—We regret to state that two of the American packets from Liverpool to New York, the England and the United States, are missing, and fears are entertained that they were lost in the gales which have lately prevailed in the Atlantic. The Normandie, from Hull, is also missing. The state of the weather continued very severe in the United States, accompanied with snow, that rendered travelling an arduous task.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday.—On the motion of the Earl of RADNOR, a Bill, similar to one introduced by his lordship last session, for regulating the stoppage of letters at the post-office, was read a first time. —The Earl of MINTO, in laying upon the table a petition from the schoolmasters of Wigton, praying further provision, observed that the subject had been received with much favour by Government last year; but he was not aware, and hoped now to learn, whether Ministers had made up their minds as to the course it would be fit to pursue. It was to be hoped that the present stipends might be raised to 50*l.* a year, but he only threw out this sum as a suggestion, and in the hope also that something might be done towards the establishment of a retiring fund. He was fully sensible that many difficulties might present themselves, but he thought that they might be overcome.—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH assured the noble Earl that the subject had engaged the serious attention of Government, but they found that much information was needed that could not be acquired through the medium of returns. Ministers had, therefore, come to the determination of appointing a select committee of their lordships' House, who would inquire into the whole subject, and would prepare a report upon which legislation might be founded. The noble Earl had correctly stated that the subject was surrounded with various difficulties, some of which were of minor importance, but others of considerable magnitude. He would move, therefore, that a committee be appointed.—The Earl of MINTO expressed his satisfaction, and the motion for appointing a committee was put and carried.—On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the House went into committee on the Deodands Abolition Bill.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH said that this was a very short Bill, but there was one part of it which he thought might be spared. There were two reasons given for one effect; and one of these portions might, in his opinion, with advantage be omitted from the Bill. He thought the fewer words that were introduced into an Act of Parliament, provided they were sufficiently intelligible, the better.—Lord CAMPBELL was prepared to receive whatever fell from the noble Earl with the utmost respect, but in this instance he thought he was mistaken. His object had been to make the Bill as short as possible—indeed, he conceived it to be a model of a Bill, for it did not consist of more than a few lines. His object had been to avoid that verbosity to which lawyers were said to be prone, and he conceived that was one of the perfections of an Act of Parliament. He must also say that he was surprised that these objections should come from the noble Earl, for he had himself dealt in unnecessary words, if certain documents which had come from India, and which were reported to have been actually written by the noble Earl, were not, as many in this country supposed, mere impositions. He need only allude to the song of triumph which they had seen, and which he believed the noble Duke opposite could not much approve of.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH said he was glad the noble and learned Lord had referred to his conduct in India. He was there to answer him or any man, and he should then wish to hear said in his presence that which had been said in his absence.—Lord CAMPBELL assured the noble Earl that in the observations which he made he had not the most distant intention of saying anything reflecting on his conduct. He would merely say, if the noble Earl was contented with things as they remained so was he.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH—I beg to give the noble and learned Lord a piece of advice, which I believe was once given by Lord Chatham in the House of Commons to some member of that House who had chosen to arraign his conduct, which was this—that the next time he meant nothing he had better say nothing.—Lord BROUGHAM I hope, my lords, this will go no further. My noble friend, who was absent on former occasions, says, as I know, that nothing would ever give him more satisfaction than to hear himself openly attacked in his presence, for he is ready to defend himself; but I must add, as often as anything has been said in impeachment of his conduct, in his absence, he was most zealously and most anxiously defended by the Duke of Wellington, and zealously, though God knows, not ably, but, I believe, successfully, by the individual who now addresses your lordships.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH—I know the whole amount of gratitude which I owe to the noble duke on this subject, as I do on all others. But, my lords, I cannot venture to speak on this subject.—The Bill then passed through committee, and was reported.—The Property-tax Bill was read a second time, on the understanding that the discussion upon it shall be taken on the third reading, after Easter.—On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, the Pauper Lunatics (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.—The Companies Clauses Consolidation (England and Scotland) Bills passed through committee.

Tuesday.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the Constables' (Scotland) Bill, the Consolidated Fund Eight Millions, and the Stamp Duties Assimilation (Ireland) Bill.—In reply to the Marquis of LONDONDERRY, the Duke of WELLINGTON stated that he was anxious to lay on the table the report of Mr. Faraday and Mr. Lyall, on the subject of the recent coal mine explosions; but that the report was not yet in a perfect state.—The Earl of ROSEBERY asked the nature of the plan which Government intend to propose in reference to an alteration of the law on the subject of banking in Scotland; and when the measure would be proposed for the consideration of Parliament?—The Duke of WELLINGTON declined to answer further than that it was the intention of the Prime Minister to bring in his proposed measure at the earliest possible period.—The Property-tax Bill passed through committee, and was ordered to be read a third time on the 4th April; their lordships to be summoned. Their lordships adjourned, for the Easter recess, to Thursday, the 3d April.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—After the discussion on Mr. Hope's announcement respecting the production of the New Zealand papers, Sir R. PEEL, in answer to Mr. B. COCHRANE said that he regarded the conduct of Sir E. Lyons, our representative at Athens, as able and judicious, and promoted by the sincerest desire to promote the interests of Greece. With respect to the conduct of M. Piscatory, he declined to utter any opinion. As to General Church, he deeply regretted the removal from office of that man, whose whole life had been distinguished by the warmest desire to advance Greek independence. Sir R. Peel added that the relations of France and England towards Greece had not been neglected.—On the motion for going into Committee on the Sugar Duties Bill, Mr. HAWES moved as an amendment, "That provision be made in the Bill for the drawback of the amount of the duty reduced, on such duty-paid sugar as now remains in the Queen's warehouses."—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER declared that he could not accede to the motion without doing serious injustice to others in the trade.—Mr. LABOUCHERE urged, that though in ordinary circumstances drawbacks ought not to be allowed, yet that this was a special case, which could not be drawn into a precedent.—Mr. CARDWELL said it was quite impossible, in reduction of taxation, to reimburse everybody that unfortunately suffered. That being the case, it would be unjust to the others, if one were to be made the exception. Although the necessity for adhering to the settled rule in cases where hardship existed was to be regretted, it was also inevitable.—Mr. F. BARING asserted that the principle sought to be maintained so stringently had been violated by the right hon. gentleman opposite in 1842, in respect to the wine trade.—Sir G. CLERK denied that the case of the wine trade bore any analogy to this. He also proclaimed the injustice of consenting to the amendment.—Mr. HUME expressed his astonishment at the adherence of the Government to the "sharp practice" system they had adopted.—After some debate, Sir R. PEEL said, that looking upon this as a special case, involving no precedent which would sanction an habitual violation of a rule devised to preserve the revenue from fraud and loss, he was willing to sanction the introduction of a provision in the Bill, by which the dealers would be enabled to obtain compensation for whatever bonâ fide loss which, in the present instance, they may sustain.—Lord J. RUSSELL expressed his satisfaction with this determination, and advised Mr. Hawes to leave the question in the hands of the Government.—Mr. HAWES assented, and the amendment was withdrawn.—Sir W. CLAY urged the claims of the sugar refiners for compensation on stock in process of refining, on which they may have paid the duty of 25*s.* 3*d.*—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said he would announce on Monday the course which Government will adopt in dealing with the different propositions to which they had expressed their intention of yielding.—The House then went into committee on the Sugar Duties Bill, and during its progress Mr. HAWES criticised the Government classification of duties, which he affirmed to be adverse to sound commercial principle, and the true interests of the community.—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER briefly replied that there was a preponderance of opinion amongst practical men in favour of the Government plan.—The Bill, after considerable discussion, and a division, went through committee.—A desultory conversation then took place upon the course to be taken in the transaction of public business, which led, on the subject of Mr. Miles's motion for relief to the agricultural interest, to a lively altercation, in which several Members took part.—Mr. FERRAND denounced the Government for having betrayed the agricultural interest, and Mr. P. BORTHWICK retorted that in 1842 he was the only formidable opponent of the Government, and that it was now too late in the day for the agricultural interests to come forward with complaints of measures which they had assisted to pass. In fact, motions of this kind were only intended to delude and mystify. The farmers had perished by the hands of their "friends," and now found their truest friends in the free-traders and the Government.—Lord J. RUSSELL asked if Mr. Miles had anything practical to propose as a substitute for the Government propositions? If so, some notice ought to be given of it.—Sir R. PEEL remarked that any motion claiming regard for the agricultural interests necessarily involved a censure on the propositions of the Government. In this view the proposer of such a motion ought to have something practical to suggest for their adoption.—Mr. W. MILES replied that he contemplated relief from the burden of the county rates, as a practical result of his motion.—Mr. F. SHAW, in moving for an inquiry into the merits of the atmospheric railway, raised a discussion on the subject, and ultimately obtained from Sir R. Peel an acquiescence, on the part of Government, to the appointment of a committee to inquire into the merits of the system.—The Bastardy Bill was read a third time and passed.

Monday.—At a morning sitting, the reports of the Railway Clauses Consolidation and the Land Clauses Consolidation Bills were received, and their third reading fixed for Wednesday. The Land Clauses Consolidation (Scotland), and the Railway Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bills passed through committee. At the evening sitting, Sir R. PEEL moved the first reading of the Jewish Disabilities Bill.—Sir R. INGLIS said as it was customary, out of courtesy, to allow the first reading of any Bill which came from the House of Lords to obtain a first reading, he should merely say "No" to this; but he gave notice that he should substantially oppose it on its second reading.—Sir J. GRAHAM having stated that the Government had not yet made up its mind on the Bill for limiting labour in calico print works, Lord ASHLEY postponed the second reading till the 3d April, protesting, at the same time, against the hesitation of Ministers in sanctioning the principle of his measure.—Sir R. Peel, in answer to Mr. Bellew, stated that his contemplated measures respecting Ireland were two Bills, one relating to Maynooth, the other to academical education, which will be introduced as soon after Easter as the progress made in other business will permit.—In reply to Mr. Duff, Sir R. Peel said he would reserve any statements as to the contemplated legislation on banking in Scotland till he was making a full explanation on the subject. He could not say when this would be.—In answer to Captain Bernal Osborne, Sir R. Peel said Government were considering the Landlord and Tenant Commission Report, with the view of ascertaining if any legislative measure can be founded on it.—On the order of the day for going into committee on the Customs Act, Mr. W. Miles moved as an amendment, "That it is the opinion of this House, that in the application of surplus revenue towards relieving the burdens of the country by reduction or remission of taxation, due regard should be had to the necessity of affording relief to the agricultural interest." The Hon. Member having called attention to the fact that everything had been done by the Government to benefit the commercial and manufacturing interests, while nothing had been done by them to encourage the agricultural classes, set out by disclaiming any intention of asking for a repeal of the malt tax, although he thought that some of the burdens that pressed upon the land might be sought to be lightened. He maintained that the agricultural distress was not local, but general, and he attributed that distress, in a great degree, to the measures passed by Parliament since the coming into power of the present Ministers. The Hon. Member entered into a variety of statistical tables, returns, and calculations, to show the quantity of foreign corn and foreign cattle imported since the passing of the Corn Act, the Canada Corn Act, and the new Tariff, and to prove the detrimental effects caused by the immense importation which had taken place. Having established the impoverished condition of the farmers, Mr. Miles proceeded to suggest the alleviations which he thought might with justice be acceded to them. He proposed that they should be permitted to use malt for feeding their cattle—a boon that would cost the revenue little or nothing. He proposed that a general Inclosure Bill and a general Drainage Bill should be brought in under the sanction of the Government. He likewise proposed that the cost to the counties of criminal prosecutions should be lightened; that is, that only such cases should be paid for out of the county rates as could not be decided except by a jury at the assizes, and over which the magistrates had no power of decision; and that all other cases should be prosecuted at the expense of the Crown. He also proposed that one half of the expenses of coroners' inquests should be charged on the Consolidated Fund, and that the charge of printing the registries of voters should be taken off the counties. The total expense of these ameliorations would not exceed 270,000*l.* or including Scotland, 350,000*l.*—a sum small in amount, but which would be regarded as a recognition of the principle that the Legislature looked to the interests of land, as well as the interests of manufactures and commerce. The hon. member concluded his speech by stating that he had not brought forward his amendment with the assent of the agricultural members generally, but that he and his friends were convinced that, by persevering with it, they would only perform their duty to their constituents.—The Earl of March most heartily seconded the motion. If he had thought, when the new Corn Law was brought in by the right hon. baronet, that it was to be followed by the Tariff and Canada Corn Bill, no power would have induced him to vote for it.—Sir J. Graham was strongly of opinion that, looking to the interests of the whole community, protection should still be afforded to the agricultural interest. But the question was not as to its principle but its amount. The efforts made by the late Government to check the accumulating deficiency in the revenue, showed that we had reached the limits of taxation on consumption, as evinced by the failure of the additional ten per cent. in the Customs and Excise. The present Government were therefore obliged to resort to great experiments, by which, in three years, they remitted between six and seven millions in indirect taxation, of which the agricultural interest would receive its share. Take the wool duties, which he considered to be a boon to the landed interest three or four times the value of the proposition made by Mr. Miles, the price of wool being now higher than ever. When complaint was made of the large quantity of foreign corn imported in the three years following the act of 1842, as compared with the three years following the act of 1828, it was forgotten how largely the population had been and was increasing. Without larger facilities for the admission of foreign corn, we ran the risk of some frightful convulsion, as during our recent commercial distresses. He looked upon the Canadian Corn Bill as a useful subsidiary measure to the act of 1842. The great defect of the sliding scale was its tendency to encourage speculation with a view to raise prices immediately before the harvest was reaped. This the Canadian Corn Act kept in check, as the opening of the St. Lawrence in spring enabled cargoes to arrive here during summer. Ridiculing the idea of the importation of foreign cattle causing the fall in prices, looking to the small number brought over, he told the agriculturists that there was another thing which they ought to fear much more—low wages in the manufacturing districts, thereby contracting ability to consume agricultural produce. As to Mr. Miles's proposition, never had there been so small a demand made by so great an interest. In 1813, with a population of 10,500,000, the poor and county rates were 8,600,000*l.*; in 1845, with a population of 16,500,000, they amounted to 6,800,000*l.*; or, while the population had increased one-third, the rates had diminished one-third; at the former period being a charge of 16*s.* 3*d.* on each head of the population, at the latter of only 8*s.* 4*d.* Arguing generally against the proposition for shifting the burden of the county rates, which was not now in that House, he sat down by intimating the determination of Government to oppose the motion.—Mr. Newdigate supported the amendment. He said that of late free-trade principles had been universally recognised in that House; but the speech of the right hon. gentleman was in a tone different from, and better than, those they had lately heard. The hon. member for Stockport seemed the high priest of free trade, and the members of the Government his chanting fellows to re-echo his strains.—Lord J. Russell remarked that the proceedings of that night were an additional evidence that "protection was the bane of agriculture." Mr. Miles, instead of proposing the repeal of the tariff and the Canadian Corn Bill, asked for a pitiful boon of some two or three hundred thousand pounds on the county rates, and the "consolatory" speech of Sir James Graham was neither more nor less than a declaration that protection must be gradually abandoned. Restriction and monopoly were every way unfavourable to that energy which competition inspires. Holland once protected spices and silks; these were luxuries: but corn was a necessary which could not be unnaturally enhanced without injury to the community. When in power, he had proposed a moderate fixed duty: but those then in opposition declared that they would not throw the Corn-law into the "lottery of legislation." Coming into power, they had commenced breaking down that protection, which they had been placed in office to maintain, and which, while it existed, gave the farmer a false reliance, and checked his use of capital, science, and skill. He had been accused by Sir R. Peel of "oscillating" between protection and free trade. He preferred a "cautious" (to use Ricardo's phrase) abandonment of monopoly, but then he would never disguise the ultimate end. Quoting from a pamphlet by Lord Ashburton, when Mr. Alexander Baring, in support of a gradual abolition of monopoly, he said that there was one thing they could do for the farmers—not to inspire them with false hopes. How ungracious it was to come forward with complaints that the working man did not pay more for his meat and his bread. Such a complaint tended to diminish all regard for that landed interest which he had every reason to respect [a loud cheer from Col. Sibthorp]. That cheer compelled him to state what he otherwise would have abstained from. His connections were deeply interested in the progress of agriculture; it was the delight of his uncle and his father to gather around them farmers, in order to exhibit the most recent scientific improvements, and to interest them in the advancement of agriculture; and he had, therefore, some ground for urging the landed interest to evince to the people at large that, being the most powerful, they were also the most generous interest in the state.—Mr. Escott blamed the "farmers' friends" for prolonging the distress they deplored. They accused the Corn-law and the tariff of 1842 as being the cause of the distress, and yet protection societies sent about circulars entreating them not to "decrease the present amount of protection," which was to stick to the Corn-law and the Tariff.—Lord Worsley supported the motion.—Mr. D'Israeli gathered that protection was treated not as a principle but as an expedient, to be judged of according to circumstances. He could not then enter on the great question of how far—not free trade but free imports, would with hostile tariffs affect our power of production, the distribution of the precious metals, and our ability to maintain a standard—he would leave that for a time when it might receive a profounder treatment. Confining himself to the motion before him, he recollected that in 1836 an identical motion had been proposed under precisely similar circumstances, by the Marquis of Chandos (now Duke of Buckingham), and it had the support of the then compact and combined Opposition. Looking over the list of those names embalmed in that record to which hon. members often appealed, he could not doubt but the hon. member for Somersetshire would have, not only equal, but even greater success than attended the motion of 1836. For this was a Conservative House of Commons, and the other was a Whig House of Commons. The hon. member for Somersetshire might, on this occasion, count on commanding the support of the right hon. gentleman the Secretary for Ireland (Sir T. Fremantle), who, under similar circumstances, voted for a similar motion. He knew the right hon. gentleman too well to doubt his voting in the same way now. There was then a budget and a surplus; and the agricultural interests said, "Are we not to be considered?" The right hon. gentleman then voted in favour of the motion, and he should not be surprised if the right hon. gentleman would vote in favour of the motion now before the House, neither did he think that the hon. member for Somersetshire need despair of the support of the right hon. gentleman, the Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He supported a similar motion, and under similar circumstances. There was an odd rumour lately of a curious reception which the right hon. gentleman met with from the electors of Stamford. Now here was a golden opportunity for the right hon. gentleman to show the electors of Stamford his love of consistency. The right hon. gentleman conceived, in 1836, that if there was a budget and a surplus, the agriculturists, of whom he was the champion, had a right to be considered; and no doubt he would vote now as he had voted then. The Noble Lord the Member for Nottinghamshire also thought, in 1836, that if there was a surplus, the claims of the agricultural interest ought to be considered. That was his opinion when in Opposition, and of course the fact of his being in office would not cause any change in that opinion. He need not go further. He thought some noble Lords of the Treasury, the Clerk of the Ordnance (Chippenham, the seat of agricultural industry, prevented him from being forgotten) would of course support the motion. The House would at once see how many votes the hon. Member for Somersetshire could reckon upon when he entered the House. It was but just to state this, for no doubt all the constituencies from Buckingham to Chippenham, when they read the division would be doubly grateful for being so represented. Mr. D'Israeli having admitted that Sir R. Peel, on the occasion in question, behaved "most handsomely" towards his usual supporters by going out with the Whigs, and voting with them, turned to his late conduct as Premier. The agriculturists complained of the right hon. gentleman's conduct. No doubt the conduct of the right hon. gentleman when in opposition differed from what it was when a Minister, but allowances should be made for circumstances. They should remember the old story, and not contrast too strongly the hour of courtship with the moment of possession. It was very true there was a difference in the conduct of the right hon. gentleman. He remembered the right hon. gentleman making a protection speech, and the best speech he had ever heard, and he thought it was a great thing to hear him say, "I would sooner be the leader of the gentlemen of England than possess the confidence of sovereigns." That was a grand thing. They did not hear much of the gentlemen of England now. What of that? They had the pleasures of memory, the charms of reminiscences. The gentlemen of England were his first love, and though he might not kneel to them now as he did in the hour of passion, still they could recall the fervency of his past devotion. Did they not know that in all those cases where the beloved object had ceased to charm, it was in vain to appeal to the feelings? Every man must know that. The affections could not be always secured, but in time it would happen, as it happened to his hon. friends, that they would be received with an arrogant silence and a haughty frigidity, and therefore if they really knew anything of human nature, they would take a hint and stop. But they would not stop. Still they would go on. And what happened? Why, what always happened in such cases. The right hon gentleman would interfere no more, but would send down his valet—some genteel gentleman, who would say, "We must have no whining here." Now, that was the case of the agricultural interest—that beauty that everybody wooed, and every one deluded. For his part he cared not what may be the result. Dissolve, if you like, the Parliament you have betrayed, and appeal to the people who mistrust you; to him there had at least remained this opportunity of expressing publicly, that he believed a Conservative Government was an organised hypocrisy.—Mr. Darby reprobated the observations of Mr. D'Israeli, who himself had once "bathed," not merely with the Whigs, but the Radicals, and had hawked about their cast-off clothes.—Mr. Smythe defended Mr. D'Israeli from this attack. Although not prepared to vote for the amendment, the motion, at the best, aimed at this result, viz., to bring the state of this country before the House. To do that might be a great thing, but it was still a greater thing, and productive of more public good, to bring the state of that House before the country.—After some observations from Sir C. Burrell, and Mr. Borthwick, Sir R. Peel said that to encourage the idea that a mere transference of a portion of the county rate to the consolidated fund would be any benefit, would be to practise a delusion on the agricultural interest. But support for Mr. Miles's motion had been sought on other grounds than a mere transference of a sum of 250,000*l.*, which would involve the additional charge of 400,000*l.* on the consolidated fund. Reading a circular from a local protection society, he drew the conclusion that the object of the motion, in general, was to censure the financial policy of the Government, and to stop their measures. He did not repent of the course he had adopted since he assumed office. He remembered Sheffield, with its unlet houses; the tales of people living on the putrid bodies of animals; Paisley, with its thousands who rose daily without food; and when he assumed office he had acted, not for the sake of favouring any one class, but of consulting the interests of the entire community. The House had given its assent to the Income-tax, which it would not have done if the country did not approve of their measures. Compare the present state of commerce and trade with 1842, and whatever may be said of the effects of good harvest, the influence of commercial reforms could not be denied, which by promoting consumption benefited agriculture. Thinking extreme protection and prohibition wrong, he defended moderate protection as necessary, not on principles of commercial policy, but as essential to a state of things where great interests had grown up, and whose injury would be that of the community at large. He had differed in 1836 from the party with which he usually acted, and had told them that there was no law bearing on agriculture, save the malt-tax, which they could remove with advantage to that interest. That was his opinion then, and it was the same now. He would not enter into the question of agricultural protection, for it was not yet raised; but it would be raised on the motion of Mr. Villiers on a future evening, and he would then say why he thought that the Corn Laws should not be abolished. He would not say that agricultural protection should not be reduced indirectly by the tariff, as, for instance, in such articles as lard, grease, &c. He believed the system of prohibition and extreme protection to be wrong, and he should pursue the course which he had hitherto with respect to all such questions. Ministers had attempted gradually to abolish protecting duties, and hitherto with the best success. He looked to the position of the country now, and to that in which they found it on taking office; and on review of every circumstance, he contended that Ministers were justified in the course which they had pursued, and were encouraged to persevere in it. Mr. D'Israeli had said that Ministers had purchased power by pledges which they had not redeemed. He would not enter into any personal recrimination with that gentleman; but when on a former occasion that charge had been made, Mr. D'Israeli had volunteered the defence of the Government. He held in the same estimation the panegyric and the attack; but he was surprised that the attack should have come from the same gentleman who delivered the panegyric.—After some remarks from the Marquis of Granby and Mr. G. Bankes, the House divided. For the amendment, 78; against it, 213; Majority, 135.—The House went into committee on the Customs Act, and Sir R. Peel moved the first resolution for abolishing the duties on certain commodities, a list of which was read from the chair. When the chairman came to basket-rods peeled and unpeeled, Mr. M. Milnes referred to some communication he had had with ministers upon this subject, and to the amount of capital invested in the growth of willows, which was in the hands of small proprietors. The cultivation was extremely expensive, and the returns slow, as it took four or five years before a crop could be procured. If foreign willows were admitted, Holland, where labour was cheap, would undersell the home grower, and numbers now engaged in the trade would be ruined. He hoped, therefore, that the right honourable baronet would do a gracious act, and omit basket rods, peeled and unpeeled, from the list of commodities, the duty on which was to be abrogated.—Sir R. Peel was sorry that he could not comply. If he gave way upon this article, there were many others in the same predicament which would have an equal claim.—Mr. Ferrand confirmed the statement made by Mr. Milnes. The price of willows had already been reduced to nearly half in the last two or three years.—On the Chairman reading the article "Brazil wood," a discussion arose on the admission of new furniture woods, and some modification was promised. The list was then proceeded with, and on coming to the article "grease,"—Mr. Miles said he wished to come to some understanding as to the mode in which the committee was to proceed. There were several articles in this list the admission of which acted entirely against British agricultural produce. Now, he did not wish to retard the business of Government, by preventing those articles being passed to which no objection was made. What he desired was, that all articles objected to should be left open, to be the subject of discussion on some future day. He objected to the article grease.—Mr. Hutt asked what was meant by the article grease?—Sir G. Clerk said it was butter in an unfit state for human food, and mixed with tar.—Mr. Bright was astonished that the honourable member for Somersetshire should not object to the introduction of chalk; for it might be called an agricultural produce, since it formed, he believed, a great part of London milk. It was very extraordinary that in order that goods should be admitted into this country, they should have the especial quality of being unfit for human food. The next article on the list was greaves for dogs. He did not think the House ought to be called upon to legislate upon food for dogs, whilst food for millions of human beings was to be protected from all legislation.—Mr. Miles said he was determined that this list should not pass without discussion; if, therefore, it was not agreed to postpone those items to which he objected, he would immediately move that the House should adjourn.—Mr. Escott observed, that if the hon. member for Somersetshire wished to bring the principle of protection into utter contempt he was pursuing the very way to do so.—Mr. Miles was not to be told how he was to discharge his duty in that House; but he had observed that Mr. Escott took every opportunity he could to act directly contrary to the agricultural interest. He had noticed it over and over again, that whenever it was possible to throw out hints and scoffs against the agricultural body that hon. member was the first to jump up and utter his scorn against them. But he was not to be deterred by the scoffs or sneers of the hon. gentleman. It was his intention not to allow this tariff to go through without discussion. As to what had been said by the honourable member for Durham about chalk, he for his part should have no objection to the introduction of chalk free of duty, because it was on some lands a most valuable manure.—Sir R. Peel had not any wish to press any particular article against which there existed any particular objection; but he thought the committee were going on very harmoniously. Whenever any serious opposition should be raised against any article, he was willing to postpone it; but the trade of the country was so much affected by this measure, that it was extremely desirable to proceed with it as speedily as possible.—Mr. Escott could not imagine why the hon. member for Somersetshire should attack him as being an enemy to agriculture, because he had stated that such a motion as that which he threatened tended to bring the principle of protection into contempt.—Mr. Miles hoped the article basket-rods would be omitted.—The Chairman said that article had already been passed.—Sir R. Peel said he should have no objection to consider it as omitted, if it could be done.—The article was considered to be reserved for future discussion. A number of articles, to which no objection was urged, were then agreed to; all those which were objected to having been reserved for future discussion.—The House resumed, the chairman reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Wednesday.—The House then went into a committee of supply, and the following votes were agreed to:—600,000*l.* for the half-pay of the royal navy and marines; 400,000*l.* on account of military pensions and allowances; 100 000*l.* on account of the charge of pensions and allowances; 800,000*l.* on account of the charge of the land forces at home and abroad; 100,000*l.* half-pay and military allowances for retired officers; 300,000*l.* for Chelsea and Kilmainham hospitals.—The Customs Exports Bill was read a third time and passed.

Tuesday.—Mr. Ewart complained that certain parcels sent through the Post-office had been opened.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer explained the cause. In consequence of the abuse of the facilities afforded by the cheap rate of postage, some orders were obliged to be issued; for instance, such articles as knives and scissors had frequently been sent, and upon one occasion it had been discovered that part of a human body had been transmitted to a surgeon. In consequence of this it had become necessary to make an order prohibiting the transmission of flesh and fish, and such other articles, and of knives and scissors, &c.; but if any other packet had been opened, it was against the orders, and, indeed, he had heard of but one such complaint, and that had been ordered to be investigated.—Lord Duncan called attention to the Window-tax. Sir R. Peel had stated that there were three million houses exempt from the Window-tax, which

…ld be benefited by the reduction of the duty on glass. But the cases of exemption were not stated, as employment as warehouses, and so forth. Recounting the particulars of the origin of the tax, he took particular instances to show the inequality of its assessment, diminishing as it did in an inverse proportion to the means of the occupants. Under the operation of the "sliding scale" of the tax, the town houses of Sir R. Peel, the Duke of Wellington, and the Duke of Buccleuch were rated comparatively lower than those of humbler condition. Out of the million and a half collected for window duties, he asserted that the houses in England which had less than 20 windows paid 836,000*l.*, that the houses which had less than 40 windows paid 134,000*l.*, while the houses which had more than 40 windows contributed only 250,000*l.* In seeking for information, he found two returns made to the House, respecting the total and specific amounts of the tax, one of which showed a total increase, the other a diminution, of the tax, comparing 1841 with 1844; and on reference to the tables of Mr. Porter, the discrepancy, instead of being explained was still further perplexed. This was of itself a strong primâ facie case for inquiry; still farther warranted by the many instances wherein individuals endured annoyance, amounting to oppression, owing to the indefinite state in which the Legislature had left the tax, exposing people to the contradictory decisions of collectors, the Stamps and Taxes, and of Chancellors of Exchequer. In addition, the tax also interfered with that freedom to admit light and air, excluding cold, wind, and rain, which constituted an essential almost in the sanitary condition of large towns. He moved for a select committee to inquire into the present mode of assessing, levying, and collecting the window duties in Great Britain, and to report their opinion to the House. —Captain Rous seconded the motion. The window-tax was imposed by Mr. Fox, as a war tax, with the solemn assurance that when the emergency had passed by, the impost should be removed, and since 1815 almost every succeeding Chancellor of the Exchequer had promised to modify or revise them; but they were modified with a vengeance by the late Administration, who added ten per cent. to their amount.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER felt how disagreeable it was to resist the repeal of any particular tax when a case was made out against it. Taxes were evils, but then they were necessary evils. Respecting the window-tax, he thought there was considerable exaggeration in particular instances of alleged irregularity, while the allegations against Lord Althorp, as having been a party to deceiving the public with respect to "due assessment," by the act of 1834, he considered altogether unfounded. In the present state of the financial condition of the country, the Government had selected those for reduction which they considered most generally beneficial. The window-tax only fell upon one eleventh of the entire number of house occupants, and the humbler classes were entirely exempt. He was aware that it was assessed on large houses let out in lodgings to the poor; but he considered that in this instance the tax fell on the landlord, who alone would receive the benefit of its repeal. Admitting in the fullest manner that the window-tax was a fitting subject for consideration, he advised the House to leave such matters in the hands of the Executive, and not raise false expectations, and create disappointment, by entering on an inquiry which could not produce any practical result. — Captain MITCHELL, Sir C. NAPIER, and Mr. EDWARD ELLICE, jun. addressed the House in favour of the motion.—Mr. HUME expressed his regret that the House did not appear to view it in the light which its importance deserved, more especially in relation to the health and social comfort of the toiling portion of the community. It was not so much the amount of the tax which he objected, as its tendency to obstruct light, and to add to the construction of inconvenient and badly ventilated houses. He considered that Lord Althorp had violated a pledge given to the House respecting the assessment of the tax, and suggested a house-tax in lieu of it, of ten pence or a shilling in the pound.—Mr. F. BARING referred to the circumstances attending the passing of the Assessed Taxes Composition Bill, 1834, in order to vindicate Earl Spencer, when, as Lord Althorp, he filled the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, from having made any pledge which had been violated. It had never been contemplated that persons unduly returned should be exempted from further survey and increased charge. In the present state of the revenue, he did not see that the tax could be dispensed with, but he thought that if any of its inequalities and difficulties could be removed, it was worthy of the consideration of Government.—Mr. WAKLEY asked if the tax were abandoned? It really seemed so, from the silence of the Government side of the House. He supposed that Sir Robert Peel contemplated its removal, perhaps next year, when he brought forward another of his grand schemes of finance. Darkness was the parent of vice, filth, and disease, and he urged the Prime Minister to give them some assurance that the tax would be removed.—Sir R. PEEL remarked that he might be exposed to similar interrogation on the soap-tax, or any other. Not defending the operation of the window-tax, he felt that it would be unjust and inconvenient to intimate an intention of abandoning any particular tax a whole year before they could possibly be enabled to review the financial condition of the country, with a view to particular reduction. What would the people think if the very week in which they had renewed the income-tax of 7*d.* in the pound, they had taken, some a valedictory, others a maledictory, farewell of it, they proceeded, as Mr. Hume suggested, to lay on a house-tax of 10*d.* in the pound! He would not give any specific pledge on the subject of the window-tax, but he promised to look at it, along with others, would come under review hereafter. He hoped, therefore, that Lord Duncan, who had stated his case with great ability, would not divide the House on the subject.—Mr. HAWES was favourable to an inquiry, not with the pre-conceived intention of abolishing the tax; but with the view of eliciting some of those important results, which similar inquiries had produced.—Colonel SIBTHORP added some observations; and—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, treating the declaration of Sir R. Peel as tantamount to a repeal of the tax, of the soundness of which his constituents required no inquiry to convince them, advised Lord Duncan not to shrink from dividing the House on the question.—After some remarks from Mr. WILLIAMS, Lord DUNCAN replied, and expressed his regret at not being able to take the advice tendered him, as he felt constrained to ascertain the sense of the House on the subject of a motion.—On a division there was—For the motion, 47; against it, 93; majority, 46.—Mr. G.W. HOPE then brought forward his motion on the subject of the disputed transaction between the New Zealand Company and Lord Stanley. The charge against the Colonial Secretary was, that having in May 43, entered into an arrangement with the company on certain conditions, he had given a set of secret instructions to Captain Fitzroy at variance with them. To show that this originated in misunderstanding, he quoted copiously from the correspondence between the company and the Colonial-office. The instructions given to Captain Fitzroy respecting the settling of the company's titles to lands had been misunderstood by him; he had supposed that it was necessary the company should prove the validity of their purchases. On this point he was set right, by being referred back to his instructions as his guide. This was the cause of the misunderstanding which had arisen; another was caused by the fact that the letter of instruction to Capt. Fitzroy had been prepared while the negotiations between the Colonial Office and the company were in an incomplete state, and when, consequently, they could not be recognised. So far from there being any wish to keep back the correspondence, it had been voluntarily tendered to the company, which, a month after it had been in its possession, expressed, through Mr. Somes, their reliance on the justice and spirit of Lord Stanley. Having referred matters to him, he [illegible] by declaring, that if the failings or the faults of Lord Stanley what they may, he had never before been charged with duplicity, a charge which he trusted he had shown to originate in misapprehension.—Mr. C. BULLER referred with pain to the personal part of the question between the New Zealand Company and Lord Stanley; but if he had any regard for his own character, he was bound to establish the charges which had been publicly made. Separating the personal from the public portion of the question, the complaint of the company against Lord Stanley was, that he had rendered them substantial wrong. To prove this allegation, he gave a sketch of the proceedings of the New Zealand Company, from the time when they had settled 10,000 colonists on lands acquired from the natives, before the authority of the British Government was established in New Zealand, up to the period of these altercations with Lord Stanley. Capt. Fitzroy, when asked to render his aid to the colonists, in pursuance of a distinct agreement with the company, stated that he was ready to do so, "so far as it could be done with propriety." Instead of being corrected by the Colonial-office, Lord Stanley approves of the qualification, in directing the Governor to render the required assistance with a due regard to other interests. The primâ facie right of the company to their lands had been unequivocally recognised by the Colonial-office; and yet the Governor, Capt. Fitzroy, backed, or rather bewildered, by Lord Stanley, instead of giving the company that conditional title which, by right and agreement, they were to receive, treated it as a plaintiff who had to prove the validity of his claims, and they were, therefore, still kept out of legitimate possession. The company, in pursuance of their agreement, expected that Capt. Fitzroy, sailing in June, and arriving in December, would, by the June following, have settled the whole question of their bonâ fide title. But armed with secret instructions, containing suggestions and qualifications which vitiated the spirit of their agreement, he had been nine months in the colony without one step having been taken to render them this simple justice. This he called a deception, and a violation of those principles of honourable dealing which are recognised in all civilised communities. He thought that he had made out that there was great irregularity; that the New Zealand Company had been unhandsomely treated, and had suffered seriously in consequence; and he would rather that he and his friends should be found to have acted hastily and intemperately, than that the Secretary of State for the Colonies should be proved to have acted so contrary to his duty. He concluded by moving, as an amendment, for the production of all the correspondence between the Colonial-office and the New Zealand Company.—Mr. HOPE explained that Lord Stanley felt a difficulty in granting an unconditional title to the company without a previous investigation of the claims and rights of the aborigines. This was the cause of the delay, and not any desire to impede their operations. Though his information was imperfect, he had no reason to believe that Captain Fitzroy was acting otherwise than in the spirit of his instructions, as he showed by quoting from a dispatch, and reiterated the disclaimer of all intention on the part of the Colonial-office to act otherwise than straightforward.—Colonel RICE TREVOR congratulated the House on the improved temper which was manifested in discussing the question.—Mr. SHEIL remarked that there was a distinct agreement between the Colonial-office and the company, and the person who was to carry it into effect for both parties, not for one, having raised doubts as to the construction of that agreement, it was clearly the duty of the Colonial-office to communicate these doubts to the company. Why then was the word "confidential" marked on Capt. Fitzroy's instructions, which was a public document. These clandestine and surreptitious instructions changed the position of the company, and warranted the advice of a New Zealand chief, "Do not say one thing and mean another"—words which ought to be written in gold in the Colonial-office.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL went into the legal history of the transactions between the Colonial-office and the company, contending that the true construction of the agreement was, that they were to have a primâ facie title to their lands, subject to their making good their claim against any prior purchaser or native right. He argued the question at length, and urged that Lord Stanley had been allowed to remain a whole session in the House without any preference of these charges against him, but when his back was turned they were brought forward.—Mr. HUTT remarked that the committee of inquiry on the affairs of New Zealand were then prosecuting their investigation.—Capt. ROUS, who had been in New Zealand, condemned as unprincipled the maxim which would refuse to recognise the aboriginal right of property. In these disputes between the Colonial-office and the company, the natives of New Zealand were forgotten.—Lord INGESTRE having been connected with the New Zealand Company, was satisfied that the whole dispute originated in a misunderstanding, which, to the company, was a vital one.—Mr. AGLIONBY commented on the speech of the Solicitor-General, and entered into a variety of particulars to show that honourable and high-minded faith had not been kept with the company.—Sir R. PEEL said that the impression left on his mind was, that Lord Stanley was entirely acquitted, not only of any act of deceit, but of any intention to deceive. This he also inferred was the feeling of the House. The company were in possession of the instructions given to Capt. Fitzroy as early as February of last year; the company, having it in their possession, they write to Lord Stanley, expressing their reliance on his benevolence and justice; and the whole of last session passed away without that charge being made, which it seems would now warrant the company in holding no personal communication with the noble lord. As the protector of the rights of the aborigines, invaded by the New Zealand Company, which had avowed that any recognition of territorial claims on the part of the natives was a kind of fiction to amuse savages, he had come into conflict with the directors, but he stood clear of all accusation of deception.—After some explanations from Mr. AGLIONBY, Mr. MANGLES, Colonel RICE TREVOR, Mr. C. BULLER, Mr. MONCKTON MILNES (who quoted Professor Merivale, the Oxford professor of political economy, in praise of the higher motives which, in in the New Zealand Company, overruled the commercial spirit), and Sir R. PEEL, the production of the correspondence was ordered.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the protection of property contained in public museums, galleries, cabinets, libraries, and other public repositories, from malicious injuries.

Wednesday.—After great difficulty in making a House, from the scanty attendance of members, the Railway and Land Clauses Bills were read a third time and passed. Several members expressed their disapprobation of these morning sittings, and Lord G. SOMERSET intimated that they would not be continued after Easter.—At the afternoon sitting, Sir R. H. INGLIS put specific questions as to the intentions of Government with respect to Maynooth and academical education in Ireland.—Sir R. PEEL replied that it is intended to proceed by way of Bill, both with respect to the increased grant for Maynooth, and the measures for extending the facilities for academical education. It is farther contemplated to render the grant to Maynooth a permanent one, so as to take it out of the category of annual votes, and thus obviate the recurrence of an annual religious debate in the House. Sir R. INGLIS referred to the Regium Donum, which was an annual one.—Sir R. PEEL had no objection to make that grant permanent too, if Sir R. Inglis would propose it.—Sir R. INGLIS, so far from proposing, would oppose it.—Sir R. PEEL replied that, in that case, it was hardly fair to throw out a suggestion of comparative inequality.—In answer to Mr. ALDAM, Sir R. PEEL expressed his regret that the President of the United States should have made the treatment of slaves captured by British cruisers the subject of specific reference in a message to Congress. If the President would appoint a commission to inquire, he would be met by every disposition on the part of this country to afford information. The message asserted that the captured negroes were subjected to a term of apprenticeship for 10 years. This was a mistake, arising out of the treaty with Spain in 1835, which contained provisions by which the captured negro was placed on the same footing as that of an apprentice in the West Indies. Since the system of apprenticeship had ceased, the negro, on being landed in the West Indies, was placed on the same level with the free coloured population. As the Brazils had refused to assent to the request of this country, that negroes taken in Brazilian slave-ships by our cruisers should be placed in a free condition, we were obliged, rather than allow them to be enslaved, to land them in the West Indies. It was also alleged in the President's message that British capital and British subjects were employed in the slave-trade. That was a serious charge, and he feared it was true, but he hoped that the law would be able to reach the guilty parties.—Mr. SOMES asked Lord Ingestre if he intended to bring forward any motion on the subject of Capt. Warner's "long range."—Lord INGESTRE read a letter from Capt. Warner, in which he said that he had no wish to undergo the ordeal of another inquiry by a commission, not expecting any favourable result from it. But he repeated his challenge of last autumn, to undertake to blow up, at his own expense, a line-of-battle ship, at a distance of five miles, restricting the witnesses of the details of the experiment to certain official individuals, including the Prime Minister and the Commander-in-Chief.—Sir C. NAPIER asked Sir R. Peel if he would not afford an opportunity to Capt. Warner to blow up a line-of-battle ship at his own expense?—Sir R. PEEL said that since the discussion of last year, not a week had elapsed without his receiving letters from individuals offering to blow up ships on much more favourable terms than those proposed by Capt. Warner, and he very much feared that this revival of the subject would have the effect of setting people's wits to work, and lead to an increase in the number of proposals. But if Capt. Warner was really in earnest in his offer to destroy, at his own expense, a line-of-battle ship at a distance of five miles, he would advise him to apply to the Master-General of the Ordnance, from whom, no doubt, his offer would receive favourable consideration.—The House having gone into committee on the Customs Acts, Mr. BRAMSTON objected to the removal of the duty on "grease," as he dreaded that it would lead to a great importation of foreign butter.—Sir G. CLERK replied that foreign butter, mixed with tar, and so rendered unfit for human food, was used for smearing sheep, and its free admission was therefore a boon to the agricultural interest. The precautions taken at the Custom-house would prevent any fraudulent introduction of foreign butter fit for food.—Mr. WARD, as one connected with land, begged to be excused the humiliation of such arguments. He said, there was something grand in a comprehensive monopoly, but these dirty, petty, contemptible monopolies reduced the bold barons and aristocracy of England to a level with "area sneaks." The advocates of free trade desired nothing better than the continuance of these discussions.—Mr. BORTHWICK supposed that this opposition was another bold, stand-up fight on behalf of agriculture. The agriculturists, like sweet Billy Bottom, were roaring, in the hope of being flatteringly called on to roar again. He advised them to assume a more dignified attitude.—After some remarks from Sir J. TYRRELL, Mr. BRIGHT, and Mr. M. MILNES, Mr. AGLIONBY said he was aware of the importance of the remission of the duty on grease, as in the north it was extensively used by sheep farmers.—Mr. VILLIERS remarked that the protectionists were only agreed when united in one object, of plundering the public. But they occasionally quarrelled when one county asked for protection against another. Here it was Northumberland against Essex—one had sheep to smear, the other grease to sell; and while the one asked admission for foreign grease, the other sought protection for the domestic article.—Mr. BRAMSTON said he would not press his opposition to a division.—Mr. COBDEN thought he should, as it would test, and doubtless satisfy sundry hon. members.—The suggestion was not adopted, and it was resolved that grease should be admitted duty free.—On tanned hides, Mr. MURPHY objected to the immediate removal of the duty on a manufactured article, by which his constituents would be exposed to disadvantageous competition.—Mr. GLADSTONE reminded the House that in 1842 they made a sweeping change in the heavy duties on hides, from which the most disastrous results were anticipated. The very reverse had been the case; and as they had removed the whole of the duties on the raw materials used in and for tanning, for which we had ample facilities, and could defy competition, he saw no objection to the introduction of tanned hides, which were only in the first stage of manufacture, and would enlarge the field for the operations of the shoe trade in this country.—After some remarks from Mr. AGLIONBY—Sir R. PEEL was satisfied that the tanners of this country had carried the manufacture of leather to such a state of perfection that no foreign competition could affect them.—Lord HOWICK and Dr. BOWRING dwelt on the free trade view of the question, and urged the withdrawal of opposition; but Mr. LONG carried the question to a division, and was defeated by 73 to 27.—Mr. GROGAN moved the omission of lard, on which a discussion arose, during which —Colonel WYNDHAM was sorry to see his agricultural friends imitating the example of the representatives of the manufacturing interest, ever jumping up, like jacks-in-the-box, preferring their claims to the disgust of the country. The agriculturists would share in the reductions proposed by the Government; and he was surprised and sorry at their clamours. Happening to sit beside an agricultural friend when Sir R. Peel made his financial statement, he was asked what was for them, when he replied, "There's nothing for you!" There were three Parliaments sitting outside these walls—the Conciliation humbug in Dublin, the Covent-garden League, and the Agricultural Protection Society in Bond street. From the latter, edicts were issued to the representatives of agricultural constituencies—which was a very great liberty. He would not bate one inch on behalf of protection: but a farmer, in the midst of his fields and cattle, could not be expected to take a comprehensive view of public interests; and, therefore, at their command, he would not vote for Mr. Miles. If his constituents could get a better man to represent them, as no doubt they might easily do, he would place his trust in their hands, but while he was in the House he would not be dictated to. Let them analyse this, Bond Street club. A certain lord duke pulled the strings, and moved all the "little goes." Like Polyphemus, the agriculturists had but one eye, and could see nothing but a turnip field. He begged them to take a larger view of the interests of the country.—Lord A. LENNOX, as a constituent of Col. Wyndham's, did not think that such sentiments were likely to lead to his re-election.—Mr. WARD thanked Col. Wyndham for the good humour, good sense, and impartiality which marked his speech. He repeated his feeling of contempt for the paltry, peddling opposition of the agriculturists.—Sir J. TYRRELL complained of the attacks made night after night by gentlemen opposite against the agriculturists. As for what had fallen from Col. Wyndham, he had only to say, that it had made him laugh just as much as gentlemen opposite. That hon. member had been a member of the Protection Society, and he quarrelled with no man for altering his opinions. Every gentleman wished, no doubt, to have his own pig protected, and in his anxiety upon the subject might be guilty of some such inconsistency. But he, for one, would not sit silent in that house and hear Mr. Villiers accuse the agriculturists of selfish and beggarly motives, of pulling the stake out of the public hedge; in a word, of public plunder. That hon. gentleman was, he believed, himself a pluralist. He held a situation in the Court of Chancery, from which he derived a salary of 1000*l.* a-year; and upon the hon. member's principles of free trade, he would ask, if that sinecure were put up to auction, whether, according to those principles, a person might not be procured who would do the business as well for 500*l.*? When attacked about the purity of his motives, he felt that he had a right to look to the conduct of his assailants. As for the Protection Society, he regarded it as the greatest possible libel upon a Conservative agricultural Administration.—Mr. VILLIERS wished the hon. member would place his claim to protection upon an intelligible footing. Why did he not make that claim in a straightforward and manly manner? What were his reasons for claiming protection? They had not heard a single word from him to justify protection. He complained of charges being made against him. He never attributed base motives to him, but he did state what the effects are and have been of the laws which he upheld. He reiterated the statement, that the protectionists upheld those laws to make them rich; and he said it was no sufficient answer to it to observe that the hon. member for Wolverhampton has a place in the Court of Chancery. If it were a sinecure, which he denied, he could only say that there was work attached to it. The protectionists came to Parliament to get paid, they passed laws that they might get their rents, pay their mortgages, and provide for their children. He would assert that protection was a system to render the people poor, in order to make the landlords rich.—Mr STAFFORD O'BRIEN treated free trade as a system to reduce commodities to the lowest price—its only principle was cheapness.—Mr. COBDEN replied that they sought abundance, which was not always synonymous with mere cheapness. The monopolists, on the contrary, wished for dearness and scarcity. There had been latterly a great improvement in the knowledge and manners of the representatives of the agriculturists; they had learned more in the last two months than in the preceding two years. How, then, had Sir J. Tyrrell so lost his usual good humour as to make a personal attack on Mr. Villiers? Because he was maddened by the utter absence of all argument—the consciousness of a very bad case. What a plight had the landed interest placed themselves in by their recent conduct in that House! He was going down to Lancashire, and he was sure that he would be stopped at the corner of every street with exclamations as to the pitiable exhibition of the great landed interest. He besought them to look at it themselves: all their "whining" and entreaties could not induce the Prime Minister to get up and defend them; and surely it was not worth their while to endure all this obloquy for any benefit they reaped from it. For his part, nothing could bribe him to submit to similar taunts and obloquy.—After some remarks from Mr. DARBY in defence of the agriculturists, Sir R. PEEL said he regretted to see personal feeling mixing itself in the discussion. He defended hon. members on his side of the House in making motions respecting matters on which their constituents were interested. Good arose from all these discussions, as they brought out explanations.—Lord J. RUSSELL admitted the propriety of this, but what was applicable to lard was equally applicable to corn and every other article of protected agricultural produce. If the representatives of the agricultural interest wished to act honestly, they should either surrender the principle of protection to native industry, or resolutely stand by it in and out of Parliament.—Mr. GLADSTONE would not worry the agricultural interest with nibbling changes in order to obtain infinitesimal degrees of cheapness in articles of food. But he looked on lard as a raw material in trade and manufactures, as it might be made a substitute for sperm oil, the supply of which was diminishing, as well as other oils used for machinery, in the manufacture of soap, and so forth.—Mr. GROGAN withdrew his opposition, and lard was added to the articles to be admitted duty free. On the reduction of the duty on thrown silk, considerable discussion arose, in which Mr. T. EGERTON, Mr. GRIMSDITCH, Mr. STRUTT (who was favourable to the repeal of the duties) and Mr. BANKES took part.—Sir R. PEEL pointed out that the decline in the silk manufacture in Somerset and Dorset, complained of by Mr. Bankes, arose not from foreign competition, but the superiority of steam over water power, and the command of capital. He quoted from figures, to show that the silk trade was increasing coincidently with an increase in our foreign importations.—Mr. LABOUCHERE, Mr. BROCKLEHURST, Mr. HUME, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. ENTWISLE, and Dr. BOWRING having taken part in the discussion, a division was taken, when the abolition of the duty on thrown silk was affirmed by 85 to 26. After some conversation about various other motions for the reduction of duties on articles not included in the Government proposition, and for the discussion of which an understanding was come to that they should be proposed independently after Easter, the resolutions were all agreed to, and a Bill founded on them was ordered to be brought in. The House then went into Committee of Supply, when two votes for the Ordnance department, amounting to 140,000*l.*, were granted.

Thursday.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE gave notice, for the 8th April, to move for leave to bring in a Bill the better to secure the inviolability of letters conveyed by post.—Sir R. PEEL gave notice that, on the 3d April, he should make a motion on the subject of the College of Maynooth.—Mr. WARD gave notice that he should, at the proper stage, move that it was the opinion of the House that any provision made for the College of Maynooth should be taken from the revenues now appropriated to the exclusive maintenance of the Protestant Church in Ireland. He likewise gave notice, for the 3d April, to move for a committee to inquire into the burdens that press peculiarly on land. —Mr. MORRISON, after explaining the benefit to be derived from cheap and safe communication by railroads, and after showing that landlords, so far from being hostile, were positively friendly to the formation of railroads, that the working as well as the formation of railroads was now reduced to a certainty of expenditure, and that every railroad company could now calculate without difficulty the amount of fares which would prove remunerative, contended, that if Parliament did not speedily interfere on this subject, and control this mode of travelling as it had controlled every other, we should soon have the dearest, instead of the cheapest, railroads in the world, for the conveyance of passengers and goods. In order to prevent the monopoly now possessed by railway companies from becoming oppressive and injurious to themselves, he moved a series of resolutions, calling on the House to insert in every railroad bill clauses limiting the amount of tolls to be demanded, by fixing the highest rates which the railroad company should be allowed to charge for the conveyance of passengers and goods, pointing out the mode in which that interference should take place, and compelling every committee to which competing projects for new railroads may be referred, to require the promoters of each to put in their rates of charge for the conveyance of passengers and goods, and the amount of accommodation which they bind themselves to provide for the public at those rates.—Mr. WARBURTON, in seconding the motion, expressed his horror of the principle of interference adopted by the Board of Trade, by which they undertook to declare what was, and what was not, a line likely to afford means of profitable investment. By limiting the number of individuals and projects, we might create such a monopoly in railroads as to render it easy for any Government hereafter to take possession of our means of transit, and render them subservient to revenue, without consideration of the interests of the public.—Lord GRANVILLE SOMERSET, though not opposed to the principles laid down in the resolutions, saw difficulties in the way of their adoption as absolute rules, and considered that the objects sought were in the course of being obtained practically by the procedure now adopted with respect to railway bills.—Lord HOWICK urged the importance of the subject, looking back to the past, and the new projects with which Parliament had now to deal. Easy transit was one of the first necessities of civilisation; and, in the present crisis of railway legislation, it behoved the Government to look minutely and narrowly into the whole matter.—Sir R. PEEL replied that this was one of the subjects which became more difficult, the more they were examined. Competition in railways did not lead to the same results as in other commodities. Without referring to any particular projects, it was impossible not to foresee that mechanical improvements had an inevitable tendency to induce a preference of the shortest lines—not the shortest line in point of distance, because there might be unfavourable gradients, but the shortest in point of time. The danger of laying down an inflexible rule, establishing a maximum of charge, was the possibility of checking the investment of capital in these speculations. In looking to the large dividends on the shares in the earlier established lines, as the London and Birmingham, we must recollect the risk the shareholders ran of investing six millions in an undertaking at a time when the whole matter was involved in uncertainty, and eminent men, as Mr. M'Culloch, in 1834, were expressing their opinion that it would be impossible to establish profitable lines generally over the kingdom. He hoped that as Mr. Morrison had effected his object of calling public attention to the subject, he would not at present press it farther.—After some observations from Mr. DENISON and Mr. S. WORTLEY, Sir G. GREY concurred in opinion as to the inconvenience and difficulty of adopting definite resolutions. Yet there were certain principles which must be considered in dealing with the immense mass of railways before the House, for want of uniformity would be a great blot in their railway legislation. He trusted the subject would receive due consideration from the Government.—After a few observations from Mr. PARKER, Mr. MORRISON withdrew his resolutions.—The Public Museum Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.—The Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill was read a third time, and passed; so likewise was the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill.—The House then adjourned, for the Easter recess, to Monday, the 31st inst.

CITY.

Money Market, Friday.—Yesterday being Good Friday was observed as a close holiday. On Thursday Consols closed at 99⅞ for money, and 100 to 101 for the account; Bank Stock for account, 215 to 16; India Stock for account, 282 to 4; Exchequer Bills, 60*s.* to 63*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK—BANKRUPTS—W. WILLIAMS, 16, High-street, St. Giles's, victualler—H. HEATER, late of 1, Ratcliffe-terrace, Goswell road, tallow chandler—T. CLEGG, late of Tanners-hill, Deptford, and formerly of Leeds, coal merchant—F. SHARMAN, 21, West-square, Southwark, boot and shoe maker—G. W. STOCKS, Norwich, linen draper—C. D. HOPE, Chorlton-upon-Medlock and Manchester, British and foreign broker—W. DANIEL, Manchester, cabinet maker—W. HULLEY, Bakewell, Derbyshire, tailor—T. O'ROORKE and W. BIRKS, Manchester, commission agents—H. WOODGATE, Kinson, Dorsetshire, horse dealer—W. IBBOTSON, Sheffield, merchant—R. BROWN, Kingston-upon-Hull, joiner—W. GRANGER, Relly mill, Durham, paper manufacturer—J. PRICE, Oaken Gates, Shropshire, draper—W. HONE, Reading, Berkshire, coach-proprietor—G. J. CARTER, Hornsey-road, carpenter—C. S. SWEENY, Chester-place, Hyde Park-square, apothecary—P. GROUND, late of Donnington, Lincolnshire, tallow-chandler—H. TURNER, Theobald's-road, cowkeeper—Baron Verneuil de Bealieu LORIMER, otherwise Baron Verneuil de BEAULIEU, Regent's-terrace, Commercial-road East, soap-manufacturer—J. L. MACHU, Macclesfield, Cheshire, silk-trimming-manufacturer—C. SMITH and E. J. CHAPMAN, Bradford, Yorkshire, and Birkenhead, Cheshire, civil-engineers—A. V. FULLJAMES, Bath, auctioneer—T. MILWARD, Epperstone, Nottinghamshire, miller—T. ROBINSON, Eccleston, near Prescot, Lancashire, lime-burner—W. FERGUSON, Liverpool, draper—W. H. ROBINSON, Leicester, wine and spirit-merchant—R. WOOLFALL, Warrington, Lancashire, butcher.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Weather.—On Saturday and Sunday last the weather in London continued to be exceedingly severe, with a bitter piercing wind from N. E. On Sunday there was a heavy fall of snow, which remained on the ground during Monday. The ornamental water in the different Parks was covered with skaters. A change, however, took place on Wednesday, and it is hoped that a more genial temperature will soon prevail. During the last few days, the sun has been shining brightly, but the nights have continued remarkable for hard frosts.

Alleged Attempt to shoot Prince Albert.—The papers have contained long accounts of a supposed attempt to shoot the Prince while he was riding up Constitution Hill last week, attended by Sir E. Bowater, and a groom. Mr. Knight, a Cornet in one of the Cavalry regiments, and a Mr. Arnold, saw a man present a pistol as the Prince was passing, and gave notice to Sir E. Bowater, who sent the groom for a policeman, but before the constable could reach the spot, the man had walked off. No tidings could then be obtained of him, and it is generally supposed that if the man really did present the pistol at the Prince, he did it without any evil motive. An extra constable, however, has been placed on duty on Constitution Hill.

Statuette of the Duke of Wellington.—The daily papers mention with satisfaction an equestrian statuette of the Duke of Wellington, executed by Count D'Orsay. The quiet dignity of the figure and the calm and elevated character of the face are described as eminently characteristic. The beauty and symmetry of the horse proves how well Count D'Orsay has studied the animal, while the playful action in which he has represented it is so skilfully managed as to leave the rider the principal object of attention. It is stated that the Duke has expressed the highest approbation of the work, and that the family and friends of his Grace pronounce it the most satisfactory likeness yet given of him in sculpture.

The Marquis of Northampton's Soirée.—The President of the Royal Society held his third conversazione this season, on Saturday evening, at his residence in Piccadilly. The Marquis previously gave an entertainment to the Council of the Society. Owing, no doubt, to the intense cold there was not a crowded meeting, the company probably not exceeding 300 in number. Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Granby and Sir E. Bowater, again honoured the Marquis with his company.

Bank of England.—At the general meeting of Bank of England proprietors held last week, scarcely anything was done beyond the declaration of the usual half-yearly dividend of 3½ per cent., less income-tax. The Governor explained that this dividend was declared upon accounts actually made up to the 28th of February, and not on estimates, as formerly used to be the case. The statement of the Governor that no difficulty was found in working the present system, and that after payment of the dividend, the sum of 9727*l.* would be added to the "rest," was, of course, satisfactory to the proprietors. A special vote of thanks to the Governor, Mr. Cotton, and the Deputy-governor, Mr. Heath, for the zeal and ability they had displayed in conducting the negotiations for the new charter, was passed unanimously.

The late Mr. Laman Blanchard's Family.—The Committee of the Royal Corporation of the Literary Fund, at its meeting last week, unanimously voted 50*l.* towards the fund now raising for the benefit of the family of this gentleman. The Committee thus testified their respect for Mr. Blanchard's memory, and their commiseration for the circumstances in which those dependent on his literary exertions were left by his death. This is but the third instance in the history of this truly munificent Society, in which so large a sum has been voted to an individual case. "Never," says the Globe, "can the exception to the general rule be more fully justified by the Committee, nor more warmly commended by the subscribers, than by the affecting circumstances which combine to take this case out of the rule which applies to ordinary claims upon the Literary Fund."

Medical Reform.—The Association of General Practitioners held a meeting last week in the Hanover-square Rooms, which was very largely and respectably attended. Mr. Pennington presided. The proceedings commenced with the reading of a long report, drawn up by the provisional committee of the Association, and directed to the consideration of the manner in which their branch of the profession would be affected by the Medical Reform Bill, and the course which their present situation rendered advisable. Resolutions were passed recommending a strenuous opposition to the bill until the body of general practitioners was recognised, by being incorporated, and motions were carried in praise of the conduct of the Apothecaries' Society, and condemning that displayed by the Council of the College of Surgeons.

Commission of Lunacy.—A commission was held last week on William Austin, whose name must be familiar to all who are acquainted with the history of the Parliamentary proceedings in the case of the late Queen Caroline. He arrived in London last week, from Milan, where he has been residing for several years, for the most part in a state of fatuity, the inmate of a lunatic asylum. It is understood that he has been removed to this country through the intervention of the British Government, under an authority from the Lord Chancellor, in whose care his person and considerable property left to him by the late Queen, have been placed by certain proceedings on the part of his relations. The unhappy man has observed for years unbroken silence, and the jury at once returned a verdict, "That William Austin was of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his affairs, and had been so since the 15th of September, 1841."

British Museum.—The situation of keeper of the prints and drawings in the British Museum, vacant by the death of Mr. Josi, has just been filled by the appointment of Mr. W. H. Carpenter. This gentleman is the husband of Mrs. Carpenter, the distinguished artist, and is himself known by the work on Vandyck, and the etchings which he recently published.

Reduction of Sugar.—On Saturday the grocers in the metropolis gave the public the benefit of the reductions which had been allowed by Government on the sale of sugar, the new duties having come into operation the previous day. The prices for moist sugar varied from 4*d.* to 6*d.* per lb., and for loaf sugar from 6½*d.* to 9*d.* The price of bread at many bakers also fell on Tuesday to 6½*d.* the 4 lb. loaf.

Dissolution of the Kensington Union.—A meeting of the ratepayers of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, was held last week on the subject of the proposed dissolution of the Union. A report from the committee appointed at a previous vestry to communicate with the Poor-law Commissioners having been read, the churchwarden said that since the report had been drawn up, an order from the new Poor-law Commissioners, dated the 11th inst., had been received dissolving the Kensington Union from Lady-day next; also another order directing the parish of Kensington to proceed to the election of a board of 18 guardians, the election to take place on the 1st April. The announcement was received with satisfaction by all the inhabitants present. By this dissolution the parish of Paddington will also be an independent parish, with a board of 18 guardians, while Hammersmith and Fulham will be united, the former having 9 and the latter 8 guardians. The number of guardians each parish had when in union was as follows:—Kensington, 6; Paddington, 5; Hammersmith, 4; and Fulham, 3; being a total of 18, while now they will have 51.

Early Closing of Shops.—The third annual meeting of the Metropolitan Drapers' Association was held last week at Exeter Hall, to receive the report of the central committee for the past year. Lord J. Russell in the chair. The report stated that the experience of the committee had confirmed them in the opinion that the custom of "evening shopping" is the sole cause of late hours of business; and while a discontinuance on the part of the public of that custom, cannot fail to result in a reduction of the hours of business, it is the only practicable means by which that object can be generally and permanently effected. Lord J. Russell addressed the meeting at some length in favour of the plan for curtailing the hours of business, and several resolutions on the subject were unanimously adopted.

The Homœopathic System.—An inquest was held last week in Tavistock-street, Bedford-square, on Mr. Henry Cordwell, aged 29, formerly a solicitor of Liverpool. After a long investigation into the regimen which deceased had followed, under the direction of Dr. Curie, principal of the Homœopathic Hospital, showing that he had lived on nothing but water for several days, and after hearing the evidence of Dr. Roots and other medical men, one of whom had opened the body, the jury found the following special verdict:—"We find that Henry Cordwell died from exhaustion, caused by loss of blood from his intestinal canal, produced by natural disease. And in complying with what the jury believe to be their bounden duty in returning this verdict in accordance with the sworn evidence of the medical gentlemen who have been called as witnesses, the jury cannot refrain from expressing the strongest feelings of indignation and disgust at hearing it proved by the testimony of the nurses and other persons, that the afflicted gentleman had been cruelly exposed to a system of starvation while in a state of the most extreme debility, during at least ten days previous to his death, he having during that length of time been allowed nothing but plain cold water under the express direction of his medical attendant." Mr. Wakley, in receiving this verdict, said—"If I had been one of the jury, I should most cordially have subscribed to every word which this verdict contains." Dr. Curié's solicitor said he understood that there were some medical practitioners on the jury, which was unfair. Mr. Wakley inquired if such was the case, and it turned out that there was one gentleman, who was a chemist only.

The Hunterian Oration was delivered on Wednesday by Dr. Lynch at Exeter Hall, in the presence of a large body of medical men. This oration was in former years read at the College of Surgeons, but owing to the differences which at this moment exist amongst the members of the college and the council, the ancient custom was abandoned.

The Late Explosion at Blackwall.—After two more adjournments and the examination of several witnesses, the jury on Thursday returned a verdict of manslaughter against George Lowe, the foreman of Mr. Samuda's manufactory. The foreman said he was further instructed by the jury to express their opinion that the machinery employed on Mr. Samuda's premises was altogether of an insufficient character. The coroner said he quite agreed with the verdict of the jury, and he hoped that the caution with which they had accompanied it would have a proper effect on Mr. Samuda.

Oxford and Cambridge Boat-race.—This race, which had long excited much interest among University men, came off on Saturday, when the Cambridge boat was victorious by about 8 or 9 boats' lengths. The course was from Putney to Mortlake Church, which rather exceeds 4 miles; and the time occupied by the race was 23½ minutes.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 15:—West Districts, 169; Northern, 207; Central, 216; Eastern, 218; Southern, 259; total, 1069; males, 549; females, 520. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1330; males, 665; females, 665.

Provincial.

Aylesbury.—The execution of John Tawell, for the murder of Sarah Hart, is expected to take place on Friday next. The unfortunate man, since his conviction, has continued in a state of deplorable dejection. He is constantly attended by two turnkeys. Upon being first conducted to the condemned cell he was most carefully and minutely searched, and even his watch-key was taken away from him. With regard to the commission of the crime of which he has been found guilty, he maintains the most obstinate silence, neither admitting nor denying his guilt. His principal source of uneasiness appears to arise from the disgrace which he has brought upon his family, and from the state of grief into which he feels they must necessarily be thrown. On Friday night he alluded to this, exclaiming as he sat in his cell between the two turnkeys—"Oh, what a dreadful thing for a man like me, who has got a family, and who was in such comfortable circumstances, to be placed in such a position as this!" The whole of the property possessed by the prisoner was assigned over to trustees, for the benefit of his wife, for some time previously to the trial, but without any provision having been made for his two children (a boy and girl) by the murdered woman, and who are now of the ages of four and five years; the boy, an intelligent little fellow, being the eldest. It is said, however, that Mrs. Tawell intends to contribute something for their future support. The expenses of the prosecution amount to nearly 400*l.* The number of witnesses summoned to attend on the part of the Crown were 33; the whole of whom had to travel between 30 and 40 miles, and many a much greater distance. The expenses incurred by the prisoner for his defence, including his outlay from the period of his apprehension on the 2d January, are stated to amount to upwards of 700*l.* Two female members of the Society of Friends, of highly respectable connections, arrived at Aylesbury, from Devonshire, on Friday evening; and the next morning they had a lengthened interview with him in the condemned cell. The object of their long journey is to afford the prisoner spiritual consolation during his brief sojourn in this world. It is also said that efforts have been made to prevent disgrace being brought upon the Society by the execution of the prisoner in his Quaker dress; but this, it appears, will be worn in accordance with the usual custom. The prisoner had so little expectation of being convicted, that a carriage was waiting in the town to convey him to Berkhampstead, where his wife was waiting to receive him. Mrs. Tawell arrived at Aylesbury on Tuesday, and visited her husband in the prison; and it is said that the interview was borne by both parties with remarkable firmness.

Durham.—The repeal of the coal duty came into operation on Wednesday week. The good effect of this measure has already been felt, both by the shipowners and those engaged in the coal trade. Freights to foreign ports are both better and more plentiful at all the neighbouring shipping harbours. The Sunderland Papers give an equally favourable report, and add that great preparations are making in that town for extending the manufacture of glass.

Exeter.—On Monday afternoon the committee of the Female Penitentiary in this city assembled to transact the usual business, and several tradesmen were in attendance to receive orders. At these times it is customary for the inmates to retire into an apartment provided for the purpose. In the midst of the deliberations of the committee they were alarmed by loud screams, and it was ascertained that the floor of the apartment had given way, and the occupants, 21 in number, had been precipitated into an old cesspool, which extended underneath the floor, and was at least 10 feet deep. In this well were the unfortunate women struggling for life, and it was only by the promptest aid that 16 could be extricated from their perilous position. The remaining five were soon after taken out, but life was extinct. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death.—On the 9th instant an accident, fatal in its consequences, occurred to Colonel Charles Bayley, at Budleigh Salterton, who accidentally caught his clothes on fire, and was so burnt that he died from the injuries. The deceased was 70 years of age, and brother to Gen. Sir Henry Bayley. At the inquest a verdict of Accidental Death was returned.

Ilfracombe.—The local papers state that on Thursday week a tremendous landslip took place from the top of Hillsborough, opposite the entrance of this harbour, from a height of more than 400 feet, down to a spacious beach at the foot of the cliff, filling the broad beach completely, and estimated at more than 1000 tons. Just as this slip took place a sloop was entering the harbour, and the crew, not expecting such a fall from the cliff, were not a little astonished. The crash was awfully grand. Portions of the cliff have continued to fall, and the crown of the hill is materially altered in appearance.

Hounslow.—On Saturday morning the mansion of Henry Pownall, Esq. (the Chairman of the Middlesex Sessions), Spring-grove, Hounslow, formerly the residence of Sir Joseph Banks, with the extensive outbuildings, narrowly escaped destruction by fire. The flames were discovered by a policeman, bursting through the roof of one of the store-rooms abutting on the greenhouses. In a short time a body of police from Brentford and Isleworth were in attendance, and assisted in procuring buckets of water from an adjacent pond, and cutting off the communications with the other part of the premises, and by great exertions the fire was confined to the building in which it commenced. The accident, it is believed, was occasioned by the hot pipes connected with the greenhouses and conservatory becoming overheated.

Leicester.—The local papers of last week contain accounts of the funeral of Miss Linwood, whose celebrated collection of needlework in Leicester-square has made her name familiar to all sight-seers in London. Miss Linwood died in this town on Sunday week, at the age of 90. She was a native of Leicester, and was so much respected that most of the houses and shops along the line of streets through which the procession passed were closed on the day of her funeral. Miss Lambert, in her "Handbook of Needlework," thus describes her needlework:—"The works of this accomplished artist are executed with fine crewels, dyed under her own superintendence, on a thick kind of tammy, woven expressly for her use; they are entirely drawn and embroidered by herself, no background, or other unimportant parts, being put in by a less skilful hand—the only assistance she received, if, indeed, it may be called such, was in the threading of her needles. In her collection, still exhibited in Leicester-square, is her first piece, the head of St. Peter, a copy from Guido. The "Salvator Mundi," after Carlo Dolci, has generally been considered the finest production of her needle, for which it is reported she refused the sum of 3000 guineas. The "Woodman in a Storm," after Gainsborough, and "Jephtha's rash Vow," after Opie, also rank amongst her best works. Her last production was the "Judgment upon Cain," one of the largest pictures in the gallery. The whole collection consists of 61 pieces, including a portrait of Miss Linwood herself, from a painting by Russell. Her last piece she completed at the age of 78."

Liverpool.—The Liverpool Times states that in consequence of the repeal of the duty on glass, the bottle manufacturers have determined to reduce the price from 42*s.* the gross of 12-dozen bottles, to 26*s.* the gross. This will, no doubt, have some effect on the price of the cheaper kinds of liquor sold in bottles, such as ale, porter, cider, soda-water, &c.; and lead to a great increase in the manufacture. Warrington is the principal place in Lancashire in which this branch of the glass trade is carried on, and there the repeal will be very beneficially felt in the increase of work and wages. Another Lancashire town which will also benefit by the repeal of these duties, is St. Helens, the principal seat of the plate, German-sheet, and crown-glass manufacture. The plate-glass of that neighbourhood, which is said to be the finest in the world, will become cheaper than at present, though perhaps less so than it is generally expected, owing to the expensive machinery and great amount of skilled labour required in polishing it and preparing it for the market, but the German plate and the crown-glass will both of them be manufactured with much less cost when the duty is removed. The former kind of glass has for some time been rising in favour, and as it will be made generally accessible by the repeal of the duty to persons in moderate circumstances, it will be employed in most respectable houses, instead of the crown-glass now used.

Portsmouth.—On Saturday Her Majesty's steamer Rocket was in attendance at Portsmouth harbour on Mr. Walker, the engineer to the Board of Admiralty, and Mr. Paine, engineer to the proposed docks about to be established at Langston, for the purpose of enabling Mr. Walker to prepare his final report, in pursuance of the instruction of the Admiralty, upon the effect of the contemplated opening from the deep water channel of Portsmouth harbour, on the west side of Southsea Castle. Mr. Walker was accompanied by the Queen's Harbourmaster, Capt. Sheringham, R.N., and his corps of assistants engaged in the recent survey of the English Channel. Mr. Paine was accompanied by Sir H. Leeke, R.N., and other gentlemen interested in the project. The ship canal, leading from the intended opening, will proceed parallel to Lump's and Eastney Forts, into the deep water of Langston harbour, behind Cumberland Fort, where the docks are intended to be constructed, and will of itself form a valuable line of defence in addition to the fortifications now under the consideration of the Board of Ordnance for the protection of this important port.

Sunderland.—The report of Messrs. Faraday and Lyell relative to the cause of the explosion in the Howell colliery, last autumn, was referred to a special Committee of the United Committee of the coal trade in the north of England, who have just made their report. It is unfavourable to the plans recommended by Messrs. Faraday and Lyell, for ventilating the coal-mine "goafs," which the Committee consider to be impracticable.

Railways.

The Gazette of last night contains an announcement from the Board of Trade, stating that they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the following lines:—The Aberdare; Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings—Keymer Branch; Cockermouth and Workington; Dunstable, London, and Birmingham; Erewash Valley; Manchester, Sheffield, and Midland Junction; Newark and Sheffield; North Wales Mineral Railway—Extension; Preston and Wyre—Lytham and Blackpool Branches; Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester; Sunderland, Durham, and Auckland; Wear Valley; and recommending the postponement until a future period of the Ely and Bedford; Launceston and Tavistock; South Devon and Tavistock. The meeting of the South Eastern and Dover Railway Company took place last week. The report stated that the gross revenue for the half-year was 139,042*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*; expenditure, 69,288*l.* 2*d.* Of these expenses, 28,943*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* was disbursed by the joint locomotive committee, the mixed authority of which is found so undesirable that the directors have taken steps for bringing the department under their own direction. The Tunbridge-wells branch is expected to open in September next; the Canterbury in December, and its extension to Margate and Ramsgate early next year. The lease of the Greenwich line is now completed, and only wants the sanction of the Legislature. No credit has been taken in the present half-year for receipts from that source; but there has been an excess in the first three months of this year over last of 1924*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* The accounts showed a balance of 70,444*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.*, out of which a dividend was declared free of income-tax, of 15*s.* 4*d.* on the paid-up shares, and 1*s.* 11*d.* per share on No. 1 shares, on which 4*l.* was paid previous to the 31st January, leaving 24,218*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* as a reserve fund. The report referred to the extensions at present before Parliament, and expressed the conviction of the directors of the soundness of the scheme. The directors, in answer to numerous inquiries, report that they are not in treaty with any company, either for amalgamation or lease.—The directors of the Great Northern Company have announced that they are about at once to carry into effect the Board of Trade's report in favour of their line from Lincoln to York, and to cease to press upon the Legislature that portion of the line between Lincoln and London. To compensate, however, for the abandonment of the latter portion of their undertaking, it is the intention of the promoters to enter into an arrangement, already said to have commenced, with the Cambridge and Lincoln, Eastern Counties, and Tottenham and Farringdon-street Extension Companies.—In reference to the Chester and Holyhead Railway, it is stated that the Admiralty intends to send a commission (Mr. Rendel and Sir J. Rennie, engineers, with Captain Vidal) to report on the question at issue respecting the probable effects on the Menai navigation of the proposed railway bridge over the Menai at the Britannia rock. Mr. Stephenson will accompany them on the part of the Chester and Holyhead Company.—A numerous meeting of the inhabitants of Royston, and the proprietors and occupiers of land in the immediate neighbourhood, was held last week, for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposed line of railway between Cambridge and Oxford. In the absence of the Earl of Hardwicke, who would otherwise have presided, J. G. Fordham, Esq., was called to the chair. He moved, and Joseph Phillips, Esq., seconded, the following resolution, which was unanimously carried:—"That this meeting being deeply impressed with the advantages which must result to the town and neighbourhood of Royston from the formation of a line of railway from Cambridge to Oxford, by way of Royston, Baldock, Hitchin, &c., as described in the plan and prospectus now submitted to them, determine to give it their most zealous support."—The Manchester and Leeds Company at their meeting last week declared a dividend of four per cent. for the half-year, subject to income-tax. The increase of the passenger traffic was 12,511*l.* for the half-year, and the goods 16,963*l.*, making a total of 29,474*l.* The gross revenue was 161,819*l.*, and the working expenses 50,284*l.*, leaving 111,535*l.* applicable to a dividend. The working expenses appear to have been gradually diminished, and during the past year were at the rate of only 32½ per cent. It was announced during the meeting, that the Manchester and Bolton had acceded to the terms of the Manchester and Leeds Company.

TRAFFIC AND PRICES, by permission, from the List of Messrs. C. and H. HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between Mar. 13 & Mar. 18.	Corresponding Week. 1844.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Dividend Per Share.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£	£	£ s. d.	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,067	100	all	1 5 0	133-135
Bristol, Birmingham	2,441
Bristol, Exeter			100	70		82 4
Bristol, Glo'ster			50	30	1 7 6	58 60
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	50	5	*	6½-½
Eastern Counties	2,578	2,222	avr.	14	0 3 0	21½-2
Eastern Union			50	10		17-18
Do. Extension			25	1½		3½-4
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,160	1,985	50	all	1 5 0	61-2
Grand Junction [Div 3 mo]	7,329	6,336	100	all	2 10 0
Great North of England	1,802	1,235	100	all	3 0 0	190-5
Great Western	12,897	11,251	100	80	3 4 0	179-181
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	50	5	*	12-½
Do. Extension	*	*	50	2½	*	2½-3
Hull, Selby			50	all		95-7
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	50	15	*	25-7
Liverpool, Manchester	4,645	2,782	100	all	4 10 0
London, Birmingham	15,753	13,284	stk.	100	5 0 0	233 5
London, Blackwall	630	619	avr.	10½	0 3 0	7½ ⅝
London, Brighton	2,668	2, 55	50	45	1 10 0	63½-4
London, Croydon	220	222	avr.	13½	0 8 0	18-½
London, Greenwich		704	avr.	12½		10½-11
London, South-Western	4,948	4,681	50	41½	2 0 0	79-80
Manchester, Birmingham		2,872	70	40	1 0 0	56-8
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	864	728	125½	93	2 14 0
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,619	5,848	100	73	2 9 0	146-8
Midland	9,872	7,690	stk.	100	2 2 6	130-40
Do. Birmingham, Derby			stk.	100		105-8
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,317	1,215	100	all	4 0 0
Newcastle, Darlington	1,060		25	24	4 0 0	46-8
North British	*	*	25	10	*	17-½
Northern, Eastern			50	45	1 2 6	64-5
Norwich, Brandon			20	10		17-½
Preston, Wyre	334	222	50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	901	464	100	87½	5 p. Cent
South Devon	*	*	50	10	*	19-20
South-Eastern, Dover		2,661	avr.	22½	0 10 6	43½-4
Yarmouth, Norwich	188		20	all	0 10 0	27-8
York, North Midland	2,808	1,670	50	all	2 10 0	101-3
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	25	20	*	41-3
Do. Selby			50	20	0 12 8	66-8
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	20	2	*	11½-1
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	20	2	*	17-18
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	20	*	*	10½-11
Paris, Orleans	4,260	3,894	20	all	0 5 9½	5½-3½
Paris, Rouen	3,948	3,596	20	all	0 9 2	45½-6
Rouen, Havre			20	14		82-3

Ireland.

Dublin.—St. Patrick's Day was celebrated on Monday with the usual festivities. A great concourse of people assembled at the Castle to witness the ceremony of mounting guard, but the Lord Lieutenant was not present. The Hon. and Very Rev. Dean Pakenham has officially denied that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners acceded to an application for a sum of money to be expended in the repairs of St. Patrick's Cathedral, in anticipation of Her Majesty's visit. It appears that the Board are not empowered by the terms of the Act of Parliament to grant funds for such purposes. The alterations now in progress in the cathedral are being effected through the liberality of private subscriptions.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation-hall, Mr. Geerey, Mayor of Limerick, in the chair. The meeting was very numerously attended, and most of the leading members were present. Almost every one in the hall wore a shamrock in his hat in honour of the day. Mr. O'Connell sported a "monster" one, twined round a branch of palm, the preceding day having been Palm Sunday.

Mr. O'CONNELL said, that upon that day week the Repeal "martyrs" would be on their way to Kilkenny, to attend the great dinner to be given to them on the following day. It would therefore be impossible for them to be in Dublin on Easter Monday; he would move, consequently, that the Association, at its rising, adjourn till that day fortnight, which was agreed to.—Mr. R. D. BROWNE, M.P., then addressed the meeting, beginning with a dissertation upon the duties of Irish representatives, who, he contended, should exert themselves to advance the Repeal cause, either in Parliament or in the Conciliation-hall. If they did not do so, they were imbecile nonentities, whose constituents should call upon them to resign the trust they had betrayed, and committees of that Association would soon supply their places. He then proceeded to give his opinion on the present position of the Repeal cause. The Government had tried the scourge, but had not succeeded with it. They were now trying the bread and butter, or bread and treacle system. They were going to make an increased grant to Maynooth, but that would have no effect in weaning them from Repeal. It was intended as a bribe to the priesthood; but the country would take it as a right, and not by any means as a boon. He insisted that the Orangemen of the north were rapidly joining them for Repeal. He alluded to the Queen's visit, and said that when it was spoken of at a former period, O'Connell was in prison, and he was then averse to it, as an unsuitable circumstance in the country whilst the father of his country was incarcerated; but things were altered now, and should the Queen visit Ireland next summer, he would receive Her Majesty with great affection and complacency.—Mr. O'CONNELL had a few words to say on Mr. Browne's speech. He could not consider the grant to Maynooth as a right. His doctrine was, that the religion of every sect should be supported by its own members, and if this principle were made the law of the State, he would ask nothing for Maynooth. As things were, however, he would take the grant, even if it were 70,000*l.*—as it ought to be—and no thanks. With regard to the Queen's visit, he repeated the sentiments which he had expressed on a former occasion. Her Majesty should be cheerfully and joyfully received, but as to her Ministers, he hoped they would be regaled with some cheap music—he hoped the people were preparing some good groans for them. The acknowledgment of subscriptions continued to form, as usual, the most important of the day's proceedings, but possessed no feature of interest for the general public.—Mr. O'CONNELL proposed a vote of sympathy with Mr. Duncombe on the subject of the opening of his letters by the Government, and their indignation at such an odious system of espionage. He denounced the Whigs for not having supported Mr. Duncombe as they should have done in this business. He stated that he had strong reasons for suspecting that, in Lord Anglesey's time in Ireland, his own letters had been opened—letters written about his private affairs—to the person most dear to him in the world. He might be mistaken, but he had strong reasons for thinking that such was the fact.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN seconded the motion, and said he thought it right that as England had spoken out on this question, so the Irish nation should, by its representatives, express its sentiments also.—Mr. O'CONNELL passed an eulogium on the "regular orders" of the Catholic clergy, and insisted on their right to have all civil disabilities affecting them repealed. He denounced the bigotry which had led to their persecution in Switzerland. Such conduct was disgraceful to that country. He concluded by moving that a petition to Parliament in favour of the regular clergy be consigned to the care of a committee to procure signatures and have it presented. He next brought forward the first report of the committee appointed to take into consideration the Report of the Irish Land Commissioners. It consisted chiefly of long extracts from the evidence taken by the Land Commissioners, having a tendency to show that the tenant-right existing in some parts of Ulster was a safeguard against outrage and a benefit to the tenant that its entire abstraction would be a signal for universal discontent if not disturbance; and that in those places where it did not exist at present, improvement had ceased, and ill-will between landlord and tenant was created. He promised that when Repeal was carried, an Irish Parliament should grant the tenant-right to every part of Ireland. They thought of no revolutionary spoliation, but only of giving their rights to all. Absenteeism should be put an end to also, and the number of small proprietors of land should be vastly increased, for every country prospered in proportion to the multiplication of small proprietorships. He invited every one to aid him in carrying out those objects by assisting him to gain Repeal, and he conjured the men of the north not to sacrifice to miserable fanaticism, the happiness of their country and the welfare of their families. He concluded by contrasting the past and present wretched state of Ireland, as described by him and admitted by the Land Commissioners, with a paradise of agricultural and commercial prosperity for the "moral, brave, religious, and temperate" inhabitants of this country to be created through the instrumentality of a domestic Parliament and the Repeal of the Union. The rent for the week was 398*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*

Law.

ROLLS' COURT.—The Duke of St. Albans v. Skipworth.—The object of the present application was to obtain an order to dissolve an injunction which had been granted to restrain the Rev. Thos. Skipworth from ploughing or breaking up three fields, containing about 16 acres, part of the glebe of the parish of Pickworth, in the county of Leicester. The Duke of St. Albans is the present patron of the living of Pickworth, which he purchased of a former owner, who in 1814 presented the Rev. Thomas Skipworth. The fields in question are attached to the house and kitchen-garden, and had become mossy and of little profit. It was therefore deemed advisable to break them up, and convert them into tillage. Upon inquiry, Mr. Parkinson, the Duke's land agent, was informed of that fact, and the result was the institution of the present suit, alleging that the fields were ancient pasture, and that it was waste to break them up. The defendant, by his answer, admitted his intention to plough them up, and submitted to the court that it was lawful for him so to do. Mr. Kindersley said the freehold of the glebe was vested in the incumbent, who was entitled to the profits arising therefrom. The fields in question were mossy, and useless as a pasture; and upon advice the defendant had resolved to break them up, with a view ultimately of restoring them to grass. No proof had been obtained that the fields had ever been broken up, but it was believed that they had been ploughed within 70 years, as the marks of former ploughings were still visible upon the surface. It was waste to keep the land in its present state, and after consulting some persons skilled in husbandry, the defendant had determined to break up the land and sow it.—Lord Langdale said he had occasion to obtain agricultural advice, and he could say that, having followed it, he had found it most advantageous.—Mr. Turner denied that the court could now decide whether this glebe was ancient pasture: that was a question for a court of law to determine. The plaintiff said the land had never been ploughed, and there was no proof that it ever had. If the ground was broken up its character was altered; and if the defendant died, what remedy was there to compel his executors to restore it to grass land? He submitted, therefore, that the injunction should be continued until the hearing.—Mr. Kindersley replied.—Lord Langdale said the case in itself was trifling, but it involved in it a question of the greatest importance. If the law was as alleged it would prevent an incumbent from making a potato ground or an orchard upon the glebe, when he could not show that it had been broken up. He would, however, read the pleadings and consider the case before he gave his judgment. On Monday his lordship gave judgment, and observed that the glebe consisted of about 20 acres, part of which was composed of three closes, called the three, the five, and the eight acres. Defendant intended to plough the five and the eight acres, and he now said that there were the marks of the plough in the field, and that he believed they had been ploughed within seventy years. Plaintiff alleged that they were ancient meadow, and that tillage was detrimental to the land, and was inconsistent with the enjoyment of the rectory house. Defendant stated that the grass was intermixed with moss and weeds, and that it would be beneficial to cleanse it, and that he intended to lay it down again in a due course of husbandry with grass, according to the improved course of husbandry, and that he had consulted several persons skilled in husbandry, who stated that it would be beneficial, and would not deteriorate the land, and there was nothing to show that the land would be deteriorated; but the plaintiff alleged that the land had not been in tillage for seventy years, and ought to be presumed to be meadow, which it was waste to convert into tillage. After referring to two cases, his lordship observed that Lord Coke said that a parson was seised of a fee-simple qualified, and that he could do nothing to the prejudice of his successor, as in some respects he was to be considered as a tenant for life; yet he could not be considered in the same light as a tenant for life under a will or a settlement. He had not been able to find any direct authority, and thinking that the cases relating to tenants for life did not apply, he should dissolve the injunction.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.—HOME CIRCUIT—MAIDSTONE.—Hammon v. South Eastern Railway Company; Taylor v. the Same.—In these two cases the plaintiffs were farmers occupying farms near the line of railway, who had had their stacks and buildings set on fire by sparks from the engines. There was no doubt that the fires had been caused in that manner, and the defence was that defendants had used due precaution to prevent such mischief, and that the blame rested with the farmers in placing their stacks so near the railway. Mr. Fairbairn and another engineer were examined, who said that the issuing of hot cinders from the chimneys of locomotive engines might be prevented by a wire-gauze placed on the top, but that such obstructions impeded the draught of air through the furnace, and made it necessary to employ engines of greater power. The juries gave a verdict in each case. In the first case, the plaintiff, Mr. [illegible], of Sallinge, near Dover, obtained 800*l.* for the damage incurred; and in the second case 91*l.* 14*s.* were awarded to Mr. Taylor.—Kidman Stewart, 25, described in the calendar as a lieutenant in the Prussian army, and Rosina Amelia Stewart, 21, stated to be his wife, were indicted for [illegible] tinet, a muff, and other articles, the property of [illegible] Tunbridge. The trial created much interest, as it appeared that the male prisoner is very respectably connected, and can be said highly connected, two of his near relatives being at the present time members of Parliament. There was, it appeared, little doubt, from the disclosures that were made, that the female prisoner have for a considerable time [illegible] livelihood by going about the country swindling in all directions. Their plan was to order goods at different shops, and give in payment checks upon the London Stock Bank, where they had no effects. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against the male prisoner, and acquitted the woman. Mr. Clarkson said there were other charges against the prisoners for obtaining money and goods by means of checks of the description alluded to in the indictment, however strong the suspicion might be against them, he was unable to produce more evidence affecting them than on the first indictment. He, therefore, thought it would be unnecessary to proceed with these indictments. The male prisoner was then called up, and sentenced to be transported [illegible].

OXFORD CIRCUIT, WORCESTER.—The Queen v. Murder.—Joseph Turvey, aged 37, Francis Dingley, 34, Sarah Turvey, 37, George Brant, 18, Thomas Hooper, 19, John Cook, 25, Joseph Tandy, 42, Thomas Collins, 20, William Cosnett, 25, and William Brompeld, 19, were indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Staite, in the parish of Severn Stoke, in this county. The particulars of this unfortunate case have been [illegible] our readers. After two days' trial, the Jury found a verdict of Manslaughter against all the prisoners. The Learned Judge sentenced Dingley, the two Turveys, and Tandy to be transported for the term of their natural lives; Hooper, Cook, and Brompeld for ten years; Brant for seven years, and Collins to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for two years.—STAFFORD.—Fratricide.—John Brough, aged 33, a farmer, was charged with the wilful murder of his brother, Thomas Brough, at the parish of Biddulph, in this county, on the 3d January last. The particulars of this case, which were stated at the time were very distressing. The deceased brother was in better circumstances than the rest of his family, and the house in which the prisoner lived with his mother belonged to Thomas, from whom it was rented. Deceased was described as a harsh, overbearing and passionate man, and the rent being overdue, he determined to [illegible] train, and took away some boxes, the property of the prisoner. Attempts were made by the mother to induce deceased to be [illegible] nient, but in vain; and the prisoner was much excited. It appeared that the brothers met in a field, and on the same night the prisoner struck deceased a blow on the head with a hammer, which killed him, and that he afterwards threw the body into a [illegible] it was found. Immediately after he had committed the act he became very much depressed, and cried bitterly. He sent for another brother named James, to assist in removing the body, but he refused. This was the substance of the evidence for the prosecution. The principal witnesses against the prisoner, his nearest relatives, presented the most distressing [illegible] when called upon to give evidence; more especially the mother and his brother James, who was at one time so much overcome by their feelings, as to be obliged to leave the court. The prisoner himself, who appears to have borne a character for the greatest mildness of temper up to the period of his committing the dreadful deed, seemed, as he stood in the dock, to be much crushed by the consciousness of his situation. Mr. Archer addressed the jury for the prisoner, endeavouring to reduce the crime to manslaughter, by urging the total absence of all premeditation. Baron Platt, in his summing up, explained to the jury the distinction between murder and manslaughter, cautioning them against allowing themselves to be led away by those natural feelings which might so well be excited by the speech of the learned counsel. His lordship then went through the whole of the evidence with the greatest care and minuteness. The jury retired to consider their verdict, and remained in consideration five hours before they returned their verdict, which was Guilty of wilful murder, with a recommendation to mercy. His lordship then passed sentence of death.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY, in a gentleman's garden, in Lancashire, an active young Man as APPRENTICE for three years, age 18 to 25. To one anxious to become acquainted with all the higher branches of his profession, this advertisement offers considerable advantages. A small premium will be expected.—Apply to S. HOWARD, Eltham, Kent, and WOODS & Co., Horse-shoe Corner, Lancaster.

WANT PLACES.—All letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER.—D. FERGUSON, Stowe, [illegible] ham, with confidence recommends to the notice of any nobleman or gentleman in want of a Gardener, where a married man is kept, ISAAC PASSFIELD, 26 years of age, who has been employed as one of the foremen in Stowe Gardens nearly four years, during which time his conduct has been very satisfactory.

AS GARDENER.—A Young Man, 28 years of age, who has had considerable experience in every department of Horticulture, is desirous of meeting with a situation in the above capacity. He lived 3½ years in his last situation, from which he will receive an excellent recommendation.—Direct to G. W., Mr. AYRES, Lee Bridge, Lewisham.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 29, who has had great experience in every department of Horticulture, and can be highly recommended for strict integrity and a perfect knowledge of his profession in every department. Can take charge of land if required, and can produce an unexceptionable 7 years' character.—Direct to J. D., at G. Bragge, Esq., Wrotham Park, Barnet, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man without family, age 36, who perfectly understands the Management of Hothouse, Greenhouse, Kitchen-Garden, Flower-Garden, &c. His Wife can take charge of a Lodge if required, and is a good Needlewoman. Has been in the situation he is about leaving two years.—Direct, post-paid, to F.C., Stone-house, Lewisham-road, Deptford, Kent.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, who has a good practical knowledge of his business in the various [illegible] departments of Fruits and Flowers; would have no objection to manage a portion of land. His Wife could take charge of a Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have a 7 years' character from the gentleman he has lately left.—Direct to Y. A., [illegible] ham Post-office, Kent.

AS PARK, PARK and GAME, or GAME-KEEPER.—A young Man, aged 25, who understands the management of a large park, breeding game, and breeding and training dogs. Has been brought up as Keeper—his father and grandfather having served some of the first Noblemen. Can have an excellent character.—Application to be made to Mr. WALL, 125, Piccadilly, or by letter addressed X. Y., Post office, Buckingham.

AS FARMING BAILIFF.—A respectable middle-aged Man, who perfectly understands the management of Land and Stock in all its branches; also Draining, Levelling, and Floating. His Wife would undertake the management of a Dairy.—Satisfactory reference may be obtained upon application to the Hon. H. W. Powys, Berwick House, Salop, or the Hon. and Rev. E. R. B. Feilding, Shipton Rectory, Salop.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1845.

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.

OFFICE FOR PATENTS OF INVENTIONS AND REGISTRATIONS OF DESIGNS, 14, LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

THE Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, (or by letter, prepaid,) to Mr. ALEX. PRINCE, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields.

SCOTTISH UNION FIRE & LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, 37, CORNHILL, LONDON.

LONDON BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Charles Balfour, Esq.	Robert Murray, Esq.
J. Gordon Duff, Esq.	R. Oliverson, Esq.
Robert Gillespie, Esq.	J. R. Robertson, Esq.
James Gooden, Esq.	H. F. Sandeman, Esq.
H. M. Kemshead, Esq.	George Ramsay, Esq., Manager.
John Kingston, Esq.

THE BUSINESS of this Corporation has been REMOVED to No. 37, Cornhill, opposite Finch-lane.

The last bonus added to the life policies varies from 41 to 65 per cent. on the premiums paid, and averages 14 per cent. on the sums assured.

The next division will take place in December, 1846.

Fire Insurances effected at the usual reduced rates.

Special risks reasonably rated.

37, Cornhill, London. F. G. SMITH, Sec.

LIFE ASSURANCE AND ENDOWMENT.—The following are specimens of the Premiums charged by the AUSTRALASIAN COLONIAL AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY COMPANY, for the Assurance of a payment of £100 to the Assured on the attainment of the age of 60, or for the payment of that sum to his representatives, in case of his death before that age.

Age	20	25	30	35	40	45
Ann. Pr.	1 17 10	2 5 8	2 16 6	3 11 3	4 14 0	6 13 1

Persons assured to the amount of £500, participate in the profits of the Company.—Subscribed Capital £200,000.

For Forms of Proposal and other Particulars, apply at the Offices, 126, Bishopsgate Street, corner of Cornhill, City.

NATIONAL ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

No. 4, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, LONDON.

Assurance Department—Policyholders for the whole of life are entitled to the whole profits.

For Investment, shares are issued of Five Pounds; also reduced shares of Five Shillings, designed to enable provident persons to improve savings. Shareholders are not subject to calls nor liable in respect of policy claims. Agents wanted in towns where none are already appointed. The Prospectus and all necessary information may be obtained at the offices of the Association. WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary.

News of the Week.

WE have news this week from the United States of very great interest and importance. The Bill for the Annexation of Texas has passed both Houses of Congress, and received the signature of President Tyler on the very eve of his retirement from office. The Oregon Occupation Bill has been rejected by a majority of 2, on the understanding that matters are in a fair way for a speedy settlement with Great Britain; and the new President, Mr. Polk, was installed into office, and delivered the usual Message on the 4th March. The Texas Annexation Bill passed the Senate on the 27th Feb. and the House of Representatives on the following day, and on the 1st March it was returned with the signature of the President. Texas is therefore virtually one of the component States of the Union, and all parties are anxiously awaiting the reception of this intelligence by the Mexican and Texan Governments. In the meantime, the Mexican Minister has protested against the measure, and a general impression prevails that Mexico will view it as an act of hostility, and will declare war. The inaugural message of the New President is remarkable for a moderation and dignity of tone but rarely observed in the official documents of his predecessor. It makes no mention of England, or of any other European power, but declares authoritatively in favour of the Annexation of Texas, the immediate occupation of the Oregon, and every other territory that can be acquired by which it calls "constitutional means." It advocates a revenue tariff, with protection only as a contingent; condemns a national bank, a national debt, and repudiation, and approves of the veto power of the President if used in moderation. On the whole, the views of Mr. Polk appear to have given satisfaction to all parties in the States, and the commencement of his career gives promise of a stirring and energetic Presidency, involving many matters which seriously affect the interests of this country, and are not unlikely to lead to results of the highest importance.—The news from France presents few topics which call for notice, except the introduction of the projects of law for arming the fortifications of Paris, and improving those of the French frontiers. The Cabinet is threatened with another check in a debate on two treaties of commerce, concluded with Belgium and Sardinia, during the last recess. The Chambers seem disposed to limit the operation of these treaties to the shortest possible period; and the Ministry, it is said, regard the issue of the debate with much apprehension and anxiety.—From Spain we learn that the Bill for restoring the unsold Church property to the clergy, has passed the Deputies by a majority of 126 to 16, and that this result will shortly lead to the permanent establishment of diplomatic relations with the Pope.—The Swiss Diet adjourned on the 20th inst., without coming to any decision respecting the Jesuits, or the amnesty proposed to be extended to the political offenders of Lucerne. On these points, therefore, the long and angry debates which have lately taken place, are altogether barren of results, except as affording to the whole of Switzerland better evidence than could otherwise have been obtained of the feeling of the several cantons. The Diet however adopted a resolution declaring the existence of the free corps to be incompatible with the spirit of the federal compact, and calling upon all the confederated States to adopt measures calculated to prevent the formation of those corps, and the violation of the territory of the cantons by any such armed volunteers.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle, and have taken their usual walks and rides in the park and grounds adjacent. On Tuesday Prince Albert hunted with his harriers; and on the same day H.R.H. the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden arrived at the Castle on a visit to Her Majesty. On Wednesday the Queen and Prince Albert rode out on horseback in the Great Park, and in the afternoon rode out in a pony phaeton accompanied by the Grand Duchess. On Thursday the Royal party visited St. George's Chapel, the Royal Mews, and Riding-School; after which the Grand Duchess returned to town. The Countess of Charlemont has succeeded Viscountess Canning as Lady in Waiting, and Admiral Sir Robert Otway has succeeded Colonel B. Drummond as Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

The New Bishop.—The Queen has approved of the appointment of the Dean of Westminster to the vacant see of Ely.

Consular Appointments.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint J. H. Drummond Hay, Esq., to succeed his late father as Consul-General in Morocco; William Wilshere, Esq., to be Consul at Adrianople; and Robert Grigg, Esq., to be Consul at Mobile.

Order of the Bath.—Mr. Stephenson, Private Secretary to Sir R. Peel, has been appointed Messenger to the Order of the Bath, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Pulman. The duties of the office are those of Receiver-General and Treasurer to the Order.

Real Property in Great Britain.—A return has been issued, by order of the House of Commons (on the motion of Mr. Villiers), showing the total amount of the annual value of real property in each county of England, Wales, and Scotland, assessed to the property and Income-tax, for the year ending April, 1843. In England and Wales the total value of property so assessed was as follows:—Annual value of lands, 40,167,088*l.* 5*s.* 7½*d.*; houses, 35,556,399*l.* 17*s.* 3½*d.*; tithes, 1,960,330*l.* 18*s.* 10½*d.*; manors, 152,216*l.* 11*s.* 3¼*d.*; fines, 319,140*l.* 15*s.* 8¾*d.*; quarries, 207,009*l.* 8*s.* 8¼*d.*; mines, 1,903,794*l.* 5*s.* 10¼*d.*; iron works, 412,022*l.* 8*s.* 8½*d.*; fisheries, 11,104*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.*; canals, 1,229,202*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.*; railways, 2,417,609*l.* 18*s.* 0½*d.*; other property not comprised in the foregoing, 1,466,815*l.* 18*s.* 1¾*d.* Thus the total annual value of real property assessed to the Property and Income-tax, in England and Wales was 85,802,735*l.* 8*s.* 6¾*d.* In Scotland the total was 9,481,762*l.* 8*s.* 9¼*d.*, composed of the following sums;—Lands, 5,586,527*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*; houses, 2,919,338*l.* 15*s.* 9¼*d*; no tithes or manors; fines, 901*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*; quarries, 33,474*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*; mines, 177,592*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*; iron works, 147,412*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*; fisheries, 47,809*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*; canals, 77,891*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*; railways, 181,333*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; and other property, 309,480*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* The grand total of the annual value of real property so assessed in Great Britain, in 1843, was thus 95,284,497*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* The highest annual value of land was in Yorkshire, being 3,989,936*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, and the lowest in Cromarty, being 5856*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* The highest value of houses, on the other hand, was in Lancaster, being 4,777,536*l.* 6*s.* 2*d*, or about one-eighth of the annual value of the houses in the whole of England, Wales, and Scotland. In London, the annual value of houses assessed to the Property and Income-tax in 1843, was 1,369,515*l.*; tithes, 32,788*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*; fines, 7164*l.*; railways, 42,661*l.*; other property, 234,136*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*; making a total of 1,686,265*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* The annual value of houses in the Inns of Court was 107,572*l.*; in Westminster, 2,176,516*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*; and in Middlesex, 5,579,872*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.* Canals in Westminster, 75,794*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*; and other property, 57,426*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* In Middlesex, canals, 78,410*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*; railways, 960,443*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*; and other property, 168,308*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* Thus the total annual value of real property assessed in Westminster was, in 1843, 2,329,145*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*; and in Middlesex, 7,222,867*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* The above is an abstract of the chief portions of a mass of figures, occupying five large folio pages, with seven columns on each page.

Trade and Navigation.—The annual accounts relating to trade and navigation, customs duties, and tonnage of vessels were presented to Parliament a few days ago, by command of Her Majesty, and ordered to be printed. A synopsis of them can hardly fail to interest a large class of our readers. The accounts relating to the imports of various articles of foreign and colonial merchandise into the United Kingdom, show that, during the year 1844, the total quantities of coffee imported amounted to 46,521,243 lbs., against 38,942,469 lbs. imported in the year 1843. Of this quantity, 24,110,283 lbs. were the produce of British Possessions, and 22,410,960 lbs. the produce of foreign countries. The gross amount of duty received on this coffee was 682,218*l.*, against 342,450*l.* on the British Colonial, and 339,768*l.* on the foreign coffee. In 1843, the total amount of duty was 697,983*l.*, or 15,765*l.* more than in 1844. The quantity of coffee entered for home consumption was in 1844, 31,394,225 lbs. (out of 46,521,243 lbs. imported), against 30,031,432 lbs. entered in 1843 (out of 38,942,469 lbs. imported). The total quantity of wheat imported was 1,100,305 quarters, against 940,120 quarters in 1843; of these 1,100,305 quarters, 823,271 quarters were entered for home consumption, realising a gross revenue of 674,861*l.* in the shape of duties received. The duties accruing to the revenue in the preceding year amounted only to 604,326*l.*, or 70,535*l.* less; thus showing that the Corn Laws at present existing work very favourably for the revenue. The quantity of barley imported was 1,021,987 quarters, realising a duty of 204,806*l.*; of oats, 302,091 quarters, duty 77,910*l.*; of peas, 119,078 quarters, duty 38,857*l.*; and of beans, 154,582 quarters, duty 71,181*l.* Not a quarter of malt entered the kingdom through the Custom-house in 1844, and only 115 quarters in 1843. The quantity of flax and tow, or codilla, of hemp and flax imported in 1844 amounted to 1,590,399 cwts. producing 7010*l.* The plain silks and satins of Europe realised 86,960*l.*; figured or brocaded, 82,780*l.*; striped gauzes, 18,593*l.*; plain velvets, 15,362*l.*; other sorts, 63,626*l.* The rum imported (including over-proof), was 3,120,125 gallons, producing a revenue of 1,025,858*l.*; brandy, 1,509,634 gallons, producing 1,468,316*l.*; Geneva, 380,093 gallons, producing 17,069*l.* A sensible decrease may be observed in the import of spirituous liquors during the past year, compared with the imports of 1843. The quantities entered for home consumption, however, were really the same in both years. The total quantities of sugar imported amounted to 4,874,108 cwts., against 5,020,569 cwts. imported in 1843. The duty realised was, however, 5,216,569*l.* against 5,088,036*l.* in 1843; of the 4,874,108 cwts. 2,444,811 cwts. were the produce of the British possessions in America, 540,515 of Mauritius, 1,100,693 of the East Indies, and 788,089 of foreign countries. The tea imported were 52,797,766 lbs., realising 4,524,613*l.* The imports of unmanufactured tobacco amounted to 33,813,614 lbs., producing 3,863,389*l.* The imports of wine amounted to 8,582,710 gallons, of which 7,433,700 gallons were of various sorts (neither French nor Cape). The duty therefrom amounted to 1,991,096*l.* The consumption of wines seems to have increased, for whereas only 6,287,003 gallons were entered for home consumption in 1843, as many as 7,077,117 gallons were so entered in 1844. The difference of duty was 225,145*l.* The total quantity of cotton-wool imported was 5,775,668 cwts., of which 4,981,393 cwts. were foreign. The duty obtained was 682,923*l.* The quantity of sheep and lambs' wool amounted to 65,663,686 lbs. against 49,243,093 lbs. imported in 1843. The imports of live stock have greatly increased. In 1844, 3710 oxen and bulls were imported, against 1114 in 1843; 1115 cows, against 368 in 1843; and 2801 sheep, against 210 in 1843. The duties received on live animals in 1843 amounted to only 1552*l.*, but in 1844 to 5304*l.* The imports of foreign cheese and butter have also increased, and those two articles of food alone produced a revenue of 303,939*l.* The total amount of duty received on all the articles imported was 24,019,054*l.*, against 22,636,659*l.*, in 1843. Of the exports of the principal articles of British and Irish produce and manufactures in the year 1844, the declared value amounted to 50,615,205*l.* against 44,812,020*l.* in 1843. There is a sensible increase in the exports of our cotton manufactures, earthenware, hardware, and cutlery, linen manufactures and yarn, iron and steel, silk manufactures, sheep and lambs' wool, and woollen manufactures. The net produce of the customs duties in 1844 amounted to 23,969,677*l.*, against 22,574,103*l.* in 1843. By the Navigation Returns, we find that the total number of vessels employed in the foreign trade of the United Kingdom, which entered inwards in 1844, amounted to 21,929 (tonnage, 4,231,334), and that the number cleared outwards amounted to 21,042 (tonnage, 3,680,066). The number and tonnage of vessels employed in the coasting trade during the year 1844 was respectively 133,898, measuring 10,964,707 tons, entered inwards; and 145,242, measuring 11,694,861 tons, cleared outwards.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The proceedings of the French Chambers present few topics which call for notice. On Monday a debate commenced upon a Customs Bill presented by the Government, the main objects of which are to procure the approbation by the Chambers of two treaties of commerce entered into with Belgium and Sardinia, at a period when the Legislature was not assembled. The committee of the Deputies have advised that the former treaty, concluded in 1842, be not extended beyond the earliest period at which it may be made to terminate; and, as regards the treaty with Sardinia, they demand that it be put an end to in three years, instead of six, the time originally stipulated. The Ministry are said to view the fate of the Bill with considerable anxiety.—In the Chamber of Peers M. Teste has presented the report of the committee appointed to examine the proposition of Count Daru for the prevention of excessive speculation in railway shares. The committee has greatly modified the plan of Count Daru, which was considered too stringent. It gives every liberty for the formation of companies and the opening of subscriptions, even before the concession is granted, but it lays down rules to protect the public against the manœuvres of designing parties.—The Chamber of Deputies made last week its first trial of voting by division. The matter was managed in this way—each member received one ball only from the Secretaries, which he openly put into a vase painted black for the noes, or into the other painted white for the ayes.—On Wednesday, Marshal Soult introduced the project of law for arming the fortifications of Paris. The first article demands a sum of 17,750,000 f. for the fabrication of the artillery necessary for arming the enceinte of Paris, and the external works and fortifications dependent upon it. The remaining articles refer to the manner in which this sum is to be expended. Marshal Soult then introduced a project of law, demanding 18,140,000 f. for the improvement of the fortifications on the frontiers of France—viz., 9,790,000 f. for the completion of the extra works at Dunkirk, Lafere, Le Portelet, Grenoble, Besançon, Sedan, Soissons, and Lyons, and 8,350,000 f. for the fortifications to be constructed on the coast, at the ports of Brest, L'Orient, Rochefort, and Toulon. These sums are in addition to the large grants made for the same purpose in 1841. The debate on the arming of the fortifications of Paris will be very animated, but it is doubtful if it will be made the subject of a party division, as the measure is a favourite one with his Majesty, whom neither party wishes to offend.—The Minister of Agriculture and Commerce had founded a prize of 1500 francs for the best essay on the contagious typhus peculiar to horned cattle. The weather had changed for the better in Paris on Good Friday, but the procession to Longchamps, ordinarily so animated, was a poor affair, and the crowd would have had nothing to see, had not General Tom Thumb condescended to honour with his tiny presence and proportionate vehicle the avenue of the Champs-Elysées; the hero of the day was escorted by a detachment of Horse Guards.—The Government papers announce that the British Government have ordered the restoration of a French ship, seized by the authorities of New South Wales, for illegal trading, and have granted an indemnity of 4000*l.* to the owner. They also state that Lord Aberdeen has granted a pension of 500 francs a year to the widow of a French fisherman, killed by a shot from an English vessel of war, off Newfoundland, while protecting the fisheries from the encroachments of the French boats. These concessions are much praised by the official journals, but the organs of the Opposition make them the ground of fresh attacks upon this country. The recollection of the indemnity promised to M. Pritchard, of Tahiti, is angrily revived on the occasion, and all that M. Guizot obtains for his exertions in these two cases is the reproach of not having required more, and the imputation of priding himself upon the scanty reparation he has obtained for the purpose of preparing France to submit to some other impending anti-national concession to England.—M. de Lesseps, who made himself so conspicuous as Consul at Barcelona, and who was since appointed Consul-General at Alexandria, has again had his destination altered, and according to present arrangements returns to his former post at Barcelona. The expected arrival of the two Queens of Spain and the Court at Barcelona, and the probability that some important step will be taken during their residence in Catalonia in the great question of the young Queen's marriage, is the reason given for the change.—A camp of 30,000 men is to assemble next summer in the neighbourhood of Bordeaux. The Duke d'Aumale will take the command. The Duke de Nemours will review the troops, and some other members of the royal family will be present to see the evolutions.—The journals have accounts from Algiers, which state preparations to be making with great activity and on a large scale for the expedition against the Kabyles of Djurjura, which is to commence immediately after Marshal Bugeaud's return. The same advices corroborate the reports of Abd-el-Kader having assembled a considerable force in Morocco, notwithstanding the Emperor's reiterated injunctions and threats.—The Débats contains a pastoral letter of Cardinal de la Tour d'Auvergne, Bishop of Arras, in which he prohibits the reading, or even the possession, of the Manuel de Droit Ecclésiastique, the work in which M. Dupin defends the liberties of the Gallican Church against the party termed Ultramontane. On the preceding day, M. Dupin, at a meeting of the Academy of Moral and Political Science, took occasion to refer to the dispute between himself and the clergy, "in which he described with firmness," says the Siècle, "the real principles on which the Gallican doctrines rest, and demonstrated that the Concordat of 1801 had given a new sanction to the old maxims of the Church, which had at all times been maintained by the French clergy. M. Cousin acquiesced in the statements of M. Dupin, and the entire Academy appeared to approve the sentiments of both." The Bishop of Nancy, the Archbishop of Sens, and all the bishops of his province, have signified their accession to the pastoral letter of the Cardinal Archbishop of Lyons. The Bishop of Rennes has also sent his declaration of assent. To the surprise of the Deists, another advocate for the church has appeared in the person of M. Cormenin, the celebrated Liberal deputy and pamphleteer, whose works, under the name of Timon, have acquired for him much notoriety.

SPAIN.—Accounts from Madrid state that on the 17th the Chamber of Deputies passed the Bill for restoring the unsold church property to the clergy, by a majority of 126 against 16. The Minister of Justice and the President of the Council repeated, in the course of the debate, their former declaration, that "the rights of the owners of national property were guaranteed by the laws; that they had consequently no cause for alarm, and that the restitution of the unsold property was indispensable to carry out the negotiations with the Holy See." It was reported that the Government had received satisfactory intelligence from Rome, and that a nuncio would be shortly accredited to the Spanish Court. The Government despatched, on the 18th, an extraordinary courier to announce to the Papal Government the adoption of the Church Bill by the Chamber of Deputies. It was believed that the Chambers would not again be convoked before the 29th or 30th inst. The court-martial of Vittoria had pronounced on the fate of a number of the individuals implicated in the late conspiracy, none of whom had, however, been capitally convicted. Ten years at the hulks was the highest penalty inflicted by the Court.

SWITZERLAND.—The Diet met on the 18th, to decide on the three reports presented by the committee, appointed on the 5th, to consider the questions of the Jesuits, the free corps, and the amnesty. The committee held five sittings. The majority of the numbers, as is already known, belonged to the Radical party. The deputies of Berne, Soleure, Thurgau, and Vaud, depending on the 1st and 8th articles of the federal compact, contended that the Diet had a right to give peremptory orders in all questions respecting the Jesuits. They were therefore of opinion that the Diet ought to interdict Lucerne from introducing the order of Jesuits, and should call positively upon that canton to revoke its decree. In principle the majority declared itself in favour of the absolute expulsion of the order; but as the cantons of Schwytz, Valais, and Fribourg, in which the Jesuits have established themselves, are not in the same position with Lucerne, which is one of the directing cantons, the majority limited itself to requiring that a federal request should be addressed to these states to expel the order. The minority of the committee, composed of the deputies of Zurich, St. Gall, and the town of Basle, wished that the Diet should merely address a friendly invitation to Lucerne, asking the canton voluntarily to revoke the decree for the recall of the Jesuits; and while the majority wished that the resolution of the Diet should be presented to the Lucerne authorities by three representatives, to be named by the general Diet, the minority wished that the messengers should be named by the Directory, which should also have the power of determining the time when the mission should be fulfilled. With regard to the amnesty, a majority of the committee was in favour of a request being made to the canton of Lucerne to pardon the refugees of 1844, and that a similar request should be made to the cantons of Argau, Tessino, and Valais. The committee was almost unanimous in demanding the suppression of the free corps, the deputy for the canton of Vaud being the only opponent to the proposition. The Diet, in a sitting of 9 hours on the 18th, discussed these propositions of the committee. Eight States and a half, namely, Uri, Schwytz, Underwald, Zug, Lucerne, Friburg, Inner Appenzell, Valais, and Neufchatel, voted for the question of the Jesuits not being taken into consideration; eleven States and two half States, namely, Berne, Soleure, Schaffhausen, St. Gall, Argau, Thurgau, Tessino, Vaud, the Grisons, Outer Appenzell, Basle-country, Glaris, and Zurich, were, on the contrary, for proceeding against the Jesuits. Geneva abstained from voting on either side. The same eleven States and two half States were for the Jesuit question being declared a federal one, which was opposed by the other eight cantons and a half. The first proposals of the majority of the committee, to the effect that the Jesuits be driven out of all Switzerland, obtained ten votes and two half votes, namely, Berne, Soleure, Schaffhausen, Tessino, Argau, Vaud, Thurgau, the Grisons, Glaris, Zurich, External Appenzell, and Basle-country. The proposal of the minority, demanding that Lucerne be exhorted not to admit the Jesuits, were voted only by St. Gall, Geneva, and Basle-city. The second proposals made by the majority of the committee, in the event of the preceding ones not obtaining any majority, were voted but by six States and a half, the more radical cantons consenting to nothing short of the complete expulsion of the Jesuits. Thus, in the sitting of the 18th, the twelve whole votes required for a decision could not be obtained. St. Gall seemed disposed to join the ten States and two half states which demanded the expulsion, but Geneva persisted in keeping aloof. On the 19th a long debate occurred on the proposition relative to the free corps, but nothing of any moment was decided, and an adjournment took place to the 20th, when several deputies who had not voted on the preceding day gave in their adhesion to the propositions of the committee respecting the suppression of the free corps, which, having been adopted by 13 and two half-States, became a law of the confederation. The President afterwards informed the Diet that the Chargé d'Affaires of Austria presented to him on the 19th a despatch from Prince Metternich, which he had not had time to lay before the Deputies, but which he would shortly communicate to all the cantonal Governments. He then pronounced the close of the session of the Diet in the following terms:—"Our deliberations are terminated. Some of you will retire dissatisfied. A similar disposition will manifest itself among a portion of the Swiss people. It is consequently a duty the more imperious for you to exert yourselves to maintain public order and tranquillity, and not allow the interests of the commonwealth to be sacrificed to party spirit. I must remind Lucerne that it depends upon its Government not to increase the existing irritation, and to effect a reconciliation by making a sacrifice to the country. May Switzerland be ready to provide against events, and strong enough to uphold her honour and liberty under every circumstance. She would repent too late, if her authority and power were abandoned to the mercy of party interests." The Zurich Gazette states that the Austrian note cautioned the Vorort against federal revolution and anarchy, but particularly against all incursion of the free corps on the territory of Lucerne. The tenor of the communication was less harsh than that of the French Cabinet, but was equally unfriendly.

RUSSIA.—Advices have reached London from St. Petersburg, announcing that the Grand Duchess, consort of the Czarewitz Alexander, the presumptive heir of the throne of Russia, gave birth on the 10th to a Prince, who was named after his father. The delivery of the Princess was announced to the people of St. Petersburg by a salute of 301 rounds. It is said that the Russian Government has banished from Georgia all the Italian Capuchin monks, because they refused to admit the supremacy of the patriarch.

TUNIS.—A Malta journal publishes a letter, dated 26th ult., from Monestier, in the Regency of Tunis, giving an account of an affair which had just occurred there. A native of Tunis, who at Malta had embraced the Christian religion, having arrived at Monestier in an English trader, the Cadi seized him, and it was with difficulty that he escaped death at the hands of the excited populace. The English Consul at Susa having been apprised of what was going on by an English sailor, went to the spot, and having insisted upon the release of the man, he was set at liberty, and an apology made by the Cadi.

INDIA.—Another Overland Mail has arrived this week with accounts from Calcutta to the 8th ult. The interest of Indian intelligence however does not increase with the frequency and rapidity of its transport. The interval since the departure of the last mail (only a fortnight) had presented in India none but the most common-place events, and a few rumours of intended or threatened wars. The season for operations has, however, passed by, and, of course, an interval must elapse before anything like action is attempted. There can be no doubt that our frontiers are in a very unsettled state, the best evidence of which is the movement of troops towards Loodianah. The cause of this movement is said to be the revolution in the Punjaub, where matters are still in a very unsettled state. British interference is likely to be requested, and the Governor-General is evidently prepared for any attempt that may be made to disturb our empire from this or other quarters. There is no news from China by this conveyance of the slightest importance. In Calcutta itself there was no news of interest. Sir Robert and Lady Sale had left for their destination, after receiving the compliment of a public dinner, and a ball and supper at Barrackpore.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople, of the 7th inst., state that the Ambassadors had not yet received instructions from their Governments respecting the affairs of Lebanon, which consequently remained in statu quo. The Emir Emin, the member of the Shehab family whom the French proposed to invest with the government of that country, had abjured the Catholic religion, and declared himself and his family to be Mussulmans. There has been a revolt amongst the Albanians serving in the artillery at Tophana. When any of these men fell sick, before being sent to the hospital, whatever money or trinkets they had were taken from them and given to the colonel. These effects were seldom or never restored, which caused so much discontent amongst the Albanian soldiers, that they determined to petition the Sultan for redress. This the colonel discovered, and in his efforts to take by force the petition from the man who had been chosen to present it to the Sultan, became so exasperated that he struck the officer. A riot succeeded, which might have proved most serious but for the prompt arrival of Riza Pacha at the head of 2000 men. The ringleaders amongst the Albanians were taken prisoners, and some of them, it is said, have since been strangled.

UNITED STATES.—By the arrival of the packet-ships Indiana and George Washington, we have most important news from New York to the 6th inst. This intelligence comprises first, the resolution of the Senate confirming that of the House of Representatives with regard to the annexation of Texas; and, second, the speech of President Polk on his inauguration. The Senate, despite of all speculations to the contrary, has agreed to the resolution of the lower House, and Texas, so far as the United States is concerned, is now a part of the Union. The new President has also expressed himself in favour of the proposal. An amendment was appended to the resolution of the Senate, but it does not alter the broad fact that the United States are willing to sacrifice everything for an addition to their already too wide domain. The news is certainly of a very grave character, and will require the utmost attention and care from the Executive in this country. It is true that Texas must be a consenting party to the contract, but it is equally evident that America is determined to use every effort to accomplish her purpose, a purpose which can not but affect the interests of this country in the new world, and which may lead to results of the highest importance. The latest accounts from New York state that the intelligence of the vote of the Senate on the Texas question was quickly followed by the news of its confirmation by the House of Representatives and by the signature of President Tyler. Whether the propositions will be entertained by the Texan Government is, of course, uncertain. Meantime it is stated that the Mexican Minister protes against the whole proceedings, states that his Government construed the passing of the measure into an actual hostile design, and that a declaration of war on the part of the Mexican Government would be the consequence. It appears that since the capture of Santa Anna, and the destruction of his power, the Mexicans have all coalesced against any annexation, and that any attempt to effect it on the part of the United States will meet their hostility.—The Oregon Occupation Bill came up in the Senate on the 3d, and the President sent notice that the question was in a fair way to be settled by negotiation with the British Government; nevertheless, the Bill was pressed to a vote, when it was lost, the votes being 21 for, 23 against. The matter, therefore, remains as before. On the morning of the 4th March, President Polk was inaugurated with great honours, and became the chief officer of 17 millions of people. The ceremony is described as being most imposing, the numbers assembled to witness it far exceeding any former occasion. After having taken the oaths, Mr. Polk delivered his address, which is rather lengthy, but is characterised by great moderation and firmness, and is calculated to give satisfaction to all parties. He advocates a revenue tariff only, protection being only a contingent. A national bank, a national debt, and repudiation are all condemned; Oregon is to be "annexed" by constitutional means; the veto power of the President, if used in moderation, is recommended. The Texas Annexation meets his full approbation. On the whole, the promulgation of the opinions and views of the new President appear to have given satisfaction. Mr. Calhoun is not in the new Cabinet, his views in regard to Great Britain preventing him from either being there, or going to Europe as a foreign Minister, without his embarrassing his Government. He retires to his farm in South Carolina till the election for Senators, when he will be returned as a Member to Congress. The following extract from the new President's Message relates to the Texas and Oregon questions, and will be read with interest:—

"The republic of Texas has made known her desire to come into our Union, to form a part of our confederacy, and enjoy with us the blessings of liberty, secured and guaranteed by our constitution. Texas was once a part of our country—was unwisely ceded away to a foreign Power—is now independent, and possesses an undoubted right to dispose of a part or the whole of her territory, and to merge her sovereignty, as a separate and independent state, in ours. I congratulate my country that, by an Act of the late Congress of the United States, the assent of this Government has been given to the reunion; and it only remains for the two countries to agree upon the terms, to consummate an object so important to both. I regard the question of annexation as belonging exclusively to the United States and Texas. They are independent Powers, competent to contract; and foreign nations have no right to interfere with them, or to take exceptions to their reunion. Foreign Powers do not seem to appreciate the true character of our Government. Our Union is a confederation of independent States, whose policy is peace with each other and all the world. To enlarge its limits, is to extend the dominions of peace over additional territories and increasing millions. The world has nothing to fear from military ambition in our Government. While the chief magistrate and the popular branch of Congress are elected for short terms by the suffrages of those millions who must, in their own persons, bear all the burdens and miseries of war, our Government cannot be otherwise than pacific. Foreign Powers should, therefore, look on the annexation of Texas to the United States, not as the conquest of a nation seeking to extend her dominions by arms and violence, but as the peaceful acquisition of a territory once her own, by adding another member to our confederation, with the consent of that member—thereby diminishing the chances of war, and opening to them new and ever-increasing markets for their products. * * * Whatever is good or evil in the local institutions of Texas will remain her own, whether annexed to the United States or not. None of the present States will be responsible for them, any more than they are for the local institutions of each other. They have confederated together for certain specified objects. Upon the same principle that they would refuse to form a perpetual union with Texas, because of her local institutions, our forefathers would have been prevented from forming our present Union. Perceiving no valid objection to the measure, and many reasons for its adoption, vitally affecting the peace, the safety, and the prosperity of both countries, I shall, on the broad principle which formed the basis and produced the adoption of our constitution, and not in any narrow spirit of sectional policy, endeavour, by all constitutional and appropriate means, to consummate the expressed will of the people and Government of the United States, by the re-annexation of Texas to our Union at the earliest practicable period. Nor will it become in a less degree my duty to assert and maintain, by all constitutional means, the right of the United States to that portion of our territory which lies beyond the Rocky Mountains. Our title to the country of the Oregon is 'clear and unquestionable,' and already are our people preparing to perfect that title, by occupying it with their wives and children. But 80 years ago our population was confined on the west by the ridge of the Alleghanies. Within that period—within the lifetime, I might say, of some of my hearers — our people, increasing to many millions, have filled the eastern valley of the Mississippi, adventurously ascended the Missouri to its head springs, and are already engaged in establishing the blessings of self-government in valleys, of which the rivers flow to the Pacific. The world beholds the peaceful triumphs of the industry of our emigrants. To us belongs the duty of protecting them adequately, wherever they may be upon our soil. The jurisdiction of our laws, and the benefits of our republican institutions, should be extended over them in the distant regions which they have selected for their homes. The increasing facilities of intercourse will easily bring the States, of which the formation in that part of our territory cannot be long delayed, within the sphere of our Federative Union. In the meantime, every obligation imposed by treaty or conventional stipulations, should be sacredly respected."

The territories of Florida and Iowa have been formally admitted as States into the Union, returning Senators to Congress. Slavery, divorces, and lotteries are forbidden in the latter State. This raises the number of States to 28, exclusive of Texas. The proposition for allowance of drawbacks on goods re-shipped to Canada has passed both Houses of Congress. It appears to give very general satisfaction. This will affect many of the lake shipments to Canada.

West Indies.—The mail steamer Severn has arrived this week with accounts from Jamaica to the 23d Feb., Hayti 25th, St. Thomas's 1st, Fayal the 15th March; and the usual dates from Guiana, Trinidad, and the Islands. Sir C. Fitzroy, the Governor of Antigua, and Sir Henry M'Leod, the Governor of Trinidad, with his lady, were both at Kingston. Sir G. Grey, Governor of Barbadoes, was also to have been present, but was detained in Barbadoes by the great fire of which the last packet brought us an account. This meeting of the Governors of the different islands was for the purpose of consulting about the most appropriate place for a penal settlement to which criminals may be deported. The Falkland Islands, which are among those mentioned, are objected to on account of the distance; Rattan Island, on the coast of Honduras, was thought to be a more suitable location from its contiguity, but opinion in Jamaica seemed to incline in favour of that island, as there the labour of the convicts could be made available in the remoter parts, whilst all the purposes of punishment could be equally and efficiently answered at the same time. The Trent had arrived there with a few of the slaves emancipated under the slave commission from Havannah. These poor people are described as exhibiting "one mass of wretchedness," the effect of their ill-treatment by the Spaniards. Many more were awaiting in Havannah the means of transport; whilst a considerable number had sought refuge on the shores of Honduras and other islands on the Gulf. The slave ships were said still to continue their nefarious traffic, although they no longer, as heretofore, disembarked their cargoes in the port of Havannah, almost in open day, but carried them to more obscure ports or creeks in other parts of Cuba. From the very favourable season, as well as from the improving cultivation, a larger crop of sugar will be produced in the West Indies than has been obtained for many years. Jamaica, it is said, will make 50,000 hhds., Demerara 45,000, and the other islands one-third to a-half more than usual. Agricultural improvements are receiving considerable attention, and the plough and other implements of husbandry are fast coming into use, beneficially replacing manual labour, and no doubt is felt that they will in the end enable the West India planter to compete with slave-grown sugar.

CITY.

Consols closed at 99¾; Exchequer Bills, 57*s.* to 59*s.* prem.

FRIDAY'S GAZETTE.—BANKRUPTS—Laing Johnston, Hammersmith, wine-merchant—D. Morton, Eastcheap, fishmonger—E. May, Aldgate, High-street, draper—J. Phillips, Pinner's-court, Old Broad-street, and Brunswick-terrace, Park-road, New Peckham, tailor—G. Gardner, Gravesend, tavern-keeper.—J. and D. Woodhead, Netherthong, Yorkshire, woollen-cloth-manufacturers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—F. Harris, Edinburgh, wine-merchant.—J. Maclean, Edinburgh, merchant.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Easter Holidays.—The fine day on Monday after the heavy rain on Sunday was almost unexpected, and was enjoyed the more. The crowds of people who visited the numerous amusements in London and the neighbourhood were immense. The numbers who visited Stepney fair during the day are said to have been 200,000. Greenwich fair, though outdone by Stepney in numbers of booths and shows, did not exhibit any falling off in its accustomed visitors. The environs of London in all directions got up some amusement or other, and the people who live too far off to enjoy the sports of Greenwich or Stepney, regaled themselves at Chalk Farm, Battersea Red House, and other scenes beyond the limits of smoke. All the places of public exhibition were, as usual, crowded. The British Museum was visited by 15,316 persons; the National Gallery and the Tower were also great sources of attraction. There was a fancy fair and bazaar in the Thames Tunnel, which has been continued during the week. The stalls were neatly arranged with fancy goods, and decorated with flags and Chinese lanthorns. The shafts were illuminated with gas, and dressed out with the flags of all nations. The cosmorama and saloon of arts in the Rotherhithe shaft, the temple of magic in the Wapping shaft, the electrifying apparatus and various exhibitions, afforded much delight to the various promenaders under water. 15,000 persons went through the Tunnel during the day.

Prince Albert and the Duke of Rothsay.—It may not be generally known that the Prince of Wales is Duke of Rothsay, as well as Duke of Cornwall, and it would appear from the following incident which has recently occurred, that the fact was unknown to his royal father. One morning a card was presented at Buckingham Palace to Prince Albert, upon which was engraved "The Duke of Rothsay," and an audience solicited. His Royal Highness seemed puzzled, and repeated the name several times, saying he did not recollect ever having heard of such a nobleman, but he consented to give the required audience, and ordered the Duke of Rothsay to be shown in, when he was agreeably surprised by the entrance of the heir apparent, attired in full Highland costume, attended by Her Majesty's piper. The above amusing incident was productive of considerable entertainment to the Royal circle.

Dinner at the Mansion House.—On Monday the Lord Mayor gave an entertainment at the Mansion House to about 300 guests. Amongst them were Lord Stanley, the Earl of Lincoln, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the bishops of Llandaff and Peterborough, Mr. Baron Rolfe, Sir H. Pottinger, Chevalier Bunsen, the Buenos Ayres Minister, Alderman Moon, &c.

St. Stephen's, Walbrook.—Notice of a vestry meeting for the election of churchwardens and other officers of this parish having been given in the regular form for Thursday, the 27th, another notice was affixed to the church door on Easter Sunday, calling a vestry meeting also for the purpose of electing parish officers, and signed Michael Gibbs and Thomas Whittaker. As the latter notice was given without the consent of the rector, which is by law essential to the validity of all meetings of the kind, the following protest was fixed on the church door, and copies of it were sent to the Lord Mayor and Mr. Thomas Whittaker:—"St. Stephen's, Walbrook, March 24, 1845. The rector of the parish having observed upon the church door a notice for a vestry meeting on Easter Tuesday, signed Michael Gibbs and Thomas Whittaker, hereby protests against that meeting, as being summoned without the rector's consent, and therefore contrary to law. George Croly, LL.D." The authorities on which this protest was founded were—1st, the opinion of Dr. Phillimore, given expressly on the point—namely, "The usual, and therefore, under ordinary circumstances, the preferable course is for the churchwardens to give notice of the holding of the vestry, but, in so doing, they are ministerial to the incumbent, and they are bound to consult his wishes before they do so."—And also "Steer's Parish Law," p. 267, "Notices for church matters, regularly, are to be called by the churchwardens, with the consent of the Minister." There is also an express judgment of Sir John Nicholl to the same effect. Notwithstanding this protest the Lord Mayor and Mr. T. Whittaker presented themselves in the vestry-room at ten on Easter Tuesday. The rector then once more declared that the meeting was held without his consent, and therefore illegal; and the Lord Mayor without adverting to this protest, demanded that all persons not members of the select vestry should retire, which the parishioners present declined to do. Mr. Whittaker then said, "I move that the select vestry do adjourn to the Lord Mayor's private residence, 33, Walbrook." Mr. Eddison then said, "I second the motion." The Lord Mayor then held up his hand, declared the motion carried, and they left the vestry-room; Mr. Whittaker returning to "invite the rector to follow them." To which the rector replied, "I invite you, sir, to stay here and do your duty." The regular vestry met on Thursday, and re-elected Mr. Fright and Mr. Rock churchwardens. The vestry clerk said, with regard to the progress of the law proceedings, the action in the Common Pleas was tried on the 19th December, and, under the direction of Lord Chief Justice Tindal, it assumed the shape of a special case, the point raised in that court being reserved for the courts above. The duty of preparing that case, in order to obtain the decision of the superior court, rested with Alderman Gibbs's solicitor or counsel. It had not, however, been as yet prepared, though it had been applied for over and over again. With whom the fault of the delay rested he did not know. On the 15th April next, when term commenced, an application would be made to the court on the subject. With regard to the proceedings in Chancery, the accounts were before the Master, vouchers had been required for the payments, but there had been great difficulty in vouching many items of large amount. The large sum of 2000*l.* for law charges was one of the disputed items which was now under the consideration of the Master, and not yet decided upon, and there were several other items upon which the Master would have to decide. At present the proceedings were stayed in consequence of the vacation, but they would be resumed with the commencement of the ensuing term, and he believed that ultimately they would be enabled to relieve the parish from the burden which Mr. Gibbs had entailed upon it.

Highland Society.—On Saturday this venerable Society held its annual festival at Freemasons' Tavern, to celebrate the anniversary of the battle of Alexandria, where the heroism of the Highland troops was so conspicuously displayed. The Chisholm presided, and was supported by about 100 gentlemen.

Caledonian Asylum.—On Saturday a meeting of the subscribers to the Caledonian Asylum was held at Freemasons Tavern, for the purpose of electing eight office-bearers in the room of those who retired by rotation. Among those present were the Marquis of Breadalbane, Sir G. Clerk, M.P., Sir Peter Laurie, Mr. Matheson, M.P., Capt. Gordon, M.P., brother of Lord Aberdeen, the Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie, The Chisholm, and several Scotch Members of Parliament. Mr. Matheson was called to the chair. Mr. Gordon Duff moved the re-election of the eight gentlemen who went out by rotation. An amendment was moved that the Rev. Dr. Cumming be chosen a director. Sir P. Laurie seconded the amendment, on the ground that it was desirable that there should be an infusion of young blood into the direction. The Marquis of Breadalbane opposed the amendment, on the ground that it might be an infusion of acrimonious blood. Eventually the question was put to the vote, when out of a meeting of above 100 gentlemen, only four hands were held up for Dr. Cumming. The motion for the re-appointment of the original list was unanimously agreed to.

Innovations in the Church.—A meeting of the parishioners of St. George's-in-the-East was held a few days since to consider what steps should be taken in order to obtain the abandonment of the surplice, &c. by the Rev. Bryan King, the rector of the parish. Several persons addressed the meeting, and condemned in strong terms the conduct of the rector in adhering to forms which were obnoxious to the parish. A resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon the rector to "discontinue the obnoxious changes, or retire altogether from the parish, and thereby put an end to those unhappy divisions which now subsist beeween him and his parishioners, and which, if they be the 'sinful divisions' alluded to in his answer to the requisition, will have been wholly occasioned by himself, and for which he must therefore alone be answerable."—A meeting of the parishioners of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, has also been held, "to take into consideration the conduct of the clergy in introducing and continuing changes and innovations in the service of the church," and "to memorialise the Bishop of London to interfere with, and put a stop to such proceedings." Resolutions stating that the Rev. Mr. Evans, the vicar, by adopting these changes had reduced the congregation from 2000 to less than 100 souls, were adopted, with only two or three dissentients; and it was also resolved that a memorial be presented to the Bishop of London, begging him to adopt means to put down the grievances complained of.

Launch of Her Majesty's River Yacht.—In the course of the past week a very beautiful small iron steam-boat, intended as a tender to the Victoria and Albert, was launched from the building-yard of Messrs. Ditchburn and Mare, Blackwall. It has been built at the desire of Her Majesty, so as to convey her up the numerous picturesque rivers round the coast, which the draught of water of the royal yacht would not admit. She will be called the Fairy, and will be worked by the screw-propeller.

Metropolitan Improvements.—The whole of the old Fleet Ditch, so long a source of miasma and fever to the crowded districts in the neighbourhood of Cow-cross, on the line of the new street from Farringdon-street, has been covered over, so that not a vestige of the old river now remains. Great activity prevails in the formation of the new street from Spitalfields to the London Docks, the whole of the houses in the line being pulled down, and the ground made ready for the erection of new buildings. The part between Whitechapel and Spitalfields has been paved, the road is making, and gas-lamps have been erected. In Leicester-square the last house in the new street is levelled with the ground, and it is expected the road will be opened for traffic in about another month. It is said that the Woods and Forests contemplate the formation of a new street from Charing-cross, across Spring-gardens, and through the Mall to Buckingham Palace. The expense of this improvement will, no doubt, be very great, as there will be some very valuable interests to purchase, and among others, the banking-house of Messrs. Drummond. The schedule of property required comprises all one side of New-street, and almost all Spring-gardens and the western side of Charing-cross.

Proposed Endowment of Maynooth College.—A meeting was held last week at Exeter hall for the purpose of petitioning Parliament against the proposed endowment of the Roman Catholic College at Maynooth. Mr. Plumptre, M.P., took the chair, and was supported by the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, Sir Culling Smith, Bart., the Rev. E. Bickersteth, the Rev. Dr. Holloway, and several dissenting ministers. The body of the hall was tolerably filled, but the large proportion of the assembly were ladies. The meeting having been opened by prayer, the Chairman, in a short address, explained the objects for which they were met together; after which the Hon. and Rev. B. Noel and other gentlemen moved resolutions condemning the increased grant, and denouncing Popery. After some interruption from the body of the hall, these resolutions were unanimously carried.

The Royal Belgrave Lying-in Institution.—At Queen-square Police Court last week, Mr. Ryder, the chairman of the Board of Guardians of St. Luke, Chelsea, applied to the magistrate respecting the conduct of the officers of this Institution. Mr. Ryder adverted to recent complaints publicly made against the establishment, and said he had been induced to write to several of the distinguished individuals who were set forth in the printed prospectus as patrons, and as forming the committee of the Society, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Institution was in fact authorised in using their names. Among those from whom he had received answers, were the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Bishop of Ely, the Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Rosslyn, Lord Morpeth, the Marquis of Normanby, Lady Ailsa, Lady Exeter, Mr. Fox Maule, and Lord Palmerston, some of whom stated that they had long since withdrawn their names as patrons, and others said they had never subscribed or belonged to the Institution in any way. Under these circumstances, and considering the instances in which the institution had neglected to fulfil their professed engagements, Mr. Ryder thought it was a case for magisterial interference. Mr. Burrell, the magistrate, after taking time to consider whether it was a matter in which he could interfere, decided on Wednesday that he will investigate the case early in the ensuing month, when the annual meeting of the subscribers will take place.

Victoria Park.—In consequence of the breaking up of the weather, the operations for the commencement of the park are in full activity, and a great many hands have been put on to commence digging for the formation of the plantations. A new and straight line of road, which will nearly reach the park, has been constructed from Grove-street, Hackney, to Old Ford, and the entrance road across Bonner's fields has been formed, the old erection of Bonner's Hall having been pulled down. From that spot the entrance to the park will be by a handsome iron suspension bridge across the Regent's canal.

The Will Forgeries.—It appears from letters received from Barber, dated Cape of Good Hope, Sept. 22, that he still hopes his innocence will be established, and that he shall speedily receive notice of recal from Australia. Speaking of his condition on board, and his hopes for the future, he says in one of his letters to a friend:—"I am glad to say that, in spite of small-pox and other illness on board, and still more the horrible cruelty of my case, my health has not suffered seriously, but what I have had to suffer in such a pandemonium as a convict-ship you can readily imagine; but it is my determination to bear to the utmost of my fortitude all that may be cast upon me until that day when my innocence shall be acknowledged, at least by all the impartial world. Sure I am that day will come if my few friends will exert themselves. I am pretty well occupied on board, being librarian, chaplain's clerk, and inspector of police. Luckily there is one convict, M'Cullum, whose heart and head well qualify him for an associate, and we fill up all our leisure time in reading and discussion, so that I hope to make excellent use of my time in improving my mind. * * * I am glad to say that the surgeon-superintendent has interested himself about me, and convinced himself, from Fletcher's statement and manner, of my innocence, and will furnish a declaration to that effect. * * * I am treated with much consideration by the prisoners. There is a general and firm belief on board of my innocence, and although our costume is the same, I receive much respectful attention; they will never allow me to perform any of the drudgery of the ship; but for all this my fate is a terrible one. One convict has escaped since we have been in the bay, but this is a step I will never attempt. No; nothing could be appreciated by me but a restoration to the credit and esteem from which I have been most cruelly driven. * * * It is lamentable to think how nearly we succeeded in my deliverance on trial; but God's will be done, and by unceasing exertions I may yet have an autumn of happiness and honour. * * * I have just received a visit from an inhabitant of the Cape, formerly of London, who tells me of a declaration which, he says, appeared a few days after Fletcher's, signed by Saunders, and in exculpation of me. He says that the impression at the Cape is, that I shall soon call there on my return."

Demolition of the Fleet Prison.—The Fleet Prison is about to be demolished, the materials having been advertised for sale in a few days. The corporation of the city of London have purchased the property for 29,000*l.* from Government, and the days of the present building are numbered. In the language of the advertisement, the prison stands on an acre of ground, and "includes within its lofty walls a town in miniature."

Mr. Oakeley's Case.—It is stated by the daily papers that the Bishop of London has decided on taking legal proceedings against Mr. Oakeley, and that his case will come, by letters of request, before the Court of Arches in the ensuing term. It is also said that Mr. Ward will not pursue his suit against the University of Oxford for the recovery of his degrees.

The Fountains in Trafalgar-square.—On Wednesday and Thursday these fountains were put in operation on an experimental trial, which attracted a concourse of some hundreds of persons. Several experimental trials had been made previously to test the works, which have been ascertained to be complete. Although the water has ascended to a height of 40 feet, the jets were only suffered to play to a height of from 6 to 8 feet, as with a greater ascent the water is by the force of the wind driven a considerable distance across the square. The fountains will be put in operation constantly, as soon as the basins are repaired, as they have already got greatly out of order, and the cement is cracked in many places, from imperfect workmanship.

The Spa-fields Burial-ground.—At the Middlesex Sessions on Wednesday an indictment was preferred, on behalf of the parochial authorities of Clerkenwell, against the parties engaged in the perpetration of the outrages at the Spa-fields burial-ground, which are at present exciting so much attention. The grand jury returned a true bill against seven persons for opening the graves, removing the dead bodies, destroying the coffins, and interring in the burial-ground a greater number of deceased persons than the place could contain, in violation of public decency, and against the public health. The trial, it is understood, will not take place this session, which will have terminated probably before the parties can have surrendered in due course of law. In the meantime the recent exposures have had the effect of diminishing the number of interments in many of the crowded burial-places in the metropolis. At Spa-fields, where the average number of funerals on Sunday has for some years exceeded 20, they have diminished suddenly on successive Sundays from 27 to 5, 4, and 2 respectively, whilst last Sunday there were but 4.

Vauxhall Gardens.—This well-known place of amusement, despite the numerous threats of its demolition, is again, for its 115th season, to be re-opened at Whitsuntide, with all the aid of modern improvements. For a length of time a variety of reports have obtained circulation that this "Royal Property" was to be extinct, and only to be remembered in the recollections of bygone days. Sometimes it was asserted that its extensive grounds had been parcelled out for building on; at others, that the line of a projected railway was to run through its centre, but it now appears that all these reports were unfounded.

Explosion at Poplar.—On Saturday a fatal explosion took place in the manufactory of Messrs. Robeson and Highams, patent signal-light makers, near Poplar. Two persons lost their lives, and the building and its contents were seriously damaged. The jury, at the inquest, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Execution at Newgate.—On Monday, James Tapping underwent the last sentence of the law for the murder of his sweetheart, Emma Whiter, at Bethnal Green. He made no formal confession, but when on the scaffold he stated to the chaplain that he acknowledged the justice of his sentence.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 22:—West Districts, 197; Northern, 226; Central, 231; Eastern, 206; Southern, 337; Total, 1197; males, 610; females, 587. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1258; males, 658; females, 600.

Provincial.

Aylesbury.—The execution of John Tawell took place yesterday, in front of the county gaol. The town was crowded with persons from the surrounding neighbourhood, and even from London, Liverpool, and Manchester. The reporters of the papers were, however, refused admission within the prison, and the accounts as yet published are consequently confined to the details of the execution. The hour announced for the sad ceremonial was 8 o'clock, long before which time between 4000 and 5000 persons had assembled. The wretched man was greatly moved when he saw the crowd; he trembled exceedingly, and was scarcely able to stand as he stepped on the platform under the drop. Calcraft, the Newgate executioner, and one of the turnkeys led him out of the gaol, and the Governor stood behind him. The cap having been immediately drawn over him, he knelt down to pray, which he did with the most apparent fervour. After he had been praying for about a minute or a minute and a half he was assisted to rise by Calcraft, who proceeded to place the rope round his neck. Here, however, there appeared to be an unnecessary delay, which might probably have been avoided by a little forethought. There being no chain from the cross beam from which to fix the other end of the rope, a great length of time was allowed to elapse between the rope being placed round his neck and the tying it to the cross beam, at which considerable dissatisfaction was manifested by the spectators. This performed, the drop fell, and the wretched man became at once violently convulsed and his whole frame quivered—his arms and legs contracted again and again, and he then hung a motionless corpse, save that he oscillated to the motion of the wind, which was blowing strongly at the time. Probably five minutes elapsed between the appearance of the criminal and his death. From the first his hands were tightly bound together, and he kept his fingers locked in each other, as if he still prayed, and had his mind directed towards heaven in spite of his bodily suffering. It was expected that the wretched man would be received with groans and execrations by the crowd, but no such proceeding took place. On the contrary, a most decorous and becoming silence was observed, and not a word escaped to distract him in his last moments. This conduct of the people contrasts most favourably with the behaviour of the crowds who assemble at Newgate on similar occasions. The body was allowed to hang for an hour, and was then taken, but not cut, down. He was executed in the Quaker's dress. The body was immediately interred in the precincts of the gaol, though up to Thursday night his friends had hopes, from the strong applications that were made on the subject, that his body would be delivered up to them—the grave, however, was dug two days ago. It will be satisfactory to the public to know that Tawell has made a confession of his guilt, and also that he attempted to poison the unfortunate woman in September last. The confession was written by him some days ago, and he gave it to the ordinary at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, at the same time making a request that it should not be copied, but that the purport of it might be made known to the public. He said that he did not commit the murder from any pecuniary motives, but from a fear that the relation in which he stood towards Sarah Hart should become known to his wife.

Bagshot.—In consequence of the Duchess of Gloucester having determined to vacate her residence at Bagshot, instructions have been given to sell by auction the whole of the farming stock, comprising a quantity of cows, bulls, carthorses, waggons, ploughs, &c., the rare productions of the forcing-pits, including upwards of 1000 choice plants, the decorations of the pleasure-grounds, and a large portion of the furniture. In consequence of the contiguity of Bagshot-house to a large tract of land lately purchased by Prince Albert in that vicinity, and as it is little more than an hour's drive from Windsor Castle, it will become, it is stated, one of the country residences of Her Majesty, to be occasionally occupied by the junior branches of the Royal family. The Ranger's Lodge, in Richmond Park, the residence for many years of the late Viscount Sidmouth, which is now undergoing extensive alterations and repairs, will be the future abode of the Duchess of Gloucester.

Chester.—The Earl of Shrewsbury has just concluded a treaty with a building company in Cheshire, by which his lordship receives 35,000*l.* for 85 acres of his extensive property in that county, being at the rate of 412*l.* per acre. As the land thus conveyed formed a portion of the settled family estates, his lordship has laid out the proceeds in the purchase of the estate of Cotton, in Staffordshire, a desirable acquisition, contiguous to his lordship's magnificent demesne of Alton Towers.

Cirencester.—The Gloucestershire Chronicle states that His Royal Highness Prince Albert is expected to lay the foundation stone of the new Agricultural College in this town.

Chesterfield.—A case of murder and suicide has just occurred near this town, that caused some excitement among the farmers of the neighbourhood. It appears that last week Joseph Hawksley, farmer, of Whittington, a village two miles north of Chesterfield, was appre-headed on suspicion of having murdered Mrs. Green, his mother-in-law, on Thursday, the 13th inst. On Wednesday the prisoner was brought up at the Borough Court for private examination. A number of witnesses were examined, whose testimony made out a case of grave suspicion, and the prisoner was committed to take his trial for murder. The examination terminated at 4 o'clock, shortly after which the prisoner was taken back to the prison. At 6 o'clock he was seen alive; but at a quarter to 7, on the keeper entering the cell, he found him hanging by his neckcloth to one of the hinges of the door. He was immediately cut down, but life proved to be extinct.

Derby.—The capacious cavern in Stoney Middleton Dale, known as the Wonder, is now closed up from visitants, probably for ever. Above the subterraneous passage which leads to the magnificent cavern, many tons of broken or blasted limestone were piled up with wood supporters at the time of the discovery of the cavern, more than a century ago. The wood has fallen into the passage, from which it can, without herculean labour, be scarcely removed. Had a party been in the cavern at the time of the falling of the stone, they must inevitably have been entombed alive. Considering the numbers that explore the Wonder, it is fortunate that such has not been the case.

Exeter.—The Western Times contains the following paragraph, which it gives as a fact:—"A requisition is actually determined on to invite three eminent renting farmers to stand as candidates for the next parliamentary election. The farmers of Devon are determined to have men who pay rent to look after their interest in the House of Commons. We do not anticipate much immediate success from such a step; but it will open the eyes of the tenant farmers to their power, if they choose to act in concert."

Falmouth.—It is currently rumoured that Government contemplate stationing at Gibraltar four of the packets now employed in the conveyance of the Brazil mails from Falmouth. The Oriental steamers are to convey the mails to Gibraltar, where they will be transhipped on board sailing vessels, and conveyed to their destination. By this arrangement Government calculate upon reducing the number of Brazil packets to four instead of six, as at present.

Hafod.—The recent debate in the House of Commons respecting the purchase of the Hafod estate by the Duke of Newcastle, and the complete exculpation of His Grace and the Earl of Lincoln from the charges brought against them, are already known to our readers. The Duke of Newcastle has this week addressed a letter to the Standard on the subject, from which we add a few passages, in order to make the narrative complete. His Grace says that he publishes his letter

"Because Lord Lincoln, in his natural earnestness to acquit himself of all blame or dishonesty in the transaction, appears to me to have omitted to state that I also am justly clear of all blame. I may be too sensitive, but I fancy that I perceive what may be construed by the public into a supposition that I had been requiring something which it would be improper to grant. Such was not the fact. I resisted the claims of the Crown over my property, which I conscientiously believed not to exist, and still think were unfounded, but that was all. I neither expected nor sought that favour should be shown to me. I would not for any consideration of paltry advantage to myself tamper with any official man, and least of all when that man was my son, whose honour, virtue, and reputation would be dearer to me than my own. Still, however, my own honour, and reputation for unquestionable integrity, are most dear to me, and I cannot endure that, even by implication, I should be suspected by my countrymen; and as my vindication, save by yourself, has not been attempted in terms, I must undertake to be my own herald, and once more proclaim my innocence, my negation of dishonesty in any shape, and call upon those who would rob me of my best possession to remember that I am the same man yesterday and to-day, and that whilst reason maintains her sway I am not likely to change my nature. I distinctly declare, then, that Lord Lincoln has spoken the truth, the whole truth; and that, pure and clear as he is of a shadow of imputation in this transaction, I am equally so; and in fact I only most unwillingly submitted to what, by the conditions of the original purchase contract, I was compelled to do—to effect a good and perfectly valid title to the estate, although I believed that the vendors to me had for expediency engaged to yield to the Crown a right to which it was not entitled. This is my case, and if I were to write volumes, I could add nothing to its simple strength." His Grace then gives an account of his political career, in order to show how little he has desired or received from the political party with whom he acted in early life. "When," he says, "I began life I had the fairest prospects before me. In a political point of view I possessed great power. Though in the eyes of Reformers I was regarded as an obnoxious boroughmonger, still my power and influence were undoubtable. I ask—Did I avail myself of my position to do wrong? Did I sell the seats for gain, or dishonestly traffic with them, either privately or politically? Did I ever act unconstitutionally as regarded them, or as concerned the State? I aver that, to my knowledge, I never did, nor do I conceive it to be possible that I could, as such proceedings would have been utterly repugnant to my feelings and principles. My boroughs, then, on the one hand, were not productive of profit, whilst on the other they entailed prodigious losses and sacrifices, by feeding the interest, by contests, petitions, and, finally, by their parliamentary confiscation, when I was robbed, without compensation, of a valuable consideration, probably not short of 200,000*l.* It is true, honorary and honourable distinctions had been conferred upon me when a very young man. From the excellent and revered George III. I received the Lieutenancy of the county, and the Rangership of Sherwood Forest; neither of these offices yielding one sixpence of emolument. These appointments I solicited of the King himself, and they were bestowed without hesitation, and with that paternal benignity which, from my earliest youth, I invariably experienced from His Majesty. I entered upon the Lieutenancy in times of considerable difficulty and much anxiety. I exerted myself to the utmost, and I hope not unsuccessfully, through many anxious years, when at length tranquillity was restored. I spared neither my person nor my purse; it was my duty so to do, and I rendered it with alacrity and diligence: perhaps I may have fairly earned an expression of thanks from the proper quarter; it would have amply rewarded me, but it was forgotten. Having had the honour of serving four Sovereigns, I may be permitted to remark, that the per contra in pounds, shillings, and pence, was the payment for the patents on every accession. No great profit here. The garter I never would ask for, though frequently invited to solicit the honour: when offered to me I declined it, and suggested that it should be given to the Duke of Wellington, as I had no claim to distinction. I was commanded to accept it, and was invested. The honour is great, and I hope that I am not insensible of its value; but as my present object is to show that I cannot be charged with dishonest gain, I may be permitted to mention that the fees are on a scale commensurate with the honour. As none of these distinctions confers emolument or patronage, it will be seen, that with the single exception of pay when on duty with the Yeomanry corps which I commanded, I have never drawn to the amount of one penny from the public purse, nor have I as yet obtained for my family any situation of emolument, though I honestly avow that I would not preclude myself from the right of fair and legitimate solicitation, if in favour of a proper and competent member of it. It will be seen, then, that the public has no great cause to complain of my grasping, or dishonest gains. It may not have approved of my acts, or of my opinions; the Ministers of the day may have been of the same mind; but at least it will be admitted that I have acted from a pure and conscientious conviction, and with an utter disregard of selfish consequences. So in all measures of which I highly disapproved, whether Roman Catholic emancipation, reform, ecclesiastical commissions old corporations, Irish policy, corn laws, free trade, with many others, and more recently the income-tax and tariff, Canada corn, and national education, &c., in which I may not have had the good fortune to concur with the Minister of the day—on all occasions I have not scrupled to disagree and oppose, whether as a candid friend or enemy; nor can I do my duty and abstain from dissent when I see such bills as the Jews' Disabilities Bill introduced into a Christian Parliament, and look forward to the promised measures which are to give a heavy blow and great discouragement to the Protestant Church, whilst Popery is to be elevated and encouraged, and enemies to our faith, Heretics, Sceptics, or Infidels, are to legislate for that Church which they abhor: such measures demand the stern opposition of every Christian and every conscientious Protestant, who must too plainly and fearfully perceive how small is the consideration or care for the Establishment, but how great for her deadliest foes. Thus, when I have differed I have never done so from waywardness or faction, but as a painful performance of a duty—from an inward persuasion that though interest and ease forbade it, principle and conviction dictated and required it. These have been, and I trust will ever continue to be, my motives, my incentives, and my guides; and although I will not pretend to assert that I have been right, I can safely declare that I believed myself not to have been wrong. Many perhaps may remark—more fool he for his pains; why does he not follow the ways of the world? I can only reply, that such ways are not my ways, and that I could derive no satisfaction from exchanging principle for expediency. So like a wounded deer I am discountenanced by the whole herd. My present position seems to be this:—Though a determined upholder of the Church of England and of the State—of Protestantism and of Protestant ascendancy—an undisguised Conservative of the ancient and once admired British Constitution and the institutions of our country, I am disclaimed by those who I am compelled to think should be what I am. The post which I held for many years as the Sovereign's Lieutenant in this county, my Sovereign was advised to deprive me of, and I was unceremoniously discarded, merely because I disdainfully resented the molestations of one of Her Majesty's high officers—and this after having served four Sovereigns loyally, faithfully, zealously, and, I hope, efficiently. You and others may think that I have written bitterly. It may be so; neither my recollections nor my present situation are very pleasing or flattering. However, I may say with the Frenchman—"J'ai tout perdu que mon honneur;" and that, I thank God, is preserved to me, and it is a true and lasting consolation—I care for, I want nothing for myself that my Sovereign or a Minister can confer upon me. Fortunately for myself, I am unambitious of power, and best pleased in the endeavour to be a good subject and a good citizen; and it is well that I am so, as I might not inappropriately liken myself to an infected plague man. For who dares to come in contact with me? To do anything for my benefit or advantage would be to render himself suspected: he would immediately be clapped into quarantine, and subjected to potent fumigations and the severest scrutiny. I will add no more, though I might yet add much. Your patience must be severely tested. I have selected a few leading points by which to illustrate the exposition of my case, to vindicate myself from unworthy and unmerited suspicion, and to prove to my countrymen, that if I may possess their good opinion, and the blessing of a clear conscience, I shall have attained a summit of self-gratulation and self-esteem, invaluable only as I may know that it may not be wholly undeserved."

Hertford.—Considerable sensation has been created during the past week by the discovery of extensive swindling transactions, performed by a person calling himself "the Rev. Dr. Berrington, LLD.," and rejoicing in a variety of titles, all intended to set forth his great literary and scientific attainments. It seems that this person recently became the occupier of a house at Graveley, in this county, and announced his intention of opening a superior kind of school. He produced testimonials giving him the most exalted character for piety, morality, learning, &c., and having made a considerable impression upon the tradesmen of the neighbourhood, whom he honoured with extensive orders for goods of all descriptions, he extended his favours to a considerable distance from the village, and several tradesmen in Hertford supplied him with large quantities of plate, hardware, and other articles. Fortunately for the tradesmen, the character of their customer was found out before he had disposed of the goods, and they besieged his house and took possession of their own. The rev. doctor escaped to Ware, and was taken into custody in that place, but discharged on the ground that his proceedings did not constitute an indictable offence. The doctor, it is said, is well known at Liverpool, Chester, Carlisle, and other places.

Kelvedon.—Lord Rayleigh and Capt. Ducane were the principal purchasers at the sale of the late Lord Western's agricultural stock, which took place last week, in a pasture, at the entrance to Felix Hall. Notwithstanding the severity of the weather, the attendance at the sale was very numerous. For the celebrated flock of pure Merino sheep, to obtain which his Lordship expended so large a sum, there was but little competition among the graziers of the neighbourhood; there were present, however, some gentlemen engaged in the purchase of this description of stock for exportation, to whom all the lots were knocked down—couples from 28*s.* to 39*s.*; shearling ewes, 29*s.* to 34*s.*; hoggets, 18*s.* to 25*s.*; tups, 3*l.* 5*s.* to 11*l.* For the Anglo-Merinos there were many bidders—couples brought from 25*s.* to 29*s.*; hoggets, from 19*s.* to 26*s.*; tups, from 1*l.* 10*s.* to 4*l.* 4*s.* The Gloucesters, unmixed with foreign blood, realised the following high prices—couples, 46*s.* to 52*s.*; hoggets, 30*s.*; hogget tups, 30*s.* to 40*s.* For the horses there were plenty of buyers, and they brought from 20*l.* to 33*l.*, sums much above their value in the market. The short-horned cows sold from 12*l.* to 15*l.* The yearling Devon bull made 16*l.* 16*s.*, and as much as 20*l.* has been since offered for it. The sale concluded with the pigs, a sort which his Lordship had taken much care to improve, and so strong was the desire to possess it, that persons from Norfolk and other distant parts were present, and purchased at prices of which the sum realised for the best sow, bought by Mr. F. Hobbs, at 11 guineas, will furnish some criterion.

Leamington.—A public meeting was held in this town a few days since, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of erecting a suitable and lasting testimonial in honour of Dr. Jephson, whose professional talents and extensive benevolence, during a period of 27 years, have conduced so greatly to the prosperity of Leamington. Several speeches were made on the occasion, Lord Somerville, Mr. Serjeant Adams, Rev. Dr. Marsh, Mr. Gally Knight, M.P., Sir J. Browne Cave, Bart., Dr. Middleton, &c., being among the principal speakers; and a collection, amounting to nearly 300*l.*, was afterwards made in the room.

Liverpool.—This town has again been the scene of a dreadful fire, which, if less disastrous in its results than some of the extensive fires that occurred about two years ago, was more threatening in its aspect during the short time it raged. It commenced on Friday afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock, in the laboratory connected with the Apothecaries'-hall, in Back Colquitt-street. The story in which it broke out was filled with an immense quantity of castor-oil, almond-oil, and balsam of capivi, all highly inflammable substances. In the top story there was a large quantity of empty castor-oil packing-cases, whilst the other stories contained a vast variety of chemicals and drugs more or less inflammable. It need scarcely be wondered, then, that the flames progressed with the greatest rapidity and intensity, and that the entire building was destroyed. The damage is estimated at 50,000*l.*

Manchester.—A sale by auction of a rather novel description took place in this town on Monday, when the whole of the well-known stud of Mr. Van Amburgh, an elephant, giraffe, several lions, harness, vans, &c., were sold. The attendance was very numerous. The sale commenced with the disposal of the harness, the greater part of which was beautifully mounted with silver, and which brought fair prices; the vans also sold tolerably well. There seemed to be no disposition to bid high for the trained animals; a fine black-maned African lion, said to be unequalled in England, having sold for 350*l.* Mr. Cobbold, of the Edinburgh Zoological Gardens, purchased a male lion cub, about 8 months old, for 12*l.* 10*s.*; and a female cub of the same age was sold for 35*l.* Another lion, about 6 years old, went for 310*l.* The elephant Bolivar went for 750*l.*; and a very fine giraffe for 400*l.* The horses generally sold at fair prices. The greatest competition was for a grey horse, named Doctor, which, after a great deal of bidding was knocked down for 60*l.*—A melancholy case of murder and suicide took place in the Oldham Road last week; the wife of a working man having hung her infant to the bed-rail, and afterwards committed suicide by hanging herself. The Jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Temporary Insanity.

Nottingham.—Considerable excitement prevails in Nottingham, in consequence of a project to inclose the common lands belonging to the town. A Bill has been introduced into Parliament for the purpose, which it is supposed will be carried through, but the freemen of Nottingham oppose the measure. The lands consist of 650 acres of pasture land, over which the inhabitants have a right of passage from September to January. The remaining nine months they are inclosed for the growth of hay. The benefits derivable from this hay, and the power of turning cattle on to the land during the three months that the fields are open, are privileges that belong to the burgesses of Nottingham, about 3000, comprising many of the most respectable merchants and manufacturers of the town, as well as agriculturists residing within seven miles. The party promoting the Bill allege that it will be generally advantageous to the burgesses, that it will enable the town to be extended, that it will insure better dwellings for the humbler classes, and will be of greater pecuniary advantage to those who now derive some emolument from the common lands, than allowing them to remain in their present condition. This has not satisfied the freemen, and Nottingham is quite alive with their opposition.

Northleach.—The Northleach House of Correction was brought prominently before the public about two years since, by the special commission appointed by Sir James Graham, to inquire into the circumstances connected with the death of a prisoner named Beale. That investigation terminated in the dismissal of the turnkey, the reprimand of the governor, and an unsuccessful motion by the chairman of the quarter-sessions, for the dismissal of the surgeon. Since then the governor retired, and his place was supplied by an officer from the County Gaol. The visiting justices consist of the same gentlemen as were in office at the time of the investigation. The discipline of the prison has been again brought into notice, by the case of William Smart, a gun-maker, 40 years of age, belonging to Cheltenham, who died at the Union Workhouse on the 26th Feb. Smart had been committed on the 28th Sept. to three months' hard labour at Northleach, for shooting a hare: he was then in good health, but the labour of the wheel, and the treatment in the hospital, had, according to the witnesses, so completely prostrated him, that at the end of his imprisonment he had to be conveyed to Cheltenham in a spring-cart, from which he was lifted by the governor, who carried him like a child to the house of a relation. From thence he was taken to the Town Hospital, and next to the workhouse, where he died. The attention of the coroner was directed to the case by the guardians, and an investigation commenced. Owing to the illness of the coroner, however, the inquiry has been adjourned four times, and will not be resumed until next week.

Plymouth.—The local papers state that the fresh trial of the experimental brigs, Daring, Espiègle, and Flying Fish, has terminated in favour of the Espiègle, built by the School of Naval Architecture. It is said that she beat the Surveyor's Flying Fish five times out of eight "on a wind," under most trying circumstances. The Daring, built by Mr. White, has had rather the advantage, but nothing like the superiority manifested on former occasions. She has been several times second to Espiègle. There were only three trials off the wind, when each vessel had once the advantage.

Reading.—On Saturday Thomas Jennings suffered the extreme penalty of the law in front of the new gaol, in this town, in the presence of nearly 6000 persons. It will be remembered that the criminal was tried before Baron Platt, at the Berkshire assizes, on the 3d inst., for the wilful murder of his daughter at the village of Thatcham.

Ware.—The vicarage of Ware, which has long been disturbed by religious dissensions, has become vacant by the death of the Rev. H. Coddington, who was also vicar of Thundridge, which is contiguous to Ware. Both benefices are in the gift of Trinity College, Cambridge. The parishioners, it is stated, intend presenting a petition to the Master and Fellows of the College, praying for the appointment of a clergyman who will adhere to the old plan of performing Divine service, discountenancing the innovations which have already been productive of so much dissension in the parish.

Railways.

The Board of Trade gave notice in the Gazette of Tuesday, that they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Eastern Counties, Brandon and Peterborough Deviation; West London—Thames Extension; Newcastle and Darlington, and Branding Junction Extensions; Ashton, Staly-bridge, and Liverpool Junction—Ardwick Extension; Manchester South Junction and Altrincham; Manchester and Birmingham—Macclesfield Extension and Junction Line with the Sheffield and Manchester; Midland Railway—Darfield to Warsborough; Midland Railway—Darfield to Elsecar; Midland Railway—Cherit to Horbury; Midland Railway—Okenshaw to Wakefield; Midland Railway—Ambergate to Crich; London and Brighton—Horsham Branch; Harwich Railway and Pier; Richmond (Yorkshire) Railway—Hull and Bridlington Branch; Middlesborough and Redcar; and against the Dartford and Rumford; Eastern Counties—Cambridge and Bury St. Edmund's Extension; West London—Knightsbridge Extension; Ashton, Staly-bridge, and Liverpool Junction—Guidebridge Extension; Kentish Coast Railway; Huddersfield and Manchester; Harwich Railway; Harwich and Colchester; Ipswich and Harwich; and recommending the postponement until a future period of the Colchester Junction; Harrogate and Ripon Junction; Leeds and Thirsk; York and North Midland and Harrogate.—It is stated in the local papers, that the Norwich and Brandon Company have taken a lease in perpetuity of the portion of the Northern and Eastern line between Brandon and Ely, and have also offered to lease the Direct Norwich line at four per cent., and half the surplus profits. It is also stated that a coalition has taken place between the Grand Junction (Birmingham and Liverpool) and the Great Western Companies, and that a new line to be called the Birmingham and Oxford Junction will commence from the Birmingham terminus of the Grand Junction, and proceed by Warwick and Leamington, into the projected Oxford and Rugby line, near Ferry Compton. If the broad gauge should be adopted on the latter, arrangements have been made with the Great Western Company to run despatch trains from Birmingham to London in less than three hours, thus presenting a formidable opposition to the present London and Birmingham line. —The Glasgow, Paisley, and Greenock Company at their meeting announced a dividend of 5*s.* per share on the 25*l.* shares, 2*s.* 6*d.* per share on the half-shares, being at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum. The receipts of the line continue to improve, and neither present revenue nor dividend, it is stated, can be fairly taken as any index of the real value of the property. Increased harbour accommodation at Greenock, and the connection of the line with the Clydesdale Junction, will, it is expected, give the traffic of the railway a considerable impetus. The receipts, including the small balance of last half-year's account, were 23,447*l.*, and the disbursements 11,830*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*—The Ulster Railway Company announce a dividend of 17*s.* 6*d.* per share, which would leave on the net profit of the half-year, amounting to 977*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, a balance of 692*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* to be carried to the reserved fund.—The Committee of the House of Commons on the Atmospheric Railway are to commence their inquiry on the 1st of next month. The Government will be represented on the Committee by Mr. Baring; the atmospheric principle by Lord Howick; and the locomotive by Mr. Hodgson Hinde. Mr. Samuda, one of the patentees of the atmospheric, who superintended the erection of the line from Kingstown to Dalkey, will be the first witness, and will be examined as to expenses. Mr. Field, of the Croydon atmospheric line, now in progress, will be examined touching the engine power. The following engineers and scientific men of high standing will also be examined:—Mr. W. Cubitt, Mr. Brunel, Mr. T. F. Bergin, Mr. Barry, Mr. D. Gibbons. It is said that Lord Howick and Mr. Baring will pay a visit to Dublin in the course of the week, personally to investigate the practical working of the atmospheric principle.—Messrs. Haggie, brothers, of the patent ropery, South Shore, Oateshead, have just completed a rope for the Liverpool and Manchester Company, which is 3 miles in length, 8 inches in circumference, and 13 tons in weight. It is a white rope, which is an unusual circumstance; it is intended to be used in the tunnel on the incline from Liverpool to the Edgehill Station.—The Metropolitan lines have determined to reduce their fares considerably, and to adopt the system of day-tickets, which has been proved to work so well. The London and Birmingham have announced a further reduction in their passenger fares, reducing the 1st class from 27*s.* to 23*s.*, and the 2d class from 18*s.* to 16*s.*, besides accelerating the journey between London to Birmingham. The Great Western have adopted a similar policy. The South Western have reduced their fares to 16*s.* 1st class, and 12*s.* 2d class, besides issuing 1st and 2d class day-tickets at every station at a reduction of one-third the present fares.

Traffic and Prices, by permission, from the List of Messrs C. and H. Hill, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Name of Railway. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Mar. 20 & Mar. 27.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Dividend Per Share. £	s.	d.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£	£				£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		1,988	100	all	1	5	0	132 134
Bristol, Birmingham	3,350
Bristol, Exeter			100	70				81 3
Bristol, Glo'ster			50	30	1	7	6	57-9
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	50	5		*		6¼-½
Eastern Counties	8,884	2,333	avr.	14	0	3	0	21⅛-⅝
Eastern Union			50	10				17-19
Do. Extension			25	1½				3⅛-⅝
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,077	1,982	50	all	1	5	0	61-3
Grand Junction [Div 3 mo]	7,854	6,652	100	all	2	10	0
Great North of England	2,886	1,253	100	all	3	0	0	190-5
Great Western	13,589	12,031	100	80	3	4	0	179-181
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	50	5		*		15-16
Do. Extension	*	*	50	2½		*		10⅜-11
Hull, Selby			50	all				97-9
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	50	15		*		36-7
Liverpool, Manchester	4,694	3,793	100	all	4	10	0
London, Birmingham	14,564	14,190	stk.	100	5	0	0	233 4
London, Blackwall	823	629	avr.	16⅔	0	3	0	7⅞-⅝
London, Brighton	3,477	2,552	50	45	1	10	0	63-½
London, Croydon	969	215	avr.	13⅓	0	8	0	17¼-18¼
London, Greenwich		697	avr.	12½				10¼-11
London, South-Western	4,733	4,632	50	41⅔	2	0	0	79-80
Manchester, Birmingham	3,333	2,828	70	40	1	0	0	55-7
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	911	739	125½	93	2	14	0
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,566	5,383	100	73	2	9	0	144 6
Midland	9,272	7,698	stk.	100	2	2	6	144-6
Do. Birmingham, Derby			stk.	100				110-12
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,436	1,415	100	all	4	0	0
Newcastle, Darlington	1,043		25	24	4	0	0	48-8
North British	*	*	25	10		*		17-½
Northern, Eastern			50	45	1	2	6	64-5
Norwich, Brandon			20	10				16-17
Preston, Wyre	369	233	50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	654	469	100	87½	5 p. Cent
South Devon	*	*	50	10		*		20-2
South-Eastern, Dover	4,151	2,715	avr.	33⅓	6	10	6	42½-3
Yarmouth, Norwich	232		20	all	0	10	0	27-8
York, North Midland	2,603	1,734	50	all	2	10	0	99-101
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	25	20		*		40-2
Do. Selby			50	20	0	12	8	66-8
French Railways.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	20	2		*		11½-¾
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	20	2		*		17½-18½
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	20	2		*		11-½
Paris, Orleans	3,127	4,980	20	all	0	5	9½	50-1
Paris, Rouen	2,856	4,505	20	all	0	9	2	44-½
Rouen, Havre			20	14				31½-2½

Ireland.

Dublin.—The introduction of Tractarian changes in the performance of Divine service, which excited so much animosity in the dioceses of Exeter and London a short time since, has created similar dissensions in this country. Meetings of the laity to petition against these changes have become frequent in the north of Ireland. One was lately held in Ballyculter, county Down, at which there were two Deputy-Lieutenants of the county, with a number of other influential gentlemen, and a large attendance of the parishioners. Lengthened addresses were delivered by several speakers. It appeared by the statements made that the observances relative to the surplice and offertory had been introduced by Mr. Gordon, the rector of the parish, who, in addition to his revival of these practices, had threatened the churchwardens that if they did not hand round the poor-box at the proper time during Divine service they would be liable to transportation for seven years! A petition was adopted to be presented to Her Majesty, praying for an authoritative settlement of the differences existing within the Church. Also on Thursday week a parochial meeting was held at Hillsborough, for the purpose, as stated in the bills, "of taking into consideration certain injudicious and alarming changes in the mode of conducting the Church service," and the propriety of petitioning the Queen and the Houses of Parliament against such innovations. Resolutions condemnatory of innovations in the Church service were proposed by the Marquis of Downshire and others, and unanimously agreed to. A letter was also read from the Lord Primate, expressing his entire concurrence in the pastoral letter recently issued by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and disapproving of the attempt made to introduce Tractarian customs into Ireland. His Grace says:—"The laws which regulate the peculiar ceremonies belonging to our national Church are, in my opinion, no more exempt from the effect of long usage than are the laws of the land. And if the rulers of the Church have, for successive generations, allowed of that disuse, and do not now command a revival of them, I would hope that the peace of the Church will not be distracted by attempts to return to ancient customs, where the feelings of the people are repugnant to them." The Marquis of Downshire, on receiving this letter, acquainted Archdeacon Mant, the rector of Hillsborough, with its contents, and offered to lay the letter before him; but the archdeacon declined on the ground that he was not bound to abide by the opinion of the Lord Primate in any matter concerning the service of the Church, unless a question be referred to his Grace by the bishop of the diocese. "I do not therefore," says the archdeacon, "see that my being made acquainted with his Grace's letter to your Lordship is likely to alter my opinion as to my duty of performing Divine service in the manner prescribed by the law, and pointed out to me to be so prescribed by the authority to which I am answerable. The agitation which has since been excited and fermented in this parish (as well as in others) against me, does not incline me to enter into any discussion of the subject with your Lordship, as I feel convinced that I am acting upon right principles and conscientious motives; and, as I am not likely to have my opinion changed, I am also without hope of changing your Lordship's. I made an offer to Mr. Murray, a day or two ago, of the only concession I could consistently or conscientiously make." An instance of the state of feeling generated by these disputes is given in the following extract of a letter from Strangford:—"I should mention that only 27 persons (boys and children included) attended our church (Ballyculter) last Sunday, out of upwards of 500 or 600 hearers."—At a recent meeting of the Royal Dublin Society, Mr. Smith O'Brien submitted for the Society's consideration a document emanating from the committee of Irish manufactures, appointed by the meeting held in the Royal Exchange on the 13th Feb. It appeared to the committee that there were two or three causes for the decline of Irish manufactures, to counteract which the Royal Dublin Society might be brought into beneficial action—namely, first, want of industrial education; and, secondly, prejudices on the part of consumers against home-produced manufacture. Two remedies were proposed in the committee for these amongst other evils. One was the establishment, by private subscription, of a Polytechnic Institution for the exhibition of machines and manufactures, and for providing lectures and schools for industrial instruction; and the other was the increased activity and usefulness of the Royal Dublin Society in the following ways:—First, the establishment of an exhibition, open gratuitously to the public, in the Society, of machines and manufactures; and, secondly, the foundation of industrial lectures, to be delivered in the evenings, in order that the artisans might be enabled to take advantage of them. It was resolved that the paper be referred to the council for consideration and report.—The Rev. Daniel Bagot, vicar of Newry, has been appointed one of the Lord Lieutenant's chaplains, in consequence of the vacancy caused by the resignation of a clergyman opposed to the policy of the Government in relation to national education. Mr. Bagot is a warm supporter of the national system. This is the only appointment of the kind made by Lord Heytesbury since his arrival in this country.

Cork.—It appears from the following paragraph in the Cork Reporter, that the proposed repeal of the tax on glass is likely to lead to a revival of that trade in Ireland:—"We understand that the glass manufacture is shortly to be revived in the city of Cork. It is said that 10,000*l.* is forthcoming to be embarked in it. At present there are some encouraging prospects for this trade, now that all duty is to be taken off.—Daniel Leary and Michael Leary were indicted for the wilful murder of John Crowley, on the 20th October, 1843, at Derryvakurree, near Macroom. The prisoners rented a potato-field from deceased, who was their brother-in-law. Deceased, on the day of the murder, was herding some cattle in this field, when the prisoners approached and struck him with stones, of the effects of which he died in ten days after. The jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict of acquittal for Michael Leary, and of manslaughter against Daniel Leary, who was sentenced to transportation, the period to be announced hereafter.

Kilkenny.—On Tuesday the grand banquet to Mr. O'Connell and the Repeal Martyrs, which has been some time in preparation, took place in this city, with the usual festivities. About 50,000 people, including the different trades, with their emblems, were assembled in procession to welcome their guests on arriving in Kilkenny. The banquet was attended by about 600 persons. Mr. O'Connell and his friends all wore the costume of the newly fledged '82 club—a military uniform of green and gold, resembling that used by the French commissaries of police. Dr. Cane, the mayor, who acted as chairman, was attired in a similar manner. Mr. O'Connell in the course of his speech said: That 50,000 voices had proclaimed that day that the agitation for Repeal was only beginning. They had done nothing yet all their work lay before them—and they were there ready to do it. He was delighted to have had an opportunity of coming there in order to show the Ministry how untrue was the assertion they had put into the mouth of the Queen—to show that they had physical force as well as mental energy; and that if they did not hold monster meetings, they refrained because it was unnecessary to do so. After stating several reasons for being dissatisfied with the manner in which England governed Ireland, the hon. gentleman went on to say, that he had come amongst them to begin a new campaign with the same face as ever, but in a new dress. He came there to talk amongst other things of the club of '82. When a man of his age ventured to wear such a dress, it was not unlikely that younger men would soon be clothed in it. For his part, he wished to see 500 of the young blood of Ireland attired in the same costume, and he would leave it to the jury of ladies present to say whether it would become them or not. And out of that club could be expected to be able to select a Conservative senate of two gentlemen to act as mediators between the Repealers and their opponents. Having praised Mr. O'Brien for the zeal exhibited by him in the cause of Repeal, he vented some hearty abuse on the Whigs, whom he denounced as the most worthless party that ever existed. He promised them from that spot that henceforth no pseudo-Liberal should get a seat in Parliament for any Irish county unless he declared for Repeal. Having detailed some of the incidents of the State Trial, which he denounced as a crime of the greatest magnitude, equalled only by the alleged massacre of certain Wexford women by the soldiery of Cromwell, he complained that the prosecution had been suffered to pass by without any manifestation of sympathy from England for the wrong inflicted by the mockery of a trial to which they had been subjected; and concluded with a glowing description of the natural advantages of the country, and an earnest appeal to all to join him in his struggle to obtain for them their unquestionable right—the privilege of legislating for themselves in a domestic Parliament.—The other speakers were Mr. J. O'Connell, Rev. Mr. Tierney, Mr. S. O'Brien, Mr. R. D. Browne, &c.

Tullamore.—At the present assizes Henry Chawner was found guilty of the wilful murder of Mary Anne Chawner, his daughter, aged five years, by thrusting her alive into a pipe or gullet of water, at Gallin in this county, whereby she was suffocated, on the 22d July last. The chief witness against the prisoner was his other child, aged 7 years, who witnessed the murder, and was ordered by the father not to tell any one that he had done it. The jury at once found the prisoner guilty, and the Chief Baron, after addressing him on the enormity of his guilt, passed sentence of death, the execution to take place on the 14th April.

Clonmel.—At the South Tipperary Assizes last week James Nagle, a man of about 40 years of age, and whose cast of countenance was not indicative of any bad passions, was found guilty of having, on the 26th July, at Hymenstown, been guilty of the wilful murder of his wife by strangling her. The deceased woman had been previously married to a person named Fenessy, and had a family of children by him, and after his decease she married the prisoner. By her he acquired the possession of a small farm; but, in consequence of his having no children by her, they were on bad terms, and he objected to his stepsons and stepdaughters remaining in the house. The cause of death was evident, for the marks of fingers on the throat of deceased showed the means that had been resorted to. Baron Lefroy passed sentence of death, and ordered that the execution should take place on the 8th April.

Nenagh.—Thomas Kennedy and Edward Kennedy were indicted for the wilful murder of Edward Gleeson, on the 25th October last, at Glanmore. The prisoners were both young men, and of anything but a ferocious cast of countenance. This case has already been noticed in our Paper. The homicide occurred on the night of the 25th of October last, when a party of men rushed into the house after nightfall, and beat the poor man in his bed, from the result of which injuries he died on the following day. The jury consulted for a short time, and then found Edward Kennedy Not Guilty; Thomas Kennedy Guilty of murder. The Jury observed that they were unanimous in recommending the prisoner to mercy. They were of opinion that he never went to Gleeson's house for the purpose of committing murder, but only to give him a beating; and this was shown by their not striking the man about the head, and by their avoiding to use the pistol which one of them had. It was also probable that Gleeson would not have died, but from the delicate state of health in which he then was. Baron Lefroy expressed his readiness to attend, as far as was possible, to the recommendation of the jury.

Scotland.

Glasgow.—On Sunday afternoon, in John Knox Church, a scene of confusion and disorder occurred, such as was never before witnessed in any place of worship in this city. In the course of last week placards were posted over the town, announcing that Mrs. Martin, the Socialist lecturer, would attend Mr. Anderson's church on Sunday afternoon, to hear the statements of Christian doctrine put forth by him, and that on a certain evening in the ensuing week she would reply to him by argument in the Socialist Hall. This placard had the natural effect of attracting to the church an immense crowd of people, some belonging to the Socialist body, others drawn by curiosity either to see Mrs. Martin, or from an expectation of hearing the preacher direct his discourse to the opinions which she is understood to promulgate. On arriving at the church, Mr. Anderson finding all the avenues blocked up by crowds of people, resolved not to proceed with the service. This was communicated to the congregation by Capt. Richardson, and a large number retired at once, but Mrs. Martin and the Socialists refused to leave the church. After some delay a carriage was sent for by the managers in order to convey Mrs. Martin and her friends home without molestation from the crowd, but as soon as they were seen retiring from the church by a back-door, the people rushed over the pews, and a scene of indescribable confusion ensued. At length they were placed in the carriage and driven off to the Police-office, when they were held to bail to answer the charge of a breach of the peace.—A meeting of the Mormon delegates of the Glasgow Conference was held last week in the Odd Fellows' Hall, when one of the "twelve Apostles" from Nauvoo was introduced to the meeting, and addressed them at great length on the state and prospects of the "saints." The lists of their Members and Office-bearers given in by the delegates, made the total in Glasgow and its vicinity to be 1064.—The Town-council of Glasgow have unanimously resolved to invite Sir Henry Pottinger to dine with the Corporation on the occasion of his visit to Glasgow, on the 16th April next; and to present him with the freedom of the city, in testimony of their respect for his eminent public services.

Law.

Assize Intelligence.— Home Circuit—Lewes.— Amos Patching and Thomas Burgess were indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling-house of Nathaniel Blaker, at the parish of Edburton, and stealing three gold seals, a writing-desk, and other articles, his property. Mary Anne Hounsell and Jane Reader were also charged in the same indictment with feloniously receiving the property, knowing it to have been stolen. This case appeared to create a good deal of interest, on account of the male prisoners, together with a man named Longhurst, also indicted at these assizes, being supposed to have committed a great number of burglaries in this county, there being five indictments against them in the present calendar for burglaries at different places: the women being charged in each case as receivers of the stolen property. The prisoners were first arraigned before the Lord Chief Justice, when the men pleaded guilty to most of the indictments. It became necessary, however, to try one of the cases in order to include the female prisoners, and the present indictment was accordingly proceeded with. It appeared, from the evidence, that the prosecutor, Mr. Blaker, is a farmer residing at Edburton, and, on the night of the 31st December, the premises were left properly secured, and next morning it was discovered that during the night they had been entered by some persons forcing open a cellar flap, and the lower part of the house had been ransacked, and a good deal of property taken away. Nearly the whole of this property was found in apartments occupied by the male and female prisoners at Brighton; and from the observations made by the latter at the time they were apprehended, and subsequently before the magistrates, there was very little doubt that they were perfectly well aware of the means by which the property had come into the possession of the male prisoners. The men had absconded, and very great credit was due to a constable named Biddlecomb, who holds the office of inspector of police at Godalming, in Surrey, for the means he took to apprehend them and make out the case. After travelling in pursuit of them over a very great extent of country, he at length succeeded in coming up with the prisoners near Alton, in Hampshire, and as he was at this time alone, they would probably have got away, but that he adroitly hit upon the following expedient to disarm their suspicion:—He told them, upon coming up with them, that he was an officer, and that a farmer a short distance off had sent him after them on suspicion of their stealing some fowls the night before. The prisoners said they could easily prove their innocence of the charge, for they had slept at Basingstoke. The officer then said they could no doubt easily prove this to the satisfaction of the complainant, if they would go back with him, and, for "form's sake," they had better have on the handcuffs. The prisoners consented, and very quietly allowed the officer to handcuff them; and he then told them the real nature of the charge against them. The prisoners, who are powerful resolute looking fellows, then said they wished they had known what they were wanted for at first, adding, that if they had, the officer should not have put the handcuffs so easily upon them; and there is very little doubt that but for the prudence of the officer, the prisoners, from their desperate character, would have made a violent resistance, and the result might have been of a serious character, as the officer, although alone, was a resolute man, and determined upon effecting the capture of the prisoners, who have for a long time been the terror of this and the adjoining counties. Mr. Baron Alderson having summed up, the jury returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners. They were immediately called up for judgment, together with Longhurst, the man who had pleaded guilty on the previous day, and the male prisoners were sentenced to be transported for 10 years; the women were ordered, Hounsell to be kept to hard labour for 2 years, and Burgess for 18 months. The judge said that the inspector Biddlecomb appeared to have acted with great zeal and activity in the case, and he should therefore order him a reward of 20*l.*, in addition to his expenses. He likewise directed that two other constables, who had assisted him in his pursuit of the prisoners, should receive a reward of 5*l.* each.— Navy Tanner, James Haines, Thomas Langley, Matthew Hill, and Thomas Adams, were found Guilty of being unlawfully upon certain lands in the occupation of Mr John Sparkes, at Wonersh, in the night time, armed with guns and other offensive weapons, in pursuit of game. The jury recommended them to mercy, on the ground that they had not used any violence towards the keeper. Mr. Baron Alderson sentenced Langley, Tanner, Haines, and Hill, who have already been in gaol for 3 months, to be kept to hard labour for a further period of 6 months, and Adams, who had been out on bail, was sentenced to 9 months' hard labour.

South Wales Circuit, Swansea.—John Rees and Ann Williams were arraigned upon an indictment, charging them with having, on 26th May, 1844, incited Richard Edwards to administer poison to Thomas Vaughan and Mary Vaughan his wife, the mother of the female prisoner. These prisoners were tried at the last Summer Assizes at Cardiff, before Mr. Baron Rolfe, and convicted. They were then sentenced to transportation for life, but Baron Rolfe was of opinion that the charge could not be sustained under that highly penal statute, and reserved the question for the consideration of the Judges, who were of the same opinion. The prisoners were now tried on a charge of misdemeanour only. The man had been paying his addresses to the female prisoner, and their motive for the commission of the crime was to obtain possession of the old people's property. The man Edwards, however, whom they employed for the purpose, divulged the circumstances, and gave up the poison to Mr. Vaughan, who had it analysed, when it was proved to be arsenic. The Jury returned a verdict against both prisoners, and his lordship sentenced the prisoners to imprisonment with hard labour for two years.— Brecon.—Thomas Thomas was charged with the murder of David Lewis, a Cardiganshire butter-merchant, near Trecastle. The interest excited was most intense, and from an early hour in the morning the County-hall was surrounded by such crowds that when Mr. Justice Cresswell arrived he was obliged personally to struggle to obtain admittance, and several barristers were assisted through the windows. The prisoner is a young man of cheerful appearance and athletic make, and appeared quite easy and composed throughout the day, occasionally taking notes. The following is an outline of the principal evidence: The gatekeeper at Trecastle turnpike deposed to being awoke on the night of the 6th December, by the sobbing of a little boy, son of deceased, at the gate with two carts, and gathered from him that he had lost his father, and not perfectly understanding Welch, took him into the house until a waggon with two men came up, who proceeded about a quarter of a mile further, when they found the body of the deceased lying by the side of the road. They detached a horse from the train, and galloped back to Trecastle to give the alarm. It was proved by a surgeon that death had been produced by a pistol bullet, which had entered just behind the left ear, passing through the brain, and lodging against the opposite side of the skull. The pockets of deceased were untouched, with the exception of an inner money pocket, which was empty, and his watch was left. The son of the murdered man, a boy about 12 years of age, deposed that on entering the town of Brecon on Friday night, his father called to do business at the Barrack Canteen, and while he, the boy, staid with the carts at the gate, prisoner came up and asked where the owner was. They left town about 8 o'clock in the evening, and when about three miles on the Trecastle road, prisoner got out of a waggon on the road, and bargained with the deceased for a ride to Trecastle in one of his carts. They all walked part of the way to warm themselves, and afterwards the deceased, assisted by prisoner, put the boy in one of the carts, and covered him up with straw and sacking, when he fell asleep, and was only awoke by the cart stopping at the toll gate. The prisoner was identified by other witnesses, and the money was traced to him. A number of minute circumstances made up, with the above facts, a chain of circumstantial evidence so strong that all the ingenuity of the prisoner's counsel, exerted in a speech of an hour and a quarter, failed to weaken it. His lordship summed up very minutely, and the jury, after retiring for half an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty of wilful murder, and Mr. Justice Cresswell passed sentence of death.

Western Circuit.—Salisbury.—James Isaac was indicted for maliciously setting fire to a stack of straw, the property of Henry Mixen, at Box, near Bath. Found Guilty and sentenced to 15 years' transportation.—Christopher Nicholas and Mark Compton were indicted for having feloniously set fire to a barn and other buildings, the property of Anna Susannah Watson Taylor, at Marston, in the parish of Potterne. Found Guilty, and sentenced to 15 years' transportation.—Dorchester.—Mary Ann Warr was indicted for the wilful murder of a child of the age of two months, at Dorchester, by administering arsenic to it in some pap. The particulars of this case were given in our Paper of the 22d ult. The fact that the child died from the effects of arsenic was fully proved, and it was also shown that the prisoner had arsenic in her possession on the day of its death. The Jury, however, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.—Betsy Christopher, a country girl, 18 years of age, was charged with the murder of her infant child by cutting its throat. Mr. Justice Erle having summed up, favourably to the prisoner, the jury, after some consultation, acquitted her of the murder, and found her Guilty of concealing the birth, and the Judge sentenced her to two years' imprisonment.—Exeter—The Earl of Egremont v. Isaacs.—The declaration stated that defendant was a tenant of a farm belonging to plaintiff, and that he was bound to manage and cultivate the farm in a husbandmanlike manner, according to the custom of the country; whereas he had done the reverse. Defendant pleaded that he had managed and cultivated the farm in a husbandmanlike manner, according to the custom of the country. The action was brought to try this question—whether a person who was a tenant of a farm not under a lease or written agreement, had a right to dispose of and carry from the premises hay, straw, and manure, which, as the plaintiff alleged, according to the custom of the country, ought to be consumed upon the premises. Defendant claimed this right, and had exercised it, and hence the present action. On behalf of plaintiff many witnesses were called to prove his case, one of whom proved an admission by defendant that he had removed dung, and that he said he should continue to do so. Others stated that, by the custom of the country, tenants had no right to remove hay, straw, or manure from the premises which they occupied; but, upon cross-examination, it turned out that these parties knew very little of the matter. It was proved that the farm buildings were so much out of repair that it was impossible to stall bullocks, and that plaintiff had refused to repair them unless defendant would go and reside upon the farm. It was contended, on the part of defendant, that this issue was upon plaintiff, and that he had failed to prove any such custom as had been alleged to exist. Several witnesses were then called on behalf of defendant, and they negatived the existence of any such custom. The jury retired for a short time, and then returned a verdict for defendant.—Doe Dem. the Earl of Egremont v. Courtenay.—This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of an estate called Wadham, near South Molton, in this county. A great many similar actions have been brought by Lord Egremont at various times against different parties holding property, and which they all held under leases for lives granted by the ancestors of Lord Egremont, and which it was alleged by his Lordship were invalid, by reason of their not completely corresponding with the original power of leasing, which was given in 1755. The whole case was composed of technicalities, and the points were all reserved for the opinion of the Court above, but a verdict was entered for the plaintiff.

Oxford Circuit—Stafford.—James Wallon and George Proffit were charged with night poaching at Tamshorn, in a wood belonging to Sir R. Peel, on the 20th December. The facts of the case were clearly made out. The prisoners, however, attempted to set up an alibi, which was very nearly successful, but at last a gross discrepancy in the statements of two of their witnesses led to the exposure of the boldest falsehoods ever heard in a court of justice. The jury instantly found the prisoners guilty, and Baron Platt, after commenting upon the scandalous nature of the attempted defence, sentenced Walton to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for two years; and Proffit to be transported for the space of seven years.

Norfolk Circuit, Aylesbury.—Peter Wallinger, aged 11 years, was indicted for setting fire to a stack of haulm on the farm of Francis Stephenson, of Haoslope, found guilty, and sentenced to 15 years' transportation.—John Denton, James Smart, and Thomas Brown, were indicted for having, on the night of 26th December last, in the parish of Ravenstone, unlawfully entered certain inclosed land, belonging to Sir F. Gunning, armed with guns, for the purpose of taking or destroying game; found guilty, and sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment and hard labour.—The Rev. William Day, aged 33, was indicted with having feloniously cut and wounded James Batchelor on the 5th February last, with intent to maim him and do him some grievous bodily harm. The rev. prisoner is the rector of Hawridge, in this county, and, as may be remembered, was tried a year since, on a charge of maiming sheep, of which he was then acquitted. He now stood again at the bar on the more serious charge of maiming a fellow-being, under the following circumstances:—On the day named in the indictment the prosecutor was in a public-house, and the prisoner was also with some other persons drinking, and about 9 o'clock in the evening the landlord asked the prosecutor to request Mr. Day to go home, which upon his doing so irritated the prisoner that he took his penknife from his pocket and cut several holes in the prosecutor's frock, who, whilst endeavouring to protect his garments from Mr. Day's mischievous act, received a cut on his finger. Baron Parke stated that the evidence was not sufficient to support the charge of felony, whereupon the jury returned a verdict of guilty of a common assault. His lordship addressed the prisoner in most emphatic terms, commenting on the gross impropriety of his conduct, which was such as to reflect indelible disgrace on his sacred calling. It was impossible not to see that he possessed a most ungovernable temper, which was little suited to the position he occupied in society. The jury had acquitted him under his direction of the felony of which he stood charged, but he had been convicted of an assault, and for that, seeing that he had been already imprisoned for one month, the sentence of the Court was, that he should be further imprisoned for six weeks. The prisoner then bowed to the Court, and retired from the dock apparently but little sensible of the degraded position into which he had been brought by his conduct.

Northern Circuit, York.—Thomas Marples, aged 25, was charged with the manslaughter of his father, Thomas Marples, at Grenaside, near Sheffield. The prisoner, in a fit of passion, thrust a piece of iron into the belly of his father, who died in consequence. The prisoner manifested great contrition for his crime, and being found guilty, and recommended to mercy, Mr. Justice Wightman sentenced him to 7 days' solitary imprisonment.

Midland Circuit—Leicester.—Joseph Colthurst, Edward Talbot Mullins, Henry Roper, Charles Henry Cosse, George Richardson, and Thomas Hobbins, were charged with having on the morning of the 16th November last, in the parish of Wymondham, in this county, been guilty of a riot. There were other counts in the indictments charging assaults to have been committed on the persons of Stephen Stokes, William Grooby, and John Lewin. This prosecution arose out of an attempt made by some of the Officers of the Midland Counties Railway to make a survey of some portion of Lord Harborough's Park, called Stapleford Park, for the purposes of an intended line of railway from Syston to Peterborough. The affair made much noise, and was noticed in this Paper at the time. It appeared that after two previous unsuccessful attempts had been made to survey the park, defendants with from 70 to 80 people came before daylight with measuring chains and flag-staffs, &c., and distinguished by white badges, with the evident determination to proceed with their survey. They were resisted by a considerable number of Lord Harborough's people, and after a severe struggle and fight, were compelled to retreat. The Lord Chief Justice summed up to the effect that parties so assembling in the manner and under the circumstances given in evidence were clearly guilty of a riot, and were of right resisted by Lord Harborough's people, who were justified in using the necessary force to turn them out of the park. Mr. Hill addressed the jury, who, without much deliberation, returned a verdict against all the prisoners of Guilty of an assault. Lord Chief Justice Tindal then sentenced the defendants, and stated his regret that persons of their education and profession should have permitted themselves to be engaged in a transaction which was quite unjustifiable in law, and which it was his bounden duty to visit with punishment. The sentence was, that each of them be imprisoned for one calendar month in Her Majesty's jail, but they should be subjected to no unnecessary hardship, and be each fined 1*s.* Ward v. Lord Harborough and Others.—This was an action for trespass and false imprisonment, and damaging a theodolite, and arose out of the attempts to survey the park of Lord Harborough on a previous day. The servants of Lord Harborough, without violence, after warning plaintiff and his followers off the towing-path of the canal running through the park, took him into custody under a mistaken supposition that they might arrest them. They permitted the plaintiff to go away in his own carriage, and used no violence; but the theodolite was pitched out of a cart and broken. Mr. Mellor addressed the jury, admitting that there must be a verdict against all the defendants, except Lord Harborough, as to whom the Lord Chief Justice had already intimated that there was no evidence; but he contended that it had been proved by the witnesses for plaintiff that the damage to the theodolite might be repaired at an expense of from 7*l.* to 12*l.*, and that, as for damages beyond, a half-farthing would be enough. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with 8*l.* damages. Lord Harborough v. Ward and Cope.—This action was for a trespass on the occasion of the riot; and after Mr. Mellor had addressed the jury for the plaintiff, the Lord Chief Justice suggested that a juror should be withdrawn, which was immediately consented to by Mr. Mellor on Lord Harborough's part.—Coventry.—John Preston, alias Hudson, was charged with burglary, on the 19th October, in the house of Thomas Worthington, at Mancetter. The prosecutor, a fine old man close upon ninety, stated that about one o'clock of the night in question he was aroused from his sleep by a noise at the front door, and went down. His niece and his working man, Thomas Wilson, were with him. Some people were hammering at the door. The prosecutor asked what they wanted, and they replied, "his cows were out." The prosecutor said they might go, for they would do no harm until the morning. Then they asked for drink, and were told they might have as much as they liked if they would come the next day. They then began to break open the door, at the top of which a hole had been made. Prosecutor called for his arms, and his niece brought him a pistol. He tried to put it through the door, but his eye-sight being bad he could not find it at first, but did afterwards, and fired it off. His niece also gave him a sword, which he passed between the wall and the door, and tried to strike any one he could reach. The persons outside threw large stones through the hole, and hit the prosecutor, who would have fallen, had not his niece caught him in her arms. There were five or six persons outside. They broke open the door with levers. Prosecutor had a blunderbuss in his hand at the time, which he had taken from the chimney-piece. His niece said, "For God's sake, don't shoot them," and the men walked in, prosecutor having lifted the muzzle of the gun and fired it off, to prevent their using it. The blood was running down prosecutor's face, from the blow on the head from a stone. The men pushed him about, and otherwise ill-treated him, and robbed the place of a pistol, four sovereigns, some silver, and other matters. No part of the property was found on the prisoner; but a conversation was deposed to as having taken place between the prisoner and a man who was in gaol at the same time. The Judge summed up the case very clearly and concisely, and the Jury, after a few moments' consideration, returned a verdict of Guilty. A previous conviction for felony having been proved, the prisoner was sentenced to transportation for life. The Chief Justice then ordered Mr. Worthington to stand forth, and after praising his courage and conduct in the matter, stated that he should direct the county to pay him a reward of 10*l.*

Miscellaneous.

More Comets.—Sir J. South has addressed a letter to the Times stating that, on the 7th February last, a comet, making the third now visible in the heavens, was discerned at Naples in the constellation Eridanus, by two astronomers, the one being Dr. Peters, of Denmark, the other Mr. Cooper, late member for the county of Sligo. Since the publication of Sir J. South's letter, a communication has been received by Professor Schumacher, of Altona, from M. De Vico, Director of the Collegio Romano, stating that on the 25th inst. a new telescopic comet was discovered at Rome in the constellation of Ursa Major. In connection with this subject, we may mention that a continental meteorologist has predicted an unusually warm summer for 1845, because the spots on the sun are diminishing in size.

Rats.—The French papers notice a curious enterprise which the French have embarked in for the destruction of rats, operations having already commenced at the Royal Library in the Rue Richelieu. In the short space of three days more than 1200 rats were taken, and the purposes to which the bodies are converted are these: the skin is prepared with great care, and proves of great value as a fur. The carcase, properly speaking, is sent to a melting-house at Grenelle, where it is boiled down for the sake of the grease, which is found to be an excellent material for the manufacture of candles. The flesh that remains of the animal is sold for the nutriment of birds, ducks, and pigs. The leg and thigh bones, moreover, which are described as being as fine as ivory, are employed in the manufacture of ear and tooth-picks, so that, as it is observed, not a particle of it is wasted.

The Jesuits.—"At a moment," says the Courrier Français "when the Society of Jesuits attracts so much attention, the following sketch may not be uninteresting: The Jesuits have had, since the foundation of the order to the present period, 23 Generals, of whom 11 were Italians, 4 Spaniards, 3 Germans, 2 Poles, 2 Belgians, and 1 Dutch—viz., 1, Saint Ignatius Loyola, a Spaniard, elected in the year 1541; 2, Jacobus Jainez, a Spaniard, 1558; 3, Saint Francisco de Borgia, Duke of Candia, Spaniard, 1568; 4, Everard Mercurien, Belgian, 1573; 5, Claudius Aquiviva, Italian, 1581; 6, Mucius Vitellaschi, Italian, 1615; 7, Vincent Caraffa, Italian, 1646; 8, Francisco Piccolomini, Italian, 1649; 9, Alexander Gothofridi, Italian, 1652; 10, Goswin Nickel, German, 1662; 11, John Paul Oliva, Italian, 1664; 12, Charles de Novelle, Belgian, 1682; 13, Thyrses Gonzales, Spaniard, 1697; 14, Michael Angelo Tamburini, Italian, 1706; 15, Francis Retz, German, 1730; 16, Ignatius Visconti, Italian, 1751; 17, Aloys Centurino, Italian, 1755; 18, Laurentius Ricci, Italian, 1758. The order was suppressed in 1773, under the General Ricci, but continued to be tolerated in Russia, where it was governed by three administrators, Poles by birth—Czerniwicz, elected in 1782; Linkiwicz, elected in 1785; and Francis Xavier Caren, elected in 1799. During the latter year, Pope Pius VII. re-established the Society, which appointed its 19th General, Francis Xavier Caren, a Pole, 1799; 20, Gabriel Gruber, German, 1802; 21, Thadeus Broszozowski, a Pole, 1814; 22, L. Forti, Italian, 1820; 23, Roothan, a Dutchman, 1829. At the period of their suppression, in 1773, the Jesuits possessed 24 professed houses, 669 colleges, 61 noviciates, 176 seminaries, 335 residences, and 273 missions. They are now composed of 22,819 members, of whom 11,413 are priests."

BIRTHS.—On the 22d inst., at Chicksands Priory, the Lady Eliz. Osborn, of a son—12th inst., at Florence, the lady of R. Kendall, Esq., of a son—15th inst., at 4, Mountfort Crescent, Islington, the lady of Mr. Alfred H. Rixon, of a daughter—21st inst., at 26, Marine Parade, Dover, Mrs. H. Gordon, of a son and heir—22d inst., at Crowe Hall, Downham Market, Norfolk, the lady of J. R. Fryer, Esq., of a daughter—24th inst., in Sloane-street, the lady of Lieutenant-Colonel Tronson (late of Prince Albert's Light Infantry), of a son—24th inst., at Stamford Hill, the lady of B. Oldham, Esq., of a son—24th inst., at 30, Grosvenor-square, Mrs. Puller, of a son.

MARRIAGES.—On the 22d inst., at Leyton, Mr. Alex. Protheroe, of Leytonstone, to Sarah Morris, widow of the late Mr. Thomas Morris—20th inst., at St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, Mary Ann, second daughter of William Holmer, of Union-street, Borough, to Mr. Edward Lewis Blackman, of Gracechurch-street, London—25th inst., at Hampton Church, Capt. Berners, of the Royal Artillery, to Elizabeth Jane, eldest daughter of the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Charles Paget—24th inst., at Essex-street Chapel, Thomas Solly, Esq., barrister-at-law, of the Middle Temple, to Charlotte Augusta, only daughter of Hollis Solly, Esq.

DEATHS.—On the 24th inst., at Leigh Court, near Bristol, aged 72, Philip John Miles, Esq.—20th inst., at his residence, Burle-hill, near Manchester, in his 71st year, Sir Thomas Potter, Knight, Justice of the Peace for the county of Lancaster, and Alderman of the borough of Manchester—21st inst., at Lord Saltoun's, 1, Great Cumberland-street, the Hon. Wm. Fraser, aged 53, late treasurer of the Scottish Hospital—21st inst., at Edinburgh, Alexander Blackwood, Esq., the eldest son of the late William Blackwood, Esq., publisher, of Edinburgh, in his 39th year——18th inst., in London, Robert Barlow, Esq., of Holybourn, near Alton, Hants, late of the East India Company's Civil Service, on the Bengal Establishment, aged 56—16th inst., having completed the 30th year of his age, Captain George Brunswick Smyth, only son of Major-Gen. George Stracy Smyth, Governor of New Brunswick, and Equerry to his late Royal Highness the Duke of Kent—19th inst., Charlotte, relict of J. Merewether Choppin, of Beaumont Hall, Manor-house, Herts.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.
Patronised by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the corns altogether unnecessary; (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth;) it adheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate corns and bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by John Fox, in boxes, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or three in one for 2*s.* 9*d.*, and to be had of C. King, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine vendors in town and country. The genuine has the name of John Fox on the stamp.

A 2*s.* 9*d.* box cures the most obdurate corns.
Ask for "Paul's Every Man's Friend."

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose—1*s.* An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, which do not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The Genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties' profits and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge. Only at Metcalfe's Sole Establishment, 130B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

Caution—Beware of the words "From Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

LINGHAM, BROTHERS, BIRMINGHAM.—MANUFACTURERS of the IMPROVED MENOGRAPH, or PERMANENT LABELS, for Garden-borders, Flower-pots, &c. In Boxes of One Hundred each.

The above Labels have been manufactured by Lingham, Brothers, for the last five years with increasing demand, and acknowledged by those parties who have used them as superior to anything of the kind before offered to the Public, and for neatness, durability, and cheapness, have superseded all other kind of Labels for Hortulan purposes.

Sole Agents in London:—George and J. Deane, Horticultural Implement Warehouse, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

PATENT ELECTRO-PLATED AND GILT ARTICLES in every variety, at the Establishments of the Patentees, ELKINGTON & Co., West End—22, Regent-street, corner of Jermyn-street; City—15, Moorgate-street. The Patent Electro processes being extensively adopted under their licence, the Patentees beg to state that they confine their own Manufacture to goods of a superior and warranted quality only, which invariably bear their mark, "E. & Co." under a crown. Old articles replated and gilt.

BERDOE'S FROCKS.—Now Ready for the Spring and Summer, Berdoe's Ventilating Waterproof Frocks. These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found light and most agreeable substitutes for any other outside Coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable, equally free from vulgarity and singularity, are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A large Stock of first rate Garments in new and greatly improved materials, (manufactured expressly for W. B.), now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited. Made only by W. Berdoe, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side).

THE MECHIAN DRESSING-CASE, the most portable ever invented, being only the size of a pocket-book, and containing one pair of Mechi's ivory-handle table steel razors, his magic strop and comb, badger-hair shaving-brush, his patent castellated tooth-brush, and a neat, useful nail-brush, price only 25*s.*; the same, with hair-brush and soap-dish, 35*s.* To Military men, and as a steam-boat or travelling companion, this Invention is an invaluable acquisition. An immense variety of other Dressing cases both for Ladies and Gentlemen, either in fancy woods or leather, at all prices, to suit either the economical or the luxurious. An extensive stock of Writing-desks, Writing-cases, Work-boxes, and Bagatelle-tables; Razors, Strops, Table cutlery, superb Papier-maché articles, &c.—Manufactory, 4, Leadenhall-street, four doors from Cornhill.

WANT PLACES.—All letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER, a respectable Married Man, aged 33 years, who understands the duties of his profession: has lived in most respectable families. Left his last place through his employer quitting his Country Residence.—Most satisfactory testimonials of 3 years' character can be given.—Direct to A. B. C, care of Mr. West, Post-Office, Highgate, Middlesex.

AS THOROUGH PRACTICAL GARDENER.—Ten Pounds will be given by the Advertiser to any person who will procure him a situation; he is a married man without family, aged 32, and has had experience in every department of Horticulture. His wife is a professed cook. He is leaving his present situation in consequence of a single man being required, and can be highly recommended by the gentleman he is now serving, for strict integrity and a perfect knowledge of his profession in every department.—Direct to O. W. C. Post-office, Ventnor, Isle of Wight.

AS GARDENER.—A steady, industrious, and sober Man, 35 years of age, is desirous of a situation either in Yorkshire or Lancashire; he can have seven years' character, and can be recommended by one of the first Horticulturists of the day. To any one erecting forcing-houses his abilities will be worthy of notice; he has been equally successful at the first Exhibitions in the kingdom.—Direct to F. H. S., post-office, Leeds, Yorkshire.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 34, who understands his Profession, together with Greenhouse, Frames, Vines, and Flower-garden. Would prefer a place where one or two are kept; but has no objection to a single-handed place. He can have 6 years' good Character. Wages—out-door, one guinea per week; in-door, 32*l.* per year.—Direct to A. B., care of Mr. Nutting, 46, Cheapside, London.

AS GARDENER.—A Married Man, 32 years of age, who has no objection to take charge of Grass Land if required. Applications personally attended to within 15 miles.—Direct to T. W., Post-office, Kingston, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—An active Married man, without family, who is competent in the different branches of the business, including Forcing; also the management of Plantations: he can have a character to that effect. His wife, aged 28, to look after a Mansion, or Dairy, and Cook occasionally, if required, she having filled that capacity in three highly respectable families.—Direct to H. M., Mr. William Clarke's Seedsman, 25, Bishopsgate-Within, London.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, aged 22, who has had great experience in the Cultivation of Pines, Vines, Stove, and Greenhouse Plants; particularly early Forcing of Fruits and Flowers; together with Flower and Kitchen Garden, Framing, &c., and whose character will bear the strictest investigation. No single-handed place will be accepted.—Direct to A. B., Rogers and Co., 451, Strand.

AS GARDENER.—A single middle-aged Man, who understands his business in all its various branches, and can be well recommended by the gentleman whom he has lived with nearly 5 years.—Direct to B. T., at Mr. Lewis's, Bootmaker, 4, Leabridge-road, Clapton, Middlesex.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AN EXPERIENCED GARDENER in the higher branches of Horticulture has just left an excellent situation where all kinds of Early Forcing was carried on, with a prospect of entering into the above business, but not succeeding, he his now desirous of obtaining a Situation in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family, where Forcing in all its branches is carried on. Can have an unexceptionable character of four years from the gentleman he has lately left; no single handed place will be accepted.—Direct to G. L., Forester's Cottage, Bedford Lane, Clapham, Surrey.

AS PROPAGATOR, a person who has had many years' experience and most advantageous instructions, and who has been in one large Nursery for 5 years; can obtain an excellent Character for Ability, Steadiness, and Assiduity.—Direct to J. M., at Worledge's General Newspaper Office, Church-street, Hackney.

TO SEEDSMEN AND FLORISTS.

AS CLERK and ASSISTANT, an active Young Man who writes an excellent hand, and has a good knowledge of the Seed and Plant Business, and will make himself generally useful.—An unexceptionable character will be given by a most respectable Firm.—Direct to A. B., at the Office of this Paper.

AS PARK, PARK and GAME, or GAME-KEEPER.—A young Man, aged 25, who understands the management of a large park, breeding game, and breeding and training dogs. Has been brought up as Keeper—his father and grandfather having served some of the first Noblemen. Can have an excellent character.—Application to be made to Mr. Wall, 125, Piccadilly, or by letter addressed X. Y., Post-office, Buckingham.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1845.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.

Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Thomas Farncomb, Esq., Alderman, Chairman.
William Leaf, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Richard E. Arden, Esq.
William Baybury, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq.
Thomas Camplin, Esq.
James Clift, Esq.
J. Humphery, Esq., Ald., M.P.
Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Thomas Kelly, Esq., Ald.
Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
Lewis Pocock, Esq.

Physician.—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.
Secretary.—W. Coulson, Esq., 2, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry.
Consulting Actuary.—Professor Hall, of King's College.

Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.

Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l.*, the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l.* per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l.*

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured. The Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.

A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.

John Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l.*

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

SCOTTISH UNION FIRE & LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, 37, CORNHILL, LONDON.

LONDON BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Charles Balfour, Esq.
J. Gordon Duff, Esq.
Robert Gillespie, Esq.
James Gooden, Esq.
H. M. Kemshead, Esq.
John Kingston, Esq.
Robert Murray, Esq.
R. Oliverson, Esq.
J. R. Robertson, Esq.
H. F. Sandeman, Esq.
George Ramsay, Esq., Manager.

THE BUSINESS of this Corporation has been REMOVED to No. 37, Cornhill, opposite Finch-lane.

The last bonus added to the life policies varies from 41 to 45 per cent. on the premiums paid, and averages 14 per cent. on the sums assured.

The next division will take place in December, 1846.

Fire Insurances effected at the usual reduced rates.

Special risks reasonably rated.

37, Cornhill, London. F. G. SMITH, Sec.

VICTORIA LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, No. 18, KING WILLIAM STREET, CITY.

Sir Jas. Duke, Ald., M.P., Chairman.—Benj. Hawes, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Benj. Barnard, Esq.
Charles Baldwin, Esq.
B. Donkin, Esq., F.R.S.
Aaron Goldsmid, Esq.
Jas. Law Jones, Esq.
J. L. Kettle, Esq.
John Knill, Esq.
Thomas Nesbitt, Esq.
John Nolloth, Esq.
Major.-Gen. Robertson.
Daniel Sutton, Esq.
O'B. B. Woolsey, Esq.

THE ATTENTION OF ASSURERS is particularly directed to the detailed Prospectuses of this Company. Assurances can be effected on a profit or non-profit scale, and for short periods, at a very moderate rate. When on the life of another, the Policy may be rendered secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained—this plan makes a Policy an absolute security.

Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on Policies effected for the whole term of life.

Advances are made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments,

WILLIAM RATRAY, Actuary and Secretary.

ROYAL FARMERS' AND GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, & HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION,

[Empowered by special Act of Parliament.]

Capital, £500,000. Offices, Strand, London.

The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,900 in number.

All persons whose Insurances with this Office fall due on Quarter Day, are respectfully reminded that, to preserve the benefit of their Policies, the Premium should be paid within 15 days from that date, and that the Receipts are now in the hands of the Agents.

FARMING STOCK Insured, without the Average Clause, at 3*s.* per cent., no duty.

COMMON INSURANCE.—Private Houses and Shops, 1*s.* 6*d.* per cent. Hazardous, 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. Double Hazardous subject to special agreement.

HAIL-STORM INSURANCE.—Premium 6*d.* per acre for Wheat, Barley, and Peas; 4*d.* per acre for Oats, Beans, Turnips, and Potatoes.—Glass in Hothouses, Greenhouses, or Private Houses, 20*s.* per cent.

Insurance of Lives on an equally moderate scale of charges.

Annual Premiums on Life Insurances for 100*l.*

Age	20	30	40	50	60	65
£	1 16 1	2 7 1	3 3 5	4 10 3	7 5 5	9 3 4

Endowments of all kinds for future or existing children.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post-free, upon application. The usual commission to Solicitors. Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom. W. SHAW, Managing Director.

NORTH BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANY,

Established 1809.

Protecting Capital, £1,000,000, fully subscribed.

His Grace the Duke of Sutherland, K.G., President.
Sir Peter Laurie, Alderman, Chairman of the London Board.
Francis Warden, Esq. (Director H.E.I.C.), Vice Chairman.
John Webster, M.D., F.R.S., 24, Brook Street, Physician.

This Institution is incorporated by Royal Charter, and is so constituted as to afford the benefits of Life Insurance in their fullest extent to Policy holders, combined with perfect security in a fully subscribed Capital of One Million Sterling, besides an accumulated Premium Fund, exceeding £442,000, and a Revenue, from Life Premiums alone, of upwards of £90,000 per annum.

Eighty per cent., or four-fifths of the total profits of the Company, are septennially divided among the Assured.

At the last investigation, ending 31st December, 1844, a Bonus of £1 10*s.* per cent. on the sums assured was declared for every Annual Premium paid during the septennial period. Thus a Policy for £5000, which had been in force upwards of six years, and on which consequently seven Annual Premiums had been paid, the Bonus declared was £525.

A Prospectus, containing Tables of Premiums, with the names of the President, Vice-Presidents, Directors, and Managers, who are all responsible PARTNERS, may be obtained of Messrs. B. and M. Boyd, Resident Members of the Board, 4, New Bank Buildings; or of the Actuary, 10, Pall Mall East.

JOHN KING, ACTUARY.

ELECTRO-PLATING AND GILDING.—OLD PLATED GOODS RESTORED and made equal to new by Messrs. ELKINGTON and Co.'s Patent Process.

This process being carried on in London only by Messrs. ELKINGTON & Co., it is particularly requested that all goods may be forwarded direct to their Establishments, 22, Regent-street (corner of Jermyn-street); or 45, Moorgate-street, City. New Goods plated upon White Metal in great variety. Books of Prices and Drawings sent to all parts of the kingdom and abroad free.

PATENT ELECTRO-PLATED AND GILT ARTICLES in every variety, at the Establishments of the Patentees, ELKINGTON & Co., West End—22, Regent-street, corner of Jermyn-street; City—15, Moorgate-street.

The Patent Electro processes being extensively adopted under their licence, the Patentees beg to state that they confine their own Manufacture to goods of a superior and warranted quality only, which invariably bear their mark, "E. & Co." under a crown. Old articles replated and gilt.

GUANO (GENUINE PERUVIAN & BOLIVIAN, ON SALE, BY THE ONLY LEGAL IMPORTERS, ANTONY GIBBS AND SONS, LONDON; WM. J. MYERS AND CO., LIVERPOOL;

And by their Agents,
COTESWORTH, POWELL, AND PRYOR, LONDON;
GIBBS, BRIGHT, & CO., LIVERPOOL and BRISTOL.

47, Lime-street. Apr. 5.

THE URATE of the LONDON MANURE COMPANY. Four Guineas per Ton. Six cwt. per acre.

The above Manure having been used for the last four years, in all parts of the country, with the greatest success, is most confidently recommended to the notice of Farmers. It will be found most valuable for Spring Wheat, Oats, Barley, Tares, Turnips, Carrots, and Potatoes, either put in with the seed, or sown broadcast; it not only benefits the crop to which it is first used, but extends its fertilising properties to succeeding years. Being prepared with the greatest care, "The Urate" (if ordered direct from the Company, or through their appointed agents in the country) may always be depended on, thereby avoiding those serious disappointments to which the Farmer is liable from the uncertainty of procuring Guano and other Manures in an unadulterated state. Testimonials and particulars forwarded on application.

The Company also supply Peruvian and African Guano, Superphosphate of Lime, and every artificial Manure, of the most genuine quality, and on the best terms, for cash.

40, New Bridge-street. EDWARD PURSER, Secretary

ON SALE,

DANIELL'S PATENT WHITE MANURE.

Two years' experience prove it equal to Bone-dust or Guano. In Cargoes at 30*s.* per ton; From the Warehouse, in any quantities, 40*s.* per ton, all in bulk.

Apply to EGERTON CANNELL and Co., 18, Castle Street, Liverpool, Sole Agents for the North of England; to

WM. LAYCOCK, Oldhall Street, Liverpool; or to
J. F. CANNELL, Castle Street, Liverpool.

Samples, per Post, sent to any part of the United Kingdom, on the receipt of six Postage Stamps.

LIQUID MANURE.

ENGLAND INDEPENDENT OF THE WORLD FOR CORN.

THE Attention of the Agricultural Interest, at this momentous crisis, is requested to the great importance of LIQUID MANURE, and the ease with which it may be appropriated by the use of FOWLER'S PUMPS, made expressly for the purpose, either portable or fixed; Garden, Ship, and Barge Pumps; also those for Distillers, Brewers, Soap-boilers, and Tanners, for hot and cold liquor. Pumps kept for hire, for Excavations and Wells. Buildings heated by Hot Water, for Horticulture, and every variety of manufacturing purposes.

The Trade supplied on advantageous terms, by BENJAMIN FOWLER, Engineer, &c., 63, Dorset-street, Fleet-street, London.

GENUINE PERUVIAN GUANO, the Importation of Messrs. A. GIBBS & SONS, London; or Mr. MYERS, Liverpool. Strongest Sulphuric Acid, Sulphate of Soda for Potatoes, Sulphate and Phosphate of Ammonia, Superphosphate of Lime, Gypsum, Salt, and every other Artificial Manure.—London Manure Company, 40, New Bridge-street. E. PURSER, Secretary.

TO COLONISTS, EMIGRANTS, &c.—Mrs. MARY WEDLAKE, widow of the late THOMAS WEDLAKE, at 118, FENCHURCH-STREET, CITY, informs Emigrants and others that she continues to manufacture those Agricultural Implements for which her late husband was so extensively patronised by the Settlers of South Australia, Van Diemen's Land, Swan River, New Zealand, and other British Colonies. The following articles, made in a very superior manner, are kept on sale at the London Warehouse, viz.—

Patent Hay-making Machines
Dressing Machines
Patent Chaff-cutting Machines
Oil-cake Crushers
Double-action Turnip-cutters
Railway Wheels
Flour-Mills—Bean-Mills
Patent Essex Ploughs, 30 sorts
Subsoil Ploughs [Colonies
Threshing Machines for the Drills of all kinds—Scarifiers
Vacuum Pumps

Please to be particular in the address, MARY WEDLAKE, 118, Fenchurch-street, London.

RAMS FOR RAISING WATER WITHOUT LABOUR, where a fall can be obtained. FOUNTAIN BASINS IN IRON, &c. 70, STRAND, LONDON.

F. ROE having purchased all the Patterns of Basins, Jets, &c. formerly belonging to W. Rowley, Fountain Maker to the Royal Family, is enabled to offer the above article in iron which will stand the Frost and last for ages. A Ram and Fountain Jets fixed on the premises for inspection. Every kind of Garden and other Pumps, Well Engines, Baths, &c. Houses, &c. Heated by Hot Water.

DRAINING OF LAND.—THE WORKMAN'S LEVEL, invented by Mr. BAILEY DENTON, is made and sold, as approved by him, by Messrs. JONES, Opticians, 30, Lower Holborn, London, price 30*s.*

ORNAMENTAL WIRE-WORK.

G. B. THOMSON AND CO. respectfully announce that they continue to exhibit at their extensive warerooms, 390, Oxford-street, their large stock of ORNAMENTAL FLOWER-STANDS, TRAINERS, ARCHES, and fancy Wirework, suited to the garden, conservatory, and vestibule. Garden and Hothouse Engines, Syringes, Fumigating Bellows, and other Floricultural Implements. Also their improved WATER POT, with finely perforated copper roses, with screw joints, adapted to the varying and delicate texture of plants.

THE EARL OF ALDBOROUGH AND HOLLOWAY'S PILLS!—An astounding Cure by this miraculous Medicine, after every other means had failed! See extract of his Lordship's Letter, dated Villa Messina, Leghorn, the 21st of February, 1845. "To Professor Holloway. Sir, I beg to acquaint you that your Pills have effected a cure of a disorder in my Liver and Stomach, which all the most eminent of the faculty at home, and all over the Continent, had not been able to effect. Nay, not even the waters of Carlsbad or Mamanbad. (Signed.) ALDBOROUGH." These wonderful Pills will cure any disease of the Liver or Stomach.—Sold (also Holloway's Ointment) at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand (where advise may be had gratis), and by all Medicine Venders throughout the civilised world.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed in Youth, and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post, by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars on receiving a postage-stamp.

BERDOE'S FROCKS.—NOW READY for the SPRING and SUMMER, BERDOE'S VENTILATING WATERPROOF FROCKS.

These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found light and most agreeable substitutes for any other outside Coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable, equally free from vulgarity and singularity, are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A LARGE STOCK of first-rate Garments in new and greatly improved materials, (manufactured expressly for W. B.), now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited. Made only by W. BERDOE, TAILOR, WATERPROOFER, &c., 69, CORNHILL (north side.)

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In Silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose—1*s.* An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, which do not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The Genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties' profits and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge. Only at METCALFE'S Sole Establishment, 130B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

Caution—Beware of the words "From Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

News of the Week.

THE House of Commons re-assembled on Monday, after the Easter recess, and proceeded to the consideration of the Navy Estimates in a Committee of Supply. The first vote proposed a considerable increase in the number of seamen, on the grounds assigned by Sir R. Peel, in opening the budget on the 14th Feb. The discussion which ensued upon this question was remarkable for the admissions made by both sides of the House, in regard to the defective construction of our ships of war, and the necessity of creating a steam navy on really scientific principles. Sir G. Cockburn stated that the Admiralty are actively engaged in considering new proposals for the improvement of our war steamers, and Sir R. Peel referred to the increased estimates as a proof that the present Government are determined to provide efficiently for the defence of the country. Lord Palmerston and Lord J. Russell, while censuring the foreign policy of Ministers, concurred in the necessity of an increased vote, considering that it was justified by the altered circumstances in which the country is placed by the progress of steam navigation. The vote of 44,000 men was then agreed to, without a division. On Tuesday Mr. Sheil brought forward his motion, expressing in specific terms the regret of the House that Mr. Mazzini's letters should have been opened without his knowledge, and information derived from them communicated to a foreign power. The motion was opposed by Sir James Graham, who stated in detail the particulars of Mr. Mazzini's history which had induced him to watch his movements, declaring that he did so, not at the instance of any foreign Minister, but in defence of British interests alone. Mr. Duncombe defended Mr. Mazzini from the imputations cast upon him by Sir J. Graham; and on a division Mr. Sheil's motion was rejected by 52 to 38. On Wednesday Sir J. Graham stated the grounds on which Government were prepared to give a modified assent to Lord Ashley's Bill for the regulation of calico-print works. They acquiesced in the general principles of the measure; but disapproving of some of the details, they proposed to remove these objections by limiting the operation of the Bill to print works, excluding the labour of children under eight years of age, prohibiting night work in the case of females, and appropriating 100 days in the year during which it should be obligatory to send the young persons to school for a few hours in each day. Lord Ashley accepted the proposition of Government, and the Bill was read a second time. The House then granted the first vote for the Army Estimates without a division, and the Lord Advocate obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the amendment of the Poor-laws in Scotland—several of the Opposition Members expressing their approbation of the conduct of Ministers in undertaking the responsibility of such a difficult and important subject. On Thursday Sir R. Peel brought forward, in one of the fullest houses of the Session, the Government proposition for increasing the grant to Maynooth. The leading features of this measure are—that the trustees of Maynooth College will be constituted a corporate body, and be permitted to hold real property to the extent of 3000*l.* per annum; that the sum of 6000*l.* a-year will be allotted to the trustees, for the salaries of the president and professors, and for the improvement of a library; the number of students will be raised to 500; the twenty Dunboyne students being allowed 40*l.* each—amounting to 800*l.*; the poor students being allowed 28*l.*, which will require 14,560*l.*; and the divinity students being allowed 20*l.* a-year in addition, which will require 5000*l.* Thus, the annual grant will this year be 26,360*l.* Sir R. Peel furthermore proposed that a distinct and separate grant of 30,000*l.* should be made to enlarge and repair the college, and provide suitable accommodation for the professors and students—the buildings to be kept in repair by the Board of Works in Ireland, in the same way as other public institutions. With respect to the visitors of the College, Sir R. Peel proposed that five additional visitors, besides those already in existence, should be named by the Crown, three alone of those—being necessarily Roman Catholics—to have the power of inquiring into matters affecting the discipline or doctrine taught in the College. The motion was opposed by Sir R. Inglis with a decided negative; and, after a long debate, during which Lord J. Russell hailed the measure as the precursor of a Bill providing for the permanent maintenance of the Roman Catholic priesthood, the House divided, and affirmed the proposition of Government by 216 to 114.

The Overland Mail of the 1st March arrived yesterday. The news is not of great importance, if we except the confirmation of recent rumours respecting an approaching war in Lahore. Troops are concentrating in large bodies on the frontier, and Sir Hugh Gough is mentioned as likely to be invested with the command.—From Switzerland we learn that the movements of the free corps are exciting fresh alarm in several cantons, and an invasion of the territory of Lucerne is considered imminent. The recent proceedings of the Diet have evidently had little effect in re-establishing tranquillity, and it is believed that that body will be again convoked in a few days to adopt more decided measures. In the meantime the eastern side of the Rhine is covered with German troops who are watching the Swiss frontier from Felkirk to Constance, while Italian Switzerland is watched by the Austrian garrisons, awaiting the issue of the present crisis.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal left Windsor Castle on Saturday for the Isle of Wight, for the purpose of visiting Osborne House, which Her Majesty has purchased for a marine residence, together with the Osborne and Barton estates adjoining. Her Majesty embarked at Portsmouth in the royal yacht under the usual salutes. During her stay in the Isle of Wight, Her Majesty and Prince Albert made the necessary arrangements for improving Osborne House, and rendering it complete as the residence of the royal family during the ensuing summer. The Queen's sojourn in the island terminated on Tuesday, when Her Majesty returned to Buckingham Palace, travelling to town by a special train on the South Western Railway. On Wednesday Prince Albert honoured the performance of the ancient concerts, which were under the directorship of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, with his presence. On Thursday, Her Majesty and Prince Albert rode on horseback in the Parks, visited the Queen Dowager at Marlborough House, and in the evening honoured the Haymarket Theatre with their presence.—Her Majesty will hold a drawing-room at St. James's Palace on Thursday next, the 10th inst.—Colonel Arbuthnot has succeeded Colonel the Hon. C. Grey as Equerry in Waiting to Her Majesty, and Colonel Bouverie has succeeded Major-General Sir E. Bowater as Equerry in Waiting on Prince Albert.

The Queen Dowager arrived in town from Witley Court on Wednesday, by a special train of the Birmingham Railway. Her Majesty is in excellent health.

Death of the Earl of Romney.—The death of the Earl of Romney took place on Saturday, at his seat, Mote, near Maidstone, in his 68th year. The Earl's death was nearly sudden, and was caused by a paralytic stroke. The noble Earl is succeeded in his title and estates by Viscount Marsham, member for West Kent. In politics, the deceased peer was a moderate Whig, but of late years he rarely interfered with politics.

Parliamentary Movements.—It is rumoured that Viscount Holmesdale will be invited to offer himself as a candidate for West Kent, vacant by the elevation of Lord Marsham to the peerage. Mr. Wallace has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, and thereby vacated his seat for Greenock, on account of severe indisposition.

The Church.—The elevation of Dr. Turton to the see of Ely, creates a vacancy in the deanery of Westminster. The ministerial papers state that Archdeacon Samuel Wilberforce is to be the new Dean.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Chamber of Peers having rejected the motion of Count Daru for the prevention of undue speculation in the formation of railway companies, has been occupied with the discussion of the modified propositions recommended by the committee of the Chamber to which the consideration of Count Daru's motion was submitted. The committee's resolutions found more favour from the Peers than the original proposition, and several clauses were adopted, though by narrow majorities, and after a strong opposition from several members. The Bill, however, was ultimately rejected by 86 to 61. Both the Ministerial and the Opposition papers were opposed to the measure, and among the supporters of the Ministry in the Chamber opinions were greatly divided. The Débats considered the proposition as injurious to the bonâ fide subscriber alone, while it would prove utterly inoperative against the fraudulent gamblers.—The Customs (tariff) Bill has been the cause of a little additional schism in the Cabinet. On one article, sesame, the Minister of Commerce wished the import duty (5f 50c. per 200lb. weight) fixed by the committee to be agreed to. Most of his colleagues requested him not to interfere in the vote, whereupon he resigned office. The King, however, "talked him over," and he recalled his resignation, and the duty on sesame was, on the motion of M. Darblay, increased to 10f. To make the vote still more remarkable, the Minister of Justice (M. Martin du Nord) voted for the increased duty, because, as the Opposition papers insinuate, the department he represents produces colza in great quantities, and that grain being inferior to sesame, inasmuch as the latter when crushed yields one-fourth more oil, he desired to propitiate his constituents at this the eve of a general election.—At the opening of the Chamber on Monday a vast crowd assembled in the expectation that the resumed debate on the Customs Bill would give rise to a desperate struggle between the Opposition and Cabinet. The commercial treaty with the Sardinian Government was to come under discussion, and the Deputies' committee had proposed that its duration be limited to four instead of six years, and that the tariffs stipulated by it be limited to the former period. To these amendments the Ministry acceded. M. Maurat Ballange then proposed that the duty upon cattle coming from Sardinia should be levied as at present, as the present system was more favourable to agriculture than that proposed under the Sardinian treaty. M. Guizot admitted the necessity of protecting the interests of agriculture at home, but said that it was also necessary to protect the consumer, and that the price of meat had greatly increased throughout all parts of France during the last few years. This increase in the various provinces varied from 11 to 38 per cent. Hence it became necessary to modify the protecting principle. He denied that the plan proposed in the treaty would endanger the interests of the home farmer, as restrictions were laid down which would prevent an over importation. Besides this, the treaty had been settled between the two Governments for six years, which period, at the suggestion of the Chamber, had been reduced to four; and its execution now became a question of good faith and common sense. In the proposed amendment the policy of the Government was involved; if it were carried the treaty would be destroyed, and that destruction would not be carried out by him or his colleagues. After a very short [illegible] the question was put to the vote, and carried [illegible] of Ministers almost unanimously, the Opposition [illegible] the exception of seven) having abstained from [illegible]. Baron Mackau, the Minister of Marine, has [illegible] a project of law for the organisation of [illegible] lines of steam-packets, in which he asked to be [illegible] rised to treat with companies for the establishing [illegible] principal lines between France, Rio Janeiro, Mar[illegible] and Guadaloupe, Havannah and New York. [illegible] dary lines of packets, of minor size, are to [illegible] principal lines, and to be directed to the river [illegible] Guyana, the ports on the Gulf of Mexico, and the Antilles Sea.—The recent news from America is the subject of articles in almost all the Paris papers. The Ministerial Débats says that Mr. Polk's inaugural speech is exactly what might be expected from one who owed his election to General Jackson, and who is obliged to submit to the protectorate of that exacting leader. The speech, says the Débats, is a summary of all the opinions, good and bad, of the old general, faithfully reproduced. It adds:—"The most important part of the message is that which regards Texas. Mr. Polk is of opinion, like General Jackson, that Texas belonged to the Union a long time ago, and that it was given to another power only by a false reading of subsisting treaties. The annexation of Texas in his eyes is only a restitution. He takes back the property of the United States where he finds it, and he undertakes to prove to Europe that he does so for the good of mankind. It is a peaceable acquisition, quoth he: but it is not so peaceable; for the citizens of the United States who have taken possession of Texas entered that territory with arms in their hands, and it was with cannon that they vanquished the unfortunate President of Mexico at San Jacinto, when he expressed a doubt whether Texas was from all eternity the property of the federal union, or was one of his own lost children. Mr. Polk cannot be ignorant of the fact. The invasion of Texas by the Anglo-Americans is odious to Europe on account of the slavery which it draws in its train. As long as he does not reply to the repugnance on the part of Europe, his arguments lead to false conclusions. But he does not even allude to them. In reading the message one would think that slavery was unknown on the soil of the United States, which however allows itself to be more degraded by that stain on humanity than all the other nations in the world. One is even astonished to find such phrases as this—that all the distinctions of birth and of rank are abolished in America. We must not, however, deceive ourselves. The spoliation inflicted upon Mexico by the incorporation of Texas, however reprehensible it may be, might perhaps pass unnoticed; but the systematic audacious propagation of an institution so execrable as slavery, is a crime against civilisation, for which the United States will never be pardoned."—It is reported that the Prince de Joinville is to take the command in the month of June of a small squadron, for evolutions in the Mediterranean.—Marshal Soult, who has been indisposed for some days, was considerably better on Monday. On Saturday he entered his 76th year. M. Lacave Laplagne, the Minister of Finance, is also confined to his house, but no danger is apprehended.—The weather continued to be beautiful in Paris. The temperature was as high as 63° Fahrenheit on Monday, with a north-west wind. On Tuesday it was nearly at the same height, with the wind from south-east.

SPAIN.—We have accounts from Madrid of the 25th ult. No less than 27 persons were arrested that evening in the Spanish capital, and thrown into prison, where no communication was allowed with them. It is not known what the crime is of which these persons are accused, but it was rumoured that they were connected with an Esparterist conspiracy. One of the prisoners is a notary, who has made himself rather conspicuous, of the name of Manuel Lopez Pontada. At the moment of his arrest he fired upon the police, and wounded one of the officers. The news of the Carlist outbreak in Catalonia is confirmed. It broke out on the 24th at Berga, a town of Upper Catalonia, situated between Solsona, Puycerda, and Seu d'Urgel, which the Carlists, during the last civil war, surrounded with field-works, to save it from being taken by a coup-de-main. It was the seat of the Central Junta of Catalonia; and the insurrection in 1840, when Espartero arrived in pursuit of Cabrera, ended there. The Carlists are said to be anxious to get up a movement in Catalonia in favour of a Carlist marriage. The cry is for an absolute Queen, and a marriage with the son of Don Carlos. There is no other news from Madrid excepting a report that the Queen would, at the recommendation of Austria, marry the son of the Grand Duke of Lucca. This seems, however, only the revival of an old rumour, and is at variance with letters from Naples, which speak nearly positively of Her Majesty's marriage with Count Trapani. The proceedings in the Senate offer no interest to the English reader.

PORTUGAL.—Accounts from Lisbon of the 25th ult. give an account of active measures pursued by the principal leaders of the Opposition, embodied in a statement put forth by an electoral assembly, signed by Viscount Sa de Bandeira, Senhors Mousinho d'Albuquerque, Manuel Passos, and the Count de Melio. The tone of this statement is indicative of a very determined opposition, and of a more formidable one than the Cabral ministry has yet encountered.—The intimation given in the government journal on her Majesty's accouchement, of an intended amnesty in respect to the persons in exile and in prison, on account of the Almeida revolt, it would seem, is not likely to be carried into effect. The monster process continues to drag its slow length through the tribunals, and within the last week its manager. Senhor Jose Cabral, has succeeded in bringing it before the third criminal district of Lisbon.

SWITZERLAND.—Accounts from Switzerland of the 29th state that the corps francs have made the first move. On the evening of the 29th, the Basle Country volunteers took two cannon and a quantity of ammunition from the arsenal of Leichthal, and joined the free corps of Arau. It was generally believed that Lucerne would be attacked on the 30th, on which day the volunteers of Soleure were also to march. The canton of Berne had, on its part, taken active measures to prevent the free corps of that canton from leaving it. The first battalion of the Austrian troops, intended to form a corps of observation on the Voralberg frontier of Switzerland, had arrived at Felkirch; and the Bavarian Government, without addressing any note to that of Switzerland, has in a manner laid it under interdiction, by forbidding every Bavarian traveller, whether artisan or trader, to remain in Switzerland. Thus, in a few days, a complete cordon will be drawn along the Rhenish sides of that country. The greatest agitation prevails throughout the cantons contiguous to Lucerne, and the irritation created by the notes presented by the foreign Ministers was daily increasing. The Directory, in those critical circumstances, was hesitating to call out the military contingent of the canton, and it was the general opinion that the Extraordinary Diet would be again convoked in a few days.

ITALY.—The King and Queen of Naples, the Count and Countess D'Aquila, and the young Count de Trapani, are residing in Rome for a short time. Monsignor Capaccini, who had been ill a long time, is at present in a state which leaves hardly any hope of his recovery. The long-expected sale of the late Cardinal Fesch's renowned gallery of pictures commenced on the 18th ultimo. The paintings were being sold at enormously high prices. The Princess Doria Pamphili, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, was safely delivered on the 17th ult. (St. Patrick's Day) of a prince, who, with his mother, are doing extremely well. On the following day the infant prince was baptised by Cardinal Foretti, and, with other names, that of Patrick, in honour of the saint on whose anniversay he was born.—A letter from Naples, March 15, says, the droit d'aubaine has been abolished in Austria and the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, in virtue of a convention entered into on the 19th of April, 1844, and has been just ratified and exchanged. A royal decree has been issued again, granting the free exportation of corn, in the hope of the harvest of the present year being abundant. Another decree publishes a sentence of hard labour at the galleys for 25 years upon the unhappy men involved in the unfortunate affair of Calabria. This is a confirmation of the judgment rendered at Cosenza by a court-martial at the end of February last.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The overland Mail which left Bombay on the 1st March, arrived in town yesterday. The intelligence confirms the preparations for war which has been so long expected with the Punjaub, and the complete pacification of the disturbances in the states of Sawunt Warree and Kolapore. Of a war in the Punjaub there was little doubt, for troops, arms, and ammunition of all kinds were hastening to the frontiers. The general opinion was, that the chances of an invasion of that country were not great until after the monsoon, in September; but these events may be hastened by an application on the part of the boy-king Dhuleep, or of his mother Chundee, who are likely within a short time to be compelled, by the licentiousness of the soldiery, to seek the protection of the British. Ghoolab Singh had already raised the standard of revolt, and was prepared to defend himself in the mountainous districts of Jumboo. It was rumoured that Sir Henry Hardinge was preparing to proceed next summer into the north-west provinces, but that the army against the Punjaub would be commanded by Sir Hugh Gough. Dost Mahommed and his son Akhbar Khan are engaged in watching the proceedings in the Punjaub, with the evident intent of pouncing upon Peshawur at a favourable opportunity. Akhbar Khan was at Jellalabad, and trying to win over to his cause the heads of the Khyber clans, in order to insure him a safe passage for his troops to the Sikh frontiers. Nothing was known of the final results of Sir C. Napier's expedition into the territory of the plundering chiefs. Terms are said to have been offered to them, which they are described as willing to accept—viz., that of placing them on the east bank of the Indus, in the dominions of Ali Mourad, where they would be compelled to till the earth and be industrious, instead of living by plundering the cultivators on the west bank, as heretofore. The Supreme Government was occupied with the extension of education, and with financial matters. A contemplated enactment had been announced for raising the import duties on the manufactures of Europe to 5 per cent., and on wines and spirits and beer to a much greater extent. This measure had already met with much opposition. Another subject of discussion is the Lex Loci, and the opinions of the Legislative Council on its provisions have been published. The Mahommedan or Hindoo law, which deprives all their renegades of their caste and their property, is not abrogated, but the necessity which compelled the Christian Judges to enforce those provisions against converts to their own system is to exist no longer. The news from China comes down to the 23d January. Trade was dull, in expectation of the beginning of the Chinese new year. Another instalment had been paid, and the Port of Kolungsoo had been given up. Hong-Kong is described as very sickly. There was some expectation in Bombay of an attack by the Arabs on the fortified position of Aden, but nothing positive was known on the subject at the departure of the mail.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday.—The House re-assembled after the Easter recess. Lord ASHBURTON entered into a defence of the treaty which he had concluded with the United States, and which, in the House of Commons, on Monday night, had been attacked by Lord Palmerston and Lord J. Russell, contradicting certain of the statements of the latter noble lord.—On the motion of the Earl of DALHOUSIE, the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Bill, and the Companies' Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, were severally read a third time and passed.—On the motion of Lord STANLEY, the Bastards' Act Amendment Bill was read a second time.—The Earl of CLARENDON gave notice of a motion on the subject of the Oregon territory.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday.—The House re-assembled after the Easter recess.—Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice that on Friday he will bring under the consideration of the House that portion of the message of the President of the United States which relates to the territory of the Oregon.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in answer to Lord DUNCAN and Mr. DIVETT, repeated what he had said on a previous evening, that the Act abolishing imprisonment for debt for sums under 20*l.* worked on the whole well, and that there was no intention entertained of repealing it, but that it was desirable to have further experience of its working before extending its provisions to Ireland and Scotland.—The first business on the notice paper was for a committee of supply, in which the navy estimates were placed first in order.—Mr. WAKLEY had a notice of amendment for the production of any warrant or warrants issued for the opening of letters addressed to Mr. Duncombe; and Sir C. NAPIER had another amendment for an address to Her Majesty, praying for an inquiry into the state of the navy, particularly our steam marine, and the defences of our dockyards.—When the question for going into committee of supply was put, both Mr. Wakley and Sir C. Napier were temporarily absent, and consequently the House went into committee.—Mr. WAKLEY, on re-entering the House and finding it in committee, complained of "sharp practice," as did also Sir C. NAPIER.—Sir R. PEEL denied the imputation of "sharp practice." After all the other business had been disposed of, the Speaker had paused for five minutes before putting the question.—The House being in committee, Mr. CORRY moved the navy estimates, entering into minute details justificatory of that increase of the estimates for which Sir R. Peel assigned the general reasons in his speech on opening the budget on the 14th February.—On the first vote, proposing a grant of 44,000 men, Sir C. NAPIER took occasion to bring forward his objections to our present system of naval architecture and Admiralty management, urging examples and arguments similar to those adduced in his motion on the subject earlier in the session. Before the House granted more money for the repair and construction of ships and steamers, it ought to have before it the various returns for which he had moved, but which he had been unable to obtain from Ministers, respecting the state in which the navy was at present. He then repeated the objections which he has urged on many recent occasions against the present system of naval construction, insisting that though we had at present nominally a large fleet, we should find it impossible in case of war to man and send 50 ships of the line to sea within 12 months. Before another farthing was voted for the construction of steam-boats, we ought to have a commission of scientific men appointed to examine the principles on which they should be built. He pointed out in detail the defects in our steam-frigates, and observed that, in our 24 steam-sloops, there was not one where all the machinery might not be destroyed by the effect of a single shot. He had intended to have moved for the appointment of a commission to inquire into this subject, but for the present he had been defeated by the adroit management of Government.—Sir G. COCKBURN admitted that our steam navy was commenced at a period when the construction of steam-boats for maritime warfare was not well understood. He asserted however that the steam navy which we had now at sea was in an effective state; and was not, as Sir C. Napier represented it, perfectly useless. The Admiralty were listening every day to proposals for improving it, and were busily engaged in considering how those proposals could be carried into effect. They were now trying to place the machinery of steam-vessels under water, and to make it as safe from external accidents as a ship's magazine was at present. He would not enter into particulars; but, as regarded the comparison between our steam navy and that of our neighbours, would confine himself to saying that our steam navy was to theirs as three to two. We had 30,000 horse-power, they had but 20,000. He then entered into a refutation of some, and into an explanation of other parts of Sir C. Napier's statements, and concluded by expressing a hope that the committee would then allow the navy estimates to go forward.—Captain BERKELEY showed that Great Britain was as superior to every other nation in her steam-vessels of war as she had hitherto been in her sailing vessels. He made some comments upon the pamphlet of the Prince de Joinville, and said that as that illustrious individual had pointed out the places in which he thought us most vulnerable, the Admiralty would be guilty of the most culpable folly, if it did not take precautions to render them unassailable by all the power of France.—A discussion followed in which Capt. ROUS, Capt. PECHELL, Admiral BOWLES, Capt. CARNEGIE, Mr. HUME, Mr. S. HERBERT, Lord INGESTRE, and Mr. WILLIAMS, took part.—Lord PALMERSTON, admitting the vast importance of an efficient navy to such a country as this, declared his opinion that the discussion of that evening showed we had come to this pass, that science should now be called in to the aid of practice in the construction of our ships. The argument of Sir G. Cockburn, that our ships, during the late war, enabled us to compete with those of other nations, proved the superiority of our sailors, not of our men-of-war. It was undoubtedly difficult to calculate, with the accuracy of mathematical science, the precise proportions which should constitute an effective ship of war: but then it was as undoubtedly the business of the Admiralty to call in the aid of every improvement which science could suggest. It was stated that our steam marine, in the amount of horse-power, stood in relation to that of France as two to three. But this was unsatisfactory, without a statement of the comparative number of vessels. He would cheerfully agree to whatever augmentation of our naval force was requisite for the effectual suppression of the slave-trade on the coast of Africa; but the present Government, which scrupled to admit slave-grown sugar, had voluntarily abandoned that mutual right of search with France and the United States, which was so essential to the suppression of the traffic. He was not the sole individual who attached importance to the right of search. Lord Castlereagh, in 1814, and, in subsequent years, the Duke of Wellington and others, had urged the importance of the right of search in their negotiations with the Allied Powers. He would not object to the convention agreed on between this country and France by the present Government, if in the meantime the system which they found existing had been left in operation till a better system were found for it. But he regretted to see such distinguished individuals as the appointed commissioners engaging in an inquiry which was preceded by an abandonment of the question in dispute. The Government, either from weakness or acquiescence, were giving up all those principles hitherto held sacred by this country, and exposing the inhabitants of Africa to a revival of all those atrocities which marked the slave-trade in its vigour.—Sir R. PEEL defended the Board of Admiralty, and stated that the present Government had actually appointed a commission to inquire into the state of the defences of our dockyards; and the result of its report was to be seen in the increased estimates now laid before the House. The noble lord took the opportunity of censuring the foreign policy of Government, but, recollecting the fate of his motion on what he termed the "Ashburton capitulation," he shrank from formally bringing forward his views on the subject. In his opinion a wise moderation was a policy preferable to bluster and menace, in settling our differences with other nations. Were France and England, for instance, to go to war for the sake of an island, as Tahiti, some eight or ten thousand miles distant? He admitted that the right of search, if mutually conceded, was the most efficacious instrument for the suppression of the slave-trade. But the estrangement between France and England originated in the transactions accompanying and following the Syrian war, and at that period Lord Palmerston was the Minister for Foreign Affairs. There was, however, little doubt that two such eminent men as the Duke de Broglie and Dr. Lushington, associated, as their past lives were, with the suppression of the slave-trade, would adopt anything less efficacious than that right of search which had now become practically useless. Warmly vindicating the Government from the imputation of sacrificing in any essential point the honour or dignity of the country in their negotiations with the United States or with France, he concluded by declaring that unless the feeling of the Legislature cordially supported them in their efforts to effect amicable terminations of disputes, the maintenance of peace would be rendered impossible.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL, after referring back to some of the circumstances connected with the Ashburton treaty with the United States, declared himself sensitively alive to the value of the blessings of peace, but did not think that peace was most effectually preserved by concession. In Spain we had abandoned the policy and the tone befitting a great country like this; and, however eminent were the commissioners appointed to discover a substitute for the right of search, their appointment was an evasion of that responsibility which ought to rest on the Government. As to the increased vote for the naval service, he was of opinion that it was justified by the altered circumstances in which we found ourselves placed by the progress made in steam navigation.—After some additional conversation, the vote was agreed to, and the Chairman having reported progress, the House resumed.—The Customs (Import Duties) Bill and the Museums Bill were read a second time.

Tuesday.—Lord LINCOLN gave notice for the 14th, to move for leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the drainage of lands, and the inclosure of waste lands in England and Wales.—Mr. WARD postponed for a fortnight his motion relative to the burdens on land.—In answer to Dr. BOWRING, Sir R. PEEL said that as soon as the army estimates should be disposed of, he would fix a day for the deferred discussion on those articles in the Tariff, the remission of duty on which was thought likely to prove injurious to the agricultural interest.—In reply to Captain PECHELL, Mr. BANKES said it was his intention to follow up the motion of which he gave notice at an early period of the session, and to take the sense of the House on the question of the auction duty, with a view to afford the Government a fund from which relief might be extended to the agricultural interests.—Mr. HOPE announced that dispatches had been received from New Zealand, marked in duplicate, indicating that copies had been forwarded which have not been received.—Dr. BOWRING moved for a select committee for the purpose of inquiring into the state of the colonial accounts, and the means of improving them. In support of his motion he reviewed the management of our colonies, of which we have 41, exporting in value 10 millions, and importing 17 millions. Yet no regular system was adopted. The accounts of our colonies were allowed to fall behind, from those of Ceylon, which were in abeyance for 11 years, to those of others, until the Audit-office, in despair, confessed its incapacity for understanding them, and then an order came from the Treasury ordering all accounts to be passed without further investigation. He contrasted our management of the colonies with those of other nations, and pleaded for the inquiry on the ground of necessity and utility. One cause of the paucity of colonial accounts was the fact of many of them having Colonial Legislatures.—Mr. HOPE assented to the motion, but expected little from the results of the inquiry.—After a few words from Mr. HUME, the motion was agreed to.—Mr. SHEIL next brought on his motion, expressing in specific terms the regret of the House that letters addressed to a foreigner residing in this country should have been opened without his knowledge, and that information in reference to disturbances in the Papal States, obtained by such means, should have been communicated to a foreign Power. He reviewed minutely the circumstances preceding and accompanying the outbreak of Calabria. What the Government communicated to the Austrian Government he did not know; but this he did know, that the warrant to open Mazzini's letters having been issued on 1st March, a specification was made in the Milan papers of the 20th April that "Mr. Mazzini would cease to be a person unknown to the London police." If he were told that Mr. Mazzini's name had never been given up to the knowledge of the Austrian Government by the Earl of Aberdeen, he would say at once that he believed the assertion; but, without giving up his name, enough might have been stated to designate the individual as clearly as if his name had been communicated. The Earl of Aberdeen declared, as he hoped for mercy, that he was perfectly innocent of the blood shed in Calabria on the 6th May, when 15 individuals were put to death. He firmly believed that assertion, but he recollected that in the month of June Italian blood was shed on the scaffold at Bologna, and he trusted that it was not shed by the hand or through the agency of any British Minister. It had been said that Ministers, in acting as they had done, had done no more than had been previously done by their predecessors. Now, he denied that information obtained by opening the letters of foreign refugees had ever been communicated by any preceding British Minister to any foreign Power. If he were wrong upon that point, let Ministers declare which of their predecessors had been guilty of such an act, and as soon as they did so, he would own himself convinced and acknowledge his error. What was the palliation offered for this extraordinary proceeding? Sir R. Peel had told them, when he said, "If an insurrectionary movement takes place in the Papal States, an Austrian army will march into them: if an Austrian Army marches into the Papal States, a French Army will occupy Ancona: if a French army occupies Ancona, a collision may arise between the Austrian and the French troops; if that collision takes place a European war may arise; if that European war arises, we may take a share in it; and therefore to prevent so untoward a circumstance, we opened Mr. Mazzini's letters." Now, to prevent a war England would not bear dishonour. To prevent a chance of war ought England to defend so discreditable a proceeding? He insisted at some length that Mazzini's letters had been opened, copied, and re-sealed, and contended that by the wax of that seal the honour of England had been stamped with an untruth. His resolution was pointed against the policy of this proceeding. The question involved in it was whether Ministers had acted a part worthy of English Ministers. He thought that they had not, and because he thought so, he had inserted in his resolution an expression not of censure but of lamentation, in which he trusted that a majority of that House would cordially join.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM went into a minute statement of facts, contending that no letter from the Bandieras, dated at Corfu, had been opened by the British Government, or had been seen by the Earl of Aberdeen. It was in October, 1843, that he being the only Secretary of State then in London, had brought under his attention the fact of the disturbances at Bologna, and he was waited upon by the Austrian Minister to complain of the inflammatory publications relating to the Italian States, which issued from the press of Malta. He had replied that there was no power to interfere with the liberty of the press in Malta. The Austrian Minister intimated that the movement was not confined to Malta, for a person in London was the agent in fomenting these disturbances. For the first time the name of Mazzini was then brought under his attention; and in the following January a communication took place between himself and Earl Aberdeen on the subject of these insurrectionary movements. The Austrian Minister stated that they had their origin in London, and that it was from this centre the peace of Europe was menaced. Further communication intimated the fact that Mazzini was carrying on a most extensive correspondence; and having indicated that he was a person of talent and ability, he deemed it his duty to ascertain facts respecting him, which, however accurate, he felt reluctant to state respecting an absent man. He then read a dispatch of Sir Hamilton Seymour to Lord Palmerston, in 1833, calling the attention of the Government of Earl Grey to the conduct and proceedings of Mazzini. In 1831 Italy was convulsed, and an insurrection was attempted, but failed. The leaders of it fled into France, and were allowed to reside at Marseilles There they founded the Society of Young Italy, over which Mazzini presided. Sir Hamilton Seymour complained of the formation of that Society, and declared it to be the source of great disturbances in Italy. His next information as to Mazzini was not so precise, and was founded on an article inserted in the Moniteur of the 7th June, 1833. He then read an article, in which it was stated that a threefold assassination had alarmed the town of Rodez, and that an Italian refugee had fallen by the hands of his countrymen. It was stated in the same article that a sentence of death against four individuals had been discovered, and that that sentence of death was signed by Mazzini, as President. Orders were sent to the authorities to examine into the authenticity of that document. Mazzini threatened to prosecute the Moniteur for this defamation of his character; but he never instituted the prosecution which he threatened. Soon after this transaction the French Government ordered Mazzini to quit Marseilles, and Mazzini took up his abode at Geneva, and commenced a series of intrigues to disturb the peace of Savoy. Sir J. Graham then read a despatch from Mr. Morier, our Minister in Switzerland, dated January, 1834, giving an account of the entrance of an armed band of insurgents into Savoy, under the command of General Romarino, stating that the expedition had been prepared under the direction of Mazzini—who appeared, since the murder at Rodez, to have been residing at Geneva, and ascribing the failure of it to the impatience of that individual. Mr. Morier likewise stated, that after the return to Geneva, the insurgents attempted another expedition into Savoy, and thereby violated the solemn pledges which they had given to the Governor of Geneva, not to create any further disturbances in that country. He did not think it necessary to follow Mazzini from place to place from the year 1834 to the present time. The date of the warrant issued by him for the opening of his letters was the 1st of March, 1844, and he received a despatch, dated that same day, from Sir H. Seymour, now our Minister at Brussels, stating that the Belgian Government had refused one of the Bonapartes permission to reside in Brussels, because the French Government had connected him with the disturbances in the Papal States. "We understand," added Sir Hamilton, "that Mazzini, the head of these disturbances, is in England. I think that he and his associates are dangerous adventurers, whose proceedings should be closely watched." The Earl of Aberdeen had stated, that the warrant to open Mazzini's letters had not been issued at his desire. He (Sir J. Graham) confirmed that statement. The information which he received from time to time convinced him that London, under Mazzini, was made the centre of a great movement in Italy, which was likely to endanger the peace of Europe; therefore it was that he did not shrink from issuing his warrant to open Mazzini's correspondence. If any fault were thus committed, it was his fault, and his alone. He gave the House his solemn assurance that that warrant was not issued by him at the instance of any one, much less at the instance of any foreign Minister, but that it was issued in defence of British interests, and of British interests alone. Having issued a warrant he was then merely Ministerial. The letters were opened, and copies forwarded unread to the Foreign Secretary, to be used at his discretion. He trusted that under all the circumstances the House would acquit him of anything but the scrupulous performance of a most painful duty.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE regarded the statement of Sir James Graham respecting Mr. Mazzini as calumniatory of an absent man, unable to defend himself. The publication in the Moniteur was a forgery, and a paper which had copied it had been proceeded against by Mr. Mazzini for defamation, and had been convicted, the defence set up being that there was more than one Mazzini in the world, and consequently that he could not have been the party referred to. On the trial of the Italians for murder, a verdict had been returned of homicide without premeditation, it being clear that the transaction originated in a momentary quarrel.—After some observations from Mr. WARBURTON, there was a division, when the motion was rejected by 52 to 38.—The House then went into committee on the Excise Acts, in order to pass resolutions with a view to the repeal of the glass duties. After some discussion on the subject of allowance for drawbacks, the resolutions were agreed to, and a bill was ordered to be brought in for repealing the duties on glass.

Wednesday.—Mr. MACKINNON moved the second reading of the Smoke Prohibition Bill.—The Earl of LINCOLN, while wishing the postponement of this Bill until the general measure for sanatory regulations in large towns should be introduced by Government, consented to the second reading on the understanding that the Bill should be referred to a select committee.—Mr. HAWES, Lord J. RUSSELL, and several members, spoke against the second reading, but ultimately it was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a select committee to consider whether its provisions could be safely adopted.—Lord ASHLEY moved the second reading of his Bill for the Regulation of Calico Print-works.—Sir J. GRAHAM stated that he had instituted an inquiry into the subject, through the agency of the factory inspectors, and that Government had come to a decision on it. They acquiesced in the general principle of interference, believing that it was right to introduce some regulation of the labour of women and children employed in print-works. But they objected to the details of the Bill, considering that, as they stood, they would seriously interfere with the freedom, both of capital and labour. In print-works the labour was not continuous; there were seasonal periods in the business, technically termed "pushes" and "slacks," involving intervals of extreme activity and much leisure, and, therefore, they could not regulate print-works as they did factories. But limiting the operation of the Bill strictly to print works, and excluding bleach works and calendering, he thought they might legislate to exclude the labour of children under eight years of age, and also prohibit night-work in the case of females, if night were defined as being between 9 in the evening and 5 in the morning. Great difficulty attended the effort to provide legislatively for the education of young persons employed in print-works. Taking into consideration the peculiar nature of the employment, he did not think that they could do more than legislatively appropriate 100 days in the year on which it would be obligatory to send the young persons to school for three or four hours in each day. With these changes, he could consent to the second reading of the Bill.—Lord ASHLEY accepted the terms offered. He said he saw himself standing almost alone, while the Government was supported by the great mass of the master calico-printers of the United Kingdom. The struggle on his part would be nearly hopeless, owing to the delay and opposition that would be offered to a measure intended to alleviate existing evils. But if he acceded to the proposition of Government, he did not think that he would be delaying the ultimate success of his principles. He would, moreover, gain three great points, and avoid wearying the House with long and fruitless divisions, until he had an opportunity of showing, by a full and fair experiment, that legislation on this subject was not only practicable but safe. He would gain, too, the co-operation and approval of nine-tenths of the employers and capitalists so directly concerned in the question, and the co-operation of those persons would, he felt, be an unspeakable advantage—an advantage to obtain which he should be prepared to make even a larger sacrifice than was now required from him.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. M. GIBSON, Mr. HUME, and Mr. ESCOTT, declared themselves opposed to the principle of interference sanctioned by the Bill; and Mr. COWPER, Mr. BORTHWICK, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, and Mr. BROTHERTON, spoke in its favour, the two latter intimating their opinion that Lord Ashley had exercised a wise discretion in assenting to the amendments proposed by the Government. The Bill was then read a second time.—On the question for going into Committee of Supply, Sir J. EASTHOPE brought forward the case of a poor man named Thomas Lukin, and a poor woman named Ann Ward, who having been committed for non-payment of poor-rates, and the rate having been subsequently paid by some benevolent persons, were recommitted with hard labour for the non-payment of costs by the magistrates of Leicester.—Sir J. GRAHAM stated that he had called upon the magistrates for an explanation, and the explanation given by them was not satisfactory. It was his opinion that the act was one of great indiscretion, partially without the knowledge of the magistrates, in not allowing the parties summoned to appear before them, as it appeared that they were not admitted into the room where the magistrates were sitting. He had heard the circumstances of the case with the greatest possible regret, and would not attempt to justify the conduct the magistrates had pursued. He was only sorry that he had not heard of the circumstances sooner. These parties had been committed on the 5th March, so that their period of imprisonment would expire on 5th April. He could only say that he would advise Her Majesty to order the immediate liberation of these persons, and had he known the matter sooner he would have given the same advice.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE thought that the committing magistrates should be struck out of the commission of the peace, and that the injured parties should obtain redress.—Mr. HUME added, that Sir J. Graham might intimate to the magistrates the necessity of redress—they ought to receive 25 guineas each.—Sir J. GRAHAM could do nothing more than intimate his disapprobation. The magistrates were liable to be proceeded against in a court of law, if their conduct had been wilfully illegal.—Sir J. EASTHOPE expressed his satisfaction with the prompt and frank statement of Sir J. Graham, and hoped that not a minute would be lost in remedying the injustice which had been done to these individuals.—The House then went into a committee of supply, and a resolution voting a number of men for the land forces of Her Majesty, not exceeding 100,011 in number, was agreed to; after which the Chairman reported progress.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, the Public Museums Bill was committed pro formâ, with a view of introducing provisions to extend its powers to all malicious injuries of works of art in every part of the United Kingdom.—The LORD ADVOCATE, in moving for leave to bring in a bill for the amendment and better administration of the laws relating to the relief of the poor in Scotland, entered into a lengthened statement of the reasons and circumstances which rendered it necessary. The subject, which had previously attracted the attention of the General Assembly, had been minutely investigated by a commission appointed in 1843, and which, after an inquiry of nearly a year, had made its report in 1844. That report showed that the growth of population, and the change in habits and condition, had left a large mass of misery in towns, and some rural districts unprovided for, calling for a legislative interference in order to provide a remedy. Explaining in detail the system of poor-relief in Scotland, he stated that the existing law gave the power of raising, by assessment, the amount requisite for the "needful sustentation" of the poor; but the defects of the law respecting the administration of the poor-fund rendered it inadequate for the necessities of those who required its aid. To remedy those defects, and organise a system of effective poor-law relief, he proposed a plan by which parishes are to be suitably divided and defined, and each parish is to have an overseer of the poor, acting under the local authorities, while the whole of the local authorities are to be controlled by a central board, sitting in Edinburgh (similar to the Poor-law Commission in London), to be composed of nine members, three of whom are to be salaried servants of the crown, the other six to be ex officio, and to be composed of the Solicitor-General, the Lord Provosts of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the Sheriffs of the shires of Perth, Ross, and Renfrew. This board is to be armed with powers which will bring about uniformity in the administration of the poor-fund; enable its administrators to attend to the claims of the increasing casual poor; provide for the care of pauper lunatics; and amend the action of the law of settlement.—Lord DALMENY, Mr. E. ELLICE, jun., Mr. HUME, and Mr. HAWES, expressed their approbation of the conduct of Government in grappling with a difficult and important subject; but reserved their opinion on the details of the Bill until it was before the House.—After a few additional remarks from Mr. FRENCH and Sir J. GRAHAM, leave was given to bring in the Bill.

Thursday.—Mr. DODD moved that the report of the Board of Trade against the Bill intended to be brought in by the Croydon Railway Company, to authorise the construction of a branch railway to Ashford, be referred back to the Board of Trade, for reconsideration.—The SPEAKER raised a question whether this motion should not be considered a public, and not a private one, and a discussion ensued thereon, after which Mr. T. DUNCOMBE divided the House—For the motion, 78; against it, 123; majority against the motion, 45.—After the preliminary business was disposed of, the SPEAKER announced that the time had now come for the presentation of petitions on the subject of the grant to Maynooth. On this intimation a "cloud" of members rose, bearing petitions, exhibiting one of those scenes of excitement rarely witnessed in the House of Commons. Petitions, all against the proposed grant, were presented by Mr. Hawes, Mr. S. Wortley, Mr. Greene, Mr. Vernon, Mr. Pakington, Sir Howard Douglas, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Pattison, Mr. Darby, Lord Worsley, Lord J. Stewart, Lord Palmerston, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Bankes, Colonel Sibthorpe, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Milnes, Mr. Estcourt, Mr. Gisborne, Lord H. Vane, Lord Howick, Sir T. D. Acland, Sir J. Hanmer, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Blackstone, Mr. T. Egerton, Mr. E. Ellice, jun., Lord Ashley, Mr. Adderley, and Mr. Baring. Many of the above petitions were from dissenting bodies, and rested on the principle that religious establishments should not receive any support from the State.—The House then resolved itself into a committee of the whole House, Mr. Greene in the chair. Sir R. PEEL rose, and proceeded to develope the plans of the Government relating to Maynooth. He had, at the close of last session, given an intimation, the object of which was to give timely warning to the public, and to obviate an accusation of taking them by surprise; and, therefore, he was not unprepared for the display of feeling manifested by the presentation of these numerous petitions. Omitting, for the present, all consideration of the subject of academical education, which would come before them again, on the introduction of the Bill for that purpose, he would confine himself solely to the question of the grant for Maynooth. With respect to that institution, they were at liberty to pursue three different courses. First, they could continue, without alteration, the present system; second, they could discontinue it, giving due notice of their intention, and providing for existing interests; and, third, they could, in a friendly and liberal spirit, adopt the institution as one for making adequate provision for the spiritual instruction of millions of their fellow-countrymen, with a view to improving the system of education, and thereby elevating the whole tone of character and feeling. The first course, that of leaving matters as they now stood, was felt by himself and his colleagues to be the one most open to objection. They professed to educate spiritual instructors for millions; and the annual amount they gave, 9000*l.*, was just enough to paralyse all voluntary exertion, which, if the grant were withdrawn, would be called into active exercise. If it be a violation of principle to educate the Roman Catholic priesthood, they did it now. The statute-book contained three Acts—two of the Irish Parliament, passed before the Union, the third since, providing for the establishment of a college for the education of Roman Catholics for the priesthood. The Lord Chancellor (of Ireland) and the judges were the visitors of that institution; and in its favour they had repealed the statute of mortmain, so as to enable its trustees to hold land to the extent of 1000*l.* a year. But what was the amount of their endowment? They gave a sum which enabled the three professors of theology to be paid at the rate of 120*l.* per annum, while others averaged still less. Throwing no reflection whatever on those who now discharged these duties, he asked if they could expect men of learning, character, and integrity, to discharge important functions at a salary of 120*l.*, which could not be augmented by fees? At present 440 students were educated at Maynooth, of whom 250 were "free" students, for whose support and education there could only be apportioned the sum of 23*l.* each. Several students occupied not merely the same room, but the same bed. The utter inadequacy of a fit and decent provision for education led them to think that there was no course which was not preferable to the present one. Were they, then, to continue the present niggardly and inadequate provision?—to say to the Roman Catholics, "We are inconveniently bound by our predecessors, and shall continue to give you, in a surly spirit, the present grant?" Anything was preferable to that. Were they, then, to discontinue the grant, and give due intimation of the fact when it shall cease and determine? Before they adopted that course, let them consider its present and future consequences. They should weigh the circumstances attending the original establishment of Maynooth. Founded 50 years ago, by an Irish Parliament, in the reign of George III., and the ministry of Pitt, sanctioned by the Duke of Portland and Earl Camden, continued and increased in subsequent years with the consent even of Mr. Perceval, they could not now withdraw it. It was not the mere amount of the pecuniary grant—it was the animus which would thereby be indicated. Himself attached to the Established Church, he felt that it would be more in accordance with the faith he professed to afford to those from whom he differed, but who sincerely entertained their own principles, the means of adequate and sufficient spiritual instruction and consolation. If they withdrew the grant, let them look to its ultimate consequences. They gave a grant to the Presbyterians of Ireland; in the colonies,—Canada, the Mauritius, and elsewhere—they officially recognised the faith of those of their fellow-subjects who differed from the Established Church; even in Ireland itself they provided for the endowment of Roman Catholic chaplains to the gaols. Dismissing, then, the idea of leaving the grant in its present state, or of withdrawing it, he came to the third course, which was the one the Government were prepared to adopt. In a liberal and confiding spirit they proposed changes, the effect of which would be to provide a liberally-educated priesthood for the Roman Catholic Church. First, they would enable the trustees of Maynooth to hold real property to the extent of 3000*l.* per annum. Second, a sum of 6000*l.* should be vested in the trustees, to enable them to give to the President and Professors salaries from 250*l.* to 300*l.*, and also adequately to support the library of the institution. Third, provision should be made for the education of 500 pupils. To the students on Lord Dunboyne's foundation, 20 in number, he would appropriate 40*l.* per annum; for the support of the entire number of 500 he would assign 28*l.* annually, but to 250, being divinity students, he would give 20*l.* additional. The buildings of the college should be maintained, so as to afford a decent and distinct apartment to each student, and he would devolve this care, as well as that of repairs and embellishments on the Board of Works. There should be five visitors, who should discharge their duty annually instead of triennially as at present, but no power would be conferred of interfering with discipline, doctrine, or worship, as he had no desire to spoil a measure which was conceived and intended to be received in a spirit of unmixed liberality. The distinct vote for Maynooth should be 30,000*l.* for this year. The Government had communicated their intentions to the Catholic authorities in Ireland; and he had reason to believe that they were entertained with a grateful and satisfied feeling, which he trusted the House, looking to the welfare of millions of their fellow subjects would cheerfully respond to. He concluded by proposing a resolution that leave be given to bring in a Bill to amend the acts relating to the College of Maynooth.—Sir R. INGLIS opposed the proposition. He denied that any contract or compact existed which bound the Imperial Parliament in honour or good faith to continue any grant to Maynooth. There had not been an uninterrupted continuance of the grant for half a century, for in one year, that of 1799, the Irish Parliament had withheld that vote. Neither upon compact, express or implied, nor upon any distinct Act of Parliament, was the grant based; and upon the ground of expediency it could not be justified. The motion proposed by Government would amount to an actual endowment of the Church of Rome in Ireland, and to the injury of the Established Church. It should be remembered that all the institutions of England had been founded on Protestant Christianity. For the last three centuries such had been the distinguishing character and essence of the constitution. But, little by little, they had seen that distinctive character frittered away—that meteor flag which they had been wont to look up to with reverence and delight had been tattered and torn—but, thank God! it was still at the mast-head; and so long as one single shred of that loved flag remained, he, for one, would endeavour to nail it to the mast, and would fight as manfully for it, and under it, as when in happier days it waved triumphant and untorn over the whole empire of England.—Capt. B. OSBORNE applauded the Government proposal as far as it went, but looked forward to the time when the Irish Church would be reduced by Sir R. Peel to its least possible proportions.—Mr. GREGORY considered all these attempts to tranquillise Ireland by additional endowments to Roman Catholicism to be on a par with the efforts of the drunkard, who endeavoured to get rid of the effects of the previous evening's potations by still stronger draughts in the morning. If Mr. Pitt had fallen into error in 1795, he was so far justified, as he was without experience to guide him; but we had learned the fallacy of any attempt to mitigate error by endowing it.—Lord F. EGERTON, though conscious that in the exercise of an independent judgment, he would give a vote at variance with the opinions of many of his constituents, could not bring himself to let the present occasion pass with a silent, a cold, or a hesitating support to the proposition of the Government. Entertaining the warmest feeling on behalf of the welfare of Ireland, he saw nothing in his religious principles, or his past professions, which should preclude him from joining in this additional concession to his Roman Catholic fellow-subjects.—Mr. WARD, though retaining his intention of proposing (at a subsequent stage of the Bill) that the increased grant should be taken out of the funds belonging to the Protestant Establishment, was so pleased with the proposition of the Government, indicative as it was of progress, that, so far from joining in any vote against it, he would give it his cordial support.—Mr. LAW (Recorder of London), while admitting that Sir R. Peel had given an early, explicit, and frank avowal of his intentions, felt himself constrained to oppose the proposition of the Government; because he regarded it as an important step in that movement, which, at no remote period, would end in the endowment of a Roman Catholic establishment and the degradation of the Established Church.—Mr. BELLEW, approved, not merely of the measure itself, but of the terms in which it had been brought before the House—receiving it as positive evidence of a disposition to treat Ireland in a liberal and confiding spirit.—Lord SANDON, looking back to the past history of Ireland, recollecting that there had been a transference of property belonging to the Church, without a change in the opinions of the people—could not but regard the present measure as being, in some respects, a measure of restitution. We were also bound by the obligation of "compact"; after 50 years we could not withdraw a grant to the only institution for educating a priesthood for seven millions of people; and the question lay between the present inadequate means of supporting Maynooth, or a liberal and effective grant, large enough, without being too large, to effect its purposes, and conciliate the majority of the Irish people.—Mr. PLUMPTRE treated this additional endowment as a fostering of Roman Catholicism, and a stepping-stone to further concessions. If we endowed one form of error, we were equally bound to do so with others; and in this view he saw no difference between an official recognition of Popery and Mohammedanism.—Lord J. RUSSELL did not think that there was any "compact" which would warrant us in perpetuating an annual grant, if it were proved to be injurious to the interests, or adverse to the general opinions of the community. To those who have hitherto acquiesced in the grant to Maynooth, he thought that Sir R. Peel had made out a complete case for an increase in the vote; and he could not see what religious principle was involved in providing better accommodation, and better education for the students at Maynooth. But, going further, and recollecting the tenacity with which the Irish people adhered to their ancient faith, he believed that by providing for a better educated priesthood, you were providing the means of rendering them a more moral and a more Christian people. The arguments, however, for an increase of the grant to Maynooth would justify a state provision for the Irish priesthood; and he could not conceal from himself that the present measure fore-shadowed that larger, more liberal, and more statesmanlike proposition. An earlier agreement between political parties in rendering justice to the Irish people would have prevented much exasperation, and saved much evil. He trusted that the present proposition was the commencement of a new course, and of a new series of measures calculated to conciliate the feelings of those who belonged to that elder branch of the Church which had produced as much learning and piety as any other—measures which would unite England and Ireland in an enduring bond of union.—Mr. S. WORTLEY spoke in support of the proposition, and Mr. C. BRUCE expressed his fears that it would prove a heavy blow and great discouragement" to Protestantism in Ireland.—Colonel SIBTHORP had always recorded his vote against the grant to Maynooth, not from any un-Christian feeling towards the College, or the body to whom it belonged, but because of his attachment to that Church of which he was an unworthy member. He would not have been astonished if the present proposition had been brought forward by that child of the Church, Lord J. Russell, who, in talking of restitution, should, in consistency, advise his family to give up the property they held. But he was surprised and disgusted that it should have been brought forward by a Protestant Minister of the Crown. He should be unworthy of his position if he did not show that he would resolutely oppose this detestable measure at every stage of its progress.—Mr. SHEIL gave his unqualified approbation to the measure, enhanced as it was by the terms in which it had been propounded. As in the Dissenters' Chapels Bill, Sir R. Peel could have but one object—the good of both countries; and he trusted that he would receive the thankfulness of the one, and, after a little temporary clamour had passed away, the confidence of the other. Maynooth, originating in the foreseeing spirit and genius of Edmund Burke, was founded when the Catholics of Ireland numbered but 3,000,000, and there were but two Catholics at the bar. Now, there were 7,000,000 Catholics; they had lived to see a Catholic Chief Justice, and a Catholic Master of the Rolls; the Catholics were now educated and could think; a great revolution was in progress. In estimating the cost of supporting "idolatry," were they to consider a grant of 9,000*l.* as only a venial sin, but 26,000*l.* a mortal one? Believing himself in the truth and the eternity of the Catholic faith, he could treat with a feeling of pity—even of tender love—the vituperation with which they were assailed. But then they should recollect that Catholicism was the faith not merely of a majority of people, but a majority of Christians; and in striking at them, they should beware of lending force to the arguments of those wretched men who would overturn all faith itself. He concluded with an eloquent appeal to the House and the Minister, to pursue the course on which they have now entered—that of tranquillising Ireland, and securing the peace of England.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE opposed the grant, because he considered it as preparatory to endowing another Church establishment in Ireland, to which he could not assent, especially when it was borne in recollection to what extent the people had been plundered for the support of the existing one.—The Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY as an English Roman Catholic, was grateful to the Government for their proposition.—Mr. GROGAN opposed the grant, as tending to the establishment of Roman Catholicism in Ireland. If the Catholics had so increased in number, and were able to raise the large sums they did for other objects, why not support Maynooth by voluntary contributions? On a division there appeared—for the resolution, 216; against it, 114; majority in favour of Government, 102. The resolutions embodying the proposition were brought up and reported, and a Bill founded upon them read a first time, the second reading being fixed for Thursday.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave notice that on Monday next he should move the repeal of the auction duties.

CITY.

Consols for account closed at 90½; India Bonds, 71*s.* to 72*s.* prem.; Exchequer Bills, 59*s.* to 62*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS.—J. BECKELS, 2, North-street, Finsbury-market, basstead-maker—J. REAY and J. R. REAY, Mark-lane, City, wine-merchants—T. H. WILLIAMS, Chelmsford, Essex, wine-merchant—R. CANN, Walworth, Kent, bootmaker—A. RADCLIFFE, sen., and A. RADCLIFFE, jun., 61, Bermondsey-place, St. John's-street-road, glaziers' diamond manufacturers—J. SHARPE, 38, Clark's-place, High-street, Islington, fringeman—J. NORTH, Brighouse, Elland, Yorkshire, blanket-manufacturer—J. A. HICK, Leeds, Yorkshire, carver and gilder—J. WHITTAKER, Glamorganshire, druggist.

FRIDAY—J. PAULTON, High-street, Portland Town, marble and stone-merchant—T. DISCOMBE, Strutton-ground, Westminster, draper—J. CURRIE and L. E. SAUNDERS, Mincing lane, merchants—R. G. WARD and J. PERRY, Newgate Market, meat salesmen—A. H. SIMPSON, Blackfriars-road, engineer—W. [illegible], Brighton, boarding-house-keeper—C. DAY, Buckingham-street, Fitzroy-square, chemist—J. LAMPARD, Stanhope-street, Clare Market, grocer—J. K. COTTERELL, Glastonbury, Somersetshire, grocer—S. P. BIDDER, Fleetwood-on-Wyre, civil engineer—H. HARTSHORN, Shrewsbury, victualler.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Diocesan Commission of Inquiry.—A Commission of Inquiry, under the Church Discipline Act, has been sitting lately in the Hall of the College of Advocates, Doctors'-commons, to examine into the foundation of certain charges preferred by Mr. George Sheldrick against the Hon. and Rev. F. S. Monckton, perpetual curate of St. Peter's Church, De Beauvoir-square, West Hackney. The Commissioners were the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington, Vicar-General; Rev. John Sinclair, Archdeacon of Middlesex; the Rev. R. H. Clark and R. Harvey, Rural Deans; the Rev. J. Russell, D.D., Rector of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate; and the Rev. W. Stone, D.D., of Christ-church, Hampstead. The charges related to numerous alleged acts of misconduct on the part of Mr. Monckton, affecting both his moral character and his position and duties as a clergyman. Numerous witnesses were examined on both sides, and on Saturday Dr. Lushington stated that the Commissioners had come to an unanimous opinion on the case, and proceeded to state the heads of the report which it was their intention to make to the bishop. After referring to the construction of the statute, Dr. Lushington proceeded as follows:—"With regard to the first, and by far the most important charge—namely, that of fornication, we are of opinion that the evidence adduced before us is not sufficiently strong or credible to justify us in reporting that there is a prima facie case for further proceedings, with a probability of a conviction consistent with justice; but we are also of opinion, and we shall annex that opinion to our report, that the circumstances which have been either admitted on the one side, or proved on the other to our entire satisfaction, rendered this investigation absolutely indispensable; for they are circumstances which not only may have tended to excite great suspicion and alarm among the parishioners, but such must have been the inevitable consequence; and we allude to the fact, not merely of the two children having been begotten on the body of Sarah Huggins while a servant at the parsonage, but that Mr. Monckton, with a full knowledge of that fact, visited her twice at Gravesend, and that she was subsequently brought back to his house, and he allowed her again to form one of his establishment, and also that when the question arose whether the letter referring to Mrs. Davis had come from his house, he represented his household to be well educated and well conducted. We think, moreover, that when public reports were raised respecting what had occurred, it was Mr. Monckton's duty, for the sake of his own character and of that Church in which he ought to set a good example, to give a full explanation of all the circumstances, and thus to free himself from the charges against him; but instead of liberating himself from those imputations, he contented himself with a simple denial, instead of acknowledging his errors and stating the motives which led him to act as he had done. We are all of opinion that the course of conduct pursued by Mr. Monckton—while we relieve him from the charge of fornication—has tended materially to diminish and to destroy his power of utility in the parish, and has brought great public scandal on the Church. With regard to the next charge—that of intoxication—we are equally concurrent in opinion that there is not sufficient ground to justify us in advising the bishop to institute further proceedings; and I will add to that, that to justify such advice, we think we ought to require evidence to prove not merely excitement with liquor, but that Mr. Monckton was addicted to intoxication to such a degree as to bring discredit on the Church. Finally, with respect to the last charge, that Mr. Monckton's general conduct was calculated to bring disgrace and scandal upon the Church, we are all of opinion, that connecting that with his unfortunate conduct towards Sarah Huggins, and the sort of establishment he kept, he being a young man and a bachelor, and keeping three young women in his house, and also the habits in which he indulges, we are all of opinion that the indulgence of those habits, and the neglect of those precautions which he ought to take, have also tended to bring scandal on the church; and therefore our report will be to acquit him—for we have the power of acquittal though not of conviction—to acquit him of the main charges of fornication and intoxication; but to report to the bishop that his general conduct to the women, and particularly to Sarah Huggins, and his general habits and demeanour have tended to bring scandal on the Church, and that if the bishop should be so advised there is ground for further proceedings, so limited and defined as I have pointed out. I cannot close this inquiry without declaring on the part of the Commissioners our satisfaction at the mode in which the investigation has been conducted, and our strong feeling of approbation of the conduct of the counsel on both sides." Dr. Lushington then stated that the formal report, according to Act of Parliament, would be read on Tuesday, April 8.

Trades' Conference.—A conference of delegates from the working classes from all parts of the country, which has been sitting in London for some time, terminated their labours on Saturday. The following are the results of their deliberations:—1. The formation of a society, to be called "The Association of United Trades for the Protection of Industry," the leading objects of which are to be both external and internal—the first having reference to the influence of the Legislature on the condition of the working classes, and the other to efforts made by the trades to improve their own condition. 2. The establishment of a central committee to carry out the objects of the Association, and the formation of a fund to defray the necessary expenses. 3. The collection and diffusion of information as to means by which the capital, skill, and labour of the trades can be applied to their own benefit, and especially to the profitable employment of redundant hands in the labour market, so as to keep down competition for employment and the consequent reduction of wages. 4. The establishment of trades' manufactories and stores. 5. The holding of an annual moveable conference. These general principles being agreed to, a provisional committee was appointed from among the delegates, of which Mr. T. S. Duncombe was constituted president, to draw up a detailed plan of organisation founded thereon, to be submitted to a future meeting of the conference, to take place in the last week of July.

British Museum.—This national institution was last week visited by 30,969 persons, which was, however, considerably less than during the last Easter holidays. There were on Monday, 15,316; Tuesday, 6954; Wednesday, 4865; Thursday, 910; and Friday, 2964. It is satisfactory to state, that no person was refused admission on the ground of intoxication, nor was there a single robbery committed.

St. Saviour's, Southwark.—At a vestry meeting of the parishioners of St. Saviour's, Southwark, held on Easter Tuesday, it was resolved to discontinue burying the dead in the graveyard of that parish, in consequence of its over-crowded state.

The Endowment of Maynooth.—A very crowded meeting of the inhabitants of Islington, for the purpose of petitioning Parliament against the grant to Maynooth, was held on Tuesday evening in the Liverpool-road, the Rev. Daniel Wilson, vicar of the parish, in the chair, supported by the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, Revs. Mr. Hambledon, Bennet, Lord, and several Dissenting ministers of the parish. Resolutions were carried to the effect that the doctrines of the Church of Rome were superstitious and idolatrous, and opposed to the interests of society, and that any support given to such a system by the state was calculated to bring down the judgment of God on this Protestant country. That the grant involved the question of a national endowment of Popery, and that means should be taken to call upon the representatives of the country to come forward and oppose this pernicious measure with the utmost power. These resolutions were supported by speeches ridiculing the various forms and ceremonies of the Roman Catholic religion, and a petition embodying the spirit of the resolutions was adopted. On the same evening, a numerous meeting of the Anti-State Church Society was held at the Eastern Institution, Commercial-road, to petition against the proposed grant. There were present the Rev. Dr. Cox, chairman, Dr. Price, Dr. Curling, the Revs. C. Stovel, Carlisle, Halliday, &c. The chairman, the Rev. C. Stovel, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting, when the resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and it was resolved that a petition, founded on them, be presented to Parliament.

Testimonial to Sir John Barrow.—The officers who have been employed on the various Polar expeditions, by sea and land, have just presented to Sir John Barrow, on the occasion of his retirement from office as Secretary of the Admiralty, a handsome candelabrum, with a suitable inscription, &c., to testify their private esteem, and to record their sense of the very prominent part he has taken for many years past in the promotion of Arctic discovery. This elegant piece of plate, which was exhibited for some days at Messrs. Green and Ward's, Cockspur-street, by whom it was manufactured, bears the following inscription, together with Sir John's coat-of-arms, and a spirited representation of two ships navigating among icebergs:—"To Sir John Barrow, Baronet, LL.D., F.R.S., &c., on his retirement from office, after a period of 40 years' service, as Secretary of the Admiralty, and of 50 years altogether in the service of his country, by the Officers who have been employed on the Arctic Expeditions by sea and land, as a sincere testimony of their personal esteem, and of the sense they entertain of the talent, zeal, and energy evinced by him in the promotion of Arctic Discovery. Presented on behalf of the Officers, by a committee consisting of Captains Sir Wm. Edwd. Parry, Sir John Franklin, Sir Jas. Clark Ross, and Sir George Back.—London, Jan. 28, 1845."

The Nelson Commemoration.—On Wednesday the committee who endeavoured some time since to get up a public dinner to the followers of Lord Nelson, at the opening of the Nelson monument in Trafalgar-square, assembled in Greenwich Hospital to present a medal and pecuniary gratuity to the Nelson seamen in that institution; the funds raised having been applied to this purpose in lieu of the dinner. Sir R. Stopford presided, and each man who had been present at the Battles of Copenhagen, St. Vincent, Teneriffe, the Nile, or Trafalgar, received a medal and 10*s.* in money.

Taking the Veil.—On Monday a large concourse of persons of the higher class attended the Catholic chapel, Hickman's Folly, Bermondsey, to witness the investiture of a young lady of great personal attractions, named Zimmer, with the white veil. The ceremony was performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Griffiths.

Fatal Accident at Blackwall.—On Saturday evening, while the men employed in the iron steamboat-yard of Messrs. Ditchburn and Mare, were standing around the pay-office for the purpose of receiving their week's wages, a large collection of iron bars, 10 feet high, and weighing from 10 to 15 tons, which were standing in a frame near the office, fell down and buried five men beneath the mass of iron. Two of them were killed instantly, and the three others were removed to the hospital seriously injured. The great bulk of the men (upwards of 60 in number) were outside the gate, and thus escaped a frightful and sudden death. Had the accident occurred at an earlier hour in the day, the loss of life must have been dreadful, as there were constantly passing to and fro, and close to it, between 500 and 600 men.

Accident to the Black Eagle Steamer.—On Friday night the Black Eagle steam-vessel was run into by a large vessel unknown, off the South Foreland, betwixt Deal and Dover, and seriously injured, the violence of the concussion having cut her down to near the water's edge, aft the paddle-box, and betwixt it and the gangway. The Black Eagle had three lights up, was going at a moderate speed, and called loudly to the parties on board the vessel to keep clear, but it does not appear that they paid attention to what was said. The bowsprit of the brig entered one of the funnels of the Black Eagle, and by the severity of the collision one of the steam-pipes was thrown down, and broke the leg of an able seaman. Fortunately for the safety of all on board the Black Eagle, the pumps were in good order, and by constant exertion the vessel was kept above water, and brought round to Woolwich. Her Majesty was to have embarked in this fine vessel at Portsmouth on Saturday morning for the Isle of Wight.

Murder in St. Giles's.—On Monday, about midnight, a woman of loose character, called Mary Brothers, who had been for some years separated from her husband, was murdered in a house of bad repute in George-street, St. Giles's. She had gone to the house in company with a man, and the servant seeing him abruptly leave the house entered the room and found deceased dying, with several wounds in the neck and breast, and a small carving-knife sticking in her throat. She died almost immediately. The murder was planned, for at 10 o'clock on Monday night the murderer purchased the knife of Mr. Oldham, High-street. It was the last article he sold that night, and he can identify the party to whom he sold it. The police have the knife, and a piece is broken from the blade towards the point, evidently from violent contact with the bones of the woman. The murderer's name has not yet been ascertained, but his person being well known to several parties in St. Giles's, where he has been for some time leading a dissolute life, a clue may thereby be obtained to his detection, but at present he has not been found.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 29:—West Districts, 184; Northern, 220; Central, 226; Eastern, 259; Southern, 299; Total, 1188; males, 624; females, 564. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1549; males, 803; females, 737.

Provincial.

Aylesbury.—We gave in our last the principal facts connected with the execution of John Tawell, which were known in London on Friday night. From the accounts which have since been published, it appears that the murderer made a full and complete confession, but for some reasons which have not yet transpired, a verbatim copy of this confession has not been given to the press, and the public are, therefore, in ignorance of its exact words. It is stated, however, that Tawell acknowledged to have murdered Sarah Hart, and to have attempted the same crime upon the former occasion mentioned in the evidence. He did not make the former attempt upon the life of his victim with the same description of poison which was so fatal at last. The particulars which made up the circumstantial evidence upon which he was convicted are all substantially and severally correct. He took an opportunity for putting into the murdered woman's tumbler the poison destined for her destruction, and the draught which she took of the stout was sufficient to deprive her of life in a very few minutes. The murderer never imagined that his name had been mentioned by the woman whom he kept in secret and so cruelly destroyed. He thought himself utterly unknown in that neighbourhood, and depended upon returning to town so as to escape detection. The one idea—that of murdering Sarah Hart—had taken possession of him, and blinded him to all liabilities attending it, as well as to the enormity of his wickedness. He declared that no pecuniary motives actuated him to commit the abominable act; that he did not grudge the pittance which she enjoyed, but that he lived in the constant dread of his connexion with her becoming known to his wife. He imagined that there was but one way to relieve himself from all apprehension concerning the object of his disquietude, that of killing her; and he deliberately resolved upon the act. He was devotedly fond of his wife, and set a high price upon her respect; and, as he considered that her affection and esteem for him would be utterly lost in the event of an exposure of his intercourse with the murdered woman, he preferred to become an assassin, rather than remain in the constant fear of disgrace. Before the world, too, John Tawell was desirous to be accounted good, and the result shows that he did not stop at murder when his character was in jeopardy. In regard to the execution, it appears to be the general impression that the mechanical arrangements were extremely defective, and that the violent convulsions of the culprit were caused by the fall of the drop not being sufficiently great to put a speedy termination to his sufferings. In other respects also the arrangements were such as to destroy altogether the moral effect intended to be produced by public executions. Upon this point we quote the following from the Times, premising that the statements it contains are confirmed by all the other daily papers:—"In the first place 8 o'clock, is the usual hour for the execution of criminals at this place; but it wanted nearly 20 minutes of that hour when the miserable culprit was suddenly thrust out upon the scaffold by the hangman and the turnkey who accompanied him, and so suddenly and quietly was this done, that some minutes elapsed before the greater portion of the multitude was aware that the dreadful operation had commenced. In the next place, or rather to take up the statement just made, there was nothing at all about the proceeding calculated to give it that effect which it ought to have. The wretched malefactor, on finding himself where he was, stared around with a sort of inquiring look of surprise, and immediately bent his knees, clasping his hands together, as if desirous of uttering a prayer. Twice he did so, and in the meantime Calcraft, the executioner, drew the cap close over his face, and lower than it was before he unexpectedly made his appearance. It was then that he asked permission to pray, and immediately he knelt down, with his face away from the crowd, and seemed to pray most earnestly. In that posture he remained some minutes, and did not make any attempt to rise until the executioner took hold of his right arm and lifted him up. Again, when so raised, his lips were seen to move as if ejaculating fervent cries for mercy, his face being uplifted towards heaven; while, at the same time, the hangman adjusted the rope first about the neck of the malefactor, and then deliberately threw the end of the rope over the cross-beam, an operation that consumed some two or three minutes. The small figure of the criminal as he thus stood under the stalwart executioner produced a contrast, coupled with his meek attitude and air of utter submission, which awakened amongst the assembled multitude generally a feeling of pity and commiseration, and that feeling was greatly heightened by what followed. When the fixing of the rope had been properly completed, which occupied but a few minutes, the executioner and the turnkey withdrew into the hall, and the bolts sustaining the platform on which the wretched man stood were instantly pulled back, and he fell; but the length of drop allowed him was so little, that he struggled most violently. His whole frame was convulsed; he writhed horribly, and his limbs rose and fell again repeatedly, while he wrung his hands, his arms having been previously pinioned, and continued to wring his hands for several minutes, they being still clasped as though he had not left off praying. It was nearly ten minutes after the rope had been fixed before the contortions which indicated his extreme suffering ceased. It is not intended to cast blame upon any one connected with the dreadful fulfilment of this law; but the mechanical arrangements ought to have been so perfect as entirely to prevent the punishment being little more than an act of torture to the malefactor, who was so short and small in person that he could scarcely have weighed more than seven or eight stone. He died 'hard,' as the phrase is; and his light body dangled in the breeze, backwards and forwards, and round about, a most pitiable and melancholy spectacle. What was the effect upon the spectators? As I have already said, almost universally, it produced a feeling of sorrow for the criminal. There was nothing about the execution to give it the force of a warning example to the badly disposed. It took place before the accustomed and expected time; there were no official persons present on the scaffold, except the turnkey and the hangman; neither the sheriff, sub-sheriff, nor chaplain was visible; and below, in the space before the county-hall, there was not even a constable, policeman, or javelin-man. There was no air of authority about the proceeding; nor was there any public display of solemnity suited to it. The consequence was, that the subdued exclamation of the populace, uttered 'more in sorrow than in anger,' was, 'Why, they turned him off like a dog!' A just observation; it was truly a hang-dog affair. Not a hiss, not a groan, not a yell, not any expression of feeling against the unfortunate man, mute or audible, was perceptible amongst the whole multitude, many of whom left the spot immediately, and the rest within a few minutes after the body had been removed. And the removal of the body was quite consistent with the rest of the revolting exhibition; for it was not cut down, but the turnkey held up the legs while the executioner untied the rope, which was certainly a new one, and probably considered worth saving for some purpose or other." So rapidly was the whole business performed, that the wretched man was alive and in apparent health, dead and buried, all within the space of an hour-and-a-half. The executioner was decently dressed in black, and had on white kid gloves. After all was over, some of the women in the crowd fainted away, and their swoons caused some excitement. Many persons in the crowd exclaimed, "This is dreadful;" and all seemed shocked at the entire absence of decent ceremony with which a fellow-creature had been ushered into eternity. A vast number of persons were "disappointed," and had lost journeys to Aylesbury in consequence of the early hour (many supposing that 12 o'clock would have been the time) at which the wretched man was turned off. Eighty-three passengers arrived at the Aylesbury station by the down-train, at 10 o'clock, just in time to see the gallows taken away. During the whole of the morning the low public-houses and beer-shops in Aylesbury and neighbourhood were filled to overflowing by men and women, drinking and carousing; and long before dusk numerous fights had "come off" between drunken men. Even as early as 1 o'clock in the day a regular fight took place between a couple of drunken countrymen in the very heart of the town. A large booth was erected close to the Chandos Arms, near the station, for dancing in the evening!

Battle.—On Friday a numerous meeting of landlords and tenant-farmers was held at Battle, Sussex, to take into consideration the present state of the agricultural interest, with a view to suggesting a remedy. Sir C. Lamb, Bart., presided. Mr. J. Luxford moved the first resolution, to the effect that the agricultural interest must be ruined by the continuance of the present depression and distress. Mr. C. H. Frewin, in seconding the resolution, said he had no hesitation in stating his opinion that their present condition had been caused by the recent legislative enactments, and more particularly by the Canada Corn Bill. He believed that it was a notorious fact that a great quantity of corn and flour was smuggled into this country, being the produce of America, under the operation of that statute. Sir Robert Walpole, like Sir R. Peel, had dealt with tariffs and taxation; some taxes he took off, some he put on; and when asked once on what class of persons he was about to impose the next tax, answered, "the agricultural interest." His expression was, "Blessings on them, they stand as easily to be sheared as their own sheep." Whether Sir Robert Walpole was the only Minister who might say that, he did not know, but he trusted the agriculturists would no longer be wanting to themselves, but come forward and insist on having their fair share of protection. Mr. E. Lamb moved the second resolution, to the effect that the utmost possible freedom ought to be given to the capacities of the country for production, by removing all imposts that repress the demand for native products. Mr. T. Smith seconded the resolution. It behoved the agriculturists to speak out; they were on the brink of ruin, one more step and they were gone altogether. He, as a considerable occupier, thought Government must grant some relief, or he for one could not keep on the hands he now employed on his farm. The Rev. E. Lamb, in moving the next resolution in favour of the repeal of the malt-tax, observed that a great quantity of beer was said to be brewed from sugar. Would not that quantity be increased now? Was that an advantage or a disadvantage to the farmer? Then the remission of the timber-duties operated unfavourably to the landed interest of that part of the country, for it diminished the value of their Oak-timber. The reduction of the duty on the smaller seeds might be a boon to some persons, but it was an injury to the producers of that kind of seed in this country. The alteration with respect to foreign fruit was a boon to the community, but it was ruin to the fruit-grower of Kent. So in other cases, the good to the public had been obtained at the expense of the agricultural interest. The remission of the malt-duty would be a boon to the whole labouring population. After pointing out several instances of the obstruction to the employment of labour caused by the malt-tax, he concluded by observing it was grossly inconsistent to be opening the ports to foreign countries when the producers of this country were not allowed to make the best of what they had of their own. Mr. Snepp seconded the resolution. Mr. S. Selmes, an extensive tenant-farmer, appealed to the meeting whether it was possible to keep up the rent that had been considered no more than fair for the last 10 years. They had all been deceived thoroughly. The tenants might grumble, but unless the landlords and clergy came forward it would be of no use. They had been grossly deceived. Mr. J. Smith recommended that petitions should be got up in every parish; if they failed to attain their object then they ought to go a step further, and carry up addresses to the Throne. The resolutions having been unanimously agreed to, petitions founded upon them were adopted. Thanks were voted to Mr. Curteis, M.P., for his attendance. Mr. Curteis, in acknowledging the compliment, said that the meeting ought to have taken place two months ago, and then the malt-duty would have had some chance of being dealt with in the budget. The agriculturists had been deluded; the Government had completely humbugged the country. He believed the Whig Government would not have brought forward measures so prejudicial to the agricultural interest as this Government had done. Free trade was decidedly coming fast, but they ought to resist all attempts at sudden removals of protection. He would not pretend to bring in a measure for the repeal of this tax, but if any one else did he would support it.

Bournemouth.—More than 30 acres of a thriving plantation, the property of the late Sir G. T. Gervis, near this place, were destroyed by fire last week, supposed to have been the act of an incendiary.

Cheltenham.—A meeting was held in this town on Monday, for the purpose of adopting a petition to Parliament against the proposed grant to Maynooth College. There were about 800 persons present. The Rev. T. Close, incumbent of Cheltenham, was called to the chair. Resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting were unanimously carried, and a petition to the House of Commons to withhold assent to the bill for the proposed additional grant was agreed to.

Dartmouth.—The ship Thomas Lowry, from Sydney to London, arrived off this port on the 27th ult., landed her letters, received a supply of provisions, and shipped at the same time one of the most experienced pilots of the port. By some unforeseen circumstances, the ship struck on some sunken rocks, became waterlogged, and was run ashore near the harbour, where she filled. The pilot, the day after, put an end to his existence, by hanging himself in his own house.

Liverpool.—The local papers state that there are now staying at the house of Mr. J. Burgess, Talbot Inn, Vernon-street, two Chinese youths, of the respective ages of 17 and 18 years. They were brought to this country by the late Captain Kerr, of the ship Inglewood, who died on his passage home, on the 15th November. Their features are of the genuine Chinese cast, and, wearing the costume of their country, they are great objects of curiosity. They are daily visited by numbers, and, being very intelligent, they are making great progress in the English language.

Reading.—A meeting was held in this town on Friday, at which petitions to Parliament were agreed to against the increased grant to Maynooth. It was attended by the clergy and gentry of the town and neighbourhood, including a large number of ladies and several dissenting ministers.

Weymouth.—Orders were received on Sunday last from the Lords of the Admiralty, relative to the removal of the Post-office packets from this port, and in compliance with those orders the inspecting commander proceeded on board the two steamers lying in the harbour, and officially announced his instructions. He then gave the crews 28 days' notice previous to their quitting this port for Southampton, where the contractors have made arrangements for conveying the mails to and from the Channel Islands.

Railways.

The Board of Trade have given notice that they have determined on reporting to Parliament in favour of the Birkenhead, Manchester, and Cheshire Junction; Chester and Birkenhead Extension; Blackburn and Preston—Alterations, Extensions, and Branch; Coventry, Bedworth, and Nuneaton; Eastern Counties—Finsbury Extension; Huddersfield and Sheffield Junction; Lancaster and Carlisle—Deviation in parish of Kendal; Lancaster and Carlisle—Branch to Newcastle and Carlisle Railway; Lancaster and Carlisle—Scotforth to Slyne; Newcastle-upon-Tyne and North Shields—Tynemouth Extension and New-quay Branch; North Union Extension to the river Ribble; Sheffield and Rotherham—Branch to the Sheffield and Manchester Railway; Norwich and Brandon—Extension into Norwich; York and North Midland—Bridlington branch: against the Liverpool and Manchester—Rainforth and Liverpool branch; Chester and Preston Brook; Eastern Counties—Thames Junction and North Woolwich; Great North of England—Clarence and Hartlepool Junction—Extension and branch; Grand Junction—Friar's Park to Dudley branch; London and Gravesend, viâ North Woolwich; and recommending the postponement until a future period of the Liverpool, Ormskirk, and Preston; Southport and Euxton; Preston Brook and Runcorn Junction; Epping; Grand Junction—Potteries branch.—According to the report laid before the shareholders of the Sheffield and Manchester Railway, the works of the undertaking are progressing as fast as could be expected, considering the late severity of the weather. It is expected that the whole of the line will be opened in May, but the question of amalgamation with the Midland and the Manchester and Birmingham Companies remains for settlement by the decision of Parliament. As far as traffic has been yet developed, the results are held to be satisfactory. The receipts for the half-year ending December last were 18,503*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, and the expenses of working, 9340*l.* 15*s.* 3½*d.*, leaving a balance of 9162*l.* 19*s.* 7½*d.* in favour of the company. The gross amount of expenditure on the works of the line has been 1,139,709*l.*, and the balance at the bankers is now 32,215*l.* The proposed extensions are to be prosecuted before the Legislature with all due vigour, and the directors appear to show a very friendly feeling to all neighbouring interests.—A meeting of the merchants, manufacturers, and other inhabitants of Sheffield, was held last week, to consider the bearings of the several projected lines of railway upon the interests of Sheffield, for which bills have been brought into Parliament during the present session, and generally to determine upon the adoption of such measures appertaining to railways as might be deemed the most conducive to the welfare of the inhabitants. The Mayor presided. Resolutions were passed, hailing with satisfaction the declaration of the Board of Trade, in favour of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Midland Junction, and Newark and Sheffield, the construction of which will give the inhabitants of Sheffield, and other populous manufacturing towns on the line of, or connected with the Sheffield and Manchester, the best, most economical, and direct route to the Southern and Midland Counties, as well as enable the manufacturers and inhabitants of this borough to obtain an abundant supply of coal and coke at greatly diminished prices. A resolution was also passed expressing the opinion of the meeting, that the construction of the London and York Railway would prove a work of incalculable importance to the town of Sheffield and its neighbourhood, affording the most direct route to the port of Gainsborough and North Lincolnshire, as well as being the means of giving an additional line to Selby, York, and Hull, thereby creating a degree of competition which could not prove otherwise than advantageous to the inhabitants of the borough.—On Friday, at noon, a public meeting was held at Lincoln, pursuant to a requisition addressed to the high sheriff to take into consideration the various railway schemes affecting the county of Lincoln. At 12 o'clock the gates of the Castle-yard were thrown open, and the crowd which thronged the Castle-hill rushed into the yard, spacious hustings being erected in front of the Court-house, formed of several waggons with heavy timbers laid across. The excitement during the day was considerable; Thomas Coltman, Esq., of Hagnaby Priory, the High Sheriff, took the chair. On the hustings appeared Earl Fitzwilliam, Earl of Winchilsea, Lord Worsley, M.P., the Hon. W. Ashley, the Hon. A. L. Melville, Sir J. Trollope, M.P., Sir M. J. Cholmeley, Bart., Mr. Christopher, M.P., Mr. Heneage, M.P., Gen. Johnson, and a number of the leading gentry of the county. The Cambridge and Lincoln, with Direct Northern advocates, arranged themselves on the right hand of the hustings; and the London and York on the left. Not fewer than 10,000 persons were present at the commencement, and at least 15,000 towards the close of the proceedings. The requisition having been read over, the High Sheriff asked a candid and impartial hearing for all parties. Mr. C. J. Pack moved the first resolution in favour of the London and York line, which was seconded by Mr. Weston Cracroft. The Earl of Winchilsea moved an amendment that the meeting approve of the various railway projects affecting Lincolnshire, which were recommended by the Board of Trade in their report of the 20th March. General Johnson seconded the motion. Mr. B. Denison, M.P., spoke in favour of the London and York; and Mr. John Coupland and Earl Fitzwilliam spoke in favour of the Cambridge Line. The question was put, and the show of hands was taken on either side a second time; the numbers were so evenly balanced that the High Sheriff had to call for a division. At length each party having divided, one to the north and the other to the south, he decided that the majority was in favour of the London and York line. Mr. T. G. Corbett moved, and Mr. J. C. H. Anderson seconded, a resolution in favour of the Grimsby and Gainsborough railway, which was carried by a large majority. Sir M. J. Cholmeley, Bart., amidst much tumult, moved a petition in favour of both these lines, which was seconded by Mr. Gee, of Boston. On the show of hands, they were again so nearly equal that the High Sheriff was doubtful, but declared the motion carried. Similar meetings have been held at Biggleswade and St. Neot's, at which resolutions in favour of the London and York were adopted.—At a numerous meeting at Andover on Saturday it was unanimously resolved to take immediate measures for the formation of a line from Basingstoke, on the South-Western, to Andover, and from thence to Salisbury and Yeovil, where it will meet the Yeovil and Exeter line, for which an independent company has been formed.—The Newcastle and Carlisle Company have announced its usual dividend of 5 per cent. per ann. The revenue has considerably improved during the last 12 months, showing an increase of upwards of 10,900*l.*, passengers having returned 28,521*l.*, and goods 52,745*l.* Reduced fares have done much to secure this better traffic, and the interest account of the Company has been reduced by renewing old obligations at more advantageous rates.—The Directors of the Taff Vale Railway have determined, in consequence of the increased traffic upon the line, to make it a double instead of a single one. It is intended that this shall be effected as soon as circumstances will admit, but at present the double line will only extend from the Cardiff terminus to the Taff Well station, a distance of 7 miles. Operations have already commenced.—In March, 1745, a Bath paper announced that the London Flying stage-coach would perform the journey from Bath in two days. In March, 1845, the distance was performed by railway in two hours and three-quarters. On Sunday Mr. Brunel travelled in this fast train from London to Exeter. The whole journey was performed in four hours and three-quarters, including stoppages at Swindon, Bath, and Bristol, of 22 minutes, so that the actual time of travelling 196 miles was four hours 23 minutes. The greatest speed attained on the journey was 70 miles an hour, and at this velocity there was no unpleasant motion. Mr. Brunel declares that if the directors would permit he would undertake to perform the journey to Exeter in four hours instead of five.—On Monday about 7 o'clock, P.M., as an engine of the Great Western Railway was proceeding at a slow place through the tunnel on its return from Box (having left about a quarter of an hour before a train at the Corsham station) the engine-driver was alarmed by hearing the fall of a heavy mass of stone from the top of the tunnel directly in front of the engine; before he could take any steps to stop the engine, both it and the tender were driven violently off the rails. After the lapse of a short time, assistance was procured from the Corsham station, and the cause of the above accident was discovered to be a block of stone which had fallen from the side of the tunnel on the down-rails. Intelligence of the accident was promptly sent to Bristol, Chippenham, &c., and several engines, &c., having been despatched to the spot, after six hours' incessant labour the mischief was in some degree repaired, and the traffic of the line resumed. During the time the workmen were employed on this service, they were alarmed by the falling of two other masses of stone within a short distance of the spot on which they were at work.—On Saturday last, as a passenger-train was coming up the Halifax branch, and was just passing out of the tunnel, a large stone fell into one of the third-class carriages which considerably alarmed, but fortunately without injuring the unprotected passengers. On Thursday morning an early luggage-train coming up met with an accident from the same cause. A stone had fallen on the rail, and with the jerk of the engine running against it, the chain connecting the train broke. The carriages laden with pigs ran down the steep incline, acquiring such force in the descent that they ran nearly to Brighouse before they stopped. Fortunately no train was passing at the time, or the consequences must have been fatal.

TRAFFIC AND PRICES, by permission, from the List of Messrs C. and H. HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic: Week ending between Mar. 27 & April 3.	Gross Receipts of Traffic: Corresponding Week, 1844.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Dividend Per Share.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£	£	£ s. d.	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,024	100	all	1 5 0	127-129
Bristol, Birmingham	3,536
Bristol, Exeter			100	70		83 5
Bristol, Glo'ster			50	33	1 7 6	61 3
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	50	5	*	6-7
Eastern Counties	4,091	3,775	aver.	14	0 3 0	21½ 2
Eastern Union			50	10		17-19
Do. Extension			25	12½		42-45
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,190	2,075	50	all	1 5 0	62-4
Grand Junction [Div 3 mo]	8,380	7,832	100	all	2 10 0
Great North of England	1,653	1,466	100	all	5 0 0	197-200
Great Western	14,314	12,640	100	all	3 4 6	111 ..
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	50	5	*	10-17
Do. Extension	*	*	50	2½	*	11-12
Hull, Selby	*	*	50	all	*	93-100
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	50	15
Liverpool, Manchester		4,198	100	all	4 10 0
London, Birmingham	16,411	15,562	stk.	100	5 0 0	236 7
London, Blackwall	994	903	aver.	16¾	0 3 0	73 5
London, Brighton	3,600	2,687	50	45	1 10 0	65 ¾
London, Croydon	1,072	251	aver.	13	0 5 0	17-18½
London, Greenwich		200	aver	12		10-11½
London, South-Western	5,653	5,303	50	41¾	2 0 0	55-57
Manchester, Birmingham	3,739	2,966	70	40	1 0 0	68-72
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	930	706	125½	93	2 14 0
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	7,470	5,630	100	73	2 0 0	150 51
Midland	9,894	8,050	stk.	100	3 2 6	155-57
Do. Birmingham, Derby			stk.	100		125-17
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,545	1,421	100	all	4 0 0
Newcastle, Darlington	1,217		25	24	4 0 0	49-51
North British	*	*	25	10	*	18½-19½
Northern, Eastern			50	45	1 2 6	61-6
Norwich, Brandon			20	10		16½-17½
Preston, Wyre	367	239	50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	791	502	100	87½	5 p. Cent
South Devon	*	*	50	10	*	11-12
South-Eastern, Dover	5,522	3,582	aver	33⅓	6 10 6	44-½
Yarmouth, Norwich	254		20	all	0 10 0	27-8
York, North Midland	2,519	1,625	50	all	2 10 0	103-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	25	20	*	41-6
Do. Selby			50	20	0 12 8	69-71
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	20	2	*	12½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	20	2	*	17½-18½
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	20	2	*	14-½
Paris, Orleans		4,380	80	all	0 5 0½	81½-¾
Paris, Rouen		3,916	20	all	0 9 2	43½-¾
Rouen, Havre			20	14		31-2

Ireland.

Dublin.—In confirmation of the statements that have recently appeared on the subject of the visit of Her Majesty to this country in the course of the ensuing summer, the local papers mention that the Chapter-room of St. Patrick's Cathedral is about to be fitted up in a very superb manner. The necessary contract has been entered into, with the stipulation that it must be completed within three months from the present time. Already the pictures and the antiques have been removed from the walls with a view to the commencement of operations. It is expected that Her Majesty on her visit to this city will hold a Chapter of the Order of St. Patrick, as did George IV. when he visited this country in 1821.—An extensive movement is organising in Dublin and other towns of Ireland against the proposed endowment of Maynooth. A petition influentially signed by the electors of the University of Dublin against the proposed grant, without previous inquiry into the system of education pursued in that institution, has been forwarded to the members of the college for presentation to the House of Commons. This document is accompanied by a requisition addressed to the Right Hon. F. Shaw and Mr. G. A. Hamilton requesting them to support it. A meeting of the inhabitants of Dublin on the same subject was held on Monday, Mr. Grogan, M.P., in the chair. The meeting was addressed by Archdeacon Magee, Rev. T. Gregg, Rev. R. J. M'Ghie, &c., and a petition to Parliament against the bill unanimously adopted.—The Church Education Society held a meeting last week, the Bishop of Kildare in the chair. The report stated that the Society was making great progress, and receiving constant accessions of support. The Bishop of Cashel moved, and Mr. Recorder Shaw seconded the adoption of the report, and in the course of their speeches condemned the national system of education in very decided terms, the bishop denying that there could be such a thing as united education, and declaring that the National Board was absolutely destroying education in Ireland. The Bishop of Down moved the next resolution, and lamented that the claims of the society to Parliamentary aid were still disregarded. He was himself perfectly convinced of the righteousness of the cause, and denied the right of the board to the title national. It was rather an anti-national institution. It was also an anti-Church—nay, anti-Christian institution. His Lordship then enlarged a good deal on this topic. The Rev. W. Cleaver, of Delgany, seconded the resolution, and could scarcely consider it possible that the state would continue to withhold its aid from this society. Lord Bernard moved the next resolution, and spoke of the progress of the society in the county of Cork. The Rev. Dr. Singer, of Trinity College, and other gentlemen, then addressed the meeting, and a number of subscriptions was announced, including 1000*l.* from Dean Bernard. We may here mention that Sir J. Graham has addressed a letter to the Bishop of Meath respecting the charges brought against the National Board by the clergy of that diocese. After stating the opinion of Government that the charges proceeded either from error or misconstruction, Sir J. Graham says:—"I am sensible that the unwillingness of the parochial clergy to co-operate has deprived the measure of a portion of its efficacy and salutary influence. It would, indeed, be a work of charity and peace if, by their exertions and forbearance, those heart-burnings which have hitherto prevailed, should be extinguished, and if all classes of the people of Ireland were thus admitted to the full benefit of the national education, which, under the direction of the present Board, the Legislature has thought fit to establish."

The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, in Conciliation-hall, Mr. C. Powell, M.P., in the chair.—Mr. O'CONNELL handed in a great number of subscriptions, and took occasion to denounce the Riband system at present in existence in this country. He urged Repealers to adopt the most conciliatory line of conduct towards their opponents, and under no circumstances to be induced to commit a breach of the peace. As to shouting "No repeal," he thought that every Anti-Repealer had a right to do so if he pleased, or to allow himself to be governed and trampled on by English legislators if he had not spirit enough to take part in the noble struggle for independence.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN read a report from the judges appointed to consider the essays on the Repeal of the Union, from which it appeared that 48 essays were sent in, each of which the judges read separately, assigning the first prize to Mr. M. J. Barry (a barrister), and the second to Mr. M. Staunton, the editor and proprietor of the Weekly Register. A third prize was given for the essay signed "An Irish Protestant," the writer of which, it was stated, refused to give his name.—Mr. O'CONNELL announced that he had accepted an invitation to a dinner and procession at Dundalk, to take place on Thursday, the 2d of May. A similar invitation had been sent to him from the county of Meath for the 22d of May, which he had also accepted. He said that he also wished to announce that he intended to suggest to the Association the propriety of having a grand banquet at Clontarf on the 30th May next. He next handed in some money from Staten Island, New York, and expressed his strong opposition to the proposed annexation of Texas as a slave state to the confederation. Having denounced the Americans generally for their support of slavery, he concluded by apologising for the further postponement of the result of the labours of the committee appointed to consider the report of the Land Commissioners.—The rent for the fortnight since the last meeting was announced to be 473*l.* 9*s.*

Law.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.—NORFOLK CIRCUIT—BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—William Tettenham, Lord Rendlesham's gamekeeper, was indicted for the murder of his wife, at Wantisden, while preparing to go out at night to watch the preserves of his lordship. The facts of this case have already been given in this Paper. No new facts were adduced, and for the defence it was contended that the prisoner ought not even to be found guilty of manslaughter, as his whole conduct and demeanour throughout the transaction plainly indicated that the death of his wife was entirely attributable to accident. Lord Rendlesham having given the prisoner a good character, Mr. Baron Parke proceeded to sum up the case to the jury, leaving it to them to say whether the wound by which the deceased came to her death had been inflicted by the prisoner at the bar by design, negligence, or accident. If by the first, he was then guilty of the capital charge in this indictment; but if by the second, then it would be their duty to find him guilty of manslaughter only; while if the death ensued from a mere accident without any neglect on his part, he was entitled to a full acquittal. Guilty of manslaughter. Sentence deferred.—Samuel Stow, aged 22, was indicted for feloniously setting fire to a barn, the property of Wm. Tabor, at Polstead, in this county. This case was only remarkable for two facts, the first being, that the offence was charged to have taken place so far back as December 26, 1842, while the subject-matter of the inquiry was no less a barn than the celebrated "Red Barn," at Polstead, the scene of the murder of Maria Martin, by a man named Corder, who was long after that event tried, convicted, and executed in this town for that offence. The charge in the present case was almost entirely supported by declarations of the prisoner made to others in custody with himself, and the jury after a short deliberation found him Not Guilty. The same prisoner was afterwards arraigned on a charge of sending a threatening letter to one Wm. Bowtell, of Polstead. The case being very clearly established, the prisoner was found Guilty, and sentenced to 15 years' transportation.—Robert Drew, aged 35, was arraigned on two indictments, which charged him with having wilfully fired the premises of Mr. Gapp and Mr. Hatton, two substantial farmers, at Walsham-le-Willows, on the 1st July and the 5th October last respectively. The evidence was mostly circumstantial, but taken in conjunction with certain statements made by the prisoner, it was strong enough to induce the jury to find him Guilty, and Baron Parke, who approved of the verdict, sentenced him to be transported for life.—CAMBRIDGE.—Isaac Arnold, aged 18, and Frederick Bantick, aged 18, were charged with having set fire to a stack of straw, the property of Mr. Bland, of Fordham. The stack had apparently been set on fire by means of lighted turf carried to it in an old coffee-pot. The chief evidence against the prisoner Bantick consisted of statements he had made at various times respecting the fire; but strange to say that although he had nearly admitted his guilt to several persons, they did not make known what he had said until a month or two had elapsed, when he was in custody. The evidence against Bantick was much weaker than against the other prisoner. The Jury found Arnold guilty, and acquitted Bantick. Mr. Justice Patteson subsequently sentenced Arnold, and several other prisoners found guilty of arson, at Yelling, Toft, and other places. In doing so he stated there was no palliation for the crime of arson. The hungry man might have a show of excuse in committing a crime that would furnish him with the means of satisfying the cravings of nature; but to commit this crime there must be a malicious evil-disposed mind, for it would not bring bread to a hungry man, but in its consequences must necessarily throw numbers out of employment, and prevent their gaining an honest livelihood, thus directly injuring the labourer, besides spreading terror and dismay around. There must have been some motive actuating the prisoners, but in no case was there more than a show of malice proved. In conclusion the learned Judge said that he should punish the prisoners, with a hope that their punishment would deter others, and should sentence each of them to 20 years' transportation.

WESTERN CIRCUIT—BODMIN.—Elizabeth Stevens was indicted for the wilful murder of her infant child on the 24th December. Prisoner was servant to a Mrs. Reynolds, who, on the day named, heard some one moaning in the kitchen. She went down stairs and found it was the prisoner, who was lying across a table, complaining of great pain. Mrs. Reynolds sent her to bed, and in a short time went up to her and found her still in great pain. She went down stairs again, leaving the prisoner in bed. Mrs. Reynolds fetched her mother, and in about half an hour returned. The prisoner was then in the kitchen, dressed. Mrs. Reynolds went again into the prisoner's bed-room, and from appearances in the bed she felt confident the prisoner had given birth to a child. She went down stairs and charged prisoner with having had a child, but she denied it; at length, however, she admitted it, and said she had put it behind the bed. Mrs. Reynolds then proceeded again to the bed-room, and in a box she found the dead body of a child wrapped in a petticoat. A surgeon was sent for, and he stated upon examining the body he found that the skull was fractured, and there were other marks upon the face and head which he thought proceeded from violence. In his opinion the child had been born alive, and its death had been occasioned by the fracture of the skull. In cross-examination by Mr. Justice Coleridge, he admitted that the child might have fallen, and that if it had fallen the skull might have been fractured. The jury Acquitted the prisoner of the murder, and found her Guilty of concealing the birth. Sentence six months' imprisonment.

PATENT "ECONOMIC" DRAIN-TILE AND PIPE MACHINE.

THE attentfon of Agriculturists and Tile Makers is requested to this Machine, by which DRAINING TILES and PIPES of any description can be made. Its peculiar practical advantages are:—

That from its compact and portable form (as it occupies no more space than a common hand Straw Cutter) it is easily wheeled along the drying-sheds, as may be required by those who work it.—That from the simplicity of the Machine's construction and operation, there is little probability of its getting out of order.—That it is easily and most economically worked by hand-labour: one man and three boys being able to mould and shed from it 8000 feet of 3½ in. by 3½ in. Tiles per day (of 10 working hours: and of Pipes a much larger quantity, in proportion to their sizes.—That from its being regularly and constantly supplied with Clay by a boy who feeds it while it continues in action, no time is lost in the removing, recharging, and replacing of cylinders or boxes.—That when necessary, by merely changing the Die Plate, and putting on a suitable Screen Plate, it will free the Clay from stones and other impediments.—That it produces the Tiles or Pipes in the most perfect and finished condition of which the character of the Clay will admit.—That when its work for the season in Tile-making is finished, it is capable of being converted, during the winter months, into a good Turnip Cutter or Potatoe Crusher, by a mere change of the front plate for the purpose.

PRICE £20, INCLUDING LICENSE.

This Machine is now on show, at work, at No. 14 (coachmaker's shop), South Street, Manchester Square, and will remain so up to the 25th instant.—Information may be acquired on the spot, or at Mr. BAILEY DENTON'S Offices, 9, Gray's Inn Square, London; or of Mr. CHARNOCK, or Messrs. BRADLEY & Co. (the Makers), Wakefield.

9, Gray's Inn Square, April 5.

FRUITS AND FLOWERS.

MAUND'S BOTANIC GARDEN.

The Number for January, 1845, contains the commencement of

THE FRUITIST.—A TREATISE ON USEFUL FRUITS, WITH ENGRAVINGS.

This addition will be given monthly, without extra charge, to meet the increasing taste for the cultivation of Garden Fruit, particularly the improved varieties of Apples and Pears. The smallest gardens are not unsuitable to the growth of these; and from trees of the size of Gooseberry bushes, a large produce of delicious fruit may be obtained.

Persons desirous of possessing the Work should order it of their Bookseller from the above date, the commencement of the series. Price, Large (fruit coloured), 1*s.* 6*d.*; Small (fruit plain), 1*s.* monthly.

The BOTANIC GARDEN, as originally issued, contains figures of Hardy Ornamental Flowering Plants, drawn and coloured from Nature, with popular descriptions, directions for cultivation, and other information useful and interesting to every possessor of a garden; independently of this, there will hereafter be given in each Monthly Number as follows:—

1st. A portion of the AUCTARIUM, containing miscellaneous information connected with the cultivation of the Flower, Fruit, and Vegetable Garden.

2nd. A portion of the FLORAL REGISTER, with neatly-executed miniature engravings, and detailed descriptions of new flowers, chiefly founded on the works of leading Botanists.

3rd. A portion of the FRUITIST, a treatise on Garden and Orchard Fruits; being descriptions of the best sorts of Apples, Pears, and other Fruits, with engravings of each sort; their qualities will be compared, and management made easy to inexperienced cultivators.

4th. A portion of a DICTIONARY, in which are explained words chiefly used in Botany and Agriculture, illustrated with cuts; written by the Rev. Professor HENSLOW.

THESE SEVERAL PORTIONS FORM DISTINCT WORKS.

LONDON: R. GROOMBRIDGE & SONS.

VIEWS IN NEW ZEALAND.

In a few days will be published, in imperial folio, price 3*l.* 3*s.*,

A Series of Large Panoramic Views of the Towns, and most interesting Districts of New Zealand, with beautifully-coloured Drawings of Plants, and Portraits of Native Chiefs, in their respective Costumes, &c. &c. The whole executed in the first style of lithography, from Original Paintings and Drawings taken on the spot, and forming Illustrations to Mr. E. JERNINGHAM WAKEFIELD'S forthcoming Work, entitled "ADVENTURES IN NEW ZEALAND."

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 65, CORNHILL.

This day is published, in one large vol. royal octavo, price 2*l.* 2*s.*

THE GRASSES OF BRITAIN. Illustrated by 140 Figures, drawn and engraved by the Author. By RICHARD PARNELL, M.D., F.R.S.E., Author of "The Grasses of Scotland." This work contains a full figure and full description of every speces of Grass found in Britain, with their uses in Agriculture, &c. &c. Purchasers of "The Grasses of Scotland" may have the portion of the Work containing the English Grasses, &c., on application through their Booksellers to the Publishers.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

SUITABLE BOOK FOR A PRESENT.

Just Published, in post 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 8*s.*, with numerous Plates and Woodcuts,

THE HAND-BOOK of USEFUL & ORNAMENTAL AMUSEMENTS AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS. By a LADY. Including Artificial Flower-Making, Engraving, Etching, Painting in all its styles, Modelling, Carving in Wood, Ivory, and Shell; also, Fancy Work of every description.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., Cornhill.

KNIGHT'S WEEKLY VOLUME FOR ALL READERS. Price One Shilling.

The Publication of this Series commenced on Saturday the 29th of June, 1844, and will be continued every succeeding Saturday. The following Works will appear in the course of April:—

April 5th. The Lost Senses—Deafness. By J. Kitto, D.D.
" 12th. Curiosities of Physical Geography. By W. Wittich.
" 19th. The Dutch in the Medway.
" 26th. The Dog. By W. Martin, F.L.S.

London: CHARLES KNIGHT and Co., 22, Ludgate-street.

Shortly to be published in 12mo,

THE PRINCIPLES of GARDENING. By G. W. JOHNSON, Esq., Author of "A History of English Gardening," Editor of the "Gardeners' Almanac," &c.

London: ROBERT BALDWIN, Paternoster-row.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s.*

London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

THE FARMERS' MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST for April, 1845, is embellished with splendid Steel Engravings of "A Long-Horned Bull," the property of W. BRINE, Esq., Dorchester (engraved by Beckwith, from a Painting by Davis), and "Hetman Platoff," a thorough-bred Stallion, the property of John Bowes, Esq. (engraved by E. Hacker, from a painting by Herring, Sen.), besides numerous illustrations of Agricultural Implements, &c.

CONTENTS.

Remarks on Ploughing. By T. Sullivan, Esq.
Report of Experiments on Special Manures in 1843. By Mr. Robert Russell East Cumberland Agricultural Society
Meteorological Diary
Important to Agriculturists
Wheel v. Swing Ploughs
Bees
Remarks on the Agriculture of Ireland
Winchcomb Farmers' Club
Breeding and Management of Horses on a Farm. By Jno. Burke, Jun.
Burton-on-Trent Farmers' Club
Yoxford Farmers' Club
Framlingham Farmers', Club
Wrentham Farmers' Club
Royal Agricultural Society of England
The Dynanometer
Exports of Grain from the Danube
Italian Rye Grass
Ecclesfield Farmers' Club
On the Action and Application of Dissolved Bones. By John Hannam
Return relative to real Property (England and Wales)
On the Ammoniacal Combinations in Urines, Excrements, and Manures
The Water contained in Manures. By Cuthbert W. Johnson, Esq. F.R.S.
The Ancholme Drainage
Improvement in the Farm. By J. Towers
Agricultural Queries
Answers to Agricultural Queries
Agricultural Reports
Malt to Feed Cattle
Stallions for the Season
Calendar of Horticulture
Review of the Corn Trade
Averages — Prices of Seeds, Hops, Potatoes, Wool, &c.

THE FARMERS' MAGAZINE, Vol. XI., is just published, with 12 fine Steel Engravings, and may be had by order of all Booksellers.—OFFICE, 24, NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

THE HORTICULTURAL MAGAZINE, price 1*s.*—Part 4 contains Cultivation of Annuals, with a description of 120 of the newest and most choice varieties—Culture of the Peach—New Flowers—Planting Waste Land—Liquid Fertilizers—The Hyacinth—The Auricula—Heat and Cold—Raising Plants from Seed—Fancy Trellises—Management of Gardens, Greenhouses, and Orchards—One-Shift System, Horticultural Notes, &c. THOMAS HOULSTON, 154, Strand, and all Booksellers.

BEE-HIVES.—All persons desirous of Cultivating that pleasing and profitable branch of rural economy—the Honey-Bee—are respectfully informed by G. NEIGHBOUR & SON, that they have prepared, for this season, an extensive supply of their various improved Bee-Hives; their collection consists of "Nutt's Collateral Hive," "The Single Box-Hive," "The Improved Cottage Hive," "The Ladies' Observatory Hive," &c., from either of which the Honey may be taken at any time without injury to the Bees, and may be worked with safety, humanity, and profit, by the most timid and unaccustomed to Bee-manipulation. A descriptive paper, with drawings and prices, will be forwarded on receipt of a post-age stamp. Apiarian Depôt and Honey Warehouse, 127, High Holborn, London.

Nutt on Bees (5th Edition), now published.

WANT PLACES.—All letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER. — A Gentleman, about to part with his Gardener, wishes to recommend him; he is a married man, aged 30, and has lived seven years in his present situation. He understands early Forcing; Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower-garden; and has a practical knowledge of the Cultivation of Plants. Would not object to the care of Meadow-land if required. —Direct to J. C., care of Mr. Fox, Newsman, Stoke Newington, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, aged 30, who perfectly understands the management of Hothouse, Greenhouse, Kitchen, and Flower-garden; can have a three years' character from the family he has lately left. — Direct to A. M., at Mr. Taylor's, Gardener to J. Coster, Esq., Streatham Common, Surrey

AS GARDENER, or GROOM AND GARDENER. A Man who understands Forcing and Frame Work, and can have a good character from the situation he has just left. He will have no objection to milk a cow if required.—Direct to WILLIAM SIMMONS, Post-office, Maresfield, Sussex.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, aged 27, who has a good practical knowledge of his business in all its various branches, viz., Pines Vines, Kitchen, and Flower-garden; can have three years' character, which will bear the strictest investigation. — Direct to A. J., at Mr. Cornwellis, Nurseryman, Hadly, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER. — A married Man, who has a thorough knowledge of Forcing-houses, Greenhouse, Pits, and Frames; Kitchen, Flower, and Pleasure-garden. Having lived with Noblemen, and highly respectable Families, he trusts his character will give every satisfaction.—Direct to J. Gooding, at Mr. BERGESS, Fulham, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 37, who has had very extensive experience in the Cultivation of Pines, Vines, Peaches, Cherries, together with every kind of early Forcing; also the Cultivation and Propagation of Stove, Greenhouse, and Orchidaceous Plants. Can have the highest testimonials from his late employers. — Direct to P. G., Post-office, Richmond, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A steady, persevering, married Man, without family, aged 30, who has a thorough practical knowledge of the various branches of his business; can be well recommended by his late employer, and also by some of the first Gardeners of the day, with whom he has lived.—Direct to T. D., 8, Brown's Buildings, Kensington.

AS GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF, a Married Man without a family, aged 36, a native of Scotland; six years' character can be obtained from the Nobleman he has just left.—Direct to THOMAS WELLS, at Mr. Stephens's, Nurseryman, Taunton.

AS GARDENER, a middle-aged Married Man, without incumbrance; has had great practical experience in all the branches of his profession. A small place not objected to if likely to be comfortable and permanent. Four years' undeniable character.—Address A. B., 8, Nassau-street, Soho, London.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1845.

ROYAL FARMERS' AND GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, & HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION,
[Empowered by special Act of Parliament.]
Capital, £500,000. Offices, Strand, London.

The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,960 in number.

All persons whose Insurances with this Office fall due on Quarter Day, are respectfully reminded that, to preserve the benefit of their Policies, the Premium should be paid within 15 days from that date, and that the Receipts are now in the hands of the Agents.

FARMING STOCK Insured, without the Average Clause, at 3s. per cent., no duty.

COMMON INSURANCE.—Private Houses and Shops, 1s. 6d. per cent. Hazardous, 2s. 6d. per cent. Double Hazardous subject to special agreement.

HAIL-STORM INSURANCE.—Premium 6d. per acre for Wheat, Barley, and Peas; 4d. per acre for Oats, Beans, Turnips, and Potatoes.—Glass in Hothouses, Greenhouses, or Private Houses, 20s. per cent.

Insurance of Lives on an equally moderate scale of charges.
Annual Premiums on Life Insurances for 100l.

Age	20	30	40	50	60	65
£	1 16 1	2 7 1	3 3 5	4 10 3	7 5 5	9 3 4

Endowments of all kinds for future or existing children.
Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post-free, upon application. The usual commission to Solicitors. Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.
W. SHAW, Managing Director.

NATIONAL ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.
No. 4, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, LONDON.

Assurance Department—Policyholders for the whole of life are entitled to the whole profits.

For Investment, shares are issued of Five Pounds; also reduced shares of Five Shillings, designed to enable provident persons to improve savings. Shareholders are not subject to calls nor liable in respect of policy claims. Agents wanted in towns where none are already appointed. The Prospectus and all necessary information may be obtained at the offices of the Association.
WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary.

THE BRITISH MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY entertains proposals of any description involving the contingency of human life, and offers the following advantages to its members.

A bonus annually (in shape of low premiums) equal to those of other offices granted every 3, 5, or 7 years, and the prospect of a larger bonus than can possibly be obtained at those offices, in the peculiarly beneficial mode adopted in the distribution of the surplus.

Prospectuses and every information may be obtained on application at the office, 17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

Specimen of Tables.

Age.	Annual Premium for £100	Age.	Annual Premium for £100	Age.	Annual Premium for £100
20	£1 15 8	40	£2 14 9	60	£6 6 7

CHARLES JAMES THICKE, Resident Secretary.
17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

THE POPULAR RECORD OF MODERN SCIENCE, A JOURNAL OF PHILOSOPHY & GENERAL INFORMATION.

This new periodical will afford assistance to Parents and heads of families, by treating of Moral and Physical Education; and to those engaged in the duties of Instruction, it will yield information concerning all subjects peculiarly connected with their labours. The same qualities will make it acceptable to Clergymen, for whom it will also form a Treatise of Medicine applicable to the relief of their suffering parishioners. To the Traveller, so frequently beyond the reach of medical aid, it will supply notices respecting climates, seasons, local influences, and be a guide in many unforeseen and unavoidable difficulties. It will place before Philanthropists, and men of science, all the subjects which particularly engage their attention. By containing a clear account of those discoveries of science which bear upon Arts and Manufactures, it will be of interest to persons engaged in commerce; and the Operative Classes will find in it those hints which will lead to a preservation of health in the midst of their respective callings. It will offer information to the Statesman by registering facts and daily occurrences which refer to the sanatory condition of Towns, Prisons, Hospitals, &c. The proprietors of animals will receive an insight into Veterinary Medicine, by records of all valuable discoveries and observations on this head. It is published every week at the Office, 344, Strand, opposite Wellington Street.

TERMS:

Unstamped.		Stamped for circulation by Post.
Single Number	0s. 2d.	Single Number	0s. 3d.
Quarterly Subscription	2 2	Quarterly Subscription	3 3
Half-yearly Ditto	4 4	Half yearly Ditto	6 6
Annual Ditto	8 8	Annual Ditto	13 0

Orders for the Journal and for Advertisements will be received by all respectable Newsvenders in Town and Country.

MR. HOARE'S WORKS ON THE VINE.
Just published, 3d Edition, 8vo, 7s. 6d.,
A TREATISE on the CULTIVATION of the GRAPE VINE on OPEN WALLS. By CLEMENT HOARE.
Also, by Mr. Hoare, 12mo, 5s.
A DESCRIPTIVE ACCOUNT of a NEW METHOD of PLANTING and MANAGING the ROOTS of GRAPE VINES.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

FOR NOTHING.—A Pamphlet on Nervousness, with Testimonials.—The nervous are respectfully invited to send to the Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELEY, 9, Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, for the small pamphlet, just published, on his most successful TREATMENT of NERVOUS or MIND COMPLAINTS, by which he cures these diseases as certainly as water quenches thirst, which pamphlet he will return, if one stamp is sent, free of charge.

NEW SERIES OF ESSAYS, BY MR. WATERTON, OF WALTON HALL.
Just published, Second Edition, fcp. 8vo, with New Vignette by T. Creswick, A.R.A., 6s. 6d. cloth.
ESSAYS on NATURAL HISTORY, chiefly ORNITHOLOGY. By CHARLES WATERTON, Esq., Author of "Wanderings in South America." Second Series, with a continuation of the Autobiography of the Author.
"Mr. Waterton's new volume will delight and gratify all readers, whether students of natural history, or lovers of picturesque narrative style."—Gardeners' Chronicle.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS;
Of whom may be had the 5th Edition of the First Series, 8s.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1s.
London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

A NEW AND GREATLY IMPROVED EDITION OF MISS ACTON'S MODERN COOKERY IN ALL ITS BRANCHES,
Price 7s. 6d. will be ready on Saturday, the 19th inst.
LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

HOOKER'S BRITISH FLORA.
Just published, 8vo, with 12 Plates, 14s. plain; with the plates coloured, 24s.,
THE BRITISH FLORA, Vol. I.; comprising Phænogamous or Flowering Plants, and the Ferns. By Sir WILLIAM JACKSON HOOKER, K.H., LL.D., F.R.A., and L.S., &c., &c. Fifth Edition, with Additions and Corrections; and 173 Figures illustrative of the Umbelliferous Plants, the Composite Plants, the Grasses, and the Ferns. In Two Vols.
Vol. 2, in Two Parts, completing the British Flora, 24s. bds.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR LOW.
Just Published, 8vo, with numerous Wood Engravings, 21s., cl.
ON LANDED PROPERTY and the MANAGEMENT of ESTATES. By DAVID LOW, Esq., F.R.S.E., &c. Author of "Elements of Practical Agriculture," &c.
"One of the most valuable contributions to our agricultural literature which we have had an opportunity of noticing."
Gardeners' Chronicle.
Also by Prof. Low,
ELEMENTS of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE, 4th Edition, enlarged, with 200 Woodcuts, 21s.
THE BREEDS of the DOMESTICATED ANIMALS of GREAT BRITAIN. 2 vols. with 50 clrd. plates, 16l. 16s.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

THE NEW AND IMPROVED
PRACTICAL GARDENER, AND MODERN HORTICULTURIST;
Exhibiting the latest and most approved Management of Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower Gardens, the Greenhouse, Hothouse, Conservatory, &c., for every month in the year. Illustrated by numerous Engravings. By CHARLES M'INTOSH, C.M.C.H.S., late Gardener to the King of the Belgians at Claremont, and now at Dalkeith Palace.
In one volume (972 pages), 21s.; or with 40 Specimens of choice Flowers, coloured, 26s.
"The labour and experience of a life devoted to the science of Horticulture, we now present to the public."—Vide Author's Preface, p. iv.
London: THOMAS KELLY; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; and all Booksellers.

Just published, Second Edition, fcap. 8vo, 7s. cloth,
THE VEGETABLE CULTIVATOR; containing a Plain and Accurate Description of every species and variety of Culinary Vegetables; with the most approved Modes of Cultivating and Cooking them.
By JOHN ROGERS, Author of "The Fruit Cultivator."
"The most useful work of the kind that has fallen under our notice."—Conservative Journal.
"A complete and intelligent manual for the kitchen garden."—Spectator.
"Combining information for the gardener and cook in the same volume."—Leicester Chronicle.
"We recommend this useful volume to all persons engaged in the process of forming their own kitchen gardens, and also to all those engaged in the culture of vegetables as a business, as well as to amateurs and medical men, as containing much interesting, and valuable, and well-arranged information'"—Glasgow Reformer.
London: LONGMAN & Co.

DR. LINDLEY'S WORKS ON BOTANY.
Third Edition, one large vol. 8vo, with Six Copperplates and numerous Wood Engravings, 18s.,
INTRODUCTION TO BOTANY. By Professor LINDLEY, Ph. D. of University College and the Royal Institution. 3d Edit. with Corrections and numerous Additions.
"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this 'Introduction to Botany' to be the most valuable and perfect in any language we are acquainted with."—Medical Gazette.
By the same Author,
THE THEORY OF HORTICULTURE. 8vo. 12s.
SYNOPSIS OF THE BRITISH FLORA. 12mo. 10s. 6d.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

PESCHEL'S PHYSICS.
Just published, fcp. 8vo, with Diagrams and Woodcuts, 7s. 6d.
ELEMENTS of PHYSICS.—Part I.—Ponderable Bodies. By C. F. PESCHEL, Principal of the Royal Military College, Dresden. Translated from the German, with Notes, by E. WEST.
"An excellent introduction to natural philosophy, forming the most complete elementary treatise on physics that has hitherto been published."—Gardeners' Chronicle.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

BED FEATHERS.—DUTY FREE.—HEAL and SON have reduced the price of Foreign Feathers the amount of the duty, and they can now offer—

Best White Dantzic..	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys ..	2s. 0d.
Irish White Goose ..	2s. 0d.	Irish Grey Goose	1s. 6d.
Dest ditto	2s. 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

Poultry..... 1s.
List of prices of every description of bedding sent free by post.—HEAL & SON, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

ONLY TO BE KNOWN TO BE VALUED.
DR. ROBERTS'S CELEBRATED MEDICINES.—The excellent OINTMENT called "THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND," is confidently recommended to the Public as an unfailing remedy for Wounds of every description, and is a specific for Eruptions that sometimes follow vaccination. Sold in pots at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each.—Also his PILULÆ ANTISCROPHULÆ, confirmed by more than 40 years' successful experience as an invaluable remedy, and presents one of the best alteratives ever compounded for purifying the blood, and assisting Nature in all her operations. They are efficacious also in Rheumatism, and form a mild and superior family aperient, and may be taken at all times without confinement or change of diet. Sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each. By the late Dr. ROBERTS's will, Messrs. BEACH and BARNICOTT (who have been confidentially intrusted with the preparation of his medicines for many years . . are left joint proprietors of the "Poor Man's Friend" and . . "Antiscrophulæ," &c. with the exclusive right, power, and authority to prepare and vend the same. The utility of these Medicines is fully testified by thousands of persons who have been benefited by their aid.
Beware of Counterfeits.—No Medicines sold under the above names can possibly be genuine unless "BEACH and BARNICOTT, late Dr. ROBERTS, Bridport," is engraved and printed on the stamp affixed to each package. Sold wholesale by the Proprietors, BEACH and BARNICOTT, at their Dispensary, Bridport; by the London houses; and by most respectable Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom.

HORIZONTAL WATCHES, very Flat. — A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, price, in silver cases, three and a half guineas each; or in gold cases, six guineas each. These Watches are accurate and durable, the horizontal escapement being peculiarly suited to combine these important requisites. They are jewelled in four holes, and continue going whilst being wound. A twelvemonth's warranty given with each.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—THE PROTECTION OF THE PUBLIC FROM FRAUD AND IMPOSITION, have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon, and Co. who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a NEW ENVELOPE of exquisite beauty.
It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the GRECIAN GRACES standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia; these tastefully blending with Arabesque-scrolls and wreaths, encircle the royal arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c. &c. &c., whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—20, Hatton Garden,
London, Jan. 1, 1845. A. ROWLAND & SON.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR,
An Oriental Botanical Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, cooling, and purifying action on the Skin; and effectually dissipates all REDNESS, TAN, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, SPOTS, FRECKLES, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, the softness and delicacy which it induces on the HANDS, ARMS, and NECK, and its capability of allaying irritation and removing sallowness and all unsightly appearances, render it indispensable to every Toilet.
Sold in bottles, at 4s. 6d. and at 8s. 6d each, duty included.
CAUTION.—BEWARE OF DELETERIOUS COMPOUNDS, under the title of "Genuine" KALYDOR, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the Complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. The ONLY GENUINE article is inclosed in the Envelope, as detailed above.
 All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!
The Genuine Preparation is sold by the Proprietors, and by repectable Chemists and Perfumers.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The extraordinary success of this Medicine is the wonder of the age; it has been tried by hundreds of thousands as an aperient, and has in every instance done good; it has never in the slightest degree impaired the most delicate constitution. Tens of thousands have testified that perseverance in the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS will completely cure any disease, and are living witnesses of the benefit received from this invaluable medicine. Sheets of testimonials and the "Life and Times of Old Parr," may be had gratis of every respectable Medicine Vendor throughout the Kingdom.
Beware of spurious imitations of the above medicine. None are genuine unless the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS ON A RED GROUND, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co.," London, on the directions.
Sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family packets at 11s., by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard, London: Mottershead and Co., Manchester; and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and by all respectable Druggists and Patent Medicine Retailers throughout the Kingdom.—Directions are given with each box.

ELECTRO-PLATING AND GILDING.—OLD PLATED GOODS RESTORED and made equal to new by Messrs. ELKINGTON and Co.'s Patent Process. This process being carried on in London only by Messrs. ELKINGTON & Co., it is particularly requested that all goods may be forwarded direct to their Establishments, 22, Regent-street (corner of Jermyn-street); or 45, Moorgate-street, City. New Goods plated upon White Metal in great variety. Books of Prices and Drawings sent to all parts of the kingdom and abroad free.

PATENT ELECTRO-PLATED AND GILT ARTICLES in every variety, at the Establishments of the Patentees, ELKINGTON & Co., West End—22, Regent-street, corner of Jermyn-street; City—15, Moorgate-street. The Patent Electro processes being extensively adopted under their licence, the Patentees beg to state that they confine their own Manufacture to goods of a superior and warranted quality only, which invariably bear their mark, "E. & Co." under a crown. Old articles replated and gilt.

News of the Week.

THE declarations made by Ministers on Friday night in both Houses of Parliament, on the subject of the Oregon territory, will be read with very great interest in the present unsettled state of our relations with the United States. The recent message of the newly-elected President, and the claim which he advanced to the occupation of the Oregon territory were brought before the House of Peers by Lord Clarendon, and before the Commons by Lord John Russell, both of whom maintained the rights of Great Britain to the territory, and declared that this country ought not to abate anything of her just pretensions. In this announcement of the opinions of the Whig party, Ministers cordially concurred; and both Lord Aberdeen and Sir R. Peel were vehemently cheered by all sides of the House when they declared, in language at once temperate and decisive, that we possess rights to the territory of Oregon which are clear and unquestionable, and that if those rights are invaded, the Government are resolved and prepared to maintain them. On Friday, Mr. Wakley brought forward his motion for the production of the warrants issued by Sir J. Graham for opening Mr. Duncombe's letters, but on a division the motion was rejected by 73 to 22. On Tuesday, Mr. Duncombe brought forward his motion for the introduction of a Bill to secure the inviolability of letters passing through the Post-office, but this motion was also unsuccessful, being negatived by 161 to 78. On Monday, Mr. Bankes proposed his amendment on the auction duties, with the view of reducing the burden of the county rates, as a measure more beneficial to the agricultural interest than the remission of the auction duties. After a desultory debate, the House divided and affirmed the repeal of the auction duties by 167 to 30. Another division on the amount of auctioneers' licenses was threatened, but at length the Chancellor of the Exchequer agreed to a compromise and reduced the sum from 15*l.* to 10*l.* The Government resolution for the repeal of the duties on glass was then carried without a division. On Tuesday Mr. Mackinnon proposed his resolution condemnatory of interments in towns, with the object of bringing in a Bill founded on it. Sir. J. Graham objected to commit the House by any abstract resolution, on the ground that there will be many difficulties in legislating on such a subject. The feeling of the House, however, was evidently in favour of the measure; and Mr. T. Duncombe having moved an amendment simply asserting that interments in large towns were injurious to the health of the people, and demanded the serious attention of Parliament, Mr. Mackinnon withdrew his resolution, and the amendment was carried, amidst loud cheers, by 66 to 19. On Wednesday, Mr. Cowper moved the second reading of his Field Gardens Bill, which was opposed by Mr. B. Escott, on the ground that its enactments were compulsory. Sir J. Graham said that the measure would be supported by Government, with the exception of some of the details; and on a division, Mr. Escott's amendment was rejected by 92 to 18, and the Bill read a second time. On Thursday Mr. Christie brought forward his annual motion on the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, which was opposed by Government, and rejected by 143 to 82.—In the House of Peers on Friday the Income-tax Act, after a brief debate, was read a third time and passed, and on Saturday it became law, the royal assent being given by commission.

The accounts from Switzerland confirm the unfavourable impression created by our advices last week. The free corps have invaded the territory of Lucerne, and, contrary to expectation, have been signally defeated by the troops of that canton. The excitement occasioned by this bloodshed pervades all parts of the Confederation, and a general civil war can only be prevented by some vigorous measures on the part of the Diet. The last accounts state that the Diet had been convoked in great haste, and that at their sitting on the 5th a committee was appointed to inquire into the state of affairs.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty during the week has taken her usual airings, and has rode out on horseback on two or three occasions. On Friday Prince Albert attended a meeting of the Fine Arts' Commission. On Saturday Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal, paid a private visit to the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's Park. On Sunday the Court attended Divine service in the private chapel of the Palace. The Queen and Prince Albert honoured the Italian Opera with their presence on Saturday and on Tuesday evenings, and the French Plays on Monday. On Thursday Her Majesty held her first Drawing-room for the season. Her Majesty and Prince Albert will leave Buckingham Palace this day (Saturday) for Claremont, where they intend to remain in comparative retirement for a few days. The Queen, his Royal Highness, and the Royal family will afterwards proceed from Claremont to the Isle of Wight for a short period. The Marchioness of Douro has succeeded the Countess of Charlemont as Lady-in-Waiting. Viscount Hawarden has succeeded the Earl of Hardwicke as Lord-in-Waiting; and Sir F. Stovin has succeeded Admiral Sir R. Otway as Groom-in-Waiting to Her Majesty.

Parliamentary Movements.—Viscount Holmesdale has come forward as a candidate for West Kent, in accordance with the requisition of a county meeting. Mr. Walter Baine, late Provost of Greenock, is a candidate on the free-trade interest for that burgh, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Wallace.

The Revenue.—The returns of the Revenue for the year and quarter ending the 5th of April, have been published this week. The total revenue for the YEAR is 51,807,703*l.*, being an increase, as compared with the preceding year, of 1,110,726*l.* There is an increase in the Customs of 718,602*l.*; Excise, 344,784*l.*; Stamps, 242,800*l.*; Taxes, 25,275*l.*; Post-office, 57,000*l.*; to which must be added Imprest and other moneys, 224,056*l.*; Repayments of Advances, 140,291*l.*; making a total of 1,752,788*l.* There is a decrease in the Income Tax of 252,469*l.*; Crown-lands, 22,506*l.*; Miscellaneous, 67,122*l.*; making together 342,062*l.*; which being deducted from the sum of 1,772,788*l.* gives as above, an increase on the year of 1,410,726*l.* The total revenue for the QUARTER is 11,366,678*l.*; being an increase on the preceding quarter of 572,165*l.* There is an increase in the Excise of 61,794*l.*; Stamps, 162,456*l.*; Taxes, 1,260*l.*; Post-office, 4000*l.*; Miscellaneous, 373,724*l.*; to which must be added Imprest and other moneys, 151,763*l.*; Repayments of Advances 122,261*l.*; making a total of 891,254*l.* There is a decrease in Customs of 201,941*l.*; Income-tax, 87,148*l.*; Crown-lands, 30,000*l.*; making together, 319,089*l.*; which being deducted from the sum of 891,254*l.*, gives as above, a total increase on the quarter of 572,165*l.*

Death of the Earl of Egremont.—We have to announce the death of this nobleman, who expired after an illness of only a few days' duration on Wednesday week, at his seat Silverton-park, Devon. The deceased Earl was the son of the Hon. W. F. Wyndham (the fourth son of the second Earl), by his first wife, daughter of Lord Baltimore; he was born in 1786, and married in 1820, Jane, third daughter of the Rev. W. Roberts; but dying without issue the peerage becomes extinct. The deceased Peer succeeded his uncle, the third Earl, in 1837. He was a captain in the navy, and saw much service in the last war.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The most interesting item of domestic news to be found in the Paris journals is the commencement of the general discussion of the Colonial Bill in the Chamber of Peers on Thursday. The Minister of Marine, Admiral Mackau, defended the Bill so far as it went to improve the condition of the slaves, but opposed those conclusions of the committee upon it which were favourable to the abolition of slavery itself. He contended that abolition ought to be preceded by a preparation of the slaves for emancipation. M. Charles Dupin (the salaried advocate of the colonists) defended the interests of his clients in a long speech, in which he maintained that, compared with emancipation, slavery was a blessing to the slaves, as had been proved by the conduct of certain slaves in the French colonies, who having made their escape to the English colony of St. Lucia, and there tasted the blessing of freedom, as it was termed, solicited to be restored to their own original condition of slaves under French owners! Upon these two speeches the majority of the papers comment with considerable warmth. The Debats, in particular, approves the language of the Minister of Marine, and condemns that of Baron Charles Dupin. On Saturday M. Benoist brought up the report of the Committee upon M. Muret de Bort's proposition for the reduction of the Five per Cents. That gentleman had proposed that the stock be reduced to Four-and-a-Half per Cent., to be guaranteed for five years against further reduction; the committee suggest that the guarantee be extended to seven years, and that the silence of the stockholders be construed in favour of the reduction, and not of the reimbursement, as M. Muret de Bort had proposed. On the previous day an animated discussion took place in the Chamber of Deputies on the selection of the committee upon the Bill for "arming" the Paris fortifications, and several of the Opposition leaders inveighed against the measure in strong terms. M. de Lamartine spoke at considerable length, predicting that representative Government must cease to exist in France the day her representatives should have to deliberate under 2000 pieces of cannon. M. Garnier Pages declared that the real object of the Government was to establish a military régime, and M. Arago, who had always opposed detached forts, said that in the event of the safety of the capital being threatened, enough ordnance could be procured to defend it within a very brief period. M. Odillon Barrot and many other members who voted in favour of the fortifications, contended that under so very pacific and yielding an administration, Paris needed neither guns nor powder. The partisans of the Bill all urged that the arming of the fortifications was a necessary consequence of their erection. General Durrieu exclaimed that they had "built the house, and must now furnish it." General Paixhans assured the Parisians that the seventeen millions worth of ammunition they were to be presented with would not be more troublesome than the guns of Lille, Strasburg, and Metz were to the inhabitants of those towns; and M. Guizot most gravely said that the "immense moral effect produced in Europe by the erection of the fortifications would be quite completed by the adoption of the Bill." A majority of 177 to 145 ultimately declared in favour of it, and its partisans prevailed in the committee by a majority of seven to two. M. Thiers did not attend these proceedings, but his ally, M. de Remusat, was observed to vote for a Ministerial candidate, or, in other words, for the Bill. In their public sitting the Deputies concluded their protracted debate on the Customs Bill, and adopted an amendment moved by M. Berryer, whereby a vessel will henceforth be considered French when half of it shall belong to Frenchmen. The Ministry had proposed repealing the law of 1793, whereby no vessel was reputed French, unless it wholly belonged to Frenchmen. After disposing of this Bill, another one came under discussion, the object of which was to modify several articles of the tariffs so as to favour the importation, by French vessels, of the produce of certain parts of Asia, America, and of the western coast of Africa. It afforded M. Talabot the opportunity of violently declaiming against the treaty of navigation concluded with this country in 1826. In the course of the sitting the Minister of Public Works demanded a sum of 28,700,000 francs for the improvement of Dunkirk, Calais, Boulogne, Grandville, and various other ports. Marshal Bugeaud arrived at Algiers on the 27th ult., and unexpectedly left that place two days afterwards for Oran. The Paris papers think that his sudden departure was in consequence of information received of the re-appearance of Abd-el-Kader on the frontiers of Morocco. The sword of honour voted to the Marshal by the colonists of Algeria was presented to him, with great ceremony, immediately after his arrival at Algiers.

SPAIN.—We have accounts from Madrid of the 3d April. The Bill for the Restitution of the Church Property was passed by the Senate on the 1st by a majority of 76 votes to 4, and the Vagrancy Bill was also passed. The Heraldo says that accounts have been received from the Havannah of the 14th February, at which period the colony was tranquil, and that, in consequence of the remonstrances of the Madrid Government, the English Government had agreed to withdraw the hulk which has been for some time placed on the coast of the island, to receive the negroes liberated by the mixed commission. The Queen's departure for Barcelona is postponed till the beginning of June, on account of the disturbed state of that part of the kingdom. The Clamor Publico announces that the Duke of Rianzares has been created a grand cross of the Order of Charles III., and that he has left Madrid for Tarançon, his native place, where he is preparing to build a magnificent palace, suitable to his new-born dignities and wealth. The sitting of the Deputies on the 2d had attracted much attention. M. Puche, secretary to the budget committee, read their report on the budget of expenses, which reduces the estimates of the Ministry from 1,400,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 reals. The report begins with the [illegible] of the royal family. It says that, as the committee cannot grant to Queen Maria Christina the 3,000,000 reals demanded for her by the Government, in the capacity of Queen-Widow, since she has married the Duke of Rianzares, they propose the sum being awarded to her "as a testimony of national gratitude for the services she has rendered to Spain." This paragraph excited the greatest astonishment. Most of the persons lately arrested in Madrid, under pretence of the discovery of a new conspiracy, have been set at liberty, after some days' confinement; and the Government papers admit that their arrest was the consequence of a deplorable error. A company had been formed for constructing a railway from the port of Aviles, in the Bay of Biscay, to Madrid.

GERMANY.—Prince Esterhazy established at Vienna in December last a society for the reception and reformation of convicts of both sexes, after their liberation from prison. It is the first institution of this kind organised in Germany, and more than 2000 of the Austrian nobility have subscribed towards its formation. At a general meeting recently held at Vienna, at which about 600 of the members were present, among whom were above 100 ladies, who took an active part in the discussions and votes (an event of rare occurrence, as the ladies in Austria seldom take part in deliberative assemblies), Prince Esterhazy, as chairman, stated that 60 individuals had partaken the benefits of the society, 49 of whom had been sensibly amended; one had again fallen into vice, and 10 had escaped from the observation of the establishment. The assemblage on that occasion voted the necessary funds for forming a society to receive convicts under 18 years of age. Prince Metternich, in a handsome letter addressed to Prince Esterhazy, stated his wish to become a member, and forwarded at the same time a donation of 4000 florins in aid of the funds of the establishment.

SWITZERLAND.—The long expected crisis in the affairs of this country has arrived, and an appeal to arms has been the consequence of the indecision of the Diet. The result of the first struggle, however, has been decisive, and the free corps have been so signally defeated by the troops of Lucerne that their cause is considered to be lost. It is clear at least that they have been completely beaten. General Sonnenberg allowed them to advance till they got quite close to Lucerne, the suburbs of which place had been hastily fortified. He there attacked them with three companies of Carabineers of Unterwalden, who at once threw their advancing colums into confusion, and, after completely putting them to the rout, he succeeded in capturing the whole of the artillery, and a large number of horses. The inhabitants of the country, who had allowed the free corps to pass through their districts unmolested, had risen en masse in the rear of the free corps. The troops from Argau, which had started from Zofingen, but had not advanced so far as the others, succeeded in effecting a retreat, carrying two cannon along with them. The number of men killed and wounded is calculated at 1000, but this is merely a guess, as the official accounts are not yet published. Among those killed were Colonel Steger, president of the committee of the Lucerne refugees, and Colonel Rothpietz, commander of the Zofinguen column. The auxiliaries of the canton of Schwytz did not arrive at Lucerne till the evening of the 1st, when it was too late for them to take any part in the battle. They amounted to 2000 men. The entire number of men under the command of Gen. Sonnenberg, commander of the Lucerne troops, is not known, says a Paris letter, "but his utmost force was, according to the best calculation, 10,000 men. He had, however, over the popular leaders—the chief of whom was a lawyer—the advantage of having graduated under Napoleon, and of a force animated at once by patriotism and religious enthusiasm. His troops consisted of the battalions of Lucerne and the contingents of the four primitive cantons—Uri, Schwytz, Unterwalden, and Zug. He had moreover, large bodies of volunteers from [illegible] and the Catholic districts of Argau, who rose [illegible] that their Radical neighbours joined the free corps. No estimate with pretension to correctness can be attempted of the loss of the Radicals, who walked literally into the trap prepared for them by General Sonnenberg. The Berne contingent numbered [illegible] fore the battle 2,000 men, and of those only [illegible] 600 (or about one-fifth) had returned to their territory. The whole affair is indeed in every point of view lamentable. It originated, as has been already remarked, in the shameful conduct of the Government of Argovia in respect of the convents, and was enhanced by the indiscretion of the Lucerne authorities in their indiscriminate persecution of vast numbers of individuals, only partially compromised, instead of confining their vengeance to the instigators and authors of the insurrection of the 8th December. The Government of Berne is, however, still more culpable, for, without participating in the fanatical views of the authorities of Argovia, they aided them, with the scandalous object of increasing their own weight in the republic."—A letter from Zurich, of the 31st ult., states that, as soon as the Vorort had received positive news of the invasion of the territory of Lucerne, it held a sitting, at which it was resolved to convoke the Diet for the following Saturday, and to call out 18 battalions of infantry, several companies of carabineers, several battalions of artillery, and four companies of cavalry. Berne is to furnish eight battalions, Zurich five, St. Gall two, Thurgau one—making a total of 16,500 men. The troops are to be under the command of the Federal Colonel Donaty, and the Federal Colonel Zeigler is mentioned for the command of the first brigade. These officers belong to the Conservative party. The writer of this letter states that the armed intervention of the small cantons in the affair of Lucerne would necessarily lead to the entrance of the troops of Berne. That Canton is capable of raising 30,000 men, and has 46 pieces of artillery in the arsenal. The last accounts state that the Diet met on the 5th inst. at Zurich, and appointed a committee of seven members to examine the present state of the country, and make such propositions as it might deem proper.

UNITED STATES.—The packet ships Virginian and Montezuma arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday, the first with intelligence to the 11th, the other to the 18th ult. The news relates principally to the Ministerial appointments of the President, to the differences which are likely to arise between the United States and Mexico, arising out of the Texan annexation, and to the position of affairs with England in the matter of the Oregon. Mr. Calhoun, it is said, has rejected the offer made him by the British Minister for referring the points in dispute to the arbitration of a third power. The same gentleman, it is added, had been offered the post of Minister at the Court of St. James's, which he had declined. He now holds no situation in the Cabinet, and, if some of the statements in the papers are to be credited, he has returned to the south in gloomy disappointment. The new cabinet is thus arranged :—Mr. Buchanan, Secretary of State ; Mr. Massey, Minister of War ; Mr. Bancroft, Navy ; Mr. Walker, Treasury ; Mr. Cave Johnson, Postmaster ; Mr. Mason, Attorney-General. The cabinet is complete, and ultra-democratic in character. The selection of Mr. Allen, of Ohio, as chairman on the committee on foreign relations, and also of General Cass as one of that committee, has occasioned much gossip in the political circles. It is deemed to be indicative, not only of a hostile, but even of a warlike spirit towards England. The Oregon question, however, is pregnant with danger. General Cass is the ex-minister to France, whose letter on the claim of right of search, the quintuple treaty, &c., made some noise about three years ago. The New York Express says : "Against England, Mr. Allen is perfectly rabid ; almost as much so as the member of Congress from Indiana (Mr. Kennedy), who came into Congress declaring that he inherited an unconquerable prejudice against England." An analysis of the political opinions of the new Senate, shows that it contains a majority of two votes in favour of democratic measures. Both the Government and both Houses of Congress, therefore, will be essentially democratic, the Whigs possessing merely the influence of a tolerably strong minority. The Mexican Minister had left Washington and returned to New York. He had demanded his passports, in accordance with his instructions, and would have done so sooner, but for his bad state of health. But it must be remembered that General Almonte is the Minister of the last, not the present Government in Mexico, and that those who have succeeded Santa Anna may not be disposed to act upon his belligerent policy. All parties were waiting anxiously the receipt of the next advices from Mexico, as upon them will depend the important question of peace or war between the two republics. Texas, through its new President, Mr. Jones, had issued a proclamation, withdrawing the letters of marque and reprisal issued some time previously against Mexico, when the two powers were on the eve of a conflict.—New Brunswick is the scene of some squabbles between the House of Assembly and the Lieut.-Governor. The House had petitioned the Queen for his recall, and his unpopularity with that body is indicated by the voting—26 to 6.—At Cuba, all vessels arriving with slaves were ordered to be confiscated ; the United States papers favourable to abolition profess to see in this act the speedy termination of slavery.—The missing packet ships, United States and England, the former of which sailed from Liverpool on 26th Nov., the latter on 1st Dec., continued when the last accounts left New York, to be the theme of deep anxiety on the part of the owners and the public. Both the vessels had valuable cargoes. One of the cabin passengers on board of the United States was the Rev. Mr. Tulloch, who fled from Scotland after committing forgery, and after whom an officer was despatched by the steamer. Had he reached his destination he would have been immediately arrested.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—Lord BROUGHAM presented petitions from Thomas Laken and Ann Ward, the persons who had been committed with hard labour for a month, by the magistrates of the town of Leicester, for non-payment of costs in a matter of poor-rates, and whose case had, a few days since, been brought forward in the House of Commons by Sir J. Easthope. The noble and learned Lord condemned the conduct of the magistrates, and called on the Lord Chancellor to determine whether or not they were fit to remain in the commission of the peace.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he would direct inquiries to be made for the purpose of ascertaining the facts, and if he found that these magistrates had misconducted themselves, it would be his duty, unless they offered a satisfactory explanation, to remove them from the commission of the peace.—The Earl of CLARENDON called the attention of Government to that passage in the inaugural address of the new President of the United States of America, in which the President proclaimed that the right of the United States to the Oregon territory was "clear and unquestionable," and in which he announced his determination, as President, to maintain it.—The Earl of ABERDEEN, having informed their lordships of the general state of the negotiations pending between this country and the United States relative to this disputed territory, and having quoted the words of Mr. Tyler, the late President, acknowledging that the negotiations were in a state of progress, expressed his deep regret and surprise at the unusual and unwarrantable proclamation made by Mr. Polk, the new President, and emphatically declared that his and the Government's determination was either to obtain an amicable adjustment of our claims on the Oregon territory, or to maintain them by the force of arms. "I am accustomed," said his lordship, "almost daily to see myself described as pusillanimous, cowardly, mean, dastardly, truckling, and base. I need hardly say that I listen to these accusations, not so much with indifference as with satisfaction, because I know perfectly what they mean. I know how these terms of opprobrium are to be understood—how they are to be translated. I feel satisfied when I find vituperative expressions thrown away upon conduct which I know is consistent with justice, reason, moderation, and common sense. Therefore, I say, I am not so indifferent as I am satisfied, when I find such epithets applied to me. No man, who has filled the high station which I have the honour unworthily to hold, can have felt more ardently desirous than I do to preserve to this country the blessings of peace, or who is disposed to make greater sacrifices to secure it. My Lords, I consider war to be not only the greatest crime, but the greatest folly of which any country can be guilty, if lightly undertaken. Further, I may say that I concur entirely in what some moral writer has declared, that if we wanted a proof of the deep and thorough corruption of human nature, we should find it in the fact that even war is sometimes justifiable. It is, however, the duty, and I am sure it is the inclination, of Her Majesty's Government, by every means, to avert so great a curse. At the same time, there are limits to forbearance, and that without attaching too much weight to the question of honour. Fortunately, for this country I think we need not be very sensitive upon that point. It is not for us, God knows, 'To seek the bubble reputation, even at the cannon's mouth,' or anywhere else. Our power, our character, our position, are such as to enable us to look with indifference on what other countries might think they ought to feel sensitively. Our honour is a substantial property, which we shall never neglect, and we may adopt what course we please for the preservation of it, and fearlessly leave the judgment to posterity. In what I have said your Lordships will have perceived an earnest of the spirit in which, at least if I am to conduct them, the negociations will proceed. I cannot bring myself to think it possible that, at this day, a civilised Government will remain deaf to the counsel of justice and reason. I hope, and fully believe, that we shall hereafter have the happiness of saying that this important question has been brought to a satisfactory because an amicable conclusion. Should it be otherwise, I can only say that we possess rights, which, in our opinion, are clear and unquestionable ; and, by the blessing of God, and with your support, those rights we are fully prepared to maintain." The Noble Earl was vehemently cheered throughout the whole of this declaration.—The Earl of RIPON moved the third reading of the Income-tax Bill. With respect to the agricultural interest, his Lordship said : it had been stated that that interest suffered under great depression. However, he wanted to know by what financial scheme, connected with the financial policy of the country, that interest could be relieved. He had heard no such scheme proposed or suggested—mere expressions of sympathy without practical good would be useless ; and he thought that, under the circumstances, the best and wisest course for Government to have pursued was to have proposed measures calculated for the good of all classes.—A long debate followed, in which the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, Lord ASHBURTON, Lord STANLEY, Lord MONTAGLE, the Duke of RICHMOND, Lord BROUGHAM, the Marquis of NORMANBY, the Earl of RADNOR, and Lord COLBORNE took part.—The Duke of RICHMOND moved the addition of a clause, giving to the farmers a power of appeal in such cases where their profits were not equal to one-half their rent, upon which the present estimate for the Income-tax was taken. The noble Duke urged the injustice of imposing upon the already distressed agricultural interest the additional burthen of paying a tax which no other class had to pay, viz., out of supposed profits which they did not receive. The clause was negatived, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

Saturday.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the Property-tax Act Continuance Bill, the Speaker and the Commons being present. The Birkenhead Docks Bill was read a second time, and two other private bills were forwarded a stage.

Monday.—The Earl of POWIS presented an immense number of petitions against the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph.—Lord BROUGHAM moved for a return of the number of Railway Bills passed in the last 10 sessions of Parliament, distinguishing the number passed in each session. 2. The number of Railway Bills now pending before Parliament. 3. The number of railway schemes in favour of which the Railway Board had reported. 4. The sums paid for shares in each railway that had already been authorised by Act of Parliament. and 5. The sums paid as dividends in the different railways which had been authorised by Parliament. His lordship denounced the enormous speculation in railway shares now raging as most mischievous and alarming, and called on Government to discourage it as much as possible.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE agreed to such portions of the return as was in his power to furnish, and acquiesced in the necessity of keeping down by all legitimate means the wild spirit of gambling in shares which has spread so generally amongst all classes. The Noble Earl mentioned one instance of deception in the "getting up" of railway schemes which had come within his own knowledge. A gentleman of his acquaintance had been requested to act on the provisional committee of a railroad. The shares were at quite at a premium, and the gentleman thought it better one day to go to the office to ascertain whether the line had been surveyed. He learned that they had surveyed one end of the line, and the other end of the line, but the intermediate part had never been looked at at all. But in the portion which had been surveyed he found that the line passed within 30 yards of a certain place, and upon a little inquiry he learned that the house was his own. Lord Dalhousie added that he should mention that, to account for this extraordinary circumstance, this was the case of an Irish railroad.—Lord ASHBURTON considered it imperative upon Government to examine into the effect the railway mania would have on the monetary interests and the industry of the country. In consequence of the railway speculations the iron trade had advanced 300 per cent. within the last 18 months. Should a sudden stoppage come, ruin to the iron trade would be the consequence.—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH, in answer to the Marquis of NORMANBY, stated that the measure of Government for improving the sanitary condition of towns would be brought forward in sufficient time to afford ample opportunity for its consideration. He saw no reason why its provisions should not be extended to Ireland and Scotland, as well as to England.—The Marquis of NORMANBY gave notice of his intention to bring in a Bill to extend the elective franchise to all persons who paid the Income-tax, and likewise moved for a return of the appointments made in the Irish constabulary force since the 1st May, 1838, distinguishing those made at the recommendation of the Inspector-General from those made without it. In doing so Lord Normanby renewed his former complaint against the appointment of Major Priestly as Sub-Inspector-General of Police, contrary to the recommendation of the Inspector-General, and condemned generally the legal and other appointments made by the Government since their accession to office.—Lord STANLEY warmly defended all the appointments made, and expressed his astonishment that the Marquis of Normanby should have chosen the time when the Government were urging forward the most liberal Irish measures, at the risk of losing thereby their friends and supporters, to accuse them of illiberality in the administration of justice to Ireland.—The Duke of WELLINGTON and the Earl of ST. GERMANS likewise upheld the appointments made. The return, amended so as to embrace the year 1836, was ordered. The Common Law Process Bill was read a third time and passed. On the motion of the Earl of DALHOUSIE, the Sugar Duties Bill was read a second time and ordered to be printed. The Lord Chancellor brought in a Bill for the better administration of charitable funds in England and Wales.

Tuesday.—After some discussion between Lords NORMANBY and STANLEY on the subject of Irish appointments,—Lord PORTMAN gave notice of a motion for some day after Whitsuntide, on the subject of compensation to tenants of land for improvements made thereon.—The Earl of DEVON, upon this notice, intimated his intention shortly to introduce a measure calculated to insure compensation to tenants making improvements on land in Ireland.—The Sugar Duties Bill passed through committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—Lord J. RUSSELL adverted to a statement of Lord Ashburton, on the previous evening, in the House of Lords, respecting the Madawaska settlement, and asked if the Government would produce the correspondence respecting it.—Sir R. Peel thought it would be inexpedient to revive a matter long since settled.—Mr. M. GIBSON raised a conversation on the subject of adequate protection to British subjects in Brazil.—Sir R. PEEL intimated that negociations were in progress for a new treaty, in which that question would be included. On the question for going into Committee of Supply—Lord J. RUSSELL called the attention of the House to that part of the President's message which relates to the territory of the Oregon. The course taken by the President of the United States was entirely new. It deferred to popular clamour the settlement of grave questions between nations, and pointed to terms of aggrandisement as the rule of action. The language used implied that the title of the United States was clear and unquestionable, and that the full occupation of the Oregon territory was only dependent on the emigration of settlers from the States. In disproof of these pretensions, he gave a minute sketch of all the proceedings relative to the Oregon, from the visits of the earlier discoverers down to our own day. The cession of Louisiana by Spain did not involve that of the territory in question ; and though the commander of an American merchant vessel, called the Columbia, discovered the outlet of the river bearing the same name, yet it was Vancouver who explored it, and took possession formally, in the name of the British Government. He also sketched the proceedings of the American fur companies ; the attempt to found Astoria, now called Fort George, so graphically described by Washington Irving ; and showed that the Hudson's Bay Company, by their superiority in business management, had successfully met competition by legitimate trading, profitable to themselves, honourable in its character, and fair towards the natives, while their "forts," or settlements, 18 in number, were scattered over the Oregon, many of them along the Columbia. Enlarging on the importance of the territory in relation to our growing trade with China, and in the Pacific ; deprecating the adoption of any tone of menace ; regretting that the conduct of the President of the United States had compelled this public notice of a question which ought to have been left to the ordinary course of diplomacy, he declared that he would leave the matter in the hands of those who were entrusted with the protection of the honour of the country and the interest of the Crown. "I think it is impossible," said his lordship, "that the present unarranged and unsettled state of relations between the two countries, in respect to this subject, can longer continue, without incurring the danger that people from the United States, acting on the suggestion of the President, may endeavour to disturb British subjects in the possession of a right which the latter hold by treaty, and may thus produce a state of relations dangerous to the peace of the two Powers. For my own part I should advise, with all moderation, that I am not prepared to say that this country ought to abate anything of her just pretensions. I will not pretend to define what course belongs to Her Majesty's advisers with respect to the diplomatic proposals they may make. I will not attempt to say what precise line should be drawn. But I do think, that, with all due regard to our dignity and true interests, we cannot make our proposition—we cannot make our own demand or claim less than that made by Mr. Canning in 1826. I may be told that it does not much matter if this territory, savage, and in great part barren, be claimed, or taken, or occupied by the United States. But I must say it does matter. It cannot be a matter of indifference to us that a territory to which we have the better and juster claim should be yielded to what I must call a blustering announcement on the part of the President of the United States. It cannot be a matter of indifference to us that the communication through this territory to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, with China, the East Indies, and a great part of South America, should be surrendered at once to a foreign power. But, above all, it cannot be a matter of indifference that the tone and character of England should be lowered in any transaction we may have to carry on with the United States or any other power."—Lord J. Russell's speech was vehemently cheered from all parts of the House.—Sir R. PEEL, after admitting the gravity of the question, and referring to the negotiations of Mr. Canning to effect an adjustment of the respective claims of the United States and of Great Britain, which ended in failure, gave a brief account of the correspondence which has taken place between the present Government and the American executive. So recently as the 12th February last, the late President, Mr. Tyler, in a message to the Senate, assigned, as a reason for not complying with a request to produce the correspondence, that the negotiations were still pending ; that they had been conducted in an amicable spirit ; and that considerable progress had been made in them. He could confirm the assertion as to the "amicable spirit," but not as to the "progress." However, on the 4th of March following, the new President, Mr. Polk, delivered that inaugural address which contained the reference to the Oregon. No diplomatic communications had taken place since ; all that was known was contained in the address. He considered it his duty not to despair of a favourable result ; but if it were otherwise, he would not then object to lay on the table of the House the whole of the correspondence which had taken place. Sir R. Peel concluded by saying, "I still hope that an amicable and equitable adjustment of the claims between the two countries may be made, notwithstanding that Message. I must, however, express my deep regret, that, while these negotiations were pending, the chief executive officer of the United States in a public address, should, contrary to all usage, have referred to other contingencies than a friendly and satisfactory termination of these differences. Such a reference is not likely to lead to that issue which every friend to the maintenance of amicable relations between the two countries must desire—an amicable and honourable adjustment of the differences which have arisen on the disputed territories. I deeply regret not merely the reference, but I still more deeply regret the tone and temper which it displayed. And, as the subject has been brought under discussion, I think not improperly by the noble lord, I feel it my imperative duty, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, to state in language most temperate, but most decisive, that we too consider that we have rights with respect to this territory of Oregon which are clear and unquestionable—that we trust still to effect an amicable adjustment of them—that we ardently desire to effect an amicable adjustment of those claims—but that, having exhausted every effort to effect that adjustment, if these rights are invaded, we are resolved, and we are prepared to maintain them." A tremendous burst of no less than 12 distinct rounds of cheers from all parts of the House followed this announcement. In consequence of an intimation which Sir R. PEEL gave at the termination of his speech, that it might be expedient for the House not to express any further opinion at present on this subject, the subject dropped after a declaration from Lord J. RUSSELL that he would not submit any motion on this subject to the House until all the papers connected with it were laid on the table by Her Majesty's Government.—Lord PALMERSTON then made a short explanation and defence of the observations which he had made on a former evening respecting the Ashburton "capitulation," and replied to the speech made in behalf of it by Lord Ashburton in the House of Lords.—Mr. WAKLEY then brought forward his motion for a copy of any warrant or warrants sent to the Postmaster-General by any Secretary of State, directing the detaining or opening of any letter or letters addressed to or written by Thomas Slingsby Duncombe, Esq., a member of this House. He urged the production of the warrants as an act of simple justice.—Mr. WILLIAMS seconded the motion.—Sir J. GRAHAM treated the subject as an exhausted one, and repeated in his defence the fact of his having made a full statement of everything connected with the opening of letters before the secret committee, which had acquitted him of having used the power vindictively for any personal or party purpose. Nothing had come to his knowledge in the slightest degree affecting the character of Mr. T. Duncombe as a loyal man, and a good subject. He therefore opposed the motion. After a short debate, on a division the motion was rejected by 73 to 22.—Mr WILLIAMS reviewed the cost of our establishment of Life and Foot Guards, and pleaded that by placing these regiments on the same footing as troops of the line, we should remove unjust distinctions, and effect a large saving in expense.—Mr. HUME followed; after which the House went into Committee of Supply.—Mr. S. HERBERT proposed the army estimates, in which there is no increase nor diminution, though some slight difference in the details. Considerable discussion arose, the topics being various, but a leading one was the household troops, and their alleged preferences in pay and consideration.—Sir H. DOUGLAS urged the claims of regimental staff officers, surgeons, paymasters, and so forth, to the privilege of being allowed to retire on full-pay after 30 years' service. A number of votes were agreed to; after which the committee proceeded with the navy estimates, which occupied the remainder of the evening.

Monday.—In reply to Lord PALMERSTON, Sir R. PEEL stated that no modification had been made in the convention between France and England for the regulation of the fisheries, and that no change was in contemplation.—The House went into committee on the Excise Acts, and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated the general reasons for the abolition of the auction duties, and adduced specific examples of their inequality and hardship in operation. Owing to exemptions and evasions, the duties were only paid on 7,000,000*l*. out of 45,000,000*l*. value of property ascertained to be annually transferred, and a tax producing only 300,000*l*. per annum cost at least 50,000*l*. in expense of collection.—Mr. G. BANKES then rose to propose his amendment. Insisting that the county rate was a burden which pressed unequally on the agricultural interest, he pointed out particular charges from which it might be relieved, as lunatic asylums, gaols, expenses of prosecutions, and so forth. To lighten the county rates would, therefore, be a greater boon to a distressed class than would be the repeal of the auction duties; and he thought that the Chancellor of the Exchequer should retain his surplus in the consolidated fund, and instead of repealing the auction duties ease the county rates. Very few, comparatively, of the 4000 auctioneers in the kingdom paid extra licences; and raising the annual licence from 5*l*. to 15*l*. would operate so injuriously as to compel many of them to abandon their occupations. Injury would be, therefore, inflicted on one class, while no good was done to the agriculturists. He would, therefore, take the sense of the House on the remission of the auction duties.—Mr. M. GIBSON denied that to reduce the burden of county rates, of poor rates, or of establishing lunatic asylums, would be a boon to the agricultural labourers or farmers; such reductions could only benefit the landlords. Mr. Bankes's proposal, however entitled to the credit of being a small one, was anything but modest.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN said that Mr. Bankes's proposition having been, in substance, already decided on Mr. Miles's motion lately, he could not support it, because, in his opinion, when once a question had been fairly under their consideration, and had been decided upon by a large majority, it did not tend to the forwarding of public business, or to the credit of that House, to have it renewed in a different shape. Besides, Mr. Bankes had not pointed out any apportionment of this 300,000*l*., and therefore it would be useless to discuss the question.—Mr. F. T. BARING opposed the remission of the auction duties, because he thought, if there were any surplus revenue to forego, soap had a better claim to it than auctions.—Lord J. RUSSELL also opposed the abolition of the duties on auctions, on the ground that though nothing could be said for them, the surplus revenue which would remain after their remission would be too small, and that butter and cheese should have the preference, could any further reductions be safely afforded.—Mr. HUME supported the Government.—Sir R. PEEL was glad that they had the high authority of the noble lord for the declaration that not a word could be said in favour of the auction duties. He trusted that the House would bear that in mind, and that those of the agricultural members who were going to vote against the repeal would recollect what was the object which procured them support from the Opposition side of the House. Instead of obtaining their own object, they might find the surplus applied to the reduction of the duties on butter and cheese. He reiterated the arguments in favour of the repeal of the auction duties.—After some remarks from Colonel SIBTHORP in favour of the reduction of the duties on fire insurances,—Mr. COBDEN rose, and charged Sir R. Peel with appealing to the mere selfish interests of those on the Government side of the House. He exhibited them as mere dealers in butter and cheese. For his part, he would vote for the repeal of the auction duties on the present occasion, and for the repeal of the duties on butter and cheese when the subject came before them.—Sir T. ACLAND, admitting Mr. Cobden's ability, shrewdness, and exertions, would not receive him either as the exponent of R. Peel's intentions or feelings, or yield to him in sincerity of feeling on behalf of the improvement of the condition of his fellow-men.—Mr. LABOUCHERE certainly did understand Sir R. Peel to warn the agricultural members as to voting against the repeal of the auction duties, lest, instead of getting a reduction on the county rates, they might lose their protection on butter and cheese.—On a division there appeared —For the repeal of the auction duties, 167; against it, 30; majority, 137.—The question having then been put that there be a general duty for the future of 15*l*. for each auctioneer, Mr. HUME moved, as an amendment, that the duty be reduced to 7*l*. 10*s*. The committee was about to divide, when the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER offered to take "ten guineas," but Mr. HUME promptly retorted that the "guinea" was not a "legal tender." Loud laughter followed, but ultimately, rather than go a division, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was bid down to 10*l*.; and so the amount of the annual license was fixed at 10*l*. The House went into committee on the Customs Act, and Mr. Spooner's motion—that the repeal of the protective duties on glass, instead of taking place immediately on the passing of the measure, should not come into operation till April the 5th, 1846—having been negatived without a division, the Government resolution on the glass duties was agreed to. The Public Museums Bill passed through committee.

Tuesday.—Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice that on the 22d inst. he should move certain resolutions respecting the condition of the labouring classes in England and Wales.—Mr. HUTT gave notice for the 15th inst. to call the attention of the House to the expediency of admitting Australian and Cape of Good Hope corn on the same conditions as corn grown in America.—Sir R. PEEL announced that in the course of the month he should explain the nature of the measure he has in contemplation relative to banking establishments in Scotland and Ireland.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE brought on his motion for the introduction of a bill to secure the inviolability of letters passing through the Post-office. He was assured by some of the highest legal authorities in the country, that there was no "law" for the practice of opening letters, and that the statutes of Anne and Victoria recognising it had only the effect of screening the servants of the Post-office from being indicted for a misdemeanour. The required "warrants" did not constitute the act of opening letters legal, they were merely to the Post-office authorities what the warrant of the constable was to him, or the "order" of admission to the gallery of the House was to the stranger using it—they justified the individual, but did not legalise the deed. The practice, though exercised in the United Kingdom, was not permitted in Canada, or any of our dependencies; and Lord Sidmouth, when applied to for its exercise, in order to discover the retreat of a swindler and forger, replied that he held the correspondence passing through the Post-office to be too sacred to be violated for anything short of treasonable designs. The power was not only dangerous to public liberty, but demoralising to the servants of the Post-office, as evinced by the conspiracy on the part of certain letter-sorters and carriers to open the letters of sporting gentlemen, by which they incurred the penalty of transportation, from which, however, they were saved, because the Post-office authorities, after dismissing them, shrunk from prosecution, being deterred by the defence set up—that the individuals had merely done what their superiors were habitually doing. He called on Government to aid him in his present proposition; he was willing to bury the past in oblivion, if from henceforth they deprived all administrations of the right of treacherously administering to the sneaking wishes of foreign Powers.—Dr. BOWRING seconded the motion, inquiring if the Home Secretary had ascertained whether or not his accusations against Mr. Mazzini were correct.—Sir J. GRAHAM had made his previous statements on the highest authority, but was now engaged in inquiries, the result of which, when completed, he would communicate without reserve or hesitation. The dispassionate tone and temper of Mr. T. Duncombe had almost seduced him from the strict line of duty, for were he to follow his own inclinations he would, especially after his painful experience, denounce the power as odious. But the carriage of letters being a royal prerogative, the opening of them was not, down to the statute of Anne, either a misdemeanour or even ground for a civil action. The statute of Anne was, in fact, a restraining statute. It first limited the power, rendering it a misdemeanour without a warrant. More recently the exercise of the power has been gradually regulated. Since 1806 a continuous record had been carefully preserved of the issue of all warrants; and at present none proceed without the knowledge of three individuals, the Home Secretary, his under secretary, and a confidential clerk, while at the Post-office all political warrants are specially registered in a particular book. Considering that the power had been exercised from the Revolution downwards, he thought that it was now placed under effectual control. In all the countries of Europe, France, Belgium, and so forth, there was a check on the admission of foreigners; in this country there was none, nor did he think it desirable that there should be. But then he did not think it too much that there should be some check over the correspondence of foreigners, so as to prevent this country from being made the hothouse of intrigues for the disturbance of the peace of Europe. With these views he opposed the introduction of the proposed Bill.—Lord J. RUSSELL cited the opinion of Lord Denman, who thinks no warrant for opening letters should be issued, unless on information on oath. With such a check as this, he considered it necessary that there should be left to Government a power of opening letters. He therefore could not support Mr. Duncombe's motion, though nothing could be more fair and dispassionate than the way in which he had brought it forward.—Mr. WARBURTON, Mr. HUME, and Lord HOWICK, supported the motion. Lord HOWICK, however, said he believed the power of opening letters might usefully exist, and safely exist, provided the system of secresy were put an end to. If they would not resort to the practice of resealing letters, or of defacing post-marks—if it were known in what way letters were opened—such a power might be usefully and safely exercised. — Mr. DUNCOMBE, in reply, said that Government had acted clearly against law, and if there was justice to be had in the Courts he would try the question with them. The House divided—For the motion, 78; against it, 161; majority, 83.—Mr. MACKINNON then drew the attention of the House to "interments within the precincts of large towns," as affecting public health, in a speech in which he reviewed the various facts now so familiar to the public from the report of the committee of the House on the subject, the Sanitary Report, and recent disclosures. He proposed a resolution condemnatory of the practice, with a due regard to vested rights, his object being to bring in a bill founded on it, and which he would cheerfully give up to the care of Government, if the House would aid him with its sanction.—Mr. HUME, in seconding the motion, enforced the importance of the subject. — Sir J. GRAHAM was quite alive to the importance of the matter, and it was this which made him feel the difficulty of legislating on it. The practices of foreign countries with respect to interments were not easily engrafted on our own; and viewing London in comparison with other great cities, its health was better cared for than almost any continental town. Nor could it be so easily proved that interment within the precincts of towns was absolutely detrimental. The Bishop of London had told him that when he was rector of Bishopsgate his family enjoyed excellent health, though his house adjoined the churchyard; and in the parishes of St. James's, St. Margaret's (the churchyard close to the Houses of Parliament), and other districts, interments did not affect the sanitary condition. As to the nuisances at Spafields, complained of as a violation of public decency, he had directed a prosecution of the parties, and he had no doubt that it would be proved that the law would be effective in putting them down if they existed. Taking into account the increase of cemeteries, along with the difficulty of interference, he objected to committing the House to any abstract resolution, and thought that Mr. Mackinnon, familiar as he was with the subject, should at once bring forward his bill.—Mr. BERNAL observed that the practice of interments within the precincts of large towns was condemned by the nuisances which disgraced the metropolis, and against which experience and science protested. Cemeteries were no doubt increasing, but the poor were not the class which was benefitted by them; they resorted to those cheap burial-grounds which produced much of the mischief.—Dr. BOWRING thought that if the clergy were assured that their pecuniary rights would not be violated, their resistance would disappear, and the difficulty of legislating would be overcome.—Lord MAHON, having been a member of the committee which reported on the subject, was satisfied that Sir J. Graham had not exaggerated the difficulty of legislating on it; but he thought that he had underrated its importance. Of what use would be measures for securing the drainage and ventilation of towns, when the very air we breathed passed over infected spaces, and the water we drank was corrupted at its source? London was the only great capital unprovided with efficient means of protecting the health of its inhabitants in this respect. He was prepared to vote for a general resolution condemnatory of the practice of interments in towns, though he objected to the minutely specific one before them.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, with the assent of Mr. Mackinnon, proposed an amendment on the resolution, which it was hoped would obviate objections. The amendment simply asserted that the practice of interments in large towns was injurious to the health of the population, and demanded the serious attention of Parliament. He believed that the clergy were the chief obstacles to any change in the system. They demanded fees of seven or twelve shillings for every body buried out of their parishes, and in the cases of Dissenters, especially in the country, frequently refused to let them be buried at all.—Sir R. H. INGLIS traced most of the existing evils to that neglect of the parochial system which characterised the eighteenth century. The incomes of a great portion of the clergy of the City of London arose mainly from the voluntary offerings of their flocks at Easter, and the fees on births, marriages, and deaths. As the amendment would not preclude due consideration of these interests, he would support it.—Sir G. GREY thought that the most expedient mode of procedure would be by Bill, to be brought in by Government. In the hope of effecting this, he would support the amendment.—Sir J. GRAHAM said that the interests of the clergy were not alone in the way—those of the Dissenters were also involved, and the poor would be seriously inconvenienced if deprived of all means of sepulture except those afforded by cemeteries at a distance from their homes. Though not ready himself to introduce any measure, he would aid any member who was prepared to do so, but he deprecated the passing of abstract resolutions.—The original resolution being withdrawn, the amendment substituted was carried to a division, when it was affirmed by 68 to 49. This result was marked by a triumphant cheer.—Mr. M. GIBSON moved an humble address to the Crown, expressive of the desirableness of means being taken to provide for the establishment of an adequate system of agricultural statistics, so as to enable the country to be kept accurately informed of the amount of land under cultivation, the produce of the harvest, and so forth.—Sir G. CLERK stated that the subject had been under the consideration of Government, who were anxious to effect the object desired. But there were difficulties in the way, as would be made manifest by a correspondence on the subject which he was ready to produce.—After a desultory debate, Sir R. PEEL stated that there was no objection to the production of this information, if it could be obtained. But to prevent erroneous inferences, the returns should be derived from the United Kingdom. If it were left in the hands of the executive, they would endeavour to mature a plan.—After a few words from Mr. RICARDO the motion was withdrawn.

Wednesday.—After the presentation of a great number of petitions against the grant to Maynooth,—Mr. FERRAND gave notice that he would present, on Friday, a petition from the Dublin Protestant Operative Association, signed by 2000 persons, against the grant to Maynooth, and praying that Sir R. Peel may be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanours.—The first order of the day was the second reading of Mr. COWPER's Field Gardens Bill, which was opposed by Mr. B. ESCOTT, who contended that the House ought not to allow this Bill to go to a second reading. Mr. Cowper, in bringing it in, had stated that its enactments were not compulsory; but he scarcely expected that he would repeat that observation on the present evening. The hon. member then pointed out several clauses which were compulsory; and contended that of all the Bills professedly introduced for benevolent purposes, this was in point of fact the most monstrous and indefensible. The allotment system had been productive of good, because it was voluntary; but it was a most mischievous proposal to mix it up, as it was mixed up by this Bill, with an odious mode of levying relief for the poor. He moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a second time this day six months.—Mr. BOUVERIE seconded the amendment.—Mr. COWPER said, that when the Bill reached the committee, then would be the proper time for the objections of the hon. member, which related to matters of detail; and he thought that he should be able in committee to show the hon. member that his objections were not tenable. The hon. member described the Bill as a compulsory measure, but he (Mr. Cowper, did not think it compulsory, first of all, because it depended on the parish whether or not the Bill should come into operation in that particular parish, and in the second place, because it took no man's land from him without his consent. The hon. member said that this Bill took certain money from the poor-rates without the consent of the rate-payers; but he (Mr. Cowper) maintained that, according to the provisions of the Bill, in ordinary cases, and in all cases with a few extreme exceptions, the money advanced from the poor-rates would be paid out of the rents of the gardens themselves. The hon. member did not seem to be aware that the clauses which related to land affected by Inclosure Acts were confined to that particular class of cases, with the exception of which no power was given to the Quarter Sessions of deciding on the rents to be paid. Seeing that the labouring population were anxious to obtain small pieces of land for cultivation, he trusted that the hon. member would not object to the second reading.—Mr. M. MILNES believed that the Bill would effect some good, though perhaps not all the good which Mr. Cowper anticipated from it. One good effect of it would be the best possible application of waste land adjacent to great towns; but he believed the Bill would not affect, in any great degree, the general mass of the agricultural population. He conceived that it would be advantageous for mechanics living in large towns to have the opportunity of cultivating during their spare moments a portion of land in their neighbourhood, which would afford them some relief from their otherwise monotonous occupation.—Sir J. GRAHAM hoped Mr. Escott would not persevere in his opposition to this measure. Should he do so, he should feel it his duty to vote against him. The principle of the Bill was in favour of making allotments for the use of the poor. He believed it was admitted on all hands that the appropriation of portions of land in aid of the comforts of the labouring population of this country was an object most praiseworthy and desirable. The sole intention of the Bill was to facilitate such an arrangement. Mr. Cowper might not altogether succeed in obtaining his object, but a more desirable one could not exist. He was bound to state publicly, what he had told Mr. Cowper in private, that he should feel it his duty to propose an alteration of some of the provisions of the Bill in committee. He had an insuperable objection to the provision making the poor-rate a security for the rent; nor did he approve of the clause constituting the local trust. But these were points that might be better discussed in another stage of the Bill. Mr. Cowper had paid much attention to this subject, and bestowed much trouble on it; he thought, therefore, it would appear somewhat harsh if the Bill should not be allowed to proceed to a second reading.—Lord J. MANNERS congratulated Mr. Cowper on the remarkable discrepancies in the arguments used by gentlemen by whom it was opposed. If the system was a good one, it was asked, why not leave those most interested in it to adopt it voluntarily? His answer to this question was a very short and simple one—it could not be left to voluntary efforts, because the class most interested in the subject were those least able to help themselves. It was cruel to tell them they could help themselves, and procure those means of support and assistance, when it was notorious to every one they were incapable of doing it. Mr. Escott also said that, though the condition of the labourers had been very depressed and their wages low, yet at present their condition had improved and their wages were higher. But, however wages might have risen elsewhere, the framework knitters in the Midland Counties were still as depressed and as miserable as they had been for years. There was a general opinion among people of all classes in favour of a measure of this description, and he hoped the measure might be carried into effect.—Mr. E. B. DENISON thought the principle of the Bill so objectionable, that, if the hon. member for Winchester pressed his amendment to a division he should vote in favour of it.—Mr. J. S. WORTLEY thought the objections to the measure were not well founded. Mr. Escott had made an objection to the Bill which, if well founded, would justify them in rejecting it. If he really thought it a compulsory measure, he certainly should not support it. These points might be discussed in committee, but they were not fair reasons for opposing the second reading, which he trusted the House would not object to. This was not the first time the hon. member for Hertford had brought the question before them, and a proposal of this kind deserved all the attention they could give it. There was no subject on which their legislation could do so much good as in connexion with the field garden allotment system; wherever it had been tried it had been invariably attended with success. It was said it would be much better to leave it to be worked out voluntarily and spontaneously; that was perfectly true, in places where the means and materials for doing so were to be found; but in many cases this could not be done; it was this means which the Bill provided. It was desirable to make a beginning, even should all the good proposed not be effected. The House divided, when the numbers were—For the amendment, 18; against it, 92; majority against the amendment, 74. The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Wednesday next.—The Enfeftments (Scotland) Bill passed through committee, and received some amendments. The Charitable Securities (Scotland) Bill, was committed. The Museum of Arts Bill was postponed for a week. The Public Museums Bill and the Glass Excise Duties Bill were read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—Lord ASHLEY gave notice for the 24th inst., to move for leave to bring in a Bill for the regulation and care of insane patients in England and Wales.—Sir C. NAPIER said, he had observed that two gentlemen who held office under Government abstained from voting on the question of the grant to Maynooth, therefore he wished to know whether those hon. members were absent from accident or design? and, if by design, whether they still continued to be members of the Government? and, if they remained so, whether this question was to be an open question?—Sir R. PEEL, in reply, said—"I cannot take upon myself to say whether those hon. gentlemen were absent by accident or design. I beg to say that there has been no change recently in the Government; therefore, it is clear that there have been no removals on this account. With respect to Maynooth, I consider that to be a Government question—I consider it to be one of the utmost importance, and I shall do every thing in my power to promote its success." The answer was received with loud cheering from the Opposition.—To questions from Mr. HUME, Mr. WARD replied that, having discovered that the amendment he had put on the notice paper, relative to the application of the funds of the Irish Church to the payment of the Maynooth grant, would be liable to be made a rallying point for those who wished to defeat the Government measure, he had come to the resolution to give up the amendment on the second reading of the Bill this evening, and to move it in a substantive shape on some future occasion.—Mr. CHRISTIE, in a speech in which he reviewed the whole system of our academical education, especially with reference to the Universities, brought forward his motion for an "humble address to Her Majesty, praying that she will be pleased to appoint a commission to inquire into, and report upon, all matters relating to the privileges, revenues, trusts, and to the state of education, learning, and religion, in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the colleges of these Universities."—Mr. EWART seconded the motion.—Sir R. INGLIS answered all the charges brought against the Universities by Mr. Christie, and opposed the motion. He maintained that the hon. member had established no case of abuse, and, even granting that he had, that he had not shown that the means possessed by the Universities of correcting that abuse had been tried, or had been exhausted.—Mr. WYSE dwelt at considerable length on the practical view of academical education, professing his respect for classical literature, but expressing a wish that it should not overtop the utilitarian considerations which ought to mark the prosecution of an enlarged system of education.—Mr. HOPE (Maidstone), argued in favour of the system of English University education, the regulations of which he considered to be too delicate to be touched by other than University people.—Mr. HUME spoke against the system, on the ground that the Universities were public institutions; and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER adduced the names of eminent men, as a proof of the fertility of the University system, and defended it in detail. There was no religious restriction on any individual at Oxford and Cambridge, provided he conformed to the established regulations and doctrines.—Lord PALMERSTON supported Mr. CHRISTIE's motion, and on a division there appeared for the motion, 82; against it, 143; majority, 61.—Mr. H. DRUMMOND obtained leave to bring in a Bill for amending the laws concerning Statute Labour Roads in Scotland. Some returns were ordered, and routine Bills forwarded a stage.

CITY.

Money Market. Friday.—Consols closed at 99¾ for the account; Reduced Three per Cents, 98; Three and Quarter New, 101⅛; Bank Stock, 213½; India Stock, 278; Exchequer Bills, 58*s.* to 61*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. LAMBERT, Portsmouth-street, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, licensed victualler—P. WRIGHT, Earl's Cone, Essex, builder—J. SHERROD, High-street, Camberwell, hay and corn merchant—T. HILFORD, Southampton, cabinet maker J. HOLLINGSWORTH, Paddington-street, Marylebone, butcher—C. M'KNOTT and J. GLASS, Belvidere-road, Lambeth, coal merchants—E. SMITH, South Molton-street and Oxford-street, cheesemonger—J. SMITH, Barnoldswich, Yorkshire, cotton manufacturer—E. E. ROBINSON, Wolverhampton, grocer—T. S. STUART, jun., Liverpool, drysalter.

FRIDAY—J. L. FLINT, Aldermanbury and Upper Clapton, warehouseman—W. PAYNTER, St. Paul's Church-yard and Upper Holloway, warehouseman—G. PAYNE, King-street, Covent Garden, tailor—T. ADLINGTON, Kingsland, corn merchant—T. FORTY, Richmond, Surrey, hotel keeper—A. H. SIMPSON and P. H. IRVING, Blackfriars-road, engineers—R. P. LITTEN, Newmarket-road street, veterinary surgeon—H. D. COGGAN, Friday-street, City, warehouseman—W. EVANS, Warwick-square, Newgate-street, and Church-street, Kennington, bookseller—J. PRITCHARD, Lisseshall, Shropshire, builder—J. WINSCOMBE, St. Augustine's-parade, and Saville-place, Clifton, Bristol, boot maker—J. BLACKMOOR, Rotherham, Yorkshire, builder.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Royal Society.—The Marquis of Northampton gave his fourth conversazione as President of the Royal Society on Saturday evening, at his mansion in Piccadilly. This being the last soirée of the season, the visitors were unusually numerous, and the President's saloons were crowded with objects of interest to the scientific world. The Duke de Broglie, with his son, the Prince de Broglie, were among the visitors, and remained until nearly midnight.

Diocesan Court of Inquiry.—Tuesday being the day fixed by the commissioners appointed by the Lord Bishop of London to institute an inquiry into certain charges made against the Hon. and Rev. F. S. Monckton, resident curate of St. Peter's, West Hackney, they met accordingly, to make known their opinions of the proceedings, and having embodied their opinions in a report, to transmit that report to the Bishop of London. Mr. Monckton was in court. The case having been so recently before the public, it will be unnecessary to recapitulate any part of the former proceedings. Dr. Lushington read the report, as follows:—"That in conformity with the directions of the Act of Parliament, entitled the Church Discipline Act, and with the powers vested in the commissioners by the lord bishop, they had met, and they hereby reported to the bishop that they had assembled on the 14th and 15th, and again on the 28th and 29th ult., and that 15 witnesses in all had been examined, in order to prove the charges; that they then heard 15 witnesses in favour of Mr. Monckton, and afterwards counsel in behalf of Mr. Sheldrick, and that they thereby reported, after due consideration of the evidence on both sides—which they begged to transmit to his lordship—that the evidence adduced in support of the charges of fornication, and of taking indecent liberties with divers women, was not sufficiently strong to justify further proceedings; and that any further proceedings would not be warranted by justice, and that for that reason they reported that there was no further occasion for proceeding on those charges. 2. That there were not sufficient grounds for further proceedings on the charge of drunkenness. 3. That the conduct of Mr. Monckton with regard to the females resident in his family, and especially with regard to Sarah Huggins, was degrading to him as a clergyman of the Church of England, and had produced great scandal in the Church; and that conduct and misdemeanour having brought great scandal on the church, was a sufficient ground for further proceedings against Mr. Monckton." Mr. Warren, counsel for Mr. Monckton, then rose, and said it was his grateful duty to bear testimony to the great degree of impartiality, urbanity, and kindness with which the commissioners had conducted this most painful inquiry.

The Grant to Maynooth.—A meeting of ministers of the "Congregational Board of London," and the school teachers connected with that body, was held on Monday evening at Finsbury Chapel, for the purpose of adopting measures to oppose the intended Government grant to Maynooth. The chapel was exceedingly crowded, every pew being full. Sir Culling E. Smith, Bart., was in the chair, supported by Mr. Hindley, M.P., and between 40 and 50 Protestant ministers. Several resolutions were passed condemnatory of the proposed grant. Other meetings for the same object, and at which similar resolutions were passed, have been held at the Eastern Institution, Commercial-road; in Southwark, Shadwell, and other metropolitan districts. A deputation from the dissenting body, headed by Sir C. Smith, and Mr. Hindley, M.P., waited upon Sir R. Peel on Wednesday, to ask for further time, to ascertain the feelings of the country. Sir R. Peel listened to all the arguments of the deputation with profound attention, but declared his determination, notwithstanding, to move the second reading of the Bill on Friday. Lord J. Russell also received the deputation, but did not concur in their view of the measure. The deputation then waited on the Lord Mayor, who, stated his willingness, upon the presentation of a requisition, immediately to call and preside over a public meeting of the citizens of London for the purpose of giving the most determined opposition to the Government measure. A requisition was immediately drawn up, and received a number of signatures of some of the most influential persons in the City.

Roman Catholic Institute.—On Tuesday a public meeting took place in Freemasons' Tavern, for the purpose of considering what steps it would be necessary to take at the present crisis for the re-organisation of the Catholic Institute. The Earl of Shrewsbury presided, and was supported by Lord Stourton, the Hon. C. Langdale, M.P., the Hon. E. Howard, the Hon. E. Petre, the Hon. C. T. Clifford, Bishops Wiseman, Briggs, Browne, Waring, Sharples, and most of the Roman Catholic prelates and clergy. The secretary read a lengthy report, which exhibited the various circumstances which had led to the decline of the Institute, and stated that in consequence of a communication with the various Catholic bishops and vicars apostolic, it had been resolved to reorganise the Institute in such a way as would more effectually defend the Catholic religion from its assailants, by carrying out a system of education amongst the poor of that religion. This course it was considered was the only means of resisting the seductive efforts of the Established Church, and other enemies of the Roman Catholic religion. The report having been adopted, a series of resolutions, the principal object of which was to aid the Institute in their endeavours to carry out a general system of education amongst the poor Catholic children throughout the country, were adopted.

Medical Reform.—A deputation from the Medical Protection Society, consisting of Mr. Wakley, M.P., Dr. Lynch, and others of the medical profession, accompanied by Mr. Pattison, M.P., waited upon Sir J. Graham, on Saturday, at the Home-office. The subject of the conference was in reference to the importance of the College of Surgeons of England being rendered the College of Surgery and Medicine, with the representative principle in the fullest extent as the form of its government; thus limiting the number of medical institutions to two, namely, the College of Physicians and College of Surgeons. Under the latter title all general practitioners are to be classed. It was strongly urged upon Sir J. Graham that unless such a liberal modification of the charter of the College were conceded, the general practitioners would be compelled to seek for a charter to a new organised body, but that such a demand would be, in fact, a dernier ressort; at the same time, it was the unanimous decision of the profession. Various suggestions were made as to the mode in which the alteration of the charter could be effected, so as to meet the views of all. The new Medical Bill also became the subject of conference, its objectionable clauses pointed out, and the requirements of the profession explained. Sir J. Graham gave the most patient attention to all that was urged, agreeing fully in the importance of honourable union with the College of Surgeons, and explained the object for which he advised the grant of the charter complained of, as being "in order to give the power of election to a body of the members, under the same title (fellows) as other collegiate bodies, thus rendering the college a more open body, being, hitherto, a close one in the fullest sense of the term." Sir J. Graham further remarked, that it was for the deputation, as representing the members of the profession, to ascertain from the council of the College their future intentions. The interview is described as having been of the most satisfactory character, as showing the earnest desire, on the part of the right hon. baronet, to consider the wishes and interests of the general practitioners.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—The porticoes of the western entrance of this cathedral are about to undergo a thorough cleansing and scraping, with a view to remove the incrustation on the stone-work from smoke and dirt. The scaffolding under the lower portico was erected on Tuesday, and the workmen commenced operations; it has not, however, been determined whether the whole building will be scraped and cleansed, the lower part being tried first by way of experiment; if successful, the western front, which forms the principal entrance to the cathedral, will next undergo the operation.

The Royal Horse Guards.—A military Board has lately been assembled, by order of the Duke of Wellington, in consequence of its having been officially reported to his Grace that the funds of this regiment were in a state of insolvency to a considerable amount. The instructions given to this Board were:—First, to ascertain the cause of insolvency. Secondly, to compare the expenditure and financial arrangements of the Blues with those of the two regiments of Life Guards, since 1821, when the former regiment was first called upon to take its tour of duty in London for two years out of every three with one of the latter regiments. Thirdly, to inquire whether the allowances granted to the Blues are inferior to those received by the two regiments of Life Guards; and if so, whether any saving could be effected in the funds of these latter regiments, in order to increase those of the Blues. It is reported in military circles that the result of these inquiries of the board is a report, showing that, although the regiment of Blues has been required to do the duty of household cavalry, for the last twenty-three years, and, consequently, that the expenditure in its equipment, &c., has been (with the exception of the advantage of the clothing being blue instead of scarlet, and therefore more durable) equal to that of the two regiments of Life Guards. The allowances received by the Blues for clothing, accoutring, recruiting, and remounting, have been considerably less than those granted for the same purposes to the Life Guards. It appears also upon investigation of the accounts of the regiments of Life Guards, that the allowances granted for their maintenance and equipment would not be equivalent to meet the expenditure, except with rigid economy and good management; and, therefore, that no reduction in those allowances could take place without diminishing the effective state in every point of view of these two regiments.

The Portland Vase.—Our readers will be interested to know that the exertions of Mr. Doubleday in the restoration of this valuable antique, have been so successful that it will soon be submitted to public inspection, very little blemished by the effects of an injury which at first seemed irreparable. Every one who has seen it has expressed his approbation of the neatness with which the work has been completed, and of the ingenuity of the artists employed. Edward Lloyd, the author of the mischief, left London immediately on his discharge, and returned to Dublin, and it is understood to be the intention of the Duke of Portland to institute proceedings against him for the damage done to his property.

New Convent at Chelsea.—On Tuesday week the new Catholic schools and Convent of the Order of St. Joseph, recently erected in Cadogan-street, were opened with great ceremony. The children went in procession from the Catholic Chapel in Cadogan-terrace, accompanied by several clergymen, and on their arrival they were formally introduced to their new preceptors, consisting of five nuns from the Convent of Mercy at Bermondsey, and several monks from some of the Catholic colleges in the north of England of the Trappist order. The Hon. Mr. Petre addressed the meeting at great length, and commented on the munificent charity of the founder, Mr. Knight, the well-known nurseryman, of King's-road, who having purchased the property at a cost of nearly 2000*l.*, had built the place entirely at his own expense. The new building consists of separate schools for the boys and girls, a convict for the religious persons, with a small chapel attached for the use of the establishment.

The League Bazaar.—The ladies of the Metropolis and its environs who are desirous of aiding the cause of free trade by contributing to the bazaar about to be established in Covent-garden Theatre, met on Friday in the Hanover-square Rooms. A great multitude had assembled as soon as the doors were opened, and by the time the chair was taken by Mr. W. Lovett, there could not have been less than 2000 ladies present; of gentlemen there were very few. The meeting was addressed by Mr. W. J. Fox, and Mr. C. Thompson. The League held a meeting on Wednesday, in Covent Garden Theatre, at which Col. Thompson, Mr. Cobden, and Mr. Horsman, of Bromstead, Staffordshire, were the principal speakers.

The Great Britain Steamer.—The Queen is expected to visit the Great Britain steamer on Tuesday, the 16th inst., and the Dwarf, iron steam-vessel, fitted with a screw propeller, at present in the basin at Woolwich Dockyard, is named for the honour of conveying Her Majesty to the place where the Great Britain is moored off Blackwall. It is not yet known where Her Majesty will embark, but it is expected to be at Woolwich or Greenwich.

New Pier at Blackfriars-bridge.—In consequence of the many fatal steamboat accidents at Blackfriars-bridge wooden pier, the corporation have come to the determination to erect a new pier of safe construction on the London side.

The Sale of the Fleet Prison.—On Monday the sale of the materials of the Fleet Prison commenced on the premises. The present stands on an area of ground, and contains 4,000,000 bricks. The auctioneer in the advertisement, describes the place as a "mass of masonry." At present it is not decided what improvements will take place on the Farringdon-street front, but a new street will be formed, or accommodation afforded for the administration of public justice. It seems that the Corporation of London have purchased the property for 40,000*l.*

Printers' Pension Society.—The 11th anniversary of the society for the relief of aged printers, widows and their widows, was celebrated on Tuesday by a public dinner at the London Tavern, Joseph D'Eyncourt, Esq., M.P., in the chair, supported by about 150 gentlemen. The cause of the charity was eloquently advocated by the chairman, and the subscriptions during the evening amounted to nearly 1000*l.*

Greenwich.—At the recent assizes at Maidstone, an action was brought by Sir H. Pechell, and the other directors of the steam ferry at Greenwich, to recover compensation from the proprietors of the Waterman's Company, for erecting an obstruction in the waterway to certain premises belonging to the plaintiffs, and which abut upon the river at Greenwich. It will be remembered that at issue was the legality of the Company erecting a Pier or Jetty at that place. The jury after a long trial returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, damages 1*l.* The effect of this verdict, if it is not successfully appealed against, will be to do away with the floating pier altogether.

The Murder in St. Giles's.—On Tuesday the adjourned inquest was held at the Crown and Anchor, Tottenham-court-road, on the body of Mary Ann Brothers, the unfortunate woman who was murdered in Crown-court, St. Giles's, on the night of the previous Monday. The jury were accompanied by Superintendant Pearce, of the D. division, to the scene of the murder, Crown-court, Church-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, where he had identified Jones for many days. On Saturday he was taken before the magistrate at Bow-street, identified both by women who were acquainted with his proceedings in regard to the murdered woman, and by the cutler at whose shop he bought the knife. After a long examination, he was committed to Newgate for trial.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending March 5:—West Districts, 1,124; Northern, 1,011; Central, 169; Eastern, 1,031; Southern, 921; Total, males, 1,153, females, 1,097. Weekly average for the last five years, 913. Births in the week, 1,124, males, 579, females, 611.

Provincial.

Liverpool.—The local papers state that a monster gun has just been manufactured by Messrs. Fawcett and Preston, of this town, which is intended to replace the one that burst on board the American war-steamer, a short time ago, killing the secretary of state, and wounding several other official personages. It is made of malleable iron, is 12 feet long, and weighs 11 tons, 3 cwt., 2 qrs., 11 lbs. The Princeton has been ordered to the Mediterranean.—The Liverpool Standard of Tuesday gives a report, at the length of nearly 11 columns, of a meeting held on Monday, at the Liverpool Amphitheatre, in opposition to the proposed grant to Maynooth College. The Rev. Dr. Tattersall was in the chair, and long speeches were delivered by the Rev. H. M Neid, the Rev. J. H. Stewart, the Rev. R. Nolan, the Chairman, and other gentlemen, lay as well as clerical; and petitions to both Houses of Parliament against the grant were unanimously agreed to. It is calculated that not fewer than 5000 persons were present.

Northampton.—On Tuesday a very numerous meeting of the clergy of Northampton took place at the George Hotel, in order to consider the propriety of petitioning Parliament against the proposed increase of the grant in support of Maynooth College. The Venerable Owen Davys, D.D., Archdeacon of Northampton, presided, supported by upwards of 100 clergymen of the archdeaconry. Several gentlemen addressed the meeting, and were unanimous in the expression of their conviction that the increased grant to Maynooth proposed by Sir R. Peel would be deeply injurious to the Established Church, and productive of no benefit to the Roman Catholic priesthood. Petitions to the Legislature were adopted and numerously signed.

Norwich.—The local papers state that Lord Charles Townsend and the Hon. Colonel Howard, both considerable landed proprietors in this county, have followed the example of Sir Thomas Hare, in ordering the game to be killed down on their estates.

Manufacturing-Town.—Another of those fatal explosions of fire-damp, so frequent in this district, occurred last week in the West Moor pit, at Killingworth, about six miles from this town, in the adjoining county of Northumberland. At first the loss of life was thought to be very considerable, and various rumours were circulated, exaggerating the extent of the calamity. It appears, however, that 10 men and boys have been killed in the occasion, and that two others, who were in the same district, but nearer the shaft of the mine, were got out alive, and are in a fair way of recovery. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.

Pigeons.—It is stated that the command-in-chief at this port, on the expiration of the term of service of Admiral Sir D. Milne, will be conferred upon the Hon. Sir John Talbot, G.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet; and that the Queen, 110, just re-commissioned at Chatham, will be Sir John's flag-ship, and Lord Ingram, or Sir Baldwin Walker, flag-captain. It is also reported that the Surveyor will command the new ship Queen in the forthcoming trial cruise. Letters have been received from the Rattler, steam-sloop, which announces her arrival at Berwick. They state that in her trial-cruise with the Alecto she has been very successful; having beaten the Alecto nearly an hour in a distance of 60 miles, head to wind with a strong breeze, and a heavy head-sea. The orders given to these vessels were, to remain out in the North Sea until they have amply tested the capabilities of the Rattler, fitted with the screw-propeller, in comparison with those of the Alecto, fitted with paddle-wheels, especially in contending against a head-wind and sea. Subsequent trials have to have place with still greater advantages to the powers of the screw; but the most conclusive results as to its superiority were proved when the vessels being fastened to each other, with their heads in opposite directions, the Rattler towed the Alecto, in spite of all her attempts to run astern, at the rate of two miles and a half an hour.

Portsmouth.—The electric telegraph for the use of government on the South-Western Railway is now regularly at work. The wires extend from the terminus at Gosport, through the fortifications, and into the Royal Clarence-yard. There a semaphore is erected, which communicates with the one in the Commander-in-Chief's residence in the dockyard, so that messages can be conveyed to and from the Admiralty as often as may be required. The arrival of the Dublin and Resistance was made known at the Admiralty on Tuesday week by this telegraph—the station being so close that the ordinary telegraph was useless.—A Court-martial was held on board H.M.S. Pegasus, at Valparaiso, on the 9th Dec. inst. to try Lieut. W. H Bridge, of her Majesty's ship Cormorant, upon a novel and extraordinary charge. Lieut. Bridge's offence consisted in his refusal to shake hands with Mr. Crompton, the Vice-Consul at Islay, but it was construed into a breach of naval discipline under the 22nd article of war, which declares that "If any person in the fleet shall quarrel or fight with any other person in the fleet, or use reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures, he shall upon being convicted thereof suffer such punishment as the offence shall deserve, and a Court-martial shall impose." The charge was founded on a letter of complaint from the Vice-Consul, who alleged that upon going on board the Cormorant to pay his respects to the commanding officer, he met Lieut. Bridge on the quarter-deck, and on tendering him his hand he drew back and refused in a most haughty and contemptuous manner to take it, saying, "that he did not know what familiarity existed between them that he should receive, or he (Mr. Crompton) should offer his hand to him;" and upon pressing him for an explanation of such an improper insult, Lieut. Bridge said that "he would not be upon terms with a person who had sown, or was the cause of dissension, on board of a man-of-war." And upon demanding the name of the author of the calumny, he said, "He was the gentleman, and that on shore he would answer him;" a provocation which the Vice-Consul considered intended to oblige him to have a hostile meeting with him. The Court having overruled several objections taken by Lieut. Bridge, on the ground that the Vice-Consul was not "in or belonging to the fleet," or in any way amenable to martial law, witnesses were called on both sides, but the evidence of those called by Lieut. Bridge was materially damaged by the determination of the Court to restrict the examination entirely to the events that took place on the quarter-deck of the Cormorant, and by the fact that the character and conduct of the prosecutor was completely shielded from investigation. The Court pronounced the charge of a breach of the 22nd article of war to be partly proved, and adjudged Lieut. Bridge to be dismissed from Her Majesty's ship Cormorant.

Sheerness.—The Trafalgar, 120, Capt. Martin, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir J. C. White, Commander-in-Chief at this port, left the basin for moorings at the mouth of the harbour on Friday. A sad calamity attended this ship's leaving the basin, which cast a gloom over the town. The gallant admiral, while watching the progress of the ship being towed out of the basin by the steam-tug, fell overboard from the poop, and was drowned before any medical assistance could be procured. Dr. Dixon, of the Royal Dockyard, was in attendance, but Admiral White had been dead some time before he arrived. The melancholy event has created a deep sensation in the dockyard.

Sheffield.—The execution of John Vaughan, who was convicted of murdering his wife, Ann Vaughan, by cutting her throat, took place in this town on Saturday. He walked firmly to the scaffold, and confessed his guilt, but appeared very penitent. His body, after a coroner's inquest, was buried within the precincts of the prison.

Railways.

TRAFFICS AND REPORTS, &c. [illegible]

An adjourned Meeting of the Lincoln, [illegible] Leeds Company was held on Monday, [illegible] which it was resolved, with only one dissentient, [illegible] to carry through [illegible] from Lincoln to York, and to complete the line [illegible]. The chairman stated that there would require a new issue of capital. 18,000 shares had already been signed for, and 12,000 only required to be taken. The Dublin and Kingstown Company had [illegible] of 9 per cent. The [illegible] 18,000*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, which, with the addition of [illegible] accounts, made a gross total of [illegible]. The dividend and charges [illegible] 2400*l.* to be carried forward, [illegible] engineers' reports a sum of [illegible] of the company continue prosperous [illegible] prove to be due to the management [illegible] in regard to traffic. The [illegible] was called [illegible] of Lords, for making [illegible] atmospheric principle. The Bill [illegible] extension line [illegible] be sent to the committee [illegible] the Bray road [illegible] 30,000*l.*, the shareholders [illegible] 9*l.* per share [illegible] towards the [illegible]. The [illegible] of the directors [illegible] more favourable, and [illegible] mills, from 30*l.* to [illegible] per mile.—A return has been presented to Parliament showing the total annual [illegible] of railway property in each parish of each county of England and Wales assessed to the property tax [illegible] appears that in the county of Chester the total annual value of railway property is [illegible] Cumberland, 11[illegible]; Durham, 171[illegible]; Kent, 125[illegible]; Lancashire, [illegible] Monmouth, 12,[illegible]; Somerset, [illegible]; Hants, [illegible] 191,01[illegible]; Warwickshire, 61,[illegible]. In Wales the total annual [illegible] 2509*l.*; Flint, 3774; Merioneth, [illegible] 6774; Glamorgan, 17,[illegible]. The total value in London is set down [illegible] sex, 999,44[illegible]; in England [illegible] in Great Britain, 2,[illegible]. The returns shows—for Ayr, 11,[illegible]; Berwick, [illegible] 54074.; Lanark (with [illegible] 18,7914.; making a total for Scotland of [illegible] appears from the return that the total annual [illegible] railway property is nearly double that of [illegible] or canals.—The Morning Post says it is estimated that, out of the numerous railway Bills to be brought before Parliament, there will be 45 carried at most, and not fifth of the present applications. Taking [illegible] average length of 40 miles each, there will be 1800 miles of railway to be formed, commencing from the autumn of this year, and extending over 1846; for though these will not be all completed at that period, the deficiency may be more than made up by the lines which were passed during last session, and which are now being formed. A yard of railway requires 280 lbs. of rails, 98 lbs. of cast-iron chairs, and about 70 lbs. of iron girders, making 4 cwt. per yard, or 352 tons per mile. In addition to this, it is ascertained, that an equal amount of iron is required for each mile, in waggons, carriages, stations, engines, and locomotive establishments, &c.—making 700 tons of iron for each mile, or 1,260,000 tons for 1800 miles of railways about to be constructed in this country, or, as nearly as possible, the whole make of iron in Great Britain for one year. It is also stated that a sum exceeding 1,500,000*l.* has been paid as deposit money in the Bank of England by the various railway companies projected.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Royal visit has become the universal topic. It is generally supposed that her Majesty and Prince Albert will arrive about the middle of July. It is stated that plans of the apartments in Dublin Castle, and in the Vice-regal Lodge, have been taken by her Majesty's desire, and forwarded to Buckingham Palace. It is also stated that her Majesty is to make a short stay at Knowsley, the seat of Lord Derby, near Liverpool, on her way to Ireland, and that preparations for the reception of the royal party are now in progress there. Sir R. Peel, it is said, will certainly be in attendance upon her Majesty during her sojourn in this country; but there seems to be more difficulty respecting other members of the cabinet. It is usual for one of the Secretaries of State to attend on such occasions, and there is much speculation as to whether Sir James Graham, Lord Stanley, or Lord Aberdeen, will be selected. The result of the division on the Maynooth Grant was received in Dublin with lively interest. The Whig organs hail it as a wise and comprehensive measure, while the Conservative press, with few exceptions, condemn it with much severity. The opposition to the measure is not confined to Dublin, but is general in the north of Ireland and is daily gaining strength. The Presbytery of Belfast, one of the most influential in Ireland, met on Tuesday, and passed a series of resolutions, condemnatory of the endowment of Maynooth.—Lord Cloncurry who has hitherto kept aloof from all participation in Repeal politics, has joined the '82 Club recently organised by Mr. O'Connell.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Mr. O'Brien, M.P. for Limerick, in the chair.—Towards the close of the chairman's observations, Mr. R. G. Porter, the author of a pamphlet on Federalism, which was published last year, and attracted much attention at the time, entered the hall, and was received with prolonged cheering.—Mr. O'Connell said that he had much happiness in moving that Mr. Porter, who had filled the office of High Sheriff of the county of Fermanagh last year, be enrolled a member of the Association.—The motion having been carried by acclamation, the Chairman proceeded to comment on the measures of Sir R. Peel's Ministry, which of late, he said were in the path the Association had pointed out. He went into details on this head, which seemed to give great satisfaction to the audience.—Mr. R. G. Porter said that he would lay before them, briefly and briefly, the reasons which induced him to join the Association. He had joined it with no feeling of animosity to the English people, but, on the contrary, with the desire to promote harmony and intercourse between the inhabitants of the two countries. At the same time, that wish was accompanied by a determination to labour for the attainment of a fair union, and the elevation of Ireland to an equality with England. The present time, he thought, was extremely favourable to the propositions of the introduction of some feasible and moderate plan for raising this country to the position she was entitled to and thus put a stop to the present agitation. It appeared to him that there were two courses open for adoption—either the simple and unconditional repeal of the Act of Union, and a Parliament in College-green, or a repeal of the Act, and the substitution of an equitable measure of union with Great Britain. He was in favour of the latter proposition, and, he had no doubt that, with proper management, the present Act of Union would be repealed, and a fair, useful, just, and practicable Act passed which would have the effect of exalting Ireland to a level with England, and relieving her from the injustice which she was then suffering. The chief features of the new Act of Union which he advocated were, firstly, the recognition of the independence of Ireland as a voluntary partner in the British empire: secondly, the settlement of the national debts of the two countries on equitable principles; and next, an increase of Representatives in the British House of Commons, to the extent to which this country was entitled according to population and amount of territory. In his opinion the empire could be well managed only by one supreme political power: one body could not have two heads: one man could not well serve two masters. When he took into account the immense colonial possessions of England all over the world, the great naval and military force to be kept up, and the part she enacted in the civilization and government of the world, it appeared to him to be little less than a sin against Providence to attempt to separate Ireland from such an empire, from so great a commercial companion: under a fair Act of Union, he thought that Ireland would reap from a partnership with England greater advantages than she could hope to realise from a separate Parliament. It was his decided opinion that all national degrees of self-government were strictly compatible with a Government, through such a fair quota of Irish members in the Imperial Parliament sitting in London. Adverting to the fact that the Protestants had not more freely joined the Association, he said that some looked upon it as a mere "O'Connellite instrument"—others thought that if Repeal were granted, separation would follow in two years; and in the latter opinion he entirely concurred. Another reason, he said, was that the money accounts of the Association were not explicit or sufficiently published.—Mr. O'Connell said that as to the accounts of the Association, they had been always open to inspection by every member, and that in a short time they would be completely closed with every necessary voucher. For himself, he would not claim credit for any item for which he had not a voucher.—Mr. M'Nevin congratulated the Association on Mr. Grey Porter's accession to the ranks of this—the unelected Parliament of Ireland. He next declared his gratitude to Sir R. Peel for what he had lately done: but expressed his conviction that he only acted in obedience to the public voice of Ireland.—Mr. Smith O'Brien congratulated the Association at having Mr. Grey Porter amongst them, and manfully stating his opinions, although he must be aware the Association could not concur with him. For his part, with all deference to Mr. Porter, he would be satisfied with nothing but the legislative independence of Ireland.—Mr. O'Connell concurred with Mr. O'Brien in thinking that the Union should be got rid of in the first place, when that was accomplished, he was ready to talk with Mr. Porter, and those who thought like him, respecting what they would take instead of it. He thought that now he might expect that the Union would be repealed, and that Sir R. Peel would be the man to bring in the Bill which would effect that object. When they called to mind the manner in which Sir R. Peel had acted respecting Catholic Emancipation, their conviction of the approach of Repeal would be strengthened. Hurrah! then for Peel and Repeal! On the last day of meeting he did not hazard any opinion with respect to the proposed Maynooth grant, and he had intended to be cautious this day, but having just read the Bill, he had no hesitation in pronouncing it to be most excellent, and the speech by which it was accompanied was as fair and manly as the plan itself was admirable. It was done in a noble and generous manner, and he was grateful for it. He repeated that it was excellent in all its details, and quite satisfactory and unobjectionable. The increased grant was to be given without restriction of any kind; but would that make them give up their agitation for repeal? He firmly believed that for that very grant he ought to say, "Thank you agitation; and Conciliation Hall I am obliged to you; and Repeal Association, Maynooth ought to pray for you." Sir R. Peel was well aware of the favourable impression which the bill would produce on the minds of the people of this country, and accordingly the evening of the bringing it in he set the Americans at defiance. If he persevered in his present line of conduct towards this country Ireland would set them at defiance too. If justice were done to Ireland, America would not dare to attack England. He wanted Sir R. Peel to buy the Irish people from him. He had done some good by the Maynooth grant, let him give them an adequate representation and an extension of the franchise in the House of Commons, and see how many more months he should stop by that. Mr. O'Connell proceeded to urge the necessity of labouring for the Repeal as the only way to obtain concessions to this country, and concluded with an earnest entreaty to the people to desist from outrages, the perpetration of which could not fail to retard their approach to the goal of nationality. Messrs. Grattan, M.P., Kelly, M.P., and J. O'Connell, M.P., subsequently addressed the Meeting. The rent for the week was 343*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*

Hillsborough.—A meeting was held last week in this town, at which the innovations in the Church Service were again brought under discussion. Archdeacon Mant, after a long explanatory statement, agreed to abandon the use of the surplice at once; and on the other points at issue to await the decision of the bishop of the diocese. Major Rowan moved, and the Marquis of Downshire seconded a vote of thanks to the Archdeacon for his conduct, and the Marquis read a letter, stating that the clergy of Downpatrick had also abandoned the innovations which had given such dissatisfaction to the parishioners. The Belfast papers state that, in consequence of communications between the Lord Primate and the Bishops of Down and Connor and Dromore, the latter is about to issue a pastoral to the clergy, of a conciliatory and pacific character, and that it will contain a recommendation or instruction to concede to the laity on all the points deemed offensive by them.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—On Saturday week, the Principal and Professors of the University of Edinburgh elected Mr. Donaldson to be Professor of the Theory of Music. There were in all 15 candidates for the vacant chair, two of whom, however, Sir Henry Bishop and Mr. Muller, withdrew their names before the election. None of the other candidates were nominated.

Law.

Midland Circuit—Leicester.—John Raisin, a respectable-looking young man, aged 24, was charged with having cut and stabbed Ellen Gillam, with intent to murder. There was also a count for wounding with intent to do some grievous bodily harm and damage. The prisoner and the prosecutrix had been acquainted for upwards of three years, and were under an engagement of marriage. The prisoner stabbed her several times with a knife, because she insisted on going home when he wished her to stay, on the night of the 1st of January. One stab in the back was of such a nature that for a length of time her life was despaired of, and even at this time she is not completely out of danger. The prosecutrix was considerably affected while giving her evidence, stating it as her belief that Raisin was very fond of her. The jury found the prisoner Guilty of cutting and wounding, but acquitted him of the intent to murder. Mr. Justice Maule, in passing sentence, dwelt with severity upon the heinousness of the offence. It was not in his power to transport him for life, and he could not sentence him to a less term of transportation than 15 years for such an offence, which it would be well if more frequently inflicted. Sentence of 15 years' transportation was then recorded. Some sensation was produced in court by a respectably-attired young woman, who turned out to be the prisoner's sister, falling down on her knees by the side of the judge, entreating for mercy.—Susannah Jarvis, an interesting-looking girl, of the age of 13, was charged with the murder of Emma Oglesby, at Coventry, on the 23d of last April. This case was tried at the last summer assizes, and lasted a whole day, but the jury, after being locked up through the night, not being able to agree, were discharged. At the winter assizes the trial was postponed, on the prisoner's application, on account of her not being able to obtain the assistance of Mr. Humfrey, who defended her on the previous occasion, but who does not attend the winter assizes. The trial now came on, and lasted the greater portion of the day, but the main facts are already known to our readers. The mother of the child was up-stairs, and heard a curious moaning noise, and shortly after a sharp cry. She ran down and met the prisoner coming out of the kitchen, who said, "Oh, ma'am, a man has just come in and murdered baby, and has gone away down the yard." The mother rushed in, and saw the child murdered in the cradle, the instrument used being a carving-knife that lay on the dresser, and was within the reach of any person standing at the head of the cradle. The death was caused by a thrust in the neck above the collar-bone, extending into the chest. Several witnesses for the defence proved that a man had been seen much about the time in question on the premises, and to go away, and it was that circumstance that had induced the doubt in the minds of the former jury. These were the principal features of the case. The judge summed up with great minuteness, and the jury, after deliberating a short time, found the prisoner Not guilty.—Warwick—Joseph Sire, otherwise Castro Yterralde, a Spaniard, was charged with having at Birmingham, on the 21st March, made and coined certain five franc pieces, not imitating the coin of this realm, but resembling the silver coin of the kingdom of France, or made to resemble the silver coin of the kingdom of France. The prisoner was indicted under the 37th Geo. III., c. 126, sec. 2, which recites the practice of counterfeiting foreign gold and silver coin had lately increased, and then provides "that if any person or persons shall, from and after the passing of this act, make, coin, or counterfeit any kind of coin not the proper coin of this realm, nor permitted to be current within the same, but resembling, or made with intent to resemble or look like any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, [illegible] or persons so offending shall be deemed guilty of felony." About six months ago the prisoner called at John Brown's, a [illegible], machinist, and asked him to make [illegible] foreign coin. It was to cost 35*l.* He then asked Brown if he could make dies. He was told that he could not, but referred him to Messrs. Allen and Moore. Mr. Moore was sent for, and he received directions to make dies of five-franc pieces, of the reigns of Louis XVIII., Charles X., and Louis-Philippe. Mr. Allen asked the prisoner if it was legal, and whether he was authorised, to which he replied, "it was legal, and he was authorised." Mr. Allen, having some doubts upon that subject, communicated with his solicitor, who referred him to Mr. Gem, the agent for the Mint at Birmingham, who advised him to let the matter go on to completion. The dies were made, and the press subsequently got up, and the prisoner was captured in the act of coining. The defence relied upon the entire absence of any felonious intent, as shown by the fact of the prisoner never concealing the coin he had in view. The judge having summed up and explained the law as it bore upon the case, the jury, after an absence of short duration, returned a verdict of Not Guilty. The prisoner made an order for the press and coining tools to be delivered over to the officers of the Mint, in the event of an action manner as a justice of the peace might direct.—James Crowley, aged 31, a person of good and respectable appearance, was charged with the wilful murder of William Tilsley. This case has been often noticed in this Paper. The prisoner is the son of a person lately deceased, who occupied a farm at S[illegible], in this county. Unfortunately, there had been some difference between the father and his son, and, in consequence of threats uttered by the latter against him, a labourer on the farm, named Tilsley, was sworn as constable, to guard, watch over, and protect him. On Christmas-day, 1842, prisoner, who had his working dress on, proceeded to his father's house and demanded admittance; but he was forbade to enter, both by deceased and the father. The prisoner said, "If I had had my other dress on I would have had you both asleep, and I will pay you [illegible] before I go to bed." He then went home, proceeded to dress himself in his best clothes, had his horse saddled, and came out with a double-barrelled gun in his hand. He went straight towards his father's house, who had retired up stairs on the earnest entreaty of his family. The prisoner pushed the gun through the window of the common sitting room and the noise of the falling glass brought Tilsley and two others from behind into the front of the house. Crowley, all he said was, "Oh, you are coming," and with that he lifted his gun to his shoulder, fired it off, and shot Tilsley through the brain, who fell dead. The [illegible] to the stable, whither prisoner went, saying, "I [illegible], and I will shoot you if you do not take care." Prisoner then mounted his horse and rode away. The fact of his not having been immediately pursued and [illegible] from Crowley's brother being the constable of the parish at that time. The prisoner went to America, but returned in 1844, and went to Chester, where he resided under a feigned name, but the fact becoming known, he was identified, arrested, taken before the Chester magistrates, and by them sent to Warwick. At the time of the arrest he had two pistols and a considerable sum of money upon his person. On the part of the prisoner, it was not disputed that his was the hand that destroyed life, and the brother was called, who deposed to [illegible] tion of intellect in the family, but none was fixed upon the prisoner, save by one of the many [illegible] him a character for humanity, who stated he had at times a wildness or strange way about him. Mr. Justice Maule having summed up, the jury, after being absent an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty. The Judge then sentenced the prisoner to suffer the last sentence of the law.

North Wales Circuit—Chester.—George Williams, 22, and Charles Williams, 22, were [illegible] of the [illegible] highway robbery, with violence. The case has already been noticed in this Paper. On the night of the 1st Feb., the prosecutor, named James Thomas, was on his way home at a late hour [illegible] Pirkhead and Rock Ferry in the company of a companion, when the prisoner George Williams met them, and on passing jostled against them. They gave way for him, and he went on a short distance, and then turned back and again came up to them. They told him [illegible] quietly, on which he gave a whistle and a shout, when four or five men jumped over the hedge and came to the attack upon prosecutor and his friend. [illegible] by some of the party, but effected his escape, leaving a cry of murder. Constable being at a little distance, [illegible] in the act of beating the prosecutor, who was then insensible from the injuries he had received. On searching Charles Williams the cap of the prosecutor was found in one of his pockets. The jury found both Guilty. Sentence deferred.—Sentence on Mr. Winterbottom.—The Attorney-General prayed the judgment of the court on John Kenyon Winterbottom, who, it will be recollected, was tried at the winter assizes, in December last, before Mr. Baron Gurney, on a charge of forgery. The trial excited an unusual degree of interest, from the fact of the prisoner having filled the office of chief magistrate of the borough of Stockport, and also the responsible [illegible] town clerk, besides being the legal adviser of many influential parties in the county. The prisoner was placed [illegible] and appeared very much emaciated, and was [illegible]. His lordship then proceeded to pass sentence, and after stating, in detail, the particulars of his offence, as they have already been given in this Paper, concluded by saying:—"It appears that you were confidentially consulted by Mr. Isherwood's family, and it must be apparent to any one who considers the case, that there is scarcely any class of men in the country who have more power for good or for evil than attorneys. Scarcely any class of men are trusted [illegible] such an extent, and incur such a responsibility as they do. [illegible] is to be purchased or sold, an attorney [illegible] the business—if a marriage settlement is to be executed, an attorney is called in—or if a will is to be made, their professional assistance is generally obtained, and they [illegible] entrusted by the family to arrange [illegible] Such was your employment, and it is very painful [illegible] man, who has hitherto maintained so respectable a character, should so grossly have betrayed the trust reposed in him. I cannot but regard your case as one of the most aggravated in its complexion I ever heard of, and therefore the punishment must be in accordance with your offence. The sentence of the court is, that you be transported beyond the seas for the term of your natural life." The prisoner was then removed from the bar, supported by two of the [illegible] He appeared to be deeply affected, as he did many of the court.

Western Circuit—Taunton.—The Stogumber Murders.—Sarah Freeman was indicted for the murder of her brother, Charles Diamond, jun., at Sharpwick, in her parish. The facts of this case having been already [illegible], it is sufficient to state that the death of deceased was clearly proved to have been caused by arsenic; and although the different evidence for the defence urged upon the jury that there was [illegible] evidence of motive to induce them to believe that a prisoner would murder her own brother, the jury found her Guilty; and Mr. Justice Coleridge passed sentence of death, holding out no hope of mercy.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Hampstead Murder.—The trial of James Hocker, for the murder of Mr. Delarue, took place yesterday, before Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Coltman. The court was densely crowded in every part. The prisoner pleaded Not Guilty in a firm and emphatic manner. Mr. Bodkin opened the case for the prosecution, and all the facts which have been already published in the accounts of the inquest at the time, were fully given in detail by the numerous witnesses at the close of the case for the prosecution. Mr. Clarkson then said that Mr. Ballantine and himself had attended for the defence, at the request of the Sheriffs of London, but as the prisoner himself had expressed a wish to address a few words to the gentlemen of the jury, he trusted their Lorships would allow him to do so. Mr. Justice Coleridge had no objection, and informed the prisoner that if he wished five minutes leisure before making his defence, he was at liberty to retire for that time. The prisoner expressed his gratitude for this indulgence. After a few minutes the prisoner re-entered the box and addressed the jury. He said he had carefully perused the depositions, and found nothing in them with which to find the least objection. There were but two grand features in the whole of the evidence, first, as to how his clothes came to be saturated with blood; and secondly, how he came in possession of the deceased's property. The first he could satisfactorily account for; but nothing on this side of the grave should ever tempt him to divulge the cause. If he were to fall he should fall a martyr—if he lived he was dishonoured, and under these circumstances the former were the preferable alternative. He was too much of an Englishman to fear death. The prisoner then adverted to the intimacy which had for so long a period existed between himself and the deceased—to the grants of money which had been received from the latter at different periods, and to the property—at times of considerable amount—which had been entrusted to his possession. The watch and ring had been given to him to get repaired and reset. Upon the morning of the murder the deceased had met him, and with the kindness which he had formerly exhibited towards him he gave him the 12*l.* which had been seen afterwards in his possession. He had been so often assisted by the deceased that he was ashamed to acknowledge the true source whence he had received the obligation, and therefore it was that he had stated to his relatives that Mrs. Edwards was the person who had given him the money. In the morning he had received the gift, and that was the reason why he had stated that he should have it in the course of that evening. But the very depositions proved his innocence; for if he had committed this murder, was it likely that he should have gone to the very spot where the crime was committed with his clothes all bloody? The prisoner then repeated in detail the conversation and circumstances which had occurred while with the policeman Baldock, at the Haverstock field. He afterwards referred to a young lady residing at Hampstead, to whom he was ardently attached—beautiful and virtuous, the pride of a widowed mother, the hope of her family, the admiration of her friends. To this lady he had imprudently introduced his deceased friend, James Delarue, who repaid with ingratitude and with villainy the trusting confidence of his friend. The young lady was seduced; and let the gentlemen of the jury picture to themselves the agony of the mother, the indignation of a beloved brother, and the ruined hopes of the young girl herself. Urged by the family, he (the prisoner) had written the note which was discovered on the person of the deceased, appointing an assignation at the place which had been the scene of the seduction, and the deceased had, it appeared, attended at the hour appointed. The brother of this lady and he (prisoner) took the road to Haverstock-fields, but ere they came to the place they separated, the brother going on directly to the place, and he returning to the Swiss Cottage. There he waited for some short time drinking a glass of rum and water and reading the newspaper to a gentleman in the room. When he left he proceeded in the direction of the fields, and heard a cry of "Murder!" He went to the place; and could they think that if he had committed the murder he should have gone there? Was it likely he should have remained beside the body, or stopped to feel the deceased's pulse? He stopped 40 minutes with him. He told Baldock that he always carried a stiletto with him, because he often passed through the fields. He accompanied the policeman with the body. He had made an appointment at Portland-place, and had stayed too late; therefore left them. He would not mention the person's name who had accompanied him, for he had already sufficiently injured the family, by introducing into its bosom the seducer of the sister. It had never been proved that the stick produced at the examination had been in his possession; and he would conclude by assuring them that he was innocent of the crime imputed to him. The prisoner, who had read the address in a firm voice, bowed and re-seated himself, no witnesses being called for the defence. Mr. Chambers then requested Baldock to be produced. He said, in answer to the Court, that he did not remember the prisoner to have shown a stiletto to him. He did not ask me whether it was lawful to carry a stiletto. He told him he frequently passed that way with property about him, but said nothing about a stiletto. Mr. Justice Coleridge summed up, going over the evidence of the different witnesses with the most minute perspicuity, and dwelling upon those parts of the case which seemed the most involved in mystery and contradiction. After a most elaborate analysis of the whole evidence, the Learned Judge remarked strongly upon the fact of the prisoner remaining a considerable time with the body of the deceased, and having had plenty of time to observe the face of a man who was his friend, and he yet appeared quite cool and collected. Prisoner might have been at the spot where the murder was committed without anything to excite suspicion. It was not the fact of his being there, but the strangeness of his conduct under such circumstances, which had led to his apprehension. The circumstances relative to the stiletto was a remarkable one, but the statement made by the prisoner on that matter was pointedly and decidedly denied by the policeman. Respecting the buttons which had been found—one in the field, and the other in the lodgings of the prisoner—he did not know that that amounted to anything like proof against the prisoner, because they might have fallen off by accident, having previously been loose. But that was a point for the consideration of the jury. There was a total failure on the part of the prosecutor to connect the prisoner with any implement by which death could have been produced; for the stick was at least 100 yards from any place to which the prisoner was traced. The learned judge called the attention of the jury to the fact that the prisoner had gone into so public a place as the Swiss Cottage. This circumstance ought to be duly weighed. The learned judge then referred to the various false statements which it had been proved the prisoner had made. A dark intimation had been thrown out that the letter found in deceased's pocket proved that a very improper relation subsisted between the prisoner and the deceased, and if such an intimation was correct—which God forbid he should assert—yet, if such had been the fact, it would sufficiently account for the prisoner's great desire that his family should be ignorant of the great pecuniary assistance which he was in the habit of receiving from Delarue. In regard to the evidence given by the father and the brother, he must say that they had given their evidence with an evident intention to tell the truth, and screen nothing that would tell against the prisoner. His lordship concluded by leaving the case in the hands of the jury, who retired, and shortly afterwards returned a verdict of Guilty. The learned judge then pronounced, in a most impressive manner, sentence of death on the prisoner.

DEATHS.—On the 5th inst., at Eversham, near Stillorgan, aged 32, LOUISA, the wife of the Rev. J. D. Hurst, Rector of St. Catherine's, Dublin—6th inst., at Ealing, aged 87, ANN, widow of E. Roberts, late Clerk of the Pells, in Her Majesty's Receipt of Exchequer—25th ult., at Emsworth, Mr. L. SHILLING, nurseryman, in his 62d year.

WILLIAM CROSSKILL, BEVERLEY IRON WORKS, NEAR HULL, YORKSHIRE.

By Inclosing four postage stamps, W. C. will send a List, just published, of the names of upwards of 300 Purchasers of "Patent Clod Crushers" in 1844, with a book of Testimonials, proving that by rolling growing crops of Wheats, Oats, Barley, &c., early in the Spring by his PATENT ROLLER, more healthy plants are produced, and an increase in the yield of One to Two Sacks per Acre; and that whole crops of Corn, Turnips, Beet, &c., are annually grown upon Land which could not be cultivated without it. By trial it has proved itself to be the "Farmers' Friend," in saving his crops from the destructive ravages of the Wireworm and Grub.

CAUTION.—Ten Pounds Reward is offered to any person who will give the Patentee such information as shall lead to the conviction of any person making, selling, or using the PATENT CLOD CRUSHER without licence from the Patentee. A model of the Roller is exhibited at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, London.

Cash Price, with Travelling Wheels complete, delivered in Hull, 6 ft. 6 in., 21*l.*; 6 ft., 19*l.* 10*s.*; 5 ft. 5 in., 18*l.* Should the advanced price of Iron continue until June 1, the price of Clod Crushers will be 24*l.*, 22*l.*, and 20*l.* for the above sizes.

CROSSKILL'S AGRICULTURAL MACHINE SHOW-ROOM, 42, QUEEN STREET, HULL.

Improved One-horse CARTS, with Patent Wheels and Iron Axletrees, price 10*l.* 10*s.* and 12*l.* 12*s.*, and every other Implement known in Agriculture may be had at this Manufactory.

SHEEP NETS, RABBIT NETS, FISHING NETS.—Sheep Net of strong tarred cord, or cocoa nut fibre, nearly 4 feet high, 4½*d.* per yard; long nets, for catching rabbits, 50, 80, and 100 yards long; net as fences against poultry, rabbits, &c., 2*d.* per yard; net to cover pheasantries, &c.; fishing nets of every kind.—ROBERT RICHARDSON, Net and Tent Maker, 21, Tonbridge-place, New-road, London.

WORSTED GARDEN NETS, 2½*d.* per yard, recommended as an effectual protection to blossom from frost, blight, &c.; Hemp Garden Net, new, 1½*d.* per yard; ditto old mended Fishing Nets, ¾*d.* per yard.—ROBERT RICHARDSON, maker of all kinds of garden, fishing, and sheep-folding Nets, 21, Tonbridge-place, corner of Judd-street, New-road, London.

LINGHAM, BROTHERS, BIRMINGHAM.—MANUFACTURERS of the IMPROVED MENOGRAPH, or PERMANENT LABELS, for Garden-borders, Flower-pots, &c. In Boxes of One Hundred each.

The above Labels have been manufactured by LINGHAM, BROTHERS, for the last five years with increasing demand, and acknowledged by those parties who have used them as superior to anything of the kind before offered to the Public, and for neatness, durability, and cheapness, have superseded all other kind of Labels for Hortulan purposes.

Sole Agents in London:—George and J. Deane, Horticultural Implement Warehouse, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

BURBIDGE AND HEALY'S COOKING APPARATUS, combining Sylvester's Patents.—This Cooking Apparatus is believed to possess greater general advantages than any yet submitted to the public, both as regards strength of material and workmanship; in fact, the laws of heat are so applied as to produce the greatest effect with the least consumption of fuel, without destruction to the apparatus; and B. and H. can safely recommend it, from experience, as unquestionably superior to anything of the kind hitherto made. A Prospectus can be forwarded, upon application, detailing particulars and prices to 130, Fleet-street.

FIFTY RUNNING ULCERS CURED IN SIX WEEKS BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT!—Extract of a Letter, dated Tobago (West Indies), February 4, 1845.—"To Professor Holloway. "Sir,—I have the pleasure to inform you, that your astonishing medicines have cured a gentleman in this island, who had, I believe, about fifty running ulcers about his legs, arms, and body, who had tried all other medicines before the arrival of yours, but all of which did him no good; but yours cured him in about six weeks, and he is quite restored to health and vigour. Signed, JOHN MARTIN, Chronicle Office, Tobago."—Sold at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, (where advice may be had gratis), and by almost all respectable venders of medicine throughout the civilised world.

BEE-HIVES.—All persons desirous of Cultivating that pleasing and profitable branch of rural economy—the Honey-Bee—are respectfully informed by G. NEIGHBOUR & SON, that they have prepared, for this season, an extensive supply of their various improved Bee-Hives; their collection consists of "Nutt's Collateral Hive," "The Single Box-Hive," "The Improved Cottage Hive," "The Ladies' Observatory Hive," &c., from either of which the Honey may be taken at any time without injury to the Bees, and may be worked with safety, humanity, and profit, by the most timid and unaccustomed to Bee-manipulation. A descriptive paper, with drawings and prices, will be forwarded on receipt of a post-age stamp. Apiarian Depôt and Honey Warehouse, 127, High Holborn, London.

Nutt on Bees (5th Edition), now published.

BEES, BEE-HIVES, AND HONEY.

J. MILTON has an extensive assortment of FOREIGN AND ENGLISH HONEY; likewise a great variety of BEE-HIVES, both in straw and wood. He has just completed a newly-constructed Hive—"The Royal Alfred"—by which the Apiarian can safely examine the Bees at work, and, with great facility, take the Honey without killing the Bees. A Sheet List is published, price 1*s.*, being the Plates of the Hives, and other useful apparatus in Bee management, as described in "The Practical Bee-keeper," by JOHN MILTON; may be had of Messrs. PARKER, West-strand, and at J. MILTON'S, Foreign Warehouse, 10, Great Mary-le-bone Street.

RICK CLOTHS, Tents for Cricket Clubs, &c.—Rick Cloths, dressed with a pliable composition of tar and boiled oil, which never mildew, or are touched by vermin, for 30 tons of hay, 5*l.*, 40 tons, 6*l.* 10*s.*, 50 tons, 7*l.* 10*s.*, or on hire, at a very moderate charge; Tents for Cricket Clubs, Lawns, &c., on very reasonable terms.—ROBERT RICHARDSON, Maker of Nets, Tents, Rick-cloths, and Tarpaulings, 21, Tonbridge-place, corner of Judd-street, New-road, London.

WANTED, as HEAD GARDENER, in one of the Midland Counties, a steady, sober, and honest married Man (without incumbrance would be preferred), who thoroughly understands his business, such as Forcing, Pines, Grapes, Peaches, Melons, &c.; likewise superior Cultivation of Stove and Greenhouse Plants and Orchidaceæ, as well as the perfect training of Wall-trees and general management of Flower and Kitchen Garden. None need apply who cannot have first-rate characters in all the above respects, and write well.—Direct A. B. C., care of Mr. Egley, 60, New Bond-street, London, stating terms, previous situations, &c.

WANT PLACES.—All letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A single Man aged 36, who has had much experience in his profession in all its various branches, particularly as regards the management of Pines, Vines, and Greenhouse plants. He is a native of Scotland. Has no objection to look after Meadow and; and can be recommended by his late employer.—Direct to W. M., Mr. Laing, Nurseryman, Twickenham, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable young Man, who fully understands his business; his Wife can undertake a Dairy, and Cook if required; can have an excellent character from his last situation. No objection to a single-handed place.—Direct to J. H., F. Whealdon, Esq., the Lymes, Stanmore Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable middle-aged married Man, who has a scientific knowledge of his profession; is a first-rate Grape-grower and forcer of Strawberries, having lived nearly nine years in his last place, where he had under his charge Conservatory, Greenhouse, Flower garden, Pleasure-ground, Kitchen-garden, Vineries, Cucumber and Melon-pits, Meadow-lands, &c. Can produce most unexceptionable testimonials and reference as to character and ability.—Direct to C. D., care of Mrs. Johnston, Covent-garden-market.

AS BAILIFF AND MANAGER.—A young Man of active and industrious habits, of upwards of seven years' experience, and good practical knowledge of the best Farming in Berwickshire (where he is still engaged), as well in Agriculture as Stock, is desirous of an engagement as Bailiff or Steward, and Manager of an Estate or Farm. He is respectably educated and connected, devoted to the pursuits of Farming, and can be well recommended both for his skill therein and moral conduct.—Direct to A.B., Mr. Wm. Oswald's, 22, Birchin-lane, London.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable unmarried Man, of sober and industrious habits, who has had successful and extensive practice in the culture of the Grape Vine, early Forcing and Framing; the cultivation of plants; the laying-out, and tastefully arranging, of the Flower Garden, &c. The most satisfactory reference as to character and ability will be given.—Direct to Mr. JAMES VERBELL, Bromley, Kent.

AS GARDENER, in a Gentleman's Family.—A Married Man, aged 37, without incumbrance, who perfectly understands his business. Can take the management of Meadow-land, or Brew if required; and can have two years' character from the family he is about to leave, through breaking up their establishment.—Direct to T. M., Mr. Cutbush, Nurseryman, Barnet, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A Young Man, who has a good knowledge of his business in all its branches. Can have a 3 years' character, which will bear the strictest investigation for ability, sobriety, and industry. Has no objection to any part of the kingdom.—Direct to A. J., Mr. Cornwell's, Nurseryman, Hadley, Middlesex.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, 32 years of age, who has recently left his situation, wishes to engage with any Nobleman or Gentleman; he has had the management of a regular Establishment; Pines, Vines, Forcing in all its departments, Hothouse and Greenhouse, Framing, &c., together with Flower and Kitchen-Garden. Character will bear the strictest investigation from his old employer.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Badcock's, Milkman, Story's-gate-lodge, Westminster.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AN EXPERIENCED GARDENER in the higher Branches of Horticulture, has left an excellent situation, where Forcing in all its branches was carried on; also a fine Collection of Plants, &c. The Advertiser left a short time since with the prospect of entering into Partnership, in which he has been deceived, and is now desirous of obtaining again a situation where Forcing is carried on to any extent. Can have an unexceptionable character of four years.—Direct to G. Lucas, Forester's Cottage, Bedford Lane, Clapham.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 30, who is thoroughly conversant in Forcing all kinds of Fruits and Flowers; also Kitchen and Flower Garden management. Has been 5 years in his present situation, and can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to T. S., care of T. Henderson, Nurseryman, Wellington Road, St. John's Wood.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, without incumbrance, who perfectly understands his profession in all its branches, and has been three years under Mr. Mills, at Gunnersbury Park, by whom he can be well recommended; and his wife can take the charge of a Dairy, if required.—Direct to Mr. MILLS, Gunnersbury Park, Acton, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER, or as GARDENER and BAILIFF.—A steady respectable single Man, aged 30; a native of Northumberland, who has had considerable experience in every branch of his profession, in some of the best places in the country; and whose testimonials will bear ample evidence of his practical knowledge, and strictly moral conduct.—Direct to P. E., 42, Munster-square, Regent's-park.

A YOUNG MAN, whose whole life has been devoted to Agricultural Pursuits, and who has had every facility for acquiring practical knowledge, from having been for a considerable time actively engaged on a farm of upwards of 600 acres, is desirous of entering into an engagement with a gentleman who may require assistance in the entire or partial management of his farm. The highest testimonials as to character and ability can be produced.—Direct to A. B., care of Mr. Reynolds, Land Agent, Old Warden, near Biggleswade, Beds.

TO NURSERY AND GENTLEMEN'S GARDENERS.—The Parents of a strong healthy Youth, wish to place him with a respectable person, who would feel interested that the lad should obtain a sound knowledge of an art to which he is much attached. He has been 12 months with a gardener, and, it is thought would exert himself to be useful to an attentive employer. Please to direct particulars and terms (which must be moderate), to A. B., Post Office, Barking, Essex.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1845.

ARGUS LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,

39, Throgmorton-street, Bank.

Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Thomas Farncomb, Esq., Alderman, Chairman.
William Leaf, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Richard E. Arden, Esq. — J. Humphery, Esq., Ald., M.P.
William Banbury, Esq. — Rupert Ingleby, Esq.
Edward Bates, Esq. — Thomas Kelly, Esq., Ald.
Thomas Camplin, Esq. — Jeremiah Pilcher, Esq.
James Clift, Esq. — Lewis Pocock, Esq.

Physician—Dr. Jeaffreson, 2, Finsbury-square.
Surgeon.—W. Coulson, Esq., 2, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry.
Consulting Actuary.—Professor Hall, of King's College.

Advantages of the Argus Life Assurance Company.
Low Rates of Premiums.

In addition to the subscribed Capital of 300,000*l.*, the assured have the security of the Company's Income of nearly 60,000*l.* per annum, yearly increasing, and an accumulating Assurance Fund invested in Government and other available Securities, of considerably larger amount than the estimated liabilities of the Company.

The Rates of Premium are reduced to the lowest scale compatible with the safety of the Assured and the stability of the Company, thereby, in effect, giving to every policy-holder an immediate and certain bonus without risk, in lieu of the deferred and frequently delusive prospect of a periodical division of profits.

Annual Premium to Assure 100*l.*

Age.	For One Year.	For Seven Years.	Whole Term
20	£0 17 8	£0 19 1	£1 11 10
30	1 1 8	1 2 7	2 0 7
40	1 5 0	1 6 9	2 14 10
50	1 14 1	1 19 10	4 0 11
60	3 2 4	3 17 0	6 0 10

One-third of whole-term Premiums may remain unpaid at 5 per cent. comp. int. as a debt upon the Policy for life, or may be paid off at any time without notice.

In Assurances for advances of money, as security for debts, or as a provision for a family, when the least present outlay is desirable, the varied and comprehensive Tables of the Argus Office will be found to be particularly favourable to the assured.

A Board of Directors, with the Medical Officers, attend daily, at a quarter before 2 o'clock.

EDWARD BATES, Resident Director.

A Liberal Commission to Solicitors and Agents.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL, LONDON.

The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l.*

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. IRVINE, Managing Director.

ROYAL FARMERS' AND GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, & HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION,

[Empowered by special Act of Parliament.]

Capital, £500,000. Offices, Strand, London.

The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,960 in number.

All persons whose Insurances with this Office fall due on Quarter Day, are respectfully reminded that, to preserve the benefit of their Policies, the Premium should be paid within 15 days from that date, and that the Receipts are now in the hands of the Agents.

FARMING STOCK Insured, without the Average Clause, at 1*s.* per cent., no duty.

COMMON INSURANCE.—Private Houses and Shops, 1*s.* 6*d.* per cent. Hazardous, 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. Double Hazardous subject to special agreement.

HAIL-STORM INSURANCE.—Premium 6*d.* per acre for Wheat, Barley, and Peas; 4*d.* per acre for Oats, Beans, Turnips, and Potatoes.—Glass in Hothouses, Greenhouses, or Private Houses, 20*s.* per cent.

Insurance of Lives on an equally moderate scale of charges.

Annual Premiums on Life Insurances for 100*l.*

Age 20	30	40	50	60	65
£1 16 1	2 7 1	3 3 5	4 10 3	7 5 5	9 3 4

Endowments of all kinds for future or existing children.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post-free, upon application. The usual commission to Solicitors. Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.

W. SHAW, Managing Director.

NATIONAL ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

No. 4, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, LONDON.

Assurance Department—Policy holders for the whole of life are entitled to the whole profits.

For Investment, shares are issued of Five Pounds; also reduced shares of Five Shillings, designed to enable provident persons to improve savings. Shareholders are not subject to calls nor liable in respect of policy claims. Agents wanted in towns where none are already appointed. The Prospectus and all necessary information may be obtained at the offices of the Association.

WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary.

NOW READY.

NEW EDITION OF DR. LINDLEY'S SCHOOL BOTANY.

Demy 8vo, with numerous Alterations, and nearly Four Hundred Illustrations, price 5*s.* 6*d.*,

SCHOOL BOTANY;

OR,

THE RUDIMENTS OF BOTANICAL SCIENCE.

BY JOHN LINDLEY, Ph. D., F.R.S.,

Professor of Botany in the University College, London.

London: Printed and Published for the Author by BRADBURY & EVANS, Whitefriars.

NEW WORK BY MRS. LOUDON.

This day is published, fcap. 8vo, with an Engraving on Steel, and Illustrations on Wood, 7*s.* 6*d.*,

THE LADY'S COUNTRY COMPANION;

OR, HOW TO ENJOY A COUNTRY LIFE RATIONALLY.

BY Mrs. LOUDON, Author of "Gardening for Ladies," &c.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

New Edition, improved, with nearly 1000 Engravings on Wood, One large vol. 8vo, 50*s.* cloth,

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF GARDENING.

BY J. C. LOUDON.

"No gardening book so comprehensive, and containing such an immense mass of matter, has ever been submitted to the public more free from errors of the pen or the press."—Monthly Review.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR,

HORTUS BRITANNICUS: a Catalogue of all the Plants indigenous to or introduced into Britain. New edition, 31*s.* 6*d.*

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF PLANTS. 8vo, 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* cloth.
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF AGRICULTURE. 8vo, 2*l.* 10*s.*
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF TREES AND SHRUBS. 8vo, 2*l.* 10*s.*
AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF COTTAGE, FARM, AND VILLA ARCHITECTURE. 8vo, 3*l.* 3*s.* cloth.

LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANLS.

NATIONAL LOAN FUND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 26, Cornhill, London.—Capital 500,000*l.* Empowered by Act of Parliament.

This Institution offers many important and substantial advantages with respect to both Life Assurances and Deferred Annuities. The Assured has, on all occasions, the power to borrow, without expense or forfeiture of the Policy, two-thirds of the Premiums paid (see table); also the option of selecting benefits, and the conversion of his interests to meet other conveniences or necessity. Assurances for terms of years are granted on the lowest possible rates.

DIVISION OF PROFITS:—

The steady success and increasing prosperity of the Society has enabled the Directors, at the last annual investigation, to declare a second Bonus, averaging 60 per cent. on the amounts invested on each Policy effected on the Profit scale.

EXAMPLES:

Age.	Sum.	Premium.	Year.	Bonus added.	Bonus in Cash.	Permanent reduc. of Premium.	Sum the Assured may Borrow on Policy.
	£	£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
			1837	170 9 3	77 5 1	12 3 9	346 2 3
60	1000	74 3 4	1838	144 2 2	64 5 6	9 16 4	296 13 4
			1839	116 16 0	51 5 11	7 11 9	247 4 5

The Division of Profits is annual.

F. FERGUSON CAMROUX, Secretary.

VICTORIA LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, No. 18, KING WILLIAM STREET, CITY.

Sir Jas. Duke, Ald, M.P., Chairman.—Benj. Hawes, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Benj. Barnard, Esq. — John Knill, Esq.
Charles Baldwin, Esq. — Thomas Nesbitt, Esq.
B. Donkin, Esq., F.R.S. — John Nolloth, Esq.
Aaron Goldsmid, Esq. — Major.-Gen. Robertson.
Jas. Law Jones, Esq. — Daniel Sutton, Esq.
J. L. Kettle, Esq. — O'B. B. Woolsey, Esq.

THE ATTENTION OF ASSURERS is particularly directed to the detailed Prospectuses of this Company. Assurances can be effected on a profit or non-profit scale, and for short periods, at a very moderate rate. When on the life of another, the Policy may be rendered secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained—this plan makes a Policy an absolute security.

Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on Policies effected for the whole term of life.

Advances are made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments.

WILLIAM RATRAY, Actuary and Secretary.

NORTH BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANY

Established 1809.

Protecting Capital, £1,000,000, fully subscribed.

His Grace the Duke of Sutherland, K.G., President.

Sir Peter Laurie, Alderman, Chairman of the London Board.

Francis Warden, Esq. (Director H.E.I.C.), Vice Chairman.

John Webster, M.D., F.R.S., 24, Brook-street, Physician.

This Institution is incorporated by Royal Charter, and is so constituted as to afford the benefits of Life Insurance in their fullest extent to Policy holders, combined with perfect security in a fully subscribed Capital of One Million Sterling, besides an accumulated Premium Fund, exceeding £442,000, and a Revenue, from Life Premiums alone, of upward of £90,000 per annum.

Eighty per cent., or four-fifths of the total profits of the Company, are septennially divided among the Assured.

At the last investigation, ending 31st December, 1844, a Bonus of £1 10*s.* per cent. on the sums assured was declared for every Annual Premium paid during the septennial period. Thus a Policy for £5000, which had been in force upwards of six years, and on which consequently seven Annual Premiums had been paid, the Bonus declared was £525.

A Prospectus, containing Tables of Premiums, with the names of the President, Vice-Presidents, Directors, and Managers, who are all responsible PARTNERS, may be obtained of Messrs. B. and M. Boyd, Resident Members of the Board, 4, New Bank Buildings; or of the Actuary, 10, Pall Mall East.

JOHN KING, ACTUARY.

Third Edition, Two Volumes, with Illustrations, 7*s.*, of A FAMILIAR HISTORY OF BIRDS, their Nature, Habits, and Instincts. By EDWARD STANLEY, DD., F.R.S., Lord Bishop of Norwich, and President of the Linnean Society.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

AN ADDRESS to LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A, Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s.*

London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

DR. LINDLEY'S WORKS ON BOTANY.

Third Edition, one large vol. 8vo, with Six Copperplates and numerous Wood Engravings, 18*s.*,

INTRODUCTION TO BOTANY. By Professor LINDLEY, Ph. D. of University College and the Royal Institution. 3d Edit. with Corrections and numerous Additions.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this 'Introduction to Botany' to be the most valuable and perfect in any language we are acquainted with."—Medical Gazette.

By the same Author,

THE THEORY OF HORTICULTURE. 8vo. 12*s.*

SYNOPSIS OF THE BRITISH FLORA. 12mo. 10*s.* 6*d.*

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

Just published, Second Edition, fcap. 8vo, 7*s.* cloth,

THE VEGETABLE CULTIVATOR; containing a Plain and Accurate Description of every species and variety of Culinary Vegetables; with the most approved Modes of Cultivating and Cooking them.

By JOHN ROGERS, Author of "The Fruit Cultivator."

"The most useful work of the kind that has fallen under our notice."—Conservative Journal.

"A complete and intelligent manual for the kitchen garden."—Spectator.

"Combining information for the gardener and cook in the same volume."—Leicester Chronicle.

"We recommend this useful volume to all persons engaged in the process of forming their own kitchen gardens, and also to all those engaged in the culture of vegetables as a business, as well as to amateurs and medical men, as containing much interesting, and valuable, and well-arranged information."—Glasgow Reformer.

London: LONGMAN & Co.

HOOKER'S BRITISH FLORA.

Just published, 8vo, with 12 Plates, 14*s.* plain; with the plates coloured, 24*s.* cloth.

THE BRITISH FLORA, Vol. I.; comprising Phænogamous or Flowering Plants, and the Ferns. By Sir WILLIAM JACKSON HOOKER, K.H., LLD., F.R.A., and L.S, &c., &c., &c. Fifth Edition, with Additions and Corrections, and 173 Figures illustrative of the Umbelliferous Plants, the Composite Plants, the Grasses, and the Ferns.

Vol. 2, in Two Parts, completing the British Flora, 24*s.* bds.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

Just Published, 4th Edition, greatly enlarged, 8vo, with nearly 240 Illustrations on Wood, 21*s.* cloth,

ELEMENTS OF PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE: comprehending the Cultivation of Plants, the Husbandry of Domestic Animals, and the Economy of the Farm.

By DAVID LOW, Esq., F.R.S.E,

Professor of Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh.

"The best work on farming in our language."—Gard. Chron.

Also, by Professor Low, just published,

ON LANDED PROPERTY AND THE ECONOMY OF ESTATES. 8vo, Woodcuts. 21*s.*

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

News of the Week.

THE great debate on the Maynooth Bill, which has continued for six nights with unabated interest, was brought to a close this morning shortly before three o'clock, when the second reading was carried by 323 to 176, giving Ministers a majority of 147. Our Report of the debate during the first five nights will be read with interest by all classes. The copious abstract which it contains of the different speeches on both sides of the House, renders it unnecessary to give more than a brief summary in this place. On Monday the principal speakers were Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Disraeli. Mr. Gladstone announced his intention to support the measure in spite of his most cherished convictions, and notwithstanding his recent secession from the Cabinet on account of this very measure. Mr. Disraeli opposed the Bill, in a speech remarkable for its bitterness against Ministers for proposing a measure at variance with all their past professions, and with the views of the great party which had placed them in power. The Earl of Arundel and Surrey, however, offered to Sir R. Peel the cordial thanks of the Roman Catholics of England for extending so great a boon to their religious brethren in Ireland. On the same night, Mr. Ward gave notice that he would move, at an early stage of the Bill, that the provision for Maynooth should be taken from the revenues of the Established Church in Ireland. On Tuesday Sir Thomas Fremantle, Mr. Fox Maule, and Mr. Macaulay were the principal speakers. Sir T. Fremantle, as a Minister, defended the Bill as a measure of justice and conciliation. Mr. Maule opposed it on the ground that it would lead to the endowment of the Catholic Church without reserving to the State any right of control over it, and he contended also that such a course would be an act of injustice to the Free Church of Scotland, which had in vain demanded the uncontrolled management of her spiritual affairs independent of the State. Mr. Macaulay gave the Bill his cordial support; replied at great length to the arguments of its various opponents, but at the same time censured with much severity the conduct of the present Ministers in proposing such a measure in violation of all their pledges, and of the principles on which they rose to office. On Tuesday Mr. Ferrand withdrew the petition he had presented, praying for the impeachment of Sir R. Peel, the House having refused to receive it unless Mr. Ferrand pledged himself to submit some distinct motion founded on it. On Wednesday Lord Ashley opposed the measure with peculiar earnestness, and was answered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who gave a positive assurance that Ministers would not sanction any infringement of the revenues of the Established Church. Lord John Manners, and Mr. Smythe, two of the leading members of the "Young England" party, were the next speakers. Lord J. Manners advised the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the Pope; and Mr. Smythe, while censuring the Ministry for their total departure from public principle, advocated the endowment of Maynooth in a speech of remarkable eloquence, which excited great attention in one of the most crowded Houses of the Session. On Thursday Sir James Graham addressed the House, of course in favour of the Bill, and expressed regret at having ever uttered the expression of which so much use had been made during this debate, that "concession had reached its utmost limit." He stated that the Bill was brought forward with the full consent of the Queen, and that its rejection would be received in Ireland with bitter disappointment. The principal speakers last night were Mr. S. Crawford, Mr. T. Duncombe, and Sir R. H. Inglis, against the Bill; and Mr. Sheil, Lord J. Russell, and Sir R. Peel in its favour. The late hour at which the division took place, renders it impossible for us to do more this week than state the result; but we shall give our usual summary of the speeches in our next.

Home News.

COURT.—On Saturday the Queen and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, left town for Claremont, and remained there until Monday, when they returned to Buckingham Palace. On Monday morning Prince Albert attended the rehearsal of the Concert of Ancient Music; and in the evening her Majesty and his Royal Highness attended the Philharmonic Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Tuesday Prince Albert visited the Water Colour Exhibition, in Pall-Mall, East. Her Majesty, in consequence of the unfavourable state of the weather, postponed her visit to the Great Britain steam-ship, from this day to Tuesday next, the 22d. On Wednesday the Queen gave a dinner party to the Directors of the Ancient Concerts, and afterwards attended the performance of the concerts with Prince Albert, who was the Director for the evening. On Thursday her Majesty acted as one of the sponsors of the infant daughter of the Duke of Buccleuch, who was christened in the Chapel Royal of Buckingham Palace; and in the evening her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured his Grace with their company at dinner. Her Majesty will give a full dress ball at Buckingham Palace, on the 25th inst.; and it is said that another fancy ball, on the same scale as that given by the Queen about four years ago, is in contemplation. Col. Bowles, the new Master of the Household, commenced his duties on the 1st inst. Lady C. S. Cocks and the Hon. Miss Devereux have succeeded the Hon. Misses Stanley and Hamilton, as Maids of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

Death of the Marquis of Downshire.—We regret to announce the sudden death of the Marquis of Downshire. His lordship had arrived in Dublin from Hillsborough Castle on Friday, with the intention of attending the spring cattle-show of the Royal Dublin Society next week; and availing himself of the interval of a few days, left the Gresham Hotel on Saturday morning to visit his estate at Blessington, county of Wicklow, 15 miles from Dublin. At that place he was met by his agent, who had a horse in waiting. His Lordship mounted the horse, but had not proceeded more than a few paces, when he was seized with a fit of apoplexy and fell upon the road-side. Assistance was at once obtained, but his Lordship was found to be quite dead. He was in his 58th year. The death of the Marquis causes a vacancy in the lieutenancy of the county of Down, and in the representation of that county. One of the Members for that county, the Earl of Hillsborough, eldest son of the late Marquis, succeeds to the title. The melancholy circumstances attending the death of the late Marquis's second son, Lord W. Hill, Captain in the Scots Greys, who was killed by his head coming in contact with a tree while riding a restive horse, will be fresh in the recollection of our readers.

Death of the Earl of Abergavenny.—The Earl of Abergavenny died on Friday night, at his seat, Eridge Castle, near Tunbridge Wells, in his 56th year. His lordship was never married, and consequently his only brother, the Hon. and Rev. William Neville, Vicar of Frant and Birling, Kent, succeeds to the title and estates. The late Earl had for the last two or three years been in a delicate state of health, which precluded him from appearing in public, and he never sat in the House of Lords but one night after his succession to the peerage. The present Earl was born in 1792, and married, 1824, the daughter of the late Ralph Leek, of Langford Hall, Salop, Esq., by whom he has several children.

Parliamentary Movements.—In consequence of the determination of the electors of West Kent to obtain a pledge from their new member, against the Maynooth Bill, Lord Holmesdale and Mr. Frewen who had come forward as candidates, have withdrawn, and the friends of both candidates having united, they have resolved upon sending a requisition to Colonel Austin, of Sevenoaks, to ask him to come forward. Colonel Austin is opposed to the endowment of Maynooth, and will vote against all grants to the Roman Catholics, and in favour of protection to agriculture. Mr. Alexander Dunlop, well known in connection with the Free Church, has come forward for Greenock, in opposition to Mr. Bain. Both candidates are free-traders, the difference between them being that Mr. Bain, who is a churchman, is understood to be in favour of the grant to Maynooth, while Mr. Dunlop is opposed to Maynooth, and to all church endowments at present.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The agitation produced throughout England by the Maynooth Bill, has excited lively interest in Paris. The Ministerial organ, the Débats, in a long and elaborate review of the measure, describes it as "neither more nor less than a revolution in the policy pursued by England since the Reformation; and as the greatest concession yet made by Protestantism, without excepting the Emancipation Act of 1829." Considering it as the sure forerunner of other measures for the endowment of the Catholic clergy, the Débats says:—

"Not only does the Reformed Government of England renounce a useless contest against Catholicity, but it becomes the ally and the protector of that religion which it had persecuted and oppressed during three centuries; for the endowment of the seminary of Maynooth is but a first step in a new course, and leads forcibly to the general and regular maintenance of the Catholic clergy by the State. If the Government educates the Catholic priests, it will not be, apparently, for the purposes of suffering them to die of hunger, or to create a mass of useless, and consequently a dangerous mass of capacities. The Protestants are not deceived by this grant. They even consider, and with certain reason, that it would have been more rational on the part of the Government to pay stipends to the existing priests, than to take the pains to create and educate more, and thus establish a Roman propaganda. The endowment of the seminary at Maynooth will lead necessarily, within a certain period, to that of the entire Catholic clergy." * * * "We have often observed that two united forces have elevated Sir Robert Peel to power—the agricultural interests and the Protestant sentiments. Well! of those two forces one alone at present supports him. The agricultural interest, notwithstanding the radical reforms which he has introduced into their tariffs, see still in him the man who preserves them from absolute liberty of commerce, and the breakwater which opposes the overthrow of the last prohibitive barriers. But let Sir Robert Peel not imagine that he can manage the Protestant feeling so easily. Whatever may be said respecting England, we shall never cease to render that country justice. When her religious principles, or even her prejudices, are at stake, she sacrifices her interests without hesitation. Sir Robert Peel might revolutionise the laws which protected the great proprietors and farmers without any injury to his influence, but at present he places a sacrilegious hand on the religious constitution of England, and he will see the consequences, and let him be assured that he will pay the penalty. The old Protestant leaven still ferments in the hearts of the English people. It was, perhaps, considered extinct, but it only slumbered. Before many days we shall find that it is awake."

On Saturday the Chamber of Peers passed the Colonial Administration Bill by a majority of 103 to 56. This bill is the first blow struck at slavery in the French colonies. The committee on the bill admits in its report that slavery is to be abolished, and that the only question now is, how that object is to be carried into effect. The Government is anxious, if possible, to get this bill passed by the Chamber of Deputies during the present session, and it will be accordingly introduced in that House during the present week. By virtue of this measure a negro slave in the French colonies is in future to be permitted to purchase his freedom on certain conditions, to choose the employer for whom he is to labour for hire during five years after his emancipation, and to be legally entitled to whatever property he may be in possession of at the date of the promulgation of the new law, as also to that which he may in future acquire, provided he can prove that he has obtained it by legitimate means. He is, moreover, qualified to inherit every description of property from free persons or slaves, to purchase lands and houses, and dispose of them by will or otherwise. —In the Chamber of Deputies a Bill has passed to prevent the piracy of literary works published in Sardinia, in pursuance of one of the provisions of the treaty of commerce concluded in 1843 between Sardinia and France, and which has recently been the topic of much cavil in the Chamber. The Bill was passed unanimously. In the bureaux of the Chamber of Deputies on Monday, a proposition was brought forward by M. Dozon, a Conservative Deputy, to repress the practice of duelling. Among the members who opposed the proposition was M. Guizot, who said that duelling was not to be condemned on its own account. He added that duelling ought to be considered rather as the result of the progress of civilisation than as a barbarous practice, especially in those cases where it is resorted to in a just cause, and in a regular and honourable manner. Leave, however, was given to bring in the Bill.—The leading topic of the papers is the prosecution instituted by the Government against those officers of the National Guard of Paris as have in that capacity signed petitions against the Bill relative to the arming of the fortifications of Paris. Thirty-five of those officers have been summoned before the "Conseil de Prefecture" of the Seine, and, on Friday 30 were suspended for two months from the functions of their respective ranks. The Prince de Joinville is to leave France in the course of the month of May, on a cruise in the Mediterranean, and the Duke de Montpensier has left Paris in order to join Marshal Bugeaud in Algeria. Louis-Philippe on Monday left the Tuileries for Eu, where he was to remain till Friday. The King signed, before his departure, five ordinances creating the Duke de Treviso, M. Bertin de Vaux, M. Victor Hugo, General Achard, Count de Mornay, and M. Martell, Peers of France.—"The Queen of England's visit to Paris," says the Revue de Paris, "appears to be finally determined upon, and the fine season will not pass without that event being accomplished. The desire to see Paris is not Queen Victoria's sole motive; it is affirmed that the royal traveller has more than once expressed the wish to make acquaintance with our principal political personages." —An election of a member of the Academy of Moral Sciences, to supply the place of the late M. Lebrun, took place on Saturday. The candidates were M. de Villeneuve, M. Leon Faucher, M. Raybourd, and M. Matter. The number of voters was only 26. After two ballots M. Villeneuve was elected by 15 votes, M. Faucher having obtained 10. M. Guizot and M. Duchatel, who never attend the ordinary meetings of the Academy, appeared to record their votes for M. de Villeneuve, and admitted that they voted for the exclusion of M. Faucher on political grounds.

SPAIN.—The accounts from Madrid are of some importance. M. Castilio y Ayenza, the Spanish Envoy at Rome, has had an official communication from the Cardinal Secretary of State, announcing that the Pope will admit his letters of credence as Minister Penipotentiary for her Catholic Majesty Isabella II. This may be considered as the most serious step yet taken towards the recognition by his Holiness of the present Government of Spain. On the 8th the Chamber were proceeding to the discussion on the budget of expenses, when the President of the Council rose and said that he was ordered to communicate to the Chamber a Royal decree, authorising the marriage of her Majesty Queen Maria Christina, and the manner in which it had been celebrated. After reading the decree, Gen. Narvaez quoted the law on which it was founded, which is Charles III.'s pragmatic declaration of the 23d March, 1776. After listening to the communication, the Chamber voted 34,000,000 reals to the Queen, and 3,000,000 to the Infanta Luisa Fernanda; the 3,000,000 demanded for Maria-Christina, were voted by a majority of 116 to 9, M. Orense making but some very brief remarks on the grant; 3,500,000 reals were also voted to the Infante Don Francisco de Paula and his family.—The court-martial assembled at Logrono to try the persons implicated in the revolt of General Zurbano, had acquitted Messrs. Capaz, Castaneda, Gamboa, and several other accused, none of whom had presented themselves to stand their trial. Only one, Commander José Benages, had been sentenced to two years' presidio.

SWITZERLAND.—The Diet resumed their sittings at Zurich on the 10th inst., in order to discuss the various proposals of their committee, relative to the measures to be adopted in the critical circumstances of the country. As was to be expected, after the sanguinary conflict at Lucerne, the Diet almost unanimously adopted additional measures for the suppression of the free corps, without, however, carrying them as far as the Conservative party demanded. The propositions of the committee on the subject of the amnesty were strongly opposed by the deputies for Lucerne and the other Catholic states; but not being able to obtain a legal majority on either side, the consideration of the question was adjourned till the following day, when it was resolved merely to express an earnest recommendation that Lucerne would grant an amnesty, and abstain from the execution of the prisoners who had been condemned to death. It has been ascertained that the whole number of the insurgents killed in the neighbourhood of Lucerne was about 420. The prisoners amount to 1,806. Colonel Ochsenbein, one of the commanders of the insurgents, has published an account of the affair in which they were defeated, and comes to the conclusion that, though the free corps may be of use in guerilla warfare, they are not to be depended on in a pitched battle. It had been rumoured that the Lucerne Government had given orders for the execution of the principal prisoners: it appears, however, that the Government of the canton had issued a decree for bringing the prisoners to trial, but no sentence had been pronounced, and the deputy of Lucerne declared in the Diet that his Government would act with lenity. On the other hand, the most hostile parties acknowledge that General Sonnenberg has acted with humanity as well as firmness, and that he has protected the prisoners against all arbitrary acts of vengeance. At Geneva, on the 4th, an attempt was made at organising a free corps, and exciting a local commotion. Several hundred men from Vaud and Neufchatel, assembled at the Paguis, expressing the intention of marching against Lucerne; but, on their real designs being ascertained, the Geneva Government called out the militia and dispersed the rioters. The movement had been organised by two emissaries from Vaud, who had escaped. At Lausanne, the Radical Government, recently established, could scarcely resist the popular demands it was assailed with, and continued to observe the frontier of Valais. Basle-town had adopted serious measures in order to check an internal Radical movement, and an attack which is dreaded from the armed bands of the neighbouring cantons. The arrival of the federal troops in the canton of Argau would appear to have prevented that of a corps of Soleure mountaineers, whose intention was to effect a rising in the free bailiwicks, and thence join the army of Lucerne, and of the minor cantons. On the 7th, Count de Pontois delivered to the President of the Diet a second note from the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, which is stated to be of a much gentler tenor than the first.

UNITED STATES.—By the Cambria mail steamer we have news from New York to the 31st March. Gen. Almonte, the Mexican Minister, has finally closed his mission, and left Washington with a strong protest against the annexation of Texas. He is now in New York, and intends to sail for Vera Cruz in a few days. The present Mexican Government has fully recognised him, although he was appointed by Santa Anna, and is said to express apprehension that Mexico will declare war. The project of annexation has received a check of another kind. It appears that President Jones, of Texas, is a strong opponent of that measure, and an article appears in the National Register, the official organ of his Government, which is said to be the production of his pen; it breathes a feeling the reverse of friendly respecting the contemplated incorporation with the United States. Ex-President Houston is also said to be opposed to the annexation. This intelligence has necessarily created much surprise and vexation in various parts of the union—in the south more especially. It seems to have disorganised the whole arrangements of Mr. Polk's new Cabinet. Commissioners, it was said, would probably be appointed by the American President to meet those of Texas, for the purpose, if possible, of arranging the terms on the most satisfactory basis. But all will depend upon the view which the people of Texas may take of the question. The Congress of that republic, notwithstanding the feelings of the President, is understood to have a love for the annexation, and, if such be the case, he must march with them, or submit, a New York paper suggests, to the alternative of a bowie knife. In the event of Texas refusing to be annexed, it is thought that an extra session of Congress will be called. The naval force of the United States is to be increased in the Gulf of Mexico, and in the Pacific Ocean. The Washington Globe intimates that ex-President Houston, of Texas, might be the next President of the United States. But this suggestion is of course thrown out as a mere feeler, to win over General Houston to the annexation party. Pennsylvania is making creditable exertions to meet the future payment of the State debts. There seems little reason now to doubt that the interest due in August will be paid.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The Earl of POWIS gave notice that on Thursday se'nnight he should move the second reading of the Bill he had introduced to repeal so much of the Act of Parliament as related to the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph. The Noble Earl also gave notice that, some day next week, he intended to put a question to her Majesty's Government relative to the course which the Government intended to take on this subject.—Lord DALHOUSIE, after shortly explaining the alterations it would introduce, moved the third reading of the Sugar Duties Bill.—Lord CLARENDON condemned the measure upon the same grounds that have been so often alleged in the other House, and especially as a mere temporary arrangement, with no chance of permanency.—Lord BROUGHAM defended the principle of the Bill, as opposed to the continuance of slavery and the slave trade; but Lord MONTEAGLE contended that this defence would not apply to the present Bill, and proceeded to expose its inconsistencies, and the difficulties that would attend its successful operation. — Lord STANLEY vindicated the Bill from all these charges, and it was read a third time and passed.

Monday.—A great many petitions were presented against the proposed grant to Maynooth.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE asked several questions respecting Irish railways, and the course pursued by the Board of Trade in reference thereto.—Lord DALHOUSIE explained that the opinions of the Board over which he presided were only to be considered as relative recommendations of one line in preference to another, not as a declaring either to be the best that could be devised, and thought that, however expedient such a plan as that pursued on the Continent might have been, it was now too late to adopt it. The Railway Department had no authority to inquire whether the provisions of the Registration Act had been complied with or not, but he believed that they were very generally disregarded, especially as regarded the transfer of shares before the complete registration of the company was effected. A notice that such transfers were illegal had been published, but there was much difficulty in prosecuting the transgressors.—On the motion for going into committee on the Land Clauses Consolidation Bill, Lord BEAUMONT moved that the Bill be referred to a select committee. The amendment was negatived without a division, the Bill passed through committee, the 87th clause being omitted.

Tuesday.—Lord BROUGHAM called the attention of the House to a subject which he has lately more than once noticed—the spread of railroad speculations, and their interference with the enjoyment, nay, almost with the possession of property. He presented two petitions—one from Lady Georgina Fane, owner of an estate in Somersetshire, complaining of the insolent manner in which she had been treated by the agents of a proposed line, who acted as if the company had already entered into possession of her estate; and another from John Hartnell, a nurseryman at Yeovil, who had given 500*l.* for an acre of ground, through which a line was about to be carried by a company who threatened to give him as much or as little as they pleased for his land. In such a state of things, it was time for the Legislature to intervene; for tyrannical powers such as those claimed by railroad companies had never been granted to other associations. This was the only case in the history of civilised nations of compulsory sales forced upon the community. He warned their lordships not to put too much faith in the infallibility of a standing orders committee; cases were perpetually occurring which their vigilance had not foreseen. He had himself devised two standing orders, which he would lay on their Lordships' table. One relating to a statement of the actual amount of consents given on any proposed line, together with the measurement of the distance through which it was to be carried by compulsion, and where the consents were not obtained; the other would require information, not only of a line's passing through a private house, but how near it went to it; a company should be bound to mention, before the first reading of their Bill, all the houses situate within 300 yards of their line. He again entreated the House to interfere to check the present frenzied speculation; and concluded by moving that the two proposed orders should be laid on the table and printed. The motion was then put and agreed to.—On the motion of Lord DALHOUSIE, the Export Customs Bill went through committee, was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.—On the motion of Lord WHARNCLIFFE, the Glass Duties Bill went through committee.—The Land Clauses Consolidation, and Land Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bills were amended in committee.

Thursday.—A great number of petitions against the proposed grant to Maynooth, and several against the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph, were presented.—Lord BROUGHAM brought under notice the case of the turnpike trusts, on which 9,000,000*l.* have been borrowed, and the value of which will be much deteriorated by the extension of railways. The noble lord also stated another case of individual hardship arising from seven railways which it is proposed to cut through one small property. His lordship regretted that the subject had not been taken up by Government, and announced his intention of proposing another standing order, to make committees give costs against the parties who propose railway bills.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE expressed his concurrence in these observations, and the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, while he regretted the existence of a gambling mania, deprecated any obstructions to the formation of railways.—The Sheriffs in Wales Appointment Bill was read a second time.—The Bastardy, Mutiny, and Marine Mutiny Bills, were read a third time and passed.—The Earl of CADOGAN brought forward the subject of the new church erected in the parish of Chelsea, and moved for a select committee to inquire into the assignment of surplus funds by the commissioners for building new churches, and whether or not it is expedient that these funds should be invested in the hands of trustees, for the purpose of building rectories.—The Bishop of LONDON defended the rector and the manner of appropriating the pew rents, and made some remarks which elicited a disclaimer from the noble Earl of all selfish motives for bringing the subject under consideration. It was then allowed to drop.—On the motion of the Duke of RICHMOND, and after a few observations from the Duke of CLEVELAND, Lord ASHBURTON, and Lord BEAUMONT, a select committee was appointed to inquire in the expediency of enabling the possessors of entailed estates to charge them with a limited sum, in order to drain and permanently improve them.—The Railway Clauses Consolidation Bills went through committee; and the Auction Duties Bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—An extraordinary number of petitions from all parts of the United Kingdom were presented by Members on both sides of the House against the Maynooth Bill. Amongst these was one from the Dublin Protestant Operative Association, presented by Mr. Ferrand, which prayed that the House should reject all propositions for the support of Popish establishments in this realm, and deprive all foreigners in this realm of power; and that they should forthwith inquire into the conduct of Sir Robert Peel, Bart., M P., and impeach him for high crimes and misdemeanours, and if found guilty, that they should inflict on him condign punishment. The petitioners stated that all classes of Her Majesty's subjects were disgusted with the conduct pursued by the right Hon. Gentleman, who had ousted other men from their places to adopt their policy. After the presentation of the mass of petitions against the Maynooth Bill, Sir R. PEEL presented one in its favour from the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster, who stated that they were deeply convinced that the proposed measure of the Government was calculated to allay feelings of religious animosity in Ireland, and to awaken sentiments of respect and affection towards Great Britain among all classes of the Irish people.—Mr. WARD informed the House that on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the House to go into committee on the Maynooth Bill, it was his intention to move that it was the opinion of the House that the provision to be made for the purposes of this Bill ought to be taken from the funds at present devoted to ecclesiastical purposes in Ireland.—Sir R. PEEL, without any preface, moved the second reading of the Maynooth Bill.—Mr. COLQUHOUN moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a second time that day six months. He began by remarking that on two classes of questions, those relating to religion and Ireland, the experience of late years had shown that power rested with the Opposition, and that those who sat on the Treasury benches were divested of all power. He then proceeded to prove that the proposed measure was one of the most inadequate for its purpose, and the most injurious in its effects, that had ever been presented to Parliament. Leaving aside the questions of religious principle and compact, he opposed the Bill on political grounds. It was a fact established by the example of the Catholic Association, and more recently by the Repeal movement, that Roman Catholic priests educated at Maynooth were the men of all others most opposed to the integrity of the empire, and to the social union of the respective classes of which it was composed, and this fact clearly demonstrated that the conditions upon which Mr. Pitt had established the College of Maynooth had been violated. After comparing the course of education with that in Germany, the honourable member concluded by saying that, looking at the measure as utterly inadequate to the purpose for which it was intended—looking at it as inoperative in securing good professors or a better class of students, and a loyal priesthood, he should give it in every stage, his strongest and most decided opposition.—Mr. GROGAN supported the amendment in a lengthened speech. He said that neither on the grounds of expediency or compact express or implied, had a case been made out for the Bill, and yet they were going to perpetuate and to extend a system, the fruits of which it was impossible for them to look back upon with anything like satisfaction; for only so far back as two years, Ireland had been shaken to its centre from the prevalence of that very priestly influence which it was now pretty plain there was an intention sooner or later to endow. He felt it his duty as a Protestant to enter his protest against the Bill as one uncalled for, and as a violation of those very principles which every Protestant had sworn to maintain.—Mr. GLADSTONE said, that after having given full and mature consideration to the subject, and to the merits on which it stood, though in opposition to the feelings of the majority of the people of England and Scotland, and though in opposition to his own deeply-cherished prepossessions, he was ready to give his most deliberate support to the proposition of Government. The right hon. Gentleman rejected the plea of "compact" as unfounded in fact, and the plea of "Protestantising Ireland" as perfectly ridiculous. He regarded this as a new measure called for by the "present time and circumstances," and thus regarding it, he thought it expedient to support it. He maintained that Mr. Pitt had founded Maynooth College with the view to train the Roman Catholic priesthood first, and then to find provision for their support; and he thought Mr. Pitt's experiment ought to be tried completely. Having stated that all the arguments used against the Bill were arguments of detail, not affecting the principle, he next addressed himself to their refutation at considerable length. Speaking of conciliation, he said he was not afraid to have it cast upon him that he paid too high a regard to the means of conciliating opposition. It was a paradox in human nature to deny that conciliation was a grateful, or that it was not generally a politic course of action—and he would willingly submit to reproach and misconstruction rather than refuse to grant what was fair and generous to a people who were their fellow-Christians and fellow-men. Political society existed by means of mutual concession and mutual surrender. To judge rightly of the question, they ought to put themselves in the position of the Roman Catholics. There could be no doubt that the Bill, though it did not decide the question of the payment of the Catholic clergy, emphatically and conclusively decided the religious objection to that measure. Admitting that the Bill was a large, a new, and a most important concession granted to the Roman Catholics of Ireland, in terms more easy than were ever granted to the Established Church, and admitting that it might not put an end to agitation, he still believed it to be, upon the whole, a measure called for by justice, and required by the circumstances of the times; and he could find no principle on which to take his stand in opposing it.—The Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY had listened with great gratification to the speech of Mr. Gladstone, and congratulated Sir R. Peel on now having on his side every statesman in the House who deserved the name. The Catholics of England viewed with applause and delight the boon which Sir R. Peel had extended to their brethren in religion in Ireland. He regretted that the speeches of the opponents of this measure should be filled with such obsolete and exploded errors as to the tenets of the Roman Catholic religion.—Mr. DISRAELI observed, that in listening to the speech of Mr. Gladstone he had wondered in his own mind what had led Mr. Gladstone to pass below the gangway to deliberate on this measure. He had next wondered why Mr. Gladstone had crossed the House to deliberate upon the principles of it, and had pursued the course which he had followed whilst in opposition. Mr. Gladstone had explained the reason by stating that the principle on which the connexion of Church and State rested was worn out, and that her Majesty's Government had just discovered that to be the fact. But if such were the case, had there been no public men in that House who had previously advocated the new principle now propounded by Mr. Gladstone? Did not the members of the late Administration discover it, and had not opposition to it been considered as the foundation of the Conservative theory? Sir R. Peel had told them there were three courses open for him to pursue. Never did the right hon. baronet bring forward an important measure without making the same statement. On no one occasion had he heard the right hon. baronet discuss a great principle, where he did not say that there were three courses to be pursued. And in a certain sense, looking at the right hon. baronet's own position he was right. There was the course which the right hon. baronet had left; there was the course which he followed; and there was the course that he ought to pursue. It ought, perhaps, to be said that there was a fourth course, and this latter was perhaps the one which it was now desirable for the House of Commons to adopt. It was a course indicated by the right hon. baronet himself—that having given a vote they should afterwards rescind it. Under any circumstances Mr. Disraeli said he should have opposed this Bill. He would not say that it had been introduced in a sinister and insidious manner, but this he would say, that the country had been taken by surprise by a Bill, containing, or rather introducing, for he denied that the principle of endowments had before been introduced into our constitution—the principle of State endowments, than which nothing could be more prejudicial and nothing more unpopular. But he admitted that he had other reasons for opposing this measure. He opposed it for the manner in which it had been brought forward, and on account of the men who had brought it forward. He opposed the Bill because, totally independent of the merits of the measure itself, he did not think that the gentlemen who occupied the Treasury benches were morally enabled to bring it forward. It embodied principles against which, in opposition, those gentlemen strenuously struggled. When he remembered the votes and speeches about education in Ireland—when he remembered the prelates of England paraded in solemn procession with addresses to the late King, with pious and sincere motives, but now it appeared for no other practical effort than to uphold and strengthen a Conservative opposition—above all, when he remembered the appropriation clause—he did think it monstrous that because gentlemen had crossed the floor of the House, merely by opposing such a policy as that now proposed, they should have the privilege of saying, "Look to the merits of our measure, and for heaven's sake forget ourselves." He lamented the absence of a constitutional Opposition in the House, and deprecated the manner in which the Premier stifled debate by charging all who ventured to differ from him with rebellion. He ridiculed the mode in which Ministers had drilled the House of Lords into the discipline of a guard-room, and degraded the House of Commons into a vestry-room—and described Sir R. Peel as "a great parliamentary middle-man, who bamboozled one party and plundered another, and who, having obtained a position to which he was not entitled, cried out as loud as he could, 'Let us have no party questions: let us have a fixity of tenure.'" Mr. Disraeli, therefore, called on all parties in the House to re-echo what he believed to be the sovereign sentiment of the country. He called on them to tell people in high places that it was the conviction of England that cunning was not caution, and that habitual perfidy was not profound state policy. And he called on them to bring back to that House what had been so long missed from it, and so greatly wanted, the salutary check of a constitutional Opposition. These things, however, they could only bring to pass by terminating the dynasty of deception, and by casting off the intolerable yoke of official despotism and parliamentary imposture.—Mr. ROEBUCK accused Mr. Disraeli of personalities, and then proceeded to defend the Government at great length.—Lord NORTHLAND said that as he found in making this new grant there was not to be the slightest control over it, and as he could not agree with Mr. Gladstone that the measure was a measure of reform, he felt bound to oppose the Bill. Had the measure been really one of reform he would have supported it, but it was no such thing.—On the motion of Mr. W. BERESFORD, the debate was adjourned to Monday.

Monday.—A great many railway and other private Bills were forwarded; and an immense number of petitions against the Maynooth Bill were presented.—Mr. FERRAND gave notice, on the third reading of the Bill, to move, as an amendment:—"That it is the opinion of this House that the 7th and 8th Victoria, c. 97, commonly called the Charitable Bequests Act, which received the Royal Assent on the 9th of August, 1844, was a violation of the Act of Settlement, and a contravention of the oath of supremacy; and that the Maynooth College Bill is calculated to encourage and spread a religion opposed to the Protestant reformed religion established by law"—Mr. S. CRAWFORD gave notice for a future stage of the Bill, to move "That the principle of endowment of any religious sect or sects from a state fund, or from a fund received from tithes, rents, &c., whether known by any other name or denomination, is a violation of the rights of conscience, detrimental to religion, and dangerous to civil and religious liberty, and that all such grants ought to be abolished."—The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Maynooth Bill was then resumed by Mr. HAWES, who intimated his intention of voting for the second reading, and for going into committee on the Bill; but who expressed his inability to go further with the Government, as, in committee, he meant to vote for Mr.

Ward's proposition, and also to make two proposals of his own —one that the grant should be annual, and the other that the College should be free from the ceremony of visitation.—Sir T. FREMANTLE cordially supported the Bill. He could not, he said, perceive how the proposed grant could be objected to on the ground of religious scruples, because whether the vote was agreed to or rejected, it could not in the slightest degree encourage or discourage the Roman Catholic religion in Ireland. He considered the proposal as one not only justified by principle but by sound policy; expedient, and, at the same time, perfectly just. There were obligations in politics as well as in morals, more binding in honour and in good faith than any that could be established by mere force of law; and the case of Maynooth was one of them. The Imperial Parliament should not legislate for Ireland in an English sense, nor the representatives of English constituencies view Irish questions through the medium of their own feelings alone. He remarked that though the table of the House was covered with petitions from England and Scotland against the Bill, there were very few from Ireland, and concluded his speech by enforcing the necessity of Government conciliating the Irish people irrespective of party, and of obtaining their confidence by all possible means—Mr. F. MAULE opposed the grant, for he regarded it as leading to the permanent endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy, which had never been contemplated by the founders of the college. The question before the House was, in fact, not whether the old annual grant should be continued, but whether that annual grant should be converted into a fixed and permanent endowment. He rested his present position on this point—that an annual grant was sought to be made a permanent charge, thus recognising an establishment for the education of Roman Catholic priests as in bond fide connection with the State—an establishment taken into connection with the State without the State reserving to itself any right of control over it. When, three years ago, he came before the House with a petition and a claim of right from members of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and demanded, on the part of the petitioners, the uncontrolled management of their spiritual concerns, independent of the State, he was told by right hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that the idea of a Church Establishment existing without connection with the State was monstrous and unreasonable. If the Government was right at present in point of principle, what a monstrous injustice did they then do to Scotland. Instead of coming to that House and asking for an endowment for Maynooth, the Roman Catholics of Ireland, of all classes, should emulate the example of Scotland, and then he would be willing to repeal still further the Mortmain Act in their favour. That would be the wiser and the more respectable mode of proceeding in this matter. Mr. Fox Maule, in answer to Sir T. Fremantle's declaration of the necessity for conciliation, reminded him of the Home Secretary's declaration last session, that "conciliation had reached its limits;" and asked what had become of Lord Stanley's Registration Bill, which had been described as of the most pressing and absolute necessity? —Lord CASTLEREAGH and The O'CONOR DON supported the Bill, and the latter expressed his feelings to be that of unmixed gratitude towards the Government for having proposed so frank, generous, and unrestricted a measure.—Mr. LEFROY objected to the Bill, because neither a contract nor a necessity had been established for its support; and it was an interference with the theory and practice of the constitution. So long as the Sovereign of these realms was obliged to take the coronation oath on ascending the throne, so long as a similar oath was administered to members of Parliament, it was inconsistent with our constitution that they should endow a church and educate a priesthood in doctrines, which, to use the mildest language, were by that very constitution declared to be altogether erroneous.—Col. T. WOOD supported the motion. He had no religious scruples on the subject; he saw nothing in the articles of the Christian faith, nothing in the Holy Scriptures, nothing in the Liturgy of the Church of England, which forbade his considering the question, and voting even an ample grant for the education of the spiritual instructors of his Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen.—Sir C. NAPIER also spoke in favour of the Bill.—Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN called on the Government to give a plain satisfactory answer to the question, whether or not they intended to follow up the present resolution with an endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy. He entreated Sir R. Peel, who had taken credit to himself for candour in not having taken the House by surprise as to this measure, to exercise equal candour in stating whether he intended to pay the Roman Catholic clergy; and, if he did, from what funds and upon what conditions? The hon. member said the reason which obliged him to vote against the Bill was, that he did not conscientiously consider that the party, to support which he had been sent to Parliament, had any right to enter into this question. The party on his side of the House had chosen to abandon—either because it was complained of, or because it was inconvenient—the old name of "Tory," and had taken to themselves another word, most unwisely. The history of the Conservative party was to be found in magazines, not in books; it was to be studied in the reading-room, not in the library. They ought not, therefore, to refer to the past; but if they looked to the acts of that party for the last 16 years—if they thought of the appropriation clause, if they thought of those battles about the municipal corporations in Ireland which had been made the battle-horse of the party; if they remembered the terms in which they had spoken, and in his opinion properly spoken, of the Lichfield-house compact—after every allowance made for individual caution, palliative, and explanation, they could not but agree that their resistance to the endowment of Roman Catholics had been one of the main instruments they had worked in opposition. He asked the question, if Lord J. Russell had brought forward this motion—this very Bill, word for word the same—would the Government, or would the Conservative party, have supported him? Would not they have opposed him?—and if they had not opposed him—if they had gone to the hustings with even an inkling of such a Bill, would they have come back to that House with a majority? The hon. member refused to lend himself to the grant, which went in the face of the religious feelings of the country?—Mr. WYNN and Mr. COWPER spoke in favour of the Bill, and Mr. GREGORY against it.—Mr. MACAULAY supported the measure. The question was simply between a grant of 9000*l.* and one of 26,000*l.* It appeared that these parties had no objection to an establishment for the Roman Catholics, provided it was a shabby establishment. Now, if the Government gave its patronage at all, it ought to be a patronage worthy of the College, and of the Government which gave it. When he looked at the splendid establishments of New College, of Christchurch, and of his own Trinity, which were founded by William of Wickham, by Wolsey, and by Henry VIII., and which were all taken from the Roman Catholics; and when he looked at the "Dotheboys-hall" to which we had consigned the Roman Catholic professors and students of Maynooth, he felt shame for the deep degradation to which we had consigned those who differed from us only in religious principle. If it were innocent to grant 9000*l.* to this establishment, he could not see how it was not innocent to grant 26,000*l.* for the same object. But then came forward the other class of reasoners, who insisted that the Church of Rome taught error, and that we were not justified in contributing to the propagation of error. He denied that proposition. You have endowed the Church of England and the Church of Scotland. They differ in doctrine; one of them, therefore, must be in error; and yet you have endowed them both. Sir R. Inglis was a strong advocate for Church extension. He wanted to build a thousand churches; but would not Tractarians get into some of them, and if so, would not the public money get into the hands of those who, in his opinion, were teachers of error? The principle on which Parliament acted was that where the truth was of such value as to require to be made known, it would not shrink from circulating it, even though there should be an alloy of error mixed with it. It was on this ground that it had decided that it was better that the people of Ireland should be Roman Catholics than professors of no religion at all. To propagate error as error, would be diabolical: but the people of Ireland were sincerely convinced of the truth of the doctrines they believed. In Ireland, there was a church of 800,000 members, with a great endowment; and when the Wesleyans objected on principle to the small grant to the millions of the Roman Catholic Church, they were bound to show, in making an analogous case, that they constituted fourteen millions out of their sixteen millions of the population of England, and that endowments left by John Wesley were taken from them by Act of Parliament. But the whole history of the world furnished no similar example of a case by which, as in Ireland, the majority were subjected to the minority. But while he supported the measure, he admitted that in proposing it and others, public men, whether in office or in opposition, should be actuated by fixed principles. Sir R. Peel had, unquestionably, great qualifications as a minister, whether in managing public business or the House of Commons; but as little could it be denied, that in opposition he had profited by passions with which he had not the slightest sympathy, and of prejudices for which he entertained the most profound contempt; but, as soon as he came into power, he kicked down the ladder by which he had ascended. The present was not a solitary instance. This conduct appeared to have been pursued with something like a system—this conduct had been pursued by the right hon. baronet in 1827 and 1829, although one sudden change of that kind ought to be sufficient for a lifetime. But there was no class of men who had rallied round him that he had not disappointed.—Mr. SHAW announced his determination to oppose the Bill in every stage. It was viewed by the Protestants of Ireland with much regret, as the first Roman Catholic endowment since the Reformation, and a measure calculated to inflict the heaviest blow that had ever been struck against the Established Church in Ireland. If, with the great mass of the people of Ireland striving for a separate Parliament, the acts of the Government were calculated only to make the intelligent shudder, then the British Government and the Legislature should beware lest they should find for the first time the people of Ireland united against them in one strong bond of discontent.—Mr. S. HERBERT spoke in favour of the Bill, and defended the conduct of Government.—On the motion of Major BERESFORD the debate was again adjourned.—The Justices'-Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bill passed through committee.

Tuesday.—Mr. FERRAND, moved that the petition of the Dublin Operative Protestant Association, calling for the impeachment of Sir R. Peel, should be printed with the votes.—Colonel RAWDON did not think that the House should sanction such a proposition, pointing out a passage relating to the coronation oath, and couched in terms offensive to all Roman Catholics.—Sir J. GRAHAM professed his willingness to consent to the printing of the petition, provided Mr. Ferrand would distinctly pledge himself to found a motion upon it.—Mr. FERRAND said he had given notice of an amendment on the third reading of the Maynooth Bill, which would be based upon the allegation of the petition.—Lord J. RUSSELL said it was frivolous and absurd to print such a petition as this, containing the alegations it did, on an assurance that on the third reading of the Maynooth Bill, an amendment would be proposed, calling for the impeachment of the Prime Minister, because the Charitable Bequests Act had last session been passed by the assembled Sovereign, Lords, and Commons of the United Kingdom. Without a more specific assurance as to a distinct motion he must decidedly oppose the printing of the petition. —Ultimately, Mr. FERRAND declining to pledge himself, and seeing that the sense of the House was against him, withdrew his motion.—After the usual presentation of petitions against the Maynooth Bill, the adjourned debate was resumed by Major BERESFORD, who, associated by ancestral and family ties with the Established Church of Ireland, opposed the Bill. He could not be called a bigot, for in early youth he had marred his prospects by refusing to come into the House pledged against Catholic emancipation; but there must be limits to concession. Measures like this led him to fear lest the time might come when the Prime Minister would gravely propose the appropriation of four-fifths of the revenues of the Establishment, in order to endow the priests whose condition he had elevated, and whose tastes he had improved. Roman Catholics and Jews were encouraged, while the Established Church was discouraged in every way.—Mr. BYNG professed himself ready, in accordance with his principles of more than half a century, to support the Bill, not merely on political but on religious grounds.—Colonel VERNER opposed the Bill, on the ground that it interfered with the Protestant character of the constitution.—Mr. HUME supported the Bill on the general principles of toleration, as exemplified in our colonial dominions, as well as its necessity for the pacification of Ireland.—Mr. NEWDEGATE treated the principles of Roman Catholicism as adverse to civil and religious happiness, and regarded Maynooth as a failure. He therefore deeply regretted the introduction of the measure, more especially as the Roman Catholics of England evinced that there was no lack of funds for the zealous support and extension of their establishments and their faith.—Mr. PAKINGTON felt that the only course open to him was to support the policy of the Government, which was firm and decided on the one hand, and generous and conciliatory on the other. The effect of such a measure might not show itself for a year or two, but he could not doubt that it would be received with gratitude on the part of Ireland.—Mr. P. M. STEWART viewed the change from an annual into a permanent grant as involving an important principle, because it adopted Maynooth as one of the endowed institutions of the country, and thereby departed from that perpetual protest which this nation maintained against Popery. Respecting Roman Catholics individually, and admitting the benefit to be derived from the literature of many great names amongst them, he could not depart from that great Protestant principle secured to us by the Reformation and the Revolution; and entered his warm protest against a measure which offended the Protestant feeling of the country, without being at at all likely to satisfy the Roman Catholics.—The Earl of LINCOLN admitted that the religious feeling of the country was roused, and that no statesman ought to disregard it. But it was equally the duty of a statesman to consider what was just and reasonable to all classes of the community. He reviewed the history of Maynooth, alleged that there was a compact, and urged the importance of placing the institution on a suitable foundation. It was not a question of religious principle, but one of expediency, arising out of existing circumstances, and he supported the measure as one which, though not immediately nor yet by itself, would effectually aid in accomplishing the tranquillity of Ireland.—Lord WORSLEY admitted the general opposition to the bill, but though he differed in opinion with his constituents, he felt bound to support the second reading. In accordance, however, with his previously recorded opinions, he would also support Mr. Ward's amendment, for supplying the grant out of the revenues of the Irish establishment.—Mr. M. MILNES held the bill to be the first great step towards the conciliation of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, whom we had hitherto alienated from England and Protestantism, by refusing to secure the affections of the people through the natural channel of their priesthood. The Whigs had began in this way rightly to treat the people of Ireland; and Sir R. Peel, by following their example, would secure similar results, without any danger to the Established Church. With him wise expediency had ever been identical with the highest principle; and the question which pressed on all Ministers and on every House of Commons, was the absolute necessity of treating Ireland in a conciliatory and just spirit.—Mr. Sergeant MURPHY, leaving political crimination and recrimination to others, felt that as a Roman Catholic he occupied neutral ground, and had only to look at the measure as it bore on the peace and prosperity of Ireland. The opening of Trinity College, Dublin, on equal conditions, would satisfy them, in lieu of other educational institutions. But this being refused, they turned to Maynooth, and felt themselves entitled to ask that it should be placed on a decent footing. Mr. Fox Maule had quoted Mr. James Grant, as testifying to the appearance of comfort presented by the accommodations and dress of the students at Maynooth. But to show this Scotchman's value as an authority, he read from "Random Recollections of the House of Commons," by the same author, making the House exceedingly merry by the style of the descriptions of the dress and appearance of Sir R. Peel, Colonel Sibthorp, Mr. Hawes, and Mr. Fox Maule himself—all of whom were present, and joined in the laughter excited. Turning to the question before them, he warned them that whatever might be the expressions of Mr. O'Connell as to the introduction of the measure its rejection would entitle him to exclaim, "British House of Commons, I thank you!" for nothing would give a greater impetus to Repeal. After such coloured statements as those made by so eminent a Protestant clergyman as the Rev. Dr. Croly, at a public meeting on the previous day, in which he represented Popery as if it were under the curse of Heaven, the rejection of the measure would be fatal to the peace and tranquillity of Ireland.—Sir J. HANMER, being opposed to entering into ecclesiastical relations with a church from which we derived no ecclesiastical influence, and feeling that the endowment of the Roman Catholic priesthood raised a similar claim on behalf of other religious bodies, felt himself bound to oppose the Bill. The State should confine itself to those institutions which are irrevocably united to it, and trust to the influence of civil justice in Ireland.—Mr. Ross advocated the Bill as part of a great system of policy which is to heal the wounds of Ireland, the past and present condition of which he reviewed.—Mr. M. GORE followed, also in support of the measure, and, at the conclusion of his address, the debate was again adjourned.

Wednesday.—A great mass of petitions was presented against the Maynooth Bill.—The Justices' Clerks Bill, on the motion of Sir J. Graham, and the Calico Print-works Bill, on the motion of Lord Ashley, were severally committed pro formâ. The adjourned debate on the Maynooth Grant Bill was resumed by Mr. HAMILTON, who opposed the measure because it appeared to him to be an endowment to Maynooth, and to involve the abdication of Protestantism and the constitution; and because it involved the complete and whole principle of the endowment of the Roman Catholic priesthood, and that was a serious question, and one with reference to which the House had a fair right to expect some statement from Ministers.—Mr. E. ELLICE gave his cordial support, against the wishes of great bodies of his constituents, to the second reading of the Bill; intimating his intention of voting in committee for Mr. Ward's proposition for the payment of the grant out of the funds of the Irish Established Church.—Mr. GORING objected to the Bill. The implied compact that existed between Ministers and the Protestants of this country being now broken, he did not see anything that was to hinder them from abolishing, if they thought fit, other time-honoured and revered institutions of the country. He saw no reason to trust them, in short, on any point.—Lord ASHLEY gave the measure his decided opposition. Leaving out of his consideration the theological question, the principle of endowing a Roman Catholic college by Act of Parliament was sufficient in his mind for the condemnation of the Bill. That objection was one which had been taken by all the memorialists and petitioners who opposed the measure. Publicly and privately it was held by every one adverse to the grant, and however they differed in some things, they were united in respect to that. It was urged by voluntaries, by Church of England men, and by those who took the high theological ground against the measure. The noble lord said he was willing to confess that the whole history of Ireland showed that its people were entitled, not only to the sympathy, but to the repentant feelings of the people of England. He, for one, would never recur to those terrible records which disfigured the page of Irish history without the deepest feelings of shame and regret; and there was no concession, short of the Bill before the House, that he would not give his consent to, in order to give satisfaction to the Irish people. This measure, if carried, far from conferring peace, would lead to increased strife, to exasperated hostility, and more frequent collision; and would also have the effect of undermining that Protestant faith which had been the main instrument in working out the civilisation and happiness of man. —The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER spoke in support of the Bill, and taunted its opponents with not wanting to go the length in their speeches with the numerous petitions which had been presented. For himself, and for those with whom he was associated, the right hon. gent. said that they would be no parties to the invasion either of the rights, privileges, or income of the Established Church—that they would have nothing whatever to do with the course which, at a future stage of the Bill, was to be recommended from the other side of the House, and that they would, as heretofore, uniformly and consistently resist any attempt at infringement of the property of the Irish Church.—Sir W. CLAY supported the Bill at the risk of losing the confidence of his constituents, who entertained a strong and general feeling against the proposed grant.—Lord BERNARD followed in opposition to the Bill, and Sir J. EASTHOPE and Lord JOCELYN in favour of it.—Mr. BRIGHT denounced the Bill as a sop to agitation, and as hush-money to the priests, and therefore, and as he was the enemy of church endowments of every kind, he gave it his vigorous opposition. Looking back on our past history, he saw that all we possessed of civil liberty came not from the portals of their cathedrals and parishes, but from those conventicles they affected to despise. He cautioned the Dissenters from any compromise of their principles, satisfied that the time must come when they must be adopted by the Legislature of this country.—Lord J. MANNERS asked if it was to the conventicles we owed Magna Charta? After the speech of Mr. Bright, he congratulated Sir R. H. Inglis on the aid of such an alliance. As an "old" Tory, he took upon himself his share of whatever obloquy to which the Government were subjected; and expressed his regret that it should have brought about such a general wreck of parties, that no man could tell how to vote, or with whom he voted. The Church of Rome was termed Antichrist; but the Church of England imposed no such tremendous belief on her members; it rather taught us to regard her as being, though in error, a great branch of the church universal. It was not from the Vatican, or from Maynooth, that the Irish Church was in danger, but from herself; and in this opinion he was confirmed when he found the venerable Primate who occupied the see once filled by Jeremy Taylor, writing to the Primate of all Ireland, complaining that the clergy were troubled by the passions and the prejudices of the laity. If Maynooth were a failure, the blame might be laid rather at the door of St. Stephen's than of St. Patrick's. But whatever deficiency there might be of manners, or of theoretical loyalty, he denied that the priests educated there had failed in the highest and holiest of their duties, for under their care the men were not less sober, nor the women less chaste, than under the old regime. It was said that England pays for Maynooth, but the Pope governs it. The remedy was "free trade" with Rome; accredit a minister to the Vatican—receive a nuncio at St. James's; and no longer, with childish obstinacy, refuse communication with a power which we acknowledged to be so great, and exercised so much influence over our vast dominions. He did not vote for the grant in order to Protestantise Ireland; but he drew from it an augury of recurrence to purer and sounder doctrines, regarding it as an olive-branch to the injured Catholics, and a signal of peaceful days for the Church of England, and the general prosperity of the empire.—Mr Rutherford supported this Bill because it was an earnest to Ireland to know that she was now about to reap the fruits of the Union in the spirit in which the Union itself was conceived.—Mr. Smythe reminded the House that Sir R. Peel, in bringing forward his proposition for Catholic Emancipation, observed that he had been convinced for some time previously, that it must be ultimately carried by the fact that all the young men of talent sent to that House by both Universities were in favour of it. He applied that observation to the present measure, and showed that the conciliatory manner in which it had been introduced by Sir R. Peel had been followed by all the younger members of his Administration who were in favour of it, as for instance, by Mr. S. Herbert, Lord Lincoln, and Lord Jocelyn. He commented with considerable severity on Lord Sandon's assertion that this measure was an act of restitution to the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland; he denied its accuracy, and contrasted it with the language which Lord Sandon had employed respecting it on a former occasion. He did not presume to find fault with that noble Lord's change of opinion, for Lord Sandon was privileged to change, because he was an hereditary waverer. He agreed with Mr. Ward that Sir R. Peel was one of the greatest "doers" of his age; and predicted that he, as he had "done" Catholic Emancipation, would also "do" this College of Maynooth. He had not forgotten the Protestant zeal of Sir R. Peel's adolescence; but he was more inclined to remember the discreet caution of his riper years. The contrast between Mr. Peel, the young Secretary for Ireland, and Sir R. Peel, the Premier, would be admired by all posterity, for it would show how the young Octavius of proscription had been merged into the beneficent Augustus of maturer years. He showed that it was unjust to raise any malignant inference against the studies pursued at Maynooth from the production of any single book of instruction used within its walls, and said that it would be quite as easy to frighten the Wesleyan and the Independent with the system of education pursued in our Universities. He denounced the hypocrisy of those who strained at the Roman Calendar and yet swallowed the Heathen Mythology—who denounced the theology of Dens, and yet flung Lempriere broadcast into all the schools of this Protestant kingdom. He thought that if the sticklers for "no Popery" would take a review of all the enthusiasts in whom they had believed, from the days of Titus Oates down to those of Lord G. Gordon, and from those of Lord G. Gordon down to our own times, they would not find all the superstition confined to one side. One discovery he was sure that they would make from the retrospect, and that was, that they had always been betrayed by their leaders. Even at the present day, no sooner did an eminent leader from Exeter-hall enter the House redolent of all the enthusiasm which he had inspired, than the common sense of the House acted upon him as religion did upon the Dervish of the East, and he "went round" with inconceivable rapidity. Yes, he might give a kick at first; but after all he went round in a sort of Parliamentary Polka, which Mr. Pringle was, he believed, practising at present. Mr. Gladstone had told them that he had departed from his cherished feelings to vote for this Bill. Unfortunately for himself, Mr. Gladstone had written a book in behalf of his cherished feelings. From these feelings he had now departed; but they were still cherished by many proselytes whom he had converted, and by many fanatics whom he had fascinated. Yes, he had abandoned his theory; but, as a certain society had abandoned their country, to return to it on the first convenient opportunity. In that cloud of abstracts and venerated phraseology in which the right hon. gentleman had as usual clouded his "mysterious divinity," there was only one sentence intelligible to plain and vulgar mortals—to wit, that he, notwithstanding his cherished convictions, would vote against this measure. It was, therefore, quite clear that the right hon. gentleman's votes and his theory were at issue. But about the mere form of votes the right hon. gentleman cared little, for he had voted all ways on this question. The right hon. gentleman had first voted against the grant; he had then voted in favour of it. He then went out of office because this grant was to be increased. The measure came to a first reading, and the right hon. gentleman did not vote; and now, on the second reading, he was prepared to vote in favour of it. And was any gentleman quite certain—was the right hon. gentleman himself quite assured—that on the third reading of the Bill he would not find equally good reasons for voting against it? After dwelling for some time upon the manifold inconsistencies of Mr. Gladstone, he entered into an eloquent eulogium of the simple but fervent devotion which he had himself observed among the pupils at Maynooth. He did not know whether any advantage would be gained by converting the pupil of Maynooth into something more of an ecclesiastic than he was at present. The proposition was to make him more of an abbé and less of a curé, more of a chaplain and less of a pastor, more of a man of this world and less of a man of the world to come. He was, however, of opinion that it would be of advantage to improve his education and to elevate his condition; for it might tend to conciliate the people of Ireland to the union with Great Britain; and he should, therefore, give his support to the present measure.—Mr. Redington expressed his satisfaction as a Roman Catholic with the present measure, and showed that it was in consequence of the restrictions imposed on his countrymen by the penal laws, of which some had only been removed very recently, that they had not themselves given a liberal endowment to the Royal College of Maynooth. The debate was again adjourned.

Thursday.—The House went into committee on the Calico-print Works Bill, and on the motion of Lord Ashley an instruction was agreed to, that the committee should have power to extend the provisions of the Bill to the regulation of the labour of young persons and women, and to all print works, and to the processes incidental to the labour in print works.—After the presentation of numerous petitions against the Maynooth Grant Bill, the adjourned debate was resumed by Major Cumming Bruce, who gave it his determined opposition, and adverted to some passages in the late speech of Mr. Gladstone, who briefly explained in reply, that in anything which he had stated in his speech, he had done so purely as a private individual, and without any direct or indirect presumption of the imputed intentions of the Government.—Sir G. Grey warmly supported the Bill. He said that now, for the first time, leading men of all parties were come to an agreement as to the only policy which a statesman could pursue, and he saw in this the dawn of a brighter day. Nothing would be easier for his party than to join with Sir R. H. Inglis in his opposition to the bill, and in this they would be backed by the popular feeling out of doors. But his noble friend (Lord J. Russell) would not, as had been truly said, climb to power by the arts practised by those who were now in possession of it.—Colonel Sibthorp expressed his unmeasured detestation of the Bill itself, and his deep disappointment in its proposers.—Mr. Blackstone spoke against the Bill, and Mr. Rice in its favour.—Mr. Plumptre opposed it. He said that he could not concur with Lord J. Manners, that the Roman Catholic religion was not the religion of Anti-christ. He did not say that it was exclusively the religion of Antichrist, but he did think it was prominently so. The people of England generally believed this, and therefore they opposed a vote in support of it.—Mr. Trelawney, Lord Courtenay, Mr. Martin, Mr. Tuite, Mr. Carew, and Lord Leveson followed in support of the measure, and Mr. Spooner opposed it on the ground that the Catholic faith was an awful delusion.—Sir J. Graham, feeling that an appeal to the reason and reflection of the English people never failed of ultimate success, was satisfied that, in the support given to the Bill during the debate, that appeal had been complete and triumphant. Though regretting the feeling which had been created by the Bill, the Government had not brought it forward without deep deliberation and conviction of its necessity and importance. Nor could he conceal that this measure was not of itself sufficient, yet without its passing they could not lay the foundation of those other measures which were requisite for the pacification and improvement of Ireland. They were taunted with treachery and inconsistency. But who was the author of the Church Temporalities Act, the Tithe Composition Act, the National System of Education? Why, Lord Stanley, supported by himself, and aided by Sir R. Peel. Justifying the Government in their Irish appointments from the imputation thrown out by Mr. Shaw, that they were filling offices with "strangers," he intimated that the old days of Protestant ascendancy in Ireland were now gone by, and that at all events Ministers would not be responsible for the government of that country on these principles. They had endeavoured to redeem the pledges given by them when in opposition, by introducing measures for the improvement of the registration, and the better regulation of the municipal franchise; and as to his late expression that "concession had reached its utmost limits," it was hardly fair to make such use of words dropped in the heat of debate, at a period when the tranquillity of Ireland was endangered by formidable demonstrations of physical force. Still, even inadvertency, when it wounded the feelings of a people, was an offence. He deeply regretted using the words: he retracted them; and hoped that at all events his actions had been better than his words. After stating how the Government had been led to the proposition of the present measure, he went back to the foundation of Maynooth, in 1795, in order to show how groundless was the imputation that they were now, for the first time, recognising the Roman Catholic religion and hierarchy. This disposed of the religious objection to the present Bill. Himself a staunch Protestant, he regretted that Mr. Spooner should have permitted himself to term the Roman Catholic religion an "awful delusion." It was the Christian faith of a large portion of the Christian world; one-fourth of the population of the United Kingdom professed it; the seven millions of the Roman Catholics of Ireland we could not extirpate nor convert; and we must not forget the cruelty of their past treatment. Render Maynooth worthy of a place of education for intelligent gentlemen, and in the gratitude of the Irish people they would find a bond of union and good will. But would the rejection of the Bill be the security of the Protestant Church? He could tell them that nothing would be more fatal. The rejection of a measure like this, proposed by the Crown's advisers, with the full consent of the Queen, would be received throughout Ireland as the triumph of religious antipathy over reason, and fill that country with a bitter disappointment and deep dismay, approaching even to desperation.—Mr. Maclean opposed the Bill. He expressed his surprise at the unwarrantable use of the Queen's name made by Sir J. Graham, and expressed his regret that the policy of Government had not been avowed at an earlier period, when the party which brought them into office was gathering its numbers and strength. The debate was again adjourned.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols closed at 99⅛ for money, and 99½ for the account; Reduced Three per Cents, 98⅜; Three-and-Quarter New, 101⅛; Exchequer Bills, 58*s.* to 60*s.*; India Bonds, 74; Bank Stock, 209½.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—K. F. A. Hampson, 16, Walnut Tree-walk, Lambeth, gas fitter—W. Jones, Adelaide Gallery, Strand, commission agent—W Hodgkinson, 1, Weston-street, Pentonville, slater—Jos. Jarvis and Jas. Jarvis, Great Bush lane, Cannon-street, City, wine merchants—J. Bradshaw, St. Alban's, Hertfordshire, draper—J. M. Leader, 391, Oxford street, coach maker—J. Woollams, 15, Charles-street, Manchester-square, Marylebone, builder—P. Barker, Shelton, Staffordshire, publican—J. Jones, Pinchbeck, Lincolnshire, butcher—W. B. Pattison, Liverpool, currier—T. S. Dodd, Liverpool, innkeeper—W. W. Spence, Newcastle-on Tyne, woollen-draper—J. J Ayton, South Shields, linen-draper—W. W. Benn, Liverpool, merchant—H. Overend, Popplewell in Scholes, Yorkshire, card maker.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—D. M'Corkindale, Glasgow, merchant—Rev. D. Wilson, minister of Stranraer, Wigtonshire—A. Steel, Stirling, merchant—W. Holm, Burntshiels, Renfrewshire, farmer—J. Holm, Burntshiels, Renfrewshire, farmer—J. Macdonald, Kingerloch, Argyleshire, sheep dealer—W. Jamieson, Dundee, merchant.

FRIDAY—W. B. Sterry, Jamaica-row, Bermondsey, sail-maker—T. P. Rees, King William-street, City, iron-merchant—W. Underwood, late of High-street, Southwark grocer—J. Bast, Wardour-street, Soho, saddle-tree maker—T. H. Coyle, Argyle-street, Middlesex, wine and spirit-merchant—J. Pickering, Cornbury-place, Old Kent-road, dealer—C. M. Firth, St. Michael's-alley, Cornhill, and Chryssell-road, Brixton, lithographic printer—H. P. Cook, Coggeshall, Essex, victualler—T. Jones, Liverpool, coal-dealer—G. F. Stanley, Isherwood, Manchester, engraver—J. W. Spragge, Poole, Dorsetshire, grocer—J. L. Long, Tavistock, Devonshire, woollen draper—J. Williams, Abergavenny, Monmouthshire, carpenter—J. Hill, Stroud, Gloucestershire, hatter—W. Parsons, Bristol, brewer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. Gillies, Hutchenstown, Glasgow, (deceased)—J. Pedie, Edinburgh (deceased)—J. Scott, Glasgow, cow-feeder.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Grant to Maynooth.—The excitement on the subject of Sir R. Peel's Maynooth Bill continues unabated, and numerous meetings, both of Churchmen and Dissenters, are held daily in different parts of the metropolis. A meeting of members of the University of Cambridge was held in London on Saturday, at which a form of protest against the proposed endowment of Maynooth was agreed to and very numerously signed.—On Monday the bankers, merchants, and traders of the city of London, called together by the Lord Mayor, pursuant to a requisition addressed to his lordship, assembled at the London Tavern. About 1000 persons were present. Mr. J. Labouchere, Mr. Gould, Mr. Cumming, Mr. Ambrose Moore, Mr. Daniel Whittle Harvey, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Wheelton, Mr. Ridley, Dr. Bunting, and Mr. Farmer moved or seconded the various resolutions, which were strong in their expression of opposition to the proposed grant; and a petition to Parliament, embodying the resolutions, was unanimously adopted. On the same evening Covent Garden Theatre was crowded with "an aggregate meeting of the inhabitants of the metropolis," assembled by public advertisement to testify their hostility to the Maynooth grant. The admission was by printed tickets, pledging the bearer not to interfere with the proceedings. Mr. Bevan, the banker, was in the chair, and the several resolutions were proposed or seconded by the Rev. Dr. Croly (of St. Stephen's, Walbrook), Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Sherman, Mr. Chalmers and Dr. Dickson, Dissenting Ministers, Sir C. E. Smith, Dr. Halloway, and Mr. Scales. Great excitement was manifested throughout the proceedings, and Dr. Croly was loudly interrupted in his speech, which attempted to trace the history of Protestantism in England, and contended that all the calamities that had befallen our Sovereigns, from the execution of Charles I. to the death of George IV., were referable to their encouragement of Popery. Resolutions condemning the proposed Bill were ultimately carried, together with petitions to Parliament. A third meeting was held on the same evening at the Tabernacle, Moorfields, Dr. Campbell in the chair. Resolutions and a petition of the same tenor with those which we have just recorded were voted, and the petition was entrusted to Mr. Pattison, M.P., with a request to the Members for the Tower Hamlets that they would support it in Parliament. Another meeting was held on the same night, at Union Chapel, Tooley-street, Mr. D. W. Wire in the chair, at which petitions against the Bill were carried.—On Tuesday the English Roman Catholics resident in the Metropolis held a meeting in Freemasons'-hall, to petition Parliament in favour of the Bill. The Earl of Arundel and Surrey presided, and resolutions in favour of the measure were supported by Lord Camoys, Reverend T. Sisk, Lord Beaumont, Hon. E. Petre, Lord E. Howard, Hon. C. Clifford, Hon. C. Langdale, Hon. S. Jerningham, Mr. Serjeant Shea, &c., and a petition to Parliament was adopted, after a strong expression of thanks to Sir R. Peel for bringing forward the measure. We may here observe that Dr. Wiseman and the other English Prelates of the Roman Catholic Church, to the number of 10 or 11, at present in London, have forwarded to Sir Robert Peel their united thanks for his conduct on the Maynooth grant.—The same day a meeting, of a different character and purpose, took place in the Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Bart., in the chair. The principal speaker was Dr. Cumming, minister of the Scots Kirk, in Crown-court, Covent-garden, followed by Capt. V. Harcourt, and several dissenting ministers. The meeting lasted four hours, and then broke up, after having agreed to resolutions and a petition in the usual form.—A meeting was also held on the same evening, in the School-room of George the Martyr, Southwark, to take measures for opposing the Ministerial proposition. The Rev. J. Horton, the rector, took the chair, and the audience was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Rice, Messrs. O'Neil, Foster, Harrison, Curling, and others. The meeting was numerously attended, and resolutions were adopted in conformity with the requisition. Meetings have since been held at St. Luke's, Middlesex, Woolwich, and other places in the suburbs.

Telegraphic Chess Match.—The game of chess by telegraph to be played at the Gosport and London stations of the South Western Railway, was played last week at the appointed places, the moves on the board being communicated by signals along the wires by the voltaic battery from one point to the other. Mr. Staunton, the celebrated player, and Major Kennedy were at Gosport; Mr. Walker, Mr. Buckle, Captain Evans, Mr. Perigal, Mr. Hampton, and other well-known players, at the Nine-elms' station. The squares on the boards were numbered from one to 64, and the moves communicated by a reference to the figures on the respective squares as they were made. It was originally intended that only five minutes should be allowed between each move, but this agreement was departed from by mutual consent, so that the game occupied a good many hours. There was, however, nothing remarkable in the game beyond the fact of the distance intervening between the players and the celerity with which the communication between them was kept up. It was made at the rate of 35 signals in a minute, from three to five signals being requisite to communicate a move, and as many to repeat it in order to secure certainty of not being misapprehended. There are at the Nine-elms and other stations of the South Western Railway, two modes of conveying intelligence by means of telegraph. The electro-magnetic having one wire, and being more easily read, but not so rapid; and the voltaic battery with two wires and magnetic needles, which is more difficult to be understood, and requires more practice in those employed to work it. The latter was used for the present match, and was exceedingly accurate and rapid.

Royal Mail Steam-packet Company.—The Royal (West India) Mail Steam-packet Company have at last announced a dividend of 1*l.* 10*s.* per share, which absorbs 21,015*l.* of the 50,107*l.* the accounts show as a surplus, leaving 29,092*l.* applicable to the fund for the replacement of capital and other purposes. It appears to have been desirable to declare a dividend, instead of carrying the whole amount to this account, in order to show that the undertaking has got into a working and paying condition. A vote of 2,000*l.* to the directors for past services, and an allowance of 2,000*l.* per annum in future, was carried unanimously, and the general feeling seemed to be that the exertions of the directors have now brought the business of the company into a satisfactory position. The report stated that the packets had latterly worked with a regularity satisfactory to Government as well as the public, and arrangements had been made with the Customs to facilitate transhipment, embarkation, &c., while all the company's vessels had been placed in the highest state of efficiency.

South Sea Company.—At the recent half-yearly meeting of this corporation, the report stated that since the last general meeting, the guarantee fund, consisting of 127,082*l.* 11*s.* Three per Cent. Consols, and of 483,381*l.* 12*s.* Three per Cent. Reduced Consols, making together a sum of 610,464*l* 3*s.* Three per Cent. stock, had been transferred to the company. The directors, in taking a general view of the property of the company, had found it convenient to class it under the two heads of "permanent" and "fluctuating." Under the first head they included the capital of 3,662,784*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* lent to the public, and the guarantee fund of 616,464*l.* 3*s.* Three per Cent. stock. Under the second head, they placed the estate in Threadneedle-street, assumed to be worth 25,000*l.*, and the money left in deposit in the hands of the company. The half-yearly account, made up to January 5, amounted to 523,022*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, the liabilities reducing it to 253,189*l.* 7*s* 9*d.* With regard to the permanent capital, it could only be dealt with by the company after the redemption of the debt by Parliament. The other item, viz, the guarantee fund, was placed under different circumstances, but was equally intangible. The accustomed dividend of 3½ per cent. on the permanent fund would be declared. The directors then called attention to that part of the property which was classed under the second head, and called the "fluctuating" property. This consisted of 269,832*l.*, reduced by liabilities to 253,189*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, which sum was the sole portion of the company's property which could be divided. The company was possessed of 220,302*l.* 10*s.* South Sea stock purchased out of the savings of former years. The above-mentioned sum of 220,302*l.* 10*s.*, valued at 116*l.*, 13*s.* 4*d.* per cent., equal to Three per Cent. Consols at 100*l.* would be worth 257,019*l.* 11*s.* The amount of the surplus fund divisible amongst the proprietors was 253,187*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, being less in amount than the value of such stock by the sum of 3830*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* With this the directors proposed an addition of six per cent. on South Sea stock. Such an addition would require a sum of 206,548*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* stock, equal in value, at 116*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per cent., to 240,973*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*, leaving a sum of 12,215*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* undivided. In order to the commencement of a rigid system of economy, the directors proposed that their salaries, which amounted at present to 4200*l.* per annum, should in future be 2000*l.* per annum. The report was adopted, and ordered to be printed for circulation. Baron de Tessier, Sir I. L. Goldsmid, Mr. Mocatta, and other gentlemen, addressed the meeting, and congratulated the directors on their success, and a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to them for the relinquishment of so large a portion of their salaries.

Innovations of the Church.—It is stated that the Rev. A. W. Taylor, rector of St. Mary's, Stoke-Newington, has consented, in consequence of a friendly communication from the Bishop of Llandaff, the ordinary of the parish, to remove the objectionable innovations lately made in the church service.

Mixed Commission on the Right of Search.—The daily papers state that both English and French officers have given their evidence. The former are Captains Trotter, the Hon. J. Denman, Butterfield, Adams, and Commander Spriggs. Captain Bouet and several French officers are waiting to be examined.

Robbery at Kew Church.—A mysterious robbery took place at the parish church of Kew on Saturday night, the 22d Feb, when the vestry-room was entered and a moveable iron-chest, containing the parish registers, was abstracted therefrom. The chest contained the registers of births, marriages, and burials since the foundation of the church, in 1714. On Saturday evening the churchwarden received a letter dated Shoreditch, and posted at Finsbury, stating that certain parties were in possession of the registers (the chest having been destroyed), and that they were willing to restore them unmutilated if the sum of 50*l.* was given, and an understanding entered into that no criminal proceedings should be commenced against the parties. The writer, who signed himself "J. Brooks," added that if the parochial authorities were willing to accede to these terms, it was to be stated in an advertisement in the Times. If the proposal was declined, the registers would be burnt in 10 days from the date of the letter.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending April 12:—West Districts, 154; Northern, 174; Central, 188; Eastern, 186; Southern, 204; Total, 906; males, 446; females, 460. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1199; males, 621; females, 578.

Provincial.

Provincial Meetings against the Maynooth Bill.—The papers this week contain long reports of the numerous meetings in all parts of the kingdom on the proposed endowment to Maynooth. It is impossible within our limits to record even the names of these various meetings; and as a proof of the fact it will be sufficient to state that the mere enumeration of the names of places from which petitions were presented to Parliament on Friday last occupies no less than seven and a half folio pages of the Parliamentary records for that one day alone. Upon a rough calculation each page contains a list of some 350 or 360 places (from some of which three, six, or in some instances more petitions are presented), and thus the total number laid on the table of the House of Commons on Friday night alone, cannot have been fewer than between 2700 and 3000 petitions. On the same evening two petitions were presented to the House in favour of the Bill. We shall proceed, therefore, to record only the more prominent meetings which are noticed in the daily papers. On Monday, a meeting of about 2,000 persons, principally ladies, was held at Bristol, for the purpose of taking measures in opposition to the proposed grant. Mr. Charles Pinney occupied the chair; and Mr. George, Rev. Mr. Hensman, Capt. Armstrong, Rev. Hugh Stowell, Mr. Haberfield, Rev. A. Rogers, and Rev. E. Tottenham, were the speakers. Mr. Stowell referred to the Queen's coronation oath, and to that taken by members of the Legislature, with a view to show that, consistently with these obligations, the projected measure could never become law, and with much energy of emphasis, denounced Sir R. Peel and "his sham Conservative supporters." Mr. Gladstone's speech of Friday night was commented on in strong terms of disapproval by the Rev. E. Tottenham, who pointed out the marked inconsistency of the speech with the well-known work published by the Right Hon. Gentleman, under the title of "The Church in its Relations with the State."—At Liverpool, on Tuesday, a meeting of 2,000 persons, convened by the Protestant Operative Society, was held, the Rev. Hugh M'Neill in the chair. The proceedings were opened by a long speech from the chairman, who vehemently opposed Sir R. Peel's measure—severely censured Mr. Gladstone's inconsistency, and proposed a resolution condemning the appropriation of public money to the support of Popery, and declaring that no Member of Parliament is entitled to the confidence of a Protestant constituency, who will not firmly oppose the contemplated endowment of the College of Maynooth. This declaration was carried by acclamation, and several hundred electors affixed their names to it in the course of the day.—At Windsor, on Saturday, a public meeting of the inhabitants, the Mayor presiding, adopted a series of very stringent resolutions and petitions to Parliament against the endowment of Maynooth.—At Cambridge also, and throughout the neighbourhood, the feeling against the Bill is very strong. A meeting of the clergy of the diocese of Ely has been held, to adopt measures against the Bill; and Wesleyan and other dissenting petitions against the measure have been already forwarded from Cambridge, Barnwell, Histon, Waterbeach, Nottingham, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; from the clergy of the Archdeaconries of Essex and of Coventry, and from the clergy of the diocese of Peterborough.

Aylesbury.—At the Quarter Sessions last week, it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. T. R. Barker, after some opposition on the part of Lord Nugent, "That Mr. Cox, the chaplain, be sent for, and asked what confession (if any) was made by Tawell, and under what circumstances it was made." Mr. Cox was sent for, and asked if any communication was made to him by the late culprit? Mr. Cox replied that he thought it was not a subject for an open court; but if two or three magistrates would adjourn and receive a confidential statement from him, he had no doubt of satisfying them on the matter. The question was again put to Mr. Cox, Lord Nugent protesting against it; and Mr. Cox declined answering further on the subject. Mr. Sheriff, the Governor, was then sent for. He stated that the paper handed by Tawell to Mr. Cox, was read over in his presence, and contained an admission of Tawell's guilt. Tawell said, "Yes, I am guilty of the crime—I put the prussic acid into the porter, and I also attempted the crime in September last, not by prussic acid but by morphia." On giving the statement to Mr. Cox, Tawell requested it might not be copied, or appear in the newspapers. Mr. G. Pigott then proposed, and Dr. Lee seconded, "That a statement of the case, with the questions put to Mr. Cox, and also his refusal to answer, be sent to the Secretary of State, requesting his advice to the magistrates how to act should a similar case occur." It was also resolved that a copy of the statement of Mr. Sheriff should also be forwarded, being the only official one yet communicated.

Brecon.—The criminal Thomas, who was convicted of the murder of David Lewis, the Cardiganshire butter-merchant, suffered the last penalty of the law in this town on the 10th inst. He appeared very contrite, and made a full confession of his guilt.

Deal.—We have often noticed the interesting efforts made by Mr. Bush, the civil engineer, to establish his "Light for all Nations" on the Goodwin Sands, and our readers are aware of the unforeseen disaster which happened to the caisson last year. From a letter addressed by Mr. Bush to the Chairman of Lloyd's, we learn that he is now going on more prosperously. He says:—"I and my workmen have taken possession of our residence in the round house built on the summit of the column for my new light on the Goodwin, and it is my intention to reside here until I have suceeeded in ascertaining the strata beneath the sand, should the weather continue favourable. That being done, I shall proceed to complete the lighthouse by fixing the lantern. I think I may fairly state that another inhabited island is now added to Her Majesty's dominions, in the bowels of which are embedded great treasures, and which will form a nucleus for batteries and fortifications, as well as for a harbour of refuge in Trinity Bay, in the Downs, and, when completed, be the key of the British Channel, and thus form a second Gibraltar. I have commenced boring, to ascertain the substrata of the Goodwin, and at 50 feet beneath the platform, have found nothing but hard sand, nearly as solid as rock itself."

Derby.—About six months ago, a portion of the arch then erecting over the Mill Flean, in this town, fell in, and caused the death of six people. It was then resolved that a double arch should be erected, and the work has been regularly proceeding up to the present time. On Tuesday, while Mr. Sims, the contractor, his son, and two workmen, were under the arch for the purpose of striking the centres, the masonry gave way, and buried them in the ruins. Mr. Sims and an apprentice were killed, and the two others seriously injured.

Kendal.—A painful excitement has been produced in this part of Westmoreland by the committal of Mr. Richard Simpson, son of a late highly respectable farmer in this neighbourhood, for the murder of his mother. It appears that the son had gone home on Saturday, the 30th ult., in a state of intoxication, and found his mother in bed, upon which he insisted on her getting up, which she refused to do, when he pulled her on the floor, and abused her in a brutal manner. On the following Saturday, being in a similar state, he repeated his attack, but in a more ferocious manner and seized upon the poker, and inflicted several blows with that weapon. He left her lying upon the floor, where she was removed by the servants to bed. The Jury at the inquest returned a verdict of wilful murder, and the son is now in Appleby jail. The family is one of great respectability, but the murderer has been a drunken and dissolute character for many years. The scene of this crime is of the superior class of farm-houses, standing on about thirty-six acres of excellent land, and in a most picturesque part of the country. The house is handsomely furnished, but, from the dissipated habits of the man, in a sad state of dirt and disorder.

Lincoln.—Another of those fatal acts of poisoning, which of late have been of too frequent occurrence in different parts of the country, has recently been brought to light at a small village called Laceby, near Grimsby, in this county, a woman called Jane Bell having been committed for trial at the next assizes, charged with the wilful murder of her husband, Edward Bell, by administering to him a certain quantity of arsenic. It was proved that the poison was administered in arrow-root, and various circumstances were stated in evidence which tended to bring home the crime to the prisoner.

Manchester.—The deputation, appointed by the public parks committee to proceed to London, in order to have an interview with the Premier, consisting of Mr. Alexander Kay, mayor of Manchester, Alderman Watkins, Messrs. Malcolm Ross, and E. W. Watkin, the honorary secretaries of the committee, had an interview with Sir R. Peel last weeek, and were accompanied by the following members of Parliament:—Mr. Entwisle, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr. Thomas Wyse. The mayor stated that the subscription now amounts to 30,746*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* contributed by 3318 persons of all classes, in sums, varying from 6*d.* to 1000*l.*; a larger amount perhaps than was ever ever before raised by voluntary donations for local objects, in any town or city in the kingdom. Of this sum, 26,000*l.* is already paid into banker's hands. To make the undertaking efficient, it is absolutely necessary to have:—1. A park, promenade, and play ground, on each of the sides of the town. 2. To erect (where eligible buildings do not exist) rooms for refreshment and shelter. 3. To provide seats and benches in abundance. 4. To construct fountains with a plentiful supply of pure water. And 5. To lay out the grounds in the most attractive way possible. From the plots offered to the committee, there have been selected, as most desirable, land, &c. sufficient to make five public places; and the object of the deputation was to know what aid they might expect from Government. Sir R. Peel urged the smallness of the sum at the disposal of Government for such purposes—namely, 8000*l.* the residue of a grant of 10,000*l.* made in 1840, and said that he could not, at present, ask Parliament for a further grant—as reasons for recommending a grant of 3000*l.* from the present fund, on condition that a Government surveyor be sent down to inspect its disposal, and that 30,000*l.* of the sum subscribed be actually paid up. The smallness of the proposed grant took the deputation by surprise, and was strongly argued against; and the Mayor finally stated that the sum was so inadequate to the requirements of the district, and would, he feared, be so unsatisfactory to the population of which he was chief magistrate, that he did not feel warranted without consulting those by whom the deputation was sent, in exposing Manchester to the degradation of appearing to require so small a sum, and begged that he might be allowed to write to Sir R. Peel in reference to his proposal, to which Sir R. Peel agreed. It is understood that Mr. Entwisle, and all the other members of the deputation, highly approved of the declaration of the mayor.

Plymouth.—It is understood that the experimental squadron of line-of-battle-ships will be ready to proceed to sea by the 10th of next month; several of the ships of which it is to be composed are already fully equipped and manned, and others are being completed with extraordinary rapidity. The Queen, which has only been commissioned within a week, has already entered upwards of one hundred volunteers besides her marines. The squadron will consist of the following vessels:—The squadron will consist of the following vessels:—St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley; Trafalgar, 120, Capt. Martin; Queen, 110, Sir Baldwin Walker; Rodney, 92, Capt. Collier; Albion, 90, Capt. N. Lockyer; Canopus, 85, Capt. Moresby; Superb, 80, Capt. Corry; Vanguard, 80, Capt. Willes. Four of these ships, the Queen, Albion, Superb, and Vanguard, are constructed by the Surveyor of the Navy, and the remaining four are of the old school of construction. The forthcoming trials between these vessels have created more than ordinary interest in the nautical world. Two of the squadron, the Trafalgar and Superb, are in commission for the first time, and consequently their capabilities are unknown. Sir John West, Admiral of the Blue, is to succeed to the command-in-chief at this port, on the retirement of Admiral Sir D. Milne.

Southampton.—Dr. Wolff arrived here on Friday last in the steamer, from Constantinople, on his return from Bokhara. He was enthusiastically cheered on his landing, and was met on the quay by his wife and son, and Capt. Grover. Dr. Wolff looked very well, considering the fatigue and privations, as well as anxiety of mind, he has endured since leaving this place. He brought with him several valuable presents, consisting of a Persian dress and shawls given to him by the King of Bokhara, which, were directed by the Lords of the Treasury to be passed by the customs' authorities without duty. He had also some of the effects of the unfortunate officers, whose release he went to Bokhara to endeavour to obtain.

Railways.

A special general meeting of the Eastern Counties Company was held last week, at which the directors were authorised to convert 710,400*l.* of the borrowed money of the company into 48,000 shares of 14*l.* 16*s.* each. Under the Act of Incorporation, and the amended Acts obtained by the company, a total number of 144,000 shares, of the nominal value of 25*l.* each, but on which an average of 14*l.* 16*s.* only each had been paid, were issued, and ultimately consolidated into stock. The total amount of money paid up represented by this stock was 2,131,200*l.* The borrowed money of the company authorised to be raised by Act of Parliament was 710,400*l.*, and the power existed under these Acts to raise this amount in new shares, and to discharge the debt.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between April 11 & April 17.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,229	9 0 0	100	all	136-8
Bristol, Birmingham	3,657
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	83 5
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	32 4
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	*	50	5	18½-14
Eastern Counties	4,566	4,474	0 3 0†	avr.	14	21 ¼
Eastern Union				50	10	22-4
Do. Extension				25	1½	4-¼
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,625	2,269	1 5 0	50	all	63 5
Grand Junction	8,924	7,697	2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England	1,823	1,518	3 0 0	100	all	201-3
Great Western	15,780	15,624	3 4 0	100	80	188 90
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	5	19½-20½
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	1-½
Hull, Selby	1,348	1,087		50	all	104-6
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	15	22½-3
Liverpool, Manchester	5,333	4,125	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	18,034	16,415	5 0 0	stk.	100	234 6
London, Blackwall	837	774	0 3 0	avr.	16⅔	8½ ¾
London, Brighton	3,731	4,721	1 10 0	50	45	64 ¼
London, Croydon	1,115	278	0 8 0	avr.	13⅓	17⅔ 18
London, Greenwich	842	758		avr	12½	10½ 11
London, South-Western	5,964	6,627	2 0 0	50	41⅔	8-½-1½
Manchester, Birmingham	3,618	3,425	1 0 0	70	40	59-61
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	868	867	3 0 0	125⅓	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	7,064	6,533	2 16 0	100	73	147-9
Midland	10,722	8,881	2 2 6	stk.	100	127-9
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	117-19
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,367	1,300	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	1,295	658	4 0 0	25	24	49-51
North British	*	*	*	25	10	18½-19
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	61-6
Norwich, Brandon				20	10	16½-17
Preston, Wyre	406	233		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	668	793	5 p. Cent.	100	87½
South Devon	*	*	*	50	10	27-8
South-Eastern, Dover	4,911	3,745	0 13 4	avr	33⅓	42-½
Yarmouth, Norwich	243		0 10 0	20	all	27-8
York, North Midland	2,550	1,694	2 10 0	50	all	105-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	20	44-5
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	68-70
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	11-½
Orleans, Vierzon				20	8	14-16
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	x	11½-12½
Paris, Orleans	5,894	5,418	1 0 2½	20	all	47-½
Paris, Rouen	5,082	4,610	0 19 2	20	all	43-½
Rouen, Havre				20	14	30-1

Ireland.

Dublin.—At a meeting of the Corporation last week, Mr. O'Connell announced that it was officially known that the Queen intends to visit Ireland this summer, and on his proposition a committee was appointed to make the necessary preparations for Her Majesty's visit. Mr. O'Connell declared that Her Majesty's Ministers should not be omitted from any invitation given to Her Majesty, and that their healths should be toasted if they did the Corporation the honour of dining with them.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, in Conciliation Hall, Mr. Clements (barrister) in the Chair.—Mr. O'CONNELL read a letter from Mr. Daniel Callaghan, M.P. for Cork, announcing his intention of joining the Association. Mr. O'Connell said, with reference to the Clontarf meeting, that it would not be expedient to hold it on the 30th May, and he would therefore propose that it be postponed till the 6th September, the anniversary of the liberation of the traversers in the late State Trials. At the same time he would take the liberty of naming a committee to inquire and report on the best mode of celebrating the 30th May. He next read a report from their committee on Sir R. Peel's Maynooth Bill, which contained an analysis of its contents, with a concluding commentary, in which they give the measure their unqualified approbation. After reading this report, he proceeded to repeat what he had said at the last meeting respecting the new great "healing measure" of Sir R. Peel, and declared that as he was not usually stinted in his vituperation, so neither would he now be stinted in his most cordial approbation of a measure which was absolutely faultless. As to the people of England, he knew their hearts were not in the right place; they were showing a most bigoted resistance to the just claims of the people of Ireland. The Government was friendly to them, but the English people were rising in a mass to obstruct their good intentions. He knew the excitement which existed, and the strong anti-Popery cry which had been raised in London. They wanted to have the Irish as their slaves; but the Irish will not consent to it. With respect to the Maynooth Bill, everything had been well done, and the Irish people would receive it with thankfulness and gratitude. To be sure, they would not cry if Peel were turned out, and they would not go over to fight for the Bill. They were better employed here, and would leave them to fight out the battle themselves. The Bill had the approbation of the Catholic clergy, indeed, their opinion had been taken before it was brought forward; and he repeated, that it was every way a satisfactory measure. At the same time that it was intended as a bribe to them to desist from agitation, or abandon their hope of the independence of their country, a greater mistake was never committed.—Mr. GRATTAN, M.P., followed, and declared himself so utterly disgusted with the factious and bigoted opposition given in England to Sir Robert Peel's Bill that, let what would happen, he would never again draw a sword in defence of England.—After the lapse of some time, occupied chiefly in the transmission of subscriptions, Mr. O'CONNELL announced that he had just received letters from America—and plenty of money. There was—from Boston 250*l.*, Philadelphia 41*l.*; and other places 106*l.* Great applause followed these announcements.—Mr. GREY PORTER next came forward, and after thanking the association for the kindness and politeness with which they had heard him on the last day—being his first appearance among them—proceeded to renew his engagement of fidelity to their interests and activity in their cause. He treated as one of the great wants of Ireland a "national militia," and argued upon the necessity for it. Without some such force he did not see how they could ever bring their agitation for a reconstruction of the Union to a practical issue.—Mr. O'CONNELL brought up a report of a committee on the Land Commissioners' Report, in which they mark with their particular and most emphatic approbation the practice of "tenant right." The rent for the week (including about 400*l.* from America) was 700*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.*

The Provinces.—A serious conflict took place last week between a party of Rockites and the police, during which several persons were shot on both sides. Two or more prisoners are in custody, and the jury at the inquest on one of them who was shot dead, returned a verdict that he was killed by the police in self-defence, while in execution of their duty.—James Nagle, who was convicted at the last Clonmel assizes of the murder of his wife, was executed on the 8th inst. The Lord Lieutenant has reprieved the sentence of Thomas Kennedy, convicted at Nenagh of the murder of Gleeson, of Lattera, to that of transportation for life. A similar reprieve has been granted to the convict Crawner, who was convicted at Tullamore of the murder of his child.

Law.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Hampstead Murder.—From the late hour on Friday evening at which the verdict was returned in this case, the defence of Hocker was in one or two points imperfectly reported. It appears from the detailed accounts which have since appeared, that the prisoner, towards the close of his address, assumed a different line of defence from that which he intended at the commencement. His object was to convey the impression that he had accompanied a friend to Hampstead-fields, for the purpose of revenging themselves upon Delarue, not by murdering him, but by mutilating or maiming him for life. That he left his friend, who was the brother of the lady he had mentioned, to execute this mission, the friend going to the fatal spot, and the prisoner to the Swiss Cottage, when he said he heard distinctly the cry of murder "I then knew," he said, "the scene had commenced, but neither the brother nor I had any presage or thought of the issue. After waiting some time for him at the tavern, I hastened to Haverstock-field. This is the explanation of my anxiety to feel the pulse of the deceased, and my shedding tears when I witnessed the result of that revenge which had not death for its object, but serious mutilation. I hurried to the house of the perpetrator, who had flown there for refuge. I then took the whole upon myself, as I had been the principal cause of the tragedy. I immediately rushed from the house, and sought a slaughter-house in Hampstead, and disfigured my clothes in a pool of blood which I found handy. You see, sir, I cannot account for the bloody state of my clothes without giving a reason for making them so—here is the difficulty. Oh, God! I could pass through the impending ordeal in unison with my wishes. I have mentioned no names to you; and oh, did you but see the state of my mind! I cannot prove that I was not on the spot at the time of action, unless I, to save myself, who am innocent, bring to justice those who, as far as intention was concerned, are equally so. Am I sure that by such a course I should be free from imputation? And if they should turn their backs upon me—which it is in their power to do—what then would become of me? See now I am surrounded by difficulties! I will not say anything to acquit myself—that is at the best only dubious, and which is calculated to involve others in addition to myself. I cannot say more—my mind is almost bewildered." In reference to this statement it is desirable to mention that the police have been unable to discover the slightest trace of any parties answering to the description of the brother and sister alluded to by the prisoner; and at an inquest held since the trial at Hampstead, before Mr. Wakley, a juror remarked that Hocker's statement, with respect to his covering himself with blood in a slaughter-house at Hampstead was absurd, as there was no slaughter house that was not kept under lock and key.—The trial of Joseph Connor for the murder of Mary Brothers, in St. Giles's, was postponed, at his own request, to the next session.—Robert Bunster, formerly a draper at Portsea, who absconded from his creditors and went to Madeira, where he was apprehended, was indicted for fraudulent bankruptcy, in obtaining goods from Messrs. Hargreave, of Leeds, for 204*l.*, on the 9th of April, which he sold a few days afterwards to Moses and Son, the cheap tailors, for 104*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Found guilty and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment and hard labour upon each of the two counts of the indictment.—Robberies by Servants.—The Calendar this session contains no less than 32 cases of this description, and the sentence, with few exceptions, was transportation. John Charles Page, footman, pleaded Not Guilty to the charge of stealing 26 silver spoons and forks from his master, Octavian Blewitt, Esq., 72, Great Russell-street. Prisoner and his wife, Fanny Page, were in the service of the prosecutor, the one as in-door servant and the other as cook. On the 10th Feb. prisoner absconded, and the plate mentioned in the indictment was then found missing from the plate-basket. As the wife expressed great distress at being deserted by her husband, and appeared anxious to obtain some clue which might lead to the recovery of the property, she was, by the advice of the police, allowed to remain a fortnight in the prosecutor's service, but she was then discharged, and the next night the prisoner was apprehended in her company, in St. James's Park, passing under the name of Snow, and wearing a disguise. He had been living at Woolwich since the robbery, describing himself as a surveyor of a railway, and spending money very profusely. He had been twice remanded by the magistrates of Bow street, in order that the police might trace the property, but no tidings of it could be obtained. Some portion of the missing plate was seen in the prisoner's hands a few minutes before he absconded. He had lived with Mr. Dunlop, when Lord Provost of Glasgow; with Mr. Jones, of Weymouth-street; and latterly with a family of high respectability, at Cam, near Dursley, in Gloucestershire. Prisoner's counsel, on the opening of the case, stated that the prisoner was anxious to withdraw his plea, and plead Guilty. He was desirous of making all the reparation in his power, and to give every information for the purpose of recovering the property. He had hitherto borne an excellent character, and, in the hope that the Court would respite its judgment, he begged to throw himself on the mercy of the prosecutor and the Court. The Common Serjeant said that it was a very serious offence, a case of a servant robbing his master, and he should hear what the prosecutor's counsel had to say. Counsel for the prosecution said that the prosecutor was actuated by no vindictive feelings and if his lordship was of opinion that the prisoner was acting with good faith, and would enable the prosecutor to recover his property, he would, as he received a good character with him, recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of the Court. The Common Serjeant said he would keep no terms with the prisoner. He should mark the case for transportation, and give him until Saturday, and if the property were not restored by that time the sentence would certainly be carried out. On Saturday the pawnbrokers, at whose shops the property had been pledged, attended by subpœna from the Crown office, and the Court ordered them to give up the plate to the prosecutor, at the same time passing a severe censure upon them for encouraging the dishonesty of servants by receiving marked property without inquiry. The Common Serjeant on Wednesday sentenced the prisoner to 18 months' imprisonment, with hard labour, in the House of Correction.—Wm. Jagger pleaded guilty to stealing a quantity of plate, consisting of candlesticks, silver forks, and spoons, &c., valued at 200*l.*, the property of his mistress, Mrs. Shipley, a lady residing at Brompton, in whose service he had been for the last seven years as butler, at a salary of 50 guineas a year. It appeared that he had pledged the articles at different periods, and had expended upwards of 50*l.* in paying the interest upon them. He was recommended to mercy by the prosecutrix on account of his long services and hitherto irreproachable character. It appeared that he had a wife and several children. Mr. Baron Platt, after a suitable address, sentenced him to two years' imprisonment and hard labour in the House of Correction.—Edward Spicer, a mail guard, on the Southampton Railway, was convicted of stealing a letter containing property of the value of 20*l.*, and sentenced to transportation for life.—Henry Pratt, described as a mariner, and who had called himself a major and sometimes a captain in the army, was indicted for forging, and uttering as true, an order for the payment of 10 guineas, with intent to defraud Mr. Dent, the watchmaker, the Right. Hon. C. T. Herries, and also Messrs. Herries, Farquhar and Co., the bankers. Found guilty, and sentenced to be transported for 10 years.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT, NORWICH.—The Yarmouth Murder.—R. M. Royal, aged 24, J. B. Hall, 24, and J. Mapes, 21, were placed at the bar charged with having murdered Harriet Candler, of the same place. This murder was committed on the night of the 18th Nov. last, or early the following morning, upon the body of Harriet Candler, a widow, residing in Howard-street, Yarmouth. One of the accused persons, named Yarham, however, volunteered to give evidence against his associates while in Norwich Castle awaiting his trial, and upon his testimony chiefly, corroborated by a few other, but not important circumstances, the grand jury found a true bill against the remaining three. The trial lasted two days, and the chief feature of the proceedings was the evidence of the man Yarham, whom the two counsel for the prisoners, without hesitation, stigmatised as the murderer himself. An alibi was set up for all the prisoners, and the jury returned a verdict of acquittal.—Mr. Raymond Gaches, surgeon, was tried for the manslaughter of Mrs. Lovett, by unskilful treatment during her confinement. The judge viewed the proceedings as an error of judgment, and the jury returned a verdict of acquittal.

SPORTING.

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING.

MONDAY.—The Craven Stakes not having filled, one of the Handicaps was selected as the opening race of the meeting. Handicap Sweeps of 20 sovs each, and only 5 ft if declared: for 3 and 4 yrs olds; D.M. 9 subs, 3 of whom paid. Mr. Howe's ch c by Ratcatcher out of Turquoise, 4 yrs 7st 6 lb, beat Mr. Newton's f by Jerry, out of Pastille, 3 yrs, 5st 10lb, and four others. Won by two lengths.—Hand cap of 25 sovs each, 10 ft for 4 yr-olds, &c. T.Y.C. 4 subs. Mr. Howe's Khorassan, 5 yrs, 8st 10lb, beat Lord Exeter's Dr. Hill, 4 yrs, 7st 11b.—Sweeps of 50 sovs each: for 3-yr olds; colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 4 lb. D.M. 6 subs. Lord Chesterfield's Lady Windsor beat Lord Exeter's Tunick, Duke of Beaufort's Captain Paeons, Lord W. Powlett's Energy, and Mr. Booth's New Year's-day. Won by a length.—Belgrave Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft: for 3-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 3lb. D.M. 3 subs. Colonel Anson's Kedger walked over.—Match: D.M. 300, h R. Duke of Bedford's Minotaur, 5 yrs, 8st 7lb. beat Mr. J. Day's Ugly Buck, 4 yrs, 8st 13 lb, by half a length.—Ruddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft: for 3-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb. A.D.M. 3 subs. Mr. Wreford's Winchelsea beat Lord G. Bentinck's Ratafia, in a canter.—Produce Match: Duke of Rutland's c by Royal Oak, out of Minx's dam, 8st 8 lb, against Duke of Portland's f by Cæsar, out of Cœnis, 8st 5lb. D.M. 100, h ft. Off by consent.

TUESDAY.—The match between Counsellor and Lycurgus, which was first on the list, having gone off, the races commenced with—A Sweepe of 100 sovs each, h ft; for 3 yrs old colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 4lb. D.M. 5 subs. Mr. Osbaldiston's gr f beat Lord Albemarle's Sarmentado, Col. Anson's Jenail, and Duke of Bedford's c by Cæsar, 3lb; won by half a length.—Newmarket Handicap of 25 sovs each, 10 ft., and only if declared with 100 added. Clermont course. 54 subs., 26 declared. Mr. Drinkald's Vivian Vert, 6 yrs, 6st 6lb beat Col. Peel's I-am not-Aware, aged, 7st 8 lb, Lord Chesterfield's Knight-of-the-Whistle, aged, and 11 others; won by two lengths.—Riddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft for 3 yrs old; colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 4lb. D. M. 5 subs. Mr. Wreford's Winchelsea beat Lord Jersey's c by Slane out of Cobweb, 3lbs, in a canter.—Match; 300*l*, h ft 8st 7lb each; Duke of Bedford's Oakley beat Lord G. Bentinck's Discord.—Sweeps of 100 sovs each, h ft for colts 8st 7lb., and fillies 8st 2lb. D.M. 3 subs. Lord Stradbroke's Idas walked over; Mr. Newton's Sister to Ma Mie withdrew his stake.—Sweeps of 25 sovs each; for 3 yr olds colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 3 lbs. T.Y.C. (6 Subs). Duke of Bedford Captain Phebus beat Lord Sandwich's b f by Jerry, Mr. Marson's b f by Redshank, Mr. E. Batson's f by Liverpool. Won by a length.—Match; 50, h ft, R.M., 8st each.—Mr. Lowther's Hyrcanian beat Sir W. W. Wynn's Rowland by four lengths.

WEDNESDAY.—Match for 200, h ft, T.Y.C.: Duke of Bedford's Minotaur, 5 yrs, 8st 10lb, beat Lord Exeter's Celia, 6 yrs, 8st 6lb, by four lengths. Subscription Plate of 5*l.*; three-yr-olds, 7st; four, 8st 7lb; five, 9st; six and aged, 9st 2lb. T.Y.C. Mr. Howe's Khorassan, 5 yrs, beat Lord G. Bentinck's All-round-my-Hat, 4 yrs; Mr. Steer's Caroline, 3 yrs; and two others. Won by a length. Sir W. W. Wynn's Stoker, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Huntingfield's f by Muley Moloch, out of Barbelle, 8st 4lb, D.M., 100, h ft, by a length.—Column Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, for three-yrs-old colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 4lb. R.M. 27 Subs. Mr. Wreford's Winchelsea, by Camel, beat Colonel Peel's Hersey, by Glaucus; Lord Exeter's Adrianople, and four others. Won by six lengths in a canter.

THURSDAY.—Subscription Plate of 5sl., 3 yrs old, 6st 12lb; 4, 8st 7lb; 5, 9st; 6 and aged, 9st 3lb. D.M. Colonel Peel's Little Finch, 3 yrs (carried 7st), bt. Mr. Herbert's Ajax, aged; Mr. Newton's Ma Mie, 6 yrs; and six others. Won cleverly by a length.—Match: D.M. 100 h ft. Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 10lb. beat Lord W. Powlett's Energy, 8st 3lb., by half a length.—Sweeps of 100 soverigns each, h ft; colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 4 lb. D.M. 7 subs. Lord Stradbroke's Idas, beat Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon by a length.—Stanhope Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft; 3 yrs old colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 2lb. R.M. 8 subs. Lord George Bentick's Cowl, allowed 3lbs., beat Mr. Bowes's Heather Bell and Sir R. W. Bulkely's Chertsey. Won in a canter by three lengths.—Sweeps of 100 soverigns each, h ft; for 3 yr old colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 3lb. D.M 3 subs. Duke of Bedford's c by Cæsar, out of Misnomer allowed 3lbs.; beat Mr. Batson's Dr. Locock (late Homœopathist), by half a length.—Claret Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft; for 4 yr old colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 2lb. D.M. 4 subs. Mr. Salvin's The Cure, beat Mr. Herbert's Antler in a canter, by two lengths.—Produce Sweeps (reduced to a match) of 200 sovs each, h ft: 8st 7lb each. R.M. Lord Exeter's Lyons received 45 sovs from Mr. Greville's c. by Slane, out of Morella.—Produce Sweeps (reduced to a match, of 200 sovs each, h ft; colts 8st 7lb, fillies 8st 4 lb, 3 yr olds. D.M. Lord Exeter's Topaz received from Lord Albemarle's Zadig (dead).

This day published, 18mo, cloth lettered, price 2*s.* 6*d.*

THE GARDENERS' RECEIPT BOOK, containing Methods for Destroying all kinds of Vermin and Insects injurious to the Garden, with Preventives and Cures for the different Diseases of Plants, and Directions for the Preservation of Trees, Fruits, and Flowers, &c. &c. By W. JONES.

Published by GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster Row, and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

With numerous Illustrations, bound and gilt, 3*s.* 6*d.* each,

DOMESTICATED ANIMALS, considered with reference to Civilization and the Arts.

WILD ANIMALS, their Nature, Habits, and Instincts.

SKETCHES OF THE ANIMAL AND VEGETABLE PRODUCTIONS OF AMERICA.

By MARY ROBERTS.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

Post octavo, 5*s.*,

PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY, for FARMERS and LANDOWNERS. By JOSHUA TRIMMER, F.G.S.

By the same Author, 8vo, with 200 Illustrations, 12*s.*,

PRACTICAL GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY, and the Chemistry of Metals. With an Introductory Discourse on the Nature, Tendency, and Advantages of Geological Pursuits.

London: JOHN W. PARKER, West Strand.

TAYLOR AND WALTON'S CATALOGUE of PUBLICATIONS connected with Science and Education, which will be sent free of expense to any one writing for it, contains, among other valuable Works, the following:—

LINDLEY'S ELEMENTS OF BOTANY, STRUCTURAL, PHYSIOLOGICAL, SYSTEMATICAL, AND MEDICAL; being a fourth editism of the "Outline of the First Principles of Botany," 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 10*s.* 6*d.*

THE SINGING MASTER. Fourth edition, 8vo, 10*s.* 6*d.*

 The Work may also be had in Five Parts, either of which may be purchased separately.

I. FIRST LESSONS IN SINGING and the NOTATION of MUSIC. 2*s.*

II. RUDIMENTS OF THE SCIENCE OF HARMONY OR THOROUGH BASS. 1*s.* 6*d.*

III. THE FIRST CLASS TUNE BOOK. 80 Airs simply arranged. 1*s.* 6*d.*

IV. THE SECOND CLASS TUNE BOOK. Arranged as Two and Three Part Harmonies. 2*s.* 6*d.*

V. THE HYMN TUNE BOOK. 70 Popular Psalms and Hymns. 2*s* 6*d.*

FIRESIDE HARMONY; or, Domestic Recreation in Part Singing. A Selection of Favourite Glees, Rounds, and Canons; arranged to words suitable for Families and Schools. By HELEN S. HERSCHELL. Second Edition, 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.*

KEATS'S POETICAL WORKS, with Portrait. Fcap. 8vo. 5*s.*

28, Upper Gower-street.

GREAT NOVELTY IN PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

On the First of May next,

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE

WILL BE ISSUED AS

A BOUND VOLUME,

Without extra charge.

The issuing of a Magazine in bound volumes monthly, will remove the great objection to periodical publications when sent out in paper covers. They are always unsightly, are frequently lost by being scattered about, and give an appearance of carelessness and neglect to the drawing-room or library table, where neatness and elegance of arrangements are so desirable.

The plan on which the New Series of the ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE will be issued will obviate these objections; it will furnish every month, to the book-case or library,

A HANDSOME BOUND VOLUME

(PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE),

in small 8vo, which will be enriched with the best ARTISTIC and LITERARY talent of the day.

VOLUME IV., of the OLD SERIES, containing the last Six Months' Parts, is now ready, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt, Price 11*s.* Sets may be perfected, and Covers to bind vols. had at the Office. Office, No. 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street, London.

THE WANDERING JEW.

Now ready price 7*s.* cloth, the Second Volume of

THE WANDERING JEW.—A Tale by M. EUGENE SUE. Volume I, price 9*s.*, cloth.

CHAPMAN & HALL, 186, Strand.

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER, WITH THE AID OF SPLENDID ILLUSTRATIONS, will CRACK JOKES with the Community, and hold up the MIRROR of MODERN MIRTH for the reflection of all classes of Society; recording the "FROLIC AND THE FUN OF ALL THE WORLD," and appointing himself Commercial Traveller in Laughter for the great firm of Mankind—getting up the steam for those who travel BY steam, and taking care that there shall be plenty of raillery for those who go by rail. He will also fulfil the office of REGISTER-GENERAL OF THE ANECDOTES OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY; STRONG, although he comes out WEEKLY; and, notwithstanding that he is as CHEAP as THREE-HALFPENCE, hoping to prove himself "the dearest friend the Public ever had."—Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street.—To be had of all Booksellers.

NEW HARDY FLOWERING ANNUALS.—A Treatise on the Cultivation of Hardy and Half-hardy Annuals, with a Description of 120 of the newest and choicest Varieties. Colour of Bloom, Time of Flowering, Height, and every particular, is published in Part 4 of the HORTICULTURAL MAGAZINE, price 1*s.* Mind the correct title, and order it of a bookseller. THOMAS HOULSTON, 154, Strand.

MECHI'S SUPERB TEA TRAYS, in papier maché (manufactory 4, Leadenhall-street, London), are unrivalled specimens of japan work, infinitely surpassing the Chinese. The prices vary from a very low figure up to 20 guineas the set. They comprise some brilliant specimens of art, in figures, landscapes, flowers, and birds, with buhl and gold. The same manufacture is applied in work boxes, dressing cases, envelope cases, netting boxes, glove boxes, playing card boxes, and ladies' visiting card cases, hand screens, pole screens, card racks, inkstands, ladies' work tables, chess tables, portfolios, note and cake baskets, ladies' desks, letter boxes, &c: The foregoing are all in papier maché, and very cheap, say from 13*s.* up to 20*l.*, and Mechi can confidently assert that his establishment for these articles surpasses in price, quality, and extent of stock, any similar concern in the United Kingdom. Mechi is sole inventor of the Mechian dressing cases, the patent castellated tooth brushes 9*d.* each, the cushioned bagatelle tables, the magic razor strop, and peculiar steel razor. A visit to his establishment will gratify those who are desirous of seeing the most perfect manufactures of this country displayed in the most attractive form.

LINGHAM, BROTHERS, BIRMINGHAM.—MANUFACTURERS of the IMPROVED MENOGRAPH, or PERMANENT LABELS, for Garden-borders, Flower-pots, &c. In Boxes of One Hundred each.

The above Labels have been manufactured by LINGHAM, BROTHERS, for the last five years with increasing demand, and acknowledged by those parties who have used them as superior to anything of the kind before offered to the Public, and for neatness, durability, and cheapness, have superseded all other kind of Labels for Hortulan purposes.

Sole Agents in London:—GEORGE and J. DEANE, Horticultural Implement Warehouse, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

GUANO.—Genuine Guano, also Gypsum, Sulphates of Iron and Copper, Sulphuric Acid, Bone-dust, Superphosphate of Lime, Sulphate and Phosphate of Ammonia, and all other Manures on Sale, by MARK FOTHERGILL, 40, Upper Thames-street. Sole London Agent for Potter's Guano.

GUANO, of the best quality, in bags.—PERUVIAN 11*l.* to 12*l.* per ton; ICHABOE 7*l.* 10*s.* to 8*l.* per ton, according to quantity; with an Analysis, by Dr. Ure.—WM. NORTHCOTT, 13, Rood-lane, Fenchurch-street.

ON SALE,

DANIELL'S PATENT WHITE MANURE. Two years' experience prove it equal to Bone-dust or Guano. In Cargoes at 30*s.* per ton; From the Warehouse, in any quantities, 40*s.* per ton, all in bulk.

Apply to EGERTON CANNELL and Co., 18, Castle Street, Liverpool, Sole Agents for the North of England; to

WM. LAYCOCK, Oldhall Street, Liverpool; or to

J. F. CANNELL, Castle Street, Liverpool.

Samples, per Post, sent to any part of the United Kingdom, on the receipt of six Postage Stamps.

PURE GYPSUM, precipitated from a solution of lime by Sulphuric Acid; being in a very finely divided state, it is better adapted for the various purposes for which it is employed in Agriculture, such as fixing Ammonia, and as a top dressing for Clover, &c., price 2*l.* per ton.

Superphosphate of Lime, 7*l.* per ton.

At Mr. LAWES' Factory, Deptford Creek.

LIQUID MANURE.

ENGLAND INDEPENDENT OF THE WORLD FOR CORN.

THE Attention of the Agricultural Interest, at this momentous crisis, is requested to the great importance of LIQUID MANURE, and the ease with which it may be appropriated by the use of FOWLER'S PUMPS, made expressly for the purpose, either portable or fixed; Garden, Ship, and Barge Pumps; also those for Distillers, Brewers, Soap-boilers, and Tanners, for hot and cold liquor. Pumps kept for hire, for Excavations and Wells. Buildings heated by Hot Water, for Horticulture, and every variety of manufacturing purposes.

The Trade supplied on advantageous terms, by BENJAMIN FOWLER, Engineer, &c., 63, Dorset-street, Fleet-street, London.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions o the teeth, and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose—1*s.* An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, which do not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The Genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties' profits and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge. Only at METCALFE'S Sole Establishment, 130B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

Caution—Beware of the words "From Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

SILVER-PLATED DISH-COVERS.—A. B SAVORY and SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, submit for choice in their plate-rooms many patterns of SILVER PLATED DISH COVERS, of Sheffield Manufacture, from 15 to 20 Guineas the set, viz.:—

Double Dome Pattern.

	Size.	£	s.	d.
Plated Dish Cover,	20 in.	5	13	6
,, Dish Cover,	18 in.	4	7	6
,, Dish Cover,	16 in.	5	12	6
Per set . .		£15	13	6

The Melon Pattern.

	Size.	£	s.	d.
1 Pltd. Dish Cover,	20 in.	5	17	0
1 ,, Dish Cover,	16 in.	4	14	6
2 ,, Dish Covers,	14 in.	6	6	0
Per set . .		£16	17	6

The above have silver handles and mountings, and silver shields for engraving the crest or coat of arms. A Price Current, illustrated by drawings, and containing every information relative to the purchase of silver or Sheffield plate, may be had on application, or will be sent into the country, free of postage, in answer to a paid letter.

TO HORTICULTURISTS, FLORISTS, &c.

GEORGE & JOHN DEANE'S Stock of GARDENING AND PRUNING IMPLEMENTS, combining all the latest improvements, is at once extensive and select; their sets of tools adapted for ladies and youths are universally approved of for their lightness, portability, and finish. G. & J. DEANE'S Conservatory Pumps, Garden Engines, Syringes, and Mowing Machines, are all manufactured of the best materials, and on the most correct principles. Their cast-iron Garden Seats and Chairs, and their Ornamental Wire Work for Lawns, &c., exhibit the most graceful devices. G. & J. DEANE are sole London Agents for Lingham's Menograph, and their illustrated Catalogue of Horticultural Tools may be obtained at their Warehouse, or will be forwarded by post.—GEORGE AND JOHN DEANE, 46, King William street, London-bridge.

FOR THE HAIR.—Admirably efficacious and unerringly certain in its operation, highly approved in the leading circles of fashion, and extensively demanded by all who cultivate the graces of the toilette, is

C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

Sold by the Proprietors, 1, Wellington-street, Strand (two doors from the corner), and by most respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

IT STRENGTHENS AND NOURISHES, exerting a healthy influence, and occasioning an ample and luxuriant growth of hair:

PRESERVES,

where the hair is already full, the conservative properties of the Balm maintain it in strength and luxuriance;

RESTORES,

when weak or falling off the Balm completely restores. In the event of partial or entire baldness, its renovating influences, except with the extremely old, produce an entirely new growth.

BEAUTIFIES,

Unlike the action of ordinary stimulants, which spoil the hair, inducing an elegant wave or curl, and a rich beautiful appearance,

AND CLEANSES THE HAIR.

The Balm is peculiarly valuable as a detergent, cleansing in the most complete and agreeable manner; and for young people superseding, as the most respectable heads of schools can testify, the use of the fine comb.

THE NURSERY.

The peculiar mildness of the Balm, the action of which can be regulated at discretion, specially suits infancy and childhood. No well-regulated Nursery can dispense with it again. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.*, and 11*s.* per bottle. No other prices are genuine.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM, 1, WELLINGTON-STREET (the second house from the Strand).

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.

OFFICE FOR PATENTS OF INVENTIONS AND REGISTRATIONS OF DESIGNS, 14, LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

THE Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, (or by letter, prepaid,) to Mr. ALEX. PRINCE, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.

Patronised by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the corns altogether unnecessary (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth); it adheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate corns and bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or three in one for 2*s.* 9*d.*, and to be had of C. KING, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine vendors in town and country. The genuine has the name of JOHN FOX on the stamp.

A 2*s.* 9*d.* box cures the most obdurate corns.

Ask for "PAUL'S Every Man's Friend."

BED FEATHERS.—DUTY FREE.—HEAL AND SON have reduced the price of Foreign Feathers the amount of the duty, and they can now offer—

Best White Dantzic..	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys ..	2s. 6d.
Irish White Goose ..	2s. 0d.	Irish Grey Goose	1s. 6d.
Best ditto	2s. 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

Poultry..... 1s.

List of prices of every description of bedding sent free by post.—HEAL & SON, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court road.

WANTED, a Young Man or Two, of sober and industrious habits, having a knowledge of Plants, and the Nursery business in general.—Applications to be made in their own hand-writing, to Messrs. I. and J. GAITSKELL, Nurserymen, Hall Santon, near Whitehaven, which will be promptly attended to.

WANT PLACES.—All letters to be post-paid.

AS FOREMAN,—in a Nobleman or Gentleman's Garden.—A young Man, who has had considerable experience in forcing Cherries, Peaches, Vines, Pines, &c., and is well acquainted with Orchidaceæ, Stove, and Greenhouse Plants. Unexceptionable reference can be given as to character and abilities.—Direct to H. S., Mr. Elsdon's, Low Leyton, near London.

TO NURSERYMEN.

AS PROPAGATOR, OR FOREMAN AND PROPAGATOR.—A steady active Man, aged 40, who understands all the higher branches of propagation; is well versed in the propagation and growth of Camellias, hard and soft-wooded Plants, Roses in pots, and also some knowledge of hybridising, and the general routine of Nursery business. The most satisfactory testimonials can be given.—Direct to O. P. Q., care of Mr. W. P. Ayres, Brooklands, Blackheath-park, Kent.—N.B. A situation in a Provincial Nursery would be preferred.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable middle-aged Man without incumbrance, who perfectly understands his business in all its various branches. Has no objection to live in or out of the house; the latter would be preferred. Can have a good character from his late employer.—Direct to W. WHATMORE, Mortlake, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable, steady, industrious single Man, aged 30, who understands his business as a Horticulturist, Florist, and Kitchen Gardener, wishes for an engagement, or to undertake the management of a small farm. Satisfactory references can be given.—Direct to D. K., Post-office, Wellington, Salop.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 36, who perfectly understands his business, and can have nine years' character from his last place. No objection to the care of a cow.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Neall's, Nurseryman, Wandsworth Common.

AS UNDER-GARDENER.—£5 will be given by the Advertiser, who has a knowledge of gardening, to obtain a situation under a gentleman's gardener, where he can learn the art of late and early Forcing.—Direct to E. B., 2, Brown-street, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square.

AS GARDENER, in a Gentleman's Family.—A married Man, aged 37, without incumbrance, who perfectly understands his business. Can take the management of Meadow-land, or Brew if required; and can have two years' character from the family he has just left, through breaking up their establishment.—Direct to T. M., Mr. Cutbush, Nurseryman, Barnet, Herts.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 27, who has had the management of a Greenhouse, Forcing-Frames, Kitchen-Garden, and Flower-Garden. Can have seven years' good character from the place he has just left, on account of the lady's death. No objection to any part of the country.—Direct to T. C., Mr. Parker's, Roehampton, Surrey.

AS GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF.—A person aged 25, who can produce testimonials from the highest authority. Has a perfect knowledge of the improved system of drainage, with an extensive practice of ground-work and planting in all its branches.—Direct to A. B., care of Mr. Pyper, 25, Carnaby-street, Regent-street.

AS FARMING BAILIFF.—A single young Man, of respectable connections, between 20 and 30 years of age, who thoroughly understands Draining and Stock; has for some years filled such a situation; and lived four years with the late Rev. W. L. Rham, who was a very great agriculturist.—Direct to A. B., Post Office, Bray, near Maidenhead, Berks.

AS LAND-STEWARD, OR FARM-BAILIFF.—A highly respectable Man, between 30 and 40 years of age, who has a thorough knowledge of the Breeding and Rearing of Sheep, Horses, Cattle, and the Cultivation and Draining of Land on the most approved principles. The Advertiser is son of one of the oldest Breeders of short-horned Stock in England, possesses a good practical knowledge of Agricultural Chemistry, and can produce good testimonials of character and ability from Earl Spencer, and other noblemen and gentlemen. Salary not so much an object as a good situation and active employment.—Direct to L. S. D., Post-office, Bawtry, Yorkshire.

AS WHEELER, JOINER, and CARPENTER.—A young man who has had 10 years' active experience in the above capacities, in one of the first agricultural districts of the north (and has served as such in England), is desirous of engaging, on reasonable terms, with a landholder or agriculturist; he is perfectly competent as a maker of Scotch carts, and other implements of husbandry used in that part of the country. Reference as to qualification, &c., may be had.—Direct to A. B., J. Robertson, 2, Grove Place, North Brixton.

TWO POUNDS will be given to any Nurseryman or Gardener, who will procure for the Advertiser a married Man without incumbrance), a situation as Head-Gardener; a single-handed place will not be accepted. Can be highly recommended by his late employer, with whom he has lived two years.—Direct A. B. C., Worledge's General Newspaper Office, Church-street, Hackney.

CARON 138

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1845.

THE BRITISH MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY entertains proposals of any description involving the contingency of human life, and offers the following advantages to its members.

A bonus annually (in shape of low premiums) equal to those of other offices granted every 3, 5, or 7 years, and the prospect of a larger bonus than can possibly be obtained at those offices, in the peculiarly beneficial mode adopted in the distribution of the surplus.

Prospectuses and every information may be obtained on application at the office, 17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

Specimen of Tables.

Age.	Annual Premium for £100.	Age.	Annual Premium for £100.	Age.	Annual Premium for £100.
30	£1 15 8	40	£2 14 9	60	£6 6 7

CHARLES JAMES THICKE, Resident Secretary.
17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

COMMERCIAL AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE, ANNUITY, FAMILY ENDOWMENT, AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, 112 AND 113, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.
UNDER ACT OF PARLIAMENT 7TH AND 8TH VICTORIA, CAP. 110.
HENRY GEORGE WARD, ESQ., M.P.—Chairman.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE RISKS UNDERTAKEN.
Premiums receivable Yearly, Half Yearly, or Quarterly.
Credit given for half the Premiums during Life—At Five per Cent. Interest.
Loans granted on Personal and other Securities—repayable by Instalments.
Endowments for Children.—The whole sum paid in returned if the Child dies.
Annuities Immediate and Deferred. Prospectuses may be had on application to— FREDERIC LAWRANCE, RESIDENT SECRETARY, 112 AND 113, CHEAPSIDE.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, & GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.
DIRECTORS.
JAMES KIBBLEWHITE, ESQ., Chairman.

George B. Babington, Esq.
John Blackall, M.D.
Sir B. C. Brodie, Bart, F.R.S.
Rev. Thomas Dale, M.A.
Thomas Davis, Esq.
Sir Charles Des Vœux, Bart.
Rev. Richard Garvey, M.A.
Joseph Henry Green, Esq.
Oliver Hargreave, Esq.
Clement Hue, M.D.
Samuel Merriman, M.D.
Andrew A. Mieville, Esq.
Joseph Moore, M.D.
Richard Pinckard, M.D.
Andrew Spottiswoode, Esq.
Sir Matthew J. Tierney, Bart.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rupture, and OTHER DISEASES, by their paying a Premium in proportion to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on unhealthy lives originated with this Office in the early part of 1824.

TABLE OF PREMIUMS FOR ASSURING £100 ON A HEALTHY LIFE.

Age.	For One Year only.	For 7 years at an Annual Payment of	For 14 years at an Annual Payment of
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
25	1 1 0	1 2 2	1 3 8
30	1 2 1	1 4 1	1 6 1
35	1 5 2	1 7 2	1 9 3
40	1 8 9	1 10 4	1 13 6
45	1 12 2	1 14 8	2 1 0
50	1 16 11	2 3 10	2 13 11

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons of ALL AGES.

The Sum accumulated and invested, for the Security and benefit of the ASSURED (exclusive of the Proprietors' paid-up Capital), already exceeds HALF A MILLION STERLING; and the Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now £101,500 PER ANNUM.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid. The THIRD Bonus, declared in January, 1842, averaged 28*l.* per cent., and the future Bonuses are expected to EXCEED that amount.

The Balance Sheets of this Society are at all times open to the inspection of any of the Assured.

Further information may be obtained of GEO. H. PINKARD, Actuary, No. 78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London; or of any of the Society's Agents.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF ARTS, MANUFACTURES, AND COMMERCE.
PRESIDENT, H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT, K.G. &c.

On Wednesday Evening, 30th April, at 8 o'clock, Sir J. L. GOLDSMID, Bart. V. P., in rotation, the following illustrations will be given:—On an Improved Railway Carriage break, by Mr. David Davies; on an Improved Drain Tile, by Mr. W. Moffat; on the Introduction of Bees to New Zealand, by Mrs. T. Allom; and on an Improved Bee-hive, on the collateral box principle, securing the manager from the attacks of the insect, by B. Roth, Esq. V. P.

By order,
Adelphi, April 24, 1845. FRANCIS WHISHAW, Sec.

WORKS ON GARDENING
PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM SMITH, 113, FLEET STREET

ORNAMENTAL ANNUALS. By Mrs. LOUDON. In 48 beautifully-coloured Plates containing upwards of 366 Figures of the most showy and interesting Annual Flowers, with full Directions for their Culture. 4to, cloth lettered, 2*l.* 2*s.*

ORNAMENTAL BULBOUS PLANTS. By Mrs. LOUDON. In 58 coloured Plates, containing above 300 Figures of the most desirable Bulbous Flowers, with Descriptions and Directions for Cultivation. Demy 4to, cloth lettered, price 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

ORNAMENTAL PERENNIALS. By Mrs. LOUDON. In 96 coloured Plates, containing 500 Figures of Hardy Perennial Flowers, with Descriptions and Directions for their Cultivation. Two volumes demy 4to, cloth lettered, 4*l.* 4*s.*; half-bound morocco, 5*l.*

THE LADIES COMPANION TO THE FLOWER-GARDEN: being an Alphabetical Arrangement of all the Ornamental Plants usually grown in Gardens and Shrubberies; with full Directions for their Culture. By Mrs. LOUDON. In one volume, feap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, representing the processes of Grafting, Budding, Layering, &c. &c. Third Edition, enlarged, with an Appendix on the laying out of Flower-Gardens. Price 6*s.* 6*d.*

THE SUBURBAN HORTICULTURIST; or, an Attempt to teach the Science and Practice of the Culture and Management of the Fruit, Kitchen, and Forcing Garden, &c. Illustrated with 380 Engravings on Wood. By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S., H.S., &c. Demy 8vo, cloth lettered, price 16*s.*

AN ADDRESS TO LANDLORDS, on the Advantages to be expected from the general Establishment of a Spade Tenantry from among the Labouring Classes. By the Rev. J. S. HENSLOW, M.A., Rector of Hitcham, and Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Price 1*s.*
London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

NOW READY.
NEW EDITION OF DR. LINDLEY'S SCHOOL BOTANY.
Demy 8vo, with numerous Alterations, and nearly Four Hundred Illustrations, price 9*s.* 6*d.*

SCHOOL BOTANY;
OR,
THE RUDIMENTS OF BOTANICAL SCIENCE.
BY JOHN LINDLEY, Ph.D., F.R.S.
Professor of Botany in the University College, London.
London: Printed and Published for the Author by BRADBURY & EVANS, Whitefriars.

New Edition, improved, with nearly 1000 Engravings on Wood, One large vol. 8vo, 50*s.* cloth,

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF GARDENING.
BY J. C. LOUDON.
"No gardening book so comprehensive, and containing such an immense mass of matter, has ever been submitted to the public more free from errors of the pen or the press."—Monthly Review.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR,
HORTUS BRITANNICUS: a Catalogue of all the Plants indigenous to or introduced into Britain. New edition, 31*s.* 6*d.*
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF PLANTS. 8vo, 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* cloth.
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF AGRICULTURE. 8vo, 2*l.* 10*s.*
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF TREES AND SHRUBS. 8vo, 2*l.* 10*s.*
AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF COTTAGE, FARM, AND VILLA ARCHITECTURE. 8vo, 3*l.* 3*s.* cloth.
LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, AND LONGMANS.

VIEWS IN NEW ZEALAND.

Just published in imperial folio, price 3*l.* 3*s.*, a Series of large Panoramic Views of the Towns and most interesting Districts of NEW ZEALAND, with beautifully Coloured Drawings of Plants, and Portraits of Native Chiefs in their characteristic Costumes, &c. &c.

The whole executed in the first style of Lithography, from Original Paintings and Drawings taken on the spot, and forming ILLUSTRATIONS TO MR. E. JERNINGHAM WAKEFIELD'S FORTHCOMING WORK, ENTITLED "ADVENTURE IN NEW ZEALAND."

A few Copies beautifully coloured after the Original Drawings, price 4*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 65, CORNHILL.

TAYLOR & WALTON'S CATALOGUE of PUBLICATIONS connected with Science and Education, which will be sent free of expense to any one writing for it, contains among other valuable Works, the following:—

LIEBIG'S CHEMISTRY of AGRICULTURE and PHYSIOLOGY. Third edition, 8vo, 10*s.* 6*d.*
LIEBIG'S ANIMAL CHEMISTRY. Second edition, 8vo, 9*s.* 6*d.*
LIEBIG'S CHEMICAL LETTERS. Fcap. 8vo.
Series I. Relations to Commerce, &c. 4*s.* 6*d.*
Series II. The Philosophical Principles and General Laws of the Science. 5*s.*
GREGORY'S OUTLINES OF CHEMISTRY. Fcap. 8vo.—
Part I. (Inorganic Chemistry.) 5*s.*
Part II. (Organic Chemistry.) Early in May.
TURNER'S CHEMISTRY. Seventh edition. By Professors LIEBIG and GREGORY. 8vo, 1*l.* 8*s.*
PARNELL'S APPLIED CHEMISTRY; in MANUFACTURES, ARTS, &c. Vols. 1, 2. 8vo, 13*s.* each.
PETZHOLDT'S LECTURES to FARMERS on AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY. Small 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.*
PLATTNER'S USE of the BLOWPIPE in the EXAMINATION of MINERALS, ORES, &c. By Dr. MCSPRATT. 8vo, 10*s.* 6*d.*
YOUNG'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY and MECHANICS. A new edition. Edited by Professor KELLAND. Parts 1 to 3 are published, 2*s.* 6*d.* each.
LARDNER on the STEAM ENGINE, STEAM NAVIGATION, and RAILWAYS. Seventh edition. 8vo, 12*s.*
28, Upper Gower-street.

SELBY'S PLANTERS' MANUAL.
In one vol. 8vo, with nearly 200 Engravings, price 28*s.*; large paper, 56*s.*

A HISTORY of BRITISH FOREST TREES.
By PRIDEAUX JOHN SELBY, of Twizell, Esq.
"Scott makes the shrewd old Laird of Dumbiedikes give counsel to his son to look keenly after the profits to be derived from timber. 'Plant trees,' said the old man, on his deathbed; 'they are ayé growing while you are sleeping.' Mr. Selby adds some very necessary codicils to this advice. Collecting the experience of some hundreds of years, he gives the most judicious rules for the formation of plantations, for cutting, training, and all other operations necessary for rearing a noble forest with the greatest economy of time and space. The profit derived from the growth of timber is sometimes enormous."—Britannia.
JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

BLOOMFIELD'S POEMS.
This day is published, a New Edition, with 13 Illustrations by Sidney Cooper, Horsley, Frederick Tayler, and Thomas Webster, A.R.A., of

THE FARMER'S BOY and OTHER RURAL TALES and POEMS. By ROBERT BLOOMFIELD. The Volume will be printed in fcap. 8vo, and a few Copies will be struck off on large paper, of a size to correspond with the edition of "The Vicar of Wakefield," lately illustrated by Wm. Mulready, R.A.

"The illustrations are charming: the subjects well chosen, and admirably designed."—John Bull, March 15.
"This too is the character of the illustrations, they are what Bloomfield himself would have been pleased with, for they are true."—Church of England Quarterly Review, April.
JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

Complete in two thick volumes, price 5*l.* 10*s.*,

BRITISH MOTHS, and THEIR TRANSFORMATIONS; containing upwards of 2300 Coloured Figures. By H. N. HUMPHREYS, Esq.; with Descriptions by J. O. WESTWOOD, Esq., F.L.S., &c.
London: Published by WILLIAM SMITH, 113, Fleet Street.

Just published, in post 8vo, Vol. I., with 105 Illustrations, Price 12*s.*,

THE NATURAL HISTORY of ANIMALS: being the substance of Three Courses of Lectures delivered before the Royal Institution of Great Britain. By T. RYMER JONES, F.R.S., F.Z.S., Professor of Comparative Anatomy in King's College, London; late Fullerian Professor of Physiology, R.I.

"But we hope shortly to meet with Mr. Jones again, and to give some specimens of his style, which is always clear, and often eloquent. The illustrations are characteristically chosen, faithfully drawn, and beautifully executed."—Church of England Quarterly Review, April.
"This interesting and promising work."—Jameson's Edinburgh New Philosophical Journal, April.
JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

THE MOST COMPLETE WORK ON GARDENING.
In three handsome volumes, price 1*l.* 10*s.*,

THE GARDENER and PRACTICAL FLORIST. Comprising the best Treatises ever written on all the Popular Flowers—the Practice of the Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower Gardens, throughout the year. The Properties of Florists' Flowers as illustrated in this work are adopted by the principal judges in the kingdom.
London: R. GROOMBRIDGE & SONS, 5, Paternoster-row.

AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY. Second edition, with Additions. By the Rev. C. A. A. LLOYD. Written and published at the request of the Shropshire Natural History Society.

In this Lecture it is pointed out how all Lands, allowing for Latitude and Height above the Sea, may be made equally productive. Price 6*d.*

By the same Author,
A LECTURE on the HONEY BEE. This Lecture contains the Natural History of the Bee, and every thing necessary to be known as to its Domestic Management. It is a useful book to distribute among the poor. Price 3*d.*
Sold by HAMILTON, ADAMS & Co., Paternoster-row.

MR. HOARE'S WORKS ON THE VINE.
Just published, 3d Edition, 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.*,

A TREATISE on the CULTIVATION of the GRAPE VINE on OPEN WALLS. By CLEMENT HOARE.
Also, by Mr. Hoare, 12mo, 5*s.*,
A DESCRIPTIVE ACCOUNT of a NEW METHOD of PLANTING and MANAGING the ROOTS of GRAPE VINES.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

DR. LINDLEY'S WORKS ON BOTANY.
Third Edition, one large vol. 8vo, with six Copperplates and numerous Wood Engravings, 18*s.*

INTRODUCTION TO BOTANY. By Professor LINDLEY, Ph. D. of University College and the Royal Institution. 3d Edit., with Corrections and numerous Additions.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this 'Introduction to Botany' to be the most valuable and perfect in any language we are acquainted with."—Medical Gazette.

By the same Author,
THE THEORY OF HORTICULTURE. 8vo, 12*s.*
SYNOPSIS OF THE BRITISH FLORA. 12mo, 10*s.* 6*d.*
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

This day is published, 18mo, cloth lettered, price 2*s.* 6*d.*,

THE GARDENERS' RECEIPT BOOK, containing Methods for destroying all kinds of Vermin and Insects injurious to the Garden, with Preventives and Cures for the different Diseases in Plants, and Directions for the Preservation of Trees, Fruits, and Flowers, &c. &c. By W. JONES.
Published by GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster-row, and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

BABINGTON'S MANUAL OF BOTANY, 12mo., price 9*s.*

A MANUAL OF BRITISH BOTANY; containing the Flowering Plants and Ferns, arranged according to the Natural Orders. By CHARLES C. BABINGTON, M.A., F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c. John VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

8vo, price 2*s.* 6*d.*, sewed,

A CATALOGUE OF BRITISH VERTEBRATED ANIMALS, derived from Bell's Histories of British Quadrupeds and Reptiles, and Yarrell's Histories of British Birds and Fishes, so printed as to be available as labels.
JOHN VAN VOORST, 1 Paternoster-row.

On April 23, in foolscap, price 6*s.* cloth,

THE PRINCIPLES OF PRACTICAL GARDENING. By GEORGE W. JOHNSON, Esq., Author of "History of English Gardening," "The Gardener's Almanack," &c.
London: ROBERT BALDWIN, Paternoster-row.

* The author's object in this work is to make the gardener acquainted with the principles on which his practice is founded. This has been his labour for the last 20 years; and he now gives the results of his researches and experiments in a collected and orderly form: thus aiming to advance plant cultivation from mere empiricism to the class of rational sciences.

News of the Week.

WE give in our Parliamentary Report this week a summary of the Maynooth debate in the House of Commons on Friday night. The result, as our readers are aware, was a majority of 147 in favour of the second reading. On Wednesday, on the motion for going into a committee on the money grant for Maynooth, Mr. Ward brought forward an amendment providing for the grant out of the revenues of the E-tablished Church in Ireland. This amendment led to a long and animated debate on the whole question of the Irish Church, and elicited from Mr. Macaulay, Lord J. Russell, Lord Palmerston, and other members of the late Government, a distinct declaration that the Establi-hed Church in Ireland must be reduced, and made suitable to the number of Protestants in that country, and that its surplus revenues must be applied to the support of a new Roman Catholic Establishment. This declaration did not meet with much resistance from Ministers, and the impression produced by the tone of the debate is generally that some measure will ere long be proposed for the reorganisation of the Irish Church. In the course of the debate, the leaders of both parties expressed the strongest determination to resist Repeal, and Mr. Macaulay declared that his party would not consent to it until all had been staked and lost, and the whole world had been convulsed by the struggles of the English people to prevent it. Sir R. Peel also took occasion to repeat, that the Maynooth Bill was no concession to agitation, or to fear of war. It had not been proposed, he said, until agitation had been put down by law, and as to a war with the United States, the measure was actually in print before the President's message had reached this country. The debate lasted until Thursday night, when the House divided and negatived Mr. Ward's amendment by a majority of 174. The next trial of strength on the Bill will take place on Mr. Law's amendment, the object of which is to impede the measure by preventing the payment of the grant out of the Consolidated Fund. This amendment is so framed as to invite support from those who wish to take the funds from the Established Church, and from those who oppose all endowments, whether Protestant or Catholic. Lord J. Russell has announced that he will give the amendment his decided negative, and there is no doubt that it will be lost by a large majority. Last night Sir R. Peel submitted to the House an outline of his important measure on the banking system in Scotland. The details of this plan must be deferred for our next Number; but we may observe, in passing, that numerous meetings of Scottish noblemen and gentlemen of all parties have been held during the week, for the purpose of resisting any change, and as the measure is not regarded by them as a party question, Sir R. Peel will have a formidable opposition to contend with.

The Paris papers are mostly occupied with the late debates on Maynooth in the British Parliament, and everything else at present seems to have a secondary interest. The French journals express their warm admiration of the example presented by Parliament in refusing to yield to popular feelings, and they regard Sir R. Peel's measure as an act of justice to Ireland, extorted from the Ministry by the apprehension of an approaching rupture with America.—The India Mail of the 8th ult., has arrived this week, but there is absolutely no news of any kind. No movement has taken place in the Punjaub, the war in the Mahratta country has exhausted itself, and the Scinde campaign is at an end. The threatened attack of the Arabs upon Aden has not taken place. The different tribes assembled in great force, but they had their usual fight among themselves, and immediately dispersed.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by a limited number of the royal household, intend to leave Buckingham Palace this day (Saturday) for Claremont, and, according to present arrangements, will remain there until Wednesday next. On Friday last the Prince presided at a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission, and afterwards inspected the New Houses of Parliament. On Saturday the Queen and Prince honoured the Italian Opera with their presence, and on Sunday attended divine service in the Chapel Royal of Buckingham Palace. On Monday the Queen and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage, and in the evening Her Majesty had a dinner-party. On Tuesday Her Majesty and the Prince paid a visit to the Great Britain steam-ship at Blackwall, and attended the Italian Opera in the evening. On Wednesday the Queen held a levee at St. James's Palace, and on Thursday Her Majesty accompanied by Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, and a numerous suite, went in state to Drury Lane Theatre.—The Queen will hold a drawing room on Friday, the 2d, and a levee on Wednesday, the 7th of May.—Viscountess Jocelyn has succeeded the Marchioness of Douro as lady in waiting, and Viscount Sydney has succeeded Viscount Hawarden as the lord in waiting to Her Majesty.

Ministerial Changes.—A vacancy has occurred at the Treasury in consequence of Mr. Pringle, M.P. for Selkirkshire, one of the Lords of the Treasury, having tendered his resignation to Sir R. Peel previously to voting against the Government on the proposed grant to Maynooth. The resignation was accepted, and Mr. W. Forbes Mackenzie, M.P. for Peebleshire, is to be Mr. Pringle's successor.

Parliamentary Movements.—Mr. Mackenzie has vacated his seat for Peebleshire, by his appointment as a Lord of the Treasury, and it is said that his re-election will be strongly opposed by the anti-Maynooth party. Vacancies have occurred in the representation of Denbighshire, Woodstock, and Leominster, the Members for these places respectively, viz., Sir W. W. Wynn, Bart., the Marquis of Blandford, and Mr. Greenaway, having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. Lord Loftus has announced himself as a candidate for Woodstock, and Mr. H. Barkley for Leominster. Lord Edward Hill, youngest son of the late Marquis of Downshire, will offer himself to the electors of the County Down, as successor to his brother, the present Marquis The poll at the close of the Greenock election stood as follows:—Mr. Baine, 350; Mr. Dunlop, 344; maj., 6.

The Church.—His Grace the Lord Primate has appointed Sunday, the 4th May, for the consecration of Dr. Turton, Dean of Westminster—the Bishop elect—at Lambeth Palace. The ceremony will be more than usually imposing, as it is the intention of his Grace to consecrate two colonial bishops at the same time. The confirmation of the election of Dr. Turton, as Bishop of Ely, will take place on the Saturday previous, at Bow Church.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris Papers are mostly filled with the debates in the British Parliament on the Grant to Maynooth; and it is interesting to observe the opinions of our Continental neighbours on the present state of affairs. The Journal des Débats, which at first blamed Sir R. Peel for adopting the liberal policy of the Whigs in respect to Ireland, in opposition to the wishes of the party and the declarations which brought him into power, is now inclined to admit that the position taken, both by Sir R. Peel and by the leaders of the Opposition, is an imposing spectacle, and a noble example of the rival parties uniting to carry what they consider a just measure, without reference to their individual and party interests. The Débats says—

"We should be sorry to see the impartial explanation that we have thought it our duty to give of the situation of parties, and of the state of the public mind in England, regarded as even an indirect disapprobation of the measure presented by the English Government. We have, for our parts, to look at these discussions merely in an historical point of view. We can comprehend the opposition which a measure like that just adopted in the House of Commons must meet with in a country profoundly Protestant, but we cannot take part in such passions. The Maynooth Bill, which inaugurates in Ireland the reign of toleration, and, after a time, more or less distant, of religious equality, is only the consequence of the grave principle which the French revolution has established in the world. The English Parliament has just offered a noble example in refusing to give way to exterior passions which it did not take part in. It is an imposing spectacle to behold a Prime Minister risking, without hesitation, both his official position and his authority as the head of a party, to accomplish an act which he deems just, and the head of the Opposition generously lending his assistance to adversaries whom he could overturn if not replace. Such conduct is above all praise."

The Presse observes, that the conclusion of Sir R. Peel's speech on the grant to Maynooth College merits particular attention—

"The Prime Minister of Great Britain hesitated not to confess that political motives of the highest order imposed on him a duty to persist in a measure calculated to conciliate Ireland, and to recover her attachment to the Crown of Great Britain. The probability of a war with the United States on the subject of Oregon was clearly indicated, and it is in order to be more certain of its ability to meet this eventuality that the British Government is endeavouring to put a period to the internal agitation which divides and enfeebles the empire. England is now acting as she always has done when afraid, particularly at the close of the last century, when the war with France assumed an alarming character. The Bill under consideration, of little importance in itself, is much more so from the motives attached to it, and the apprehensions which it betrays. We invite the attention of our readers to the latter part of Sir R. Peel's speech, and likewise, as the opportunity naturally presents itself, to the third series of American documents, of which M. Jollivet, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, has published a substantial translation. A knowledge of these interesting documents, extracted from an official source, is necessary to any person who wishes to be perfectly acquainted with the foundation of a question which may shortly cause a collision between the two greatest nations in the world."

The Réforme deduces its own inferences from the recent concessions made by Sir R. Peel to Ireland, and contends that England sees herself menaced by a serious crisis, and is winding up her domestic affairs in order to be prepared for external contingencies. "England," it says—

"Knows that Ireland is for her an eternally bleeding wound, and she is not afraid to irritate it, even when she is openly at variance with France, because she is well aware that any differences with our Government will end in its submission, and with an humble apology. And, nevertheless, France might, in a few hours, land men and arms on the Irish shores. The recollection of the projects of Hoche and of the expedition of Humbert is still fresh on both sides of the Channel. But let the apprehension of a collision arise from the distant west, the British Government suddenly thinks of Ireland, and holds out to her the prospect of a milder treatment. Two words of President Polk did more for the unhappy Irish than all the protocols of the Cabinet of the Tuileries."

M. Guizot was taken seriously ill on Saturday morning with a spasmodic attack, so violent that he was for some time deprived of speech. Medical aid was immediately called in, and he was soon relieved by the prompt application of the warm bath. He was pronounced out of danger on Tuesday night, but is still very much indisposed.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Saturday, the Savings' Banks Bill was passed by a majority of 207 to 35. A proposal that after deposits reach 2000f. no further interest shall be paid upon them was adopted, but the article for converting the deposits into four per cent. stock was rejected, though insisted on by the Minister of Finance. At the beginning of the sitting, the Minister of Public Works presented bills au[illegible] adjudication of the railways from Paris to [illegible] and from Tours to Nantes. The [illegible] leases to be granted is fixed as follows:—[illegible] and Strasbourg Railway, 45 [illegible] and Nantes Railway, 75 years—[illegible] Muret de Bort's proposition for [illegible] Five per Cents., commenced on [illegible] to continue for some days. An [illegible] by M. Liadieres, to postpone the [illegible] until next session, was rejected, as was another from M. de Vetry, to convert the Fives into Three-and-a-Half per Cents. The vote on the first article of M. De Bort's Bill took place on Wednesday, when the reduction of the Stock to Four-and-Half per Cents. was agreed to, but with a guarantee of 10, instead of 5 years, against further reduction. During the sitting the Minister of Marine presented a Bill, demanding a credit of 600,000f., for the encouragement of European settlers in the French colonies.—The King returned to Paris on Friday evening from the Chateau d'Eu. The King and Queen of the Belgians were expected in Paris to attend the King's fête, which takes place on the 1st May.—The Moniteur publishes royal ordonnances [illegible] peers of France—the Duke de Valençay, [illegible] Count Rodolphe de Latour Maubourg, the Count de Tilly, the Baron de Bois-le-Comte, and M. de Ker[illegible]—The Count de Latour Maubourg, the French Ambassador at the Holy See, died on the 18th inst., at Marseilles, where he had arrived a few days before, on his way from Rome.—Another uproar of some gravity has occurred at the turbulent Polytechnic School; the National states that 24 of the students have been sent to the prison of that institution, and 11 more to the Abbaye gaol.—Two eminent Paris physicians, MM. Cruvelhier and Recamier, are said to have just returned from Bourges, and, according to the papers, they have reported the Princess de Beira, the Consort of Don Carlos, to be in a very alarming state.

SPAIN.—The accounts from Madrid of the 16th inst. contain no news. The discussion on the estimates of the War Department was proceeding, without any incident, in the Chamber of Deputies. It was believed that the Queen would leave Madrid for Barcelona towards the 15th May, and successively visit that city, Valencia, Saragossa, Tudela, Pampeluna, St. Sebastian, Bilboa, Vittoria, and Burgos. Her Majesty is to be accompanied in her excursion by General Narvaez and M. Martinez de la Rosa.

SWITZERLAND.—We have accounts from Zurich of the 17th inst.—The Diet met on the 16th, when a report of the federal commissioners, dated the day before, was read. It stated that they had arrived at Lucerne on the 13th; that they had communicated to the Government the decree recommending an amnesty; that 60 young men under 20 had been restored to liberty, and that 120 more would shortly be released. The commissioners added that the Lucerne refugees had been removed from the frontier of that canton, and that the cantons which had supplied the late free corps had engaged henceforth to permit no such expeditions. The demand made by Lucerne of an indemnity to be paid by the cantons that had armed the free corps then came under consideration. It was as yet supported by only six votes, but a protracted and animated discussion took place on the question which the whole diplomatic body watched. The most active steps continued to be adopted throughout Switzerland in behalf of the individuals imprisoned at Lucerne. At the beginning of the sitting, the resignation tendered by M. Hos-li, the second federal commissioner, was accepted. The Diet separated without fixing any day for the discussion of the other propositions of the committee. The Bâsle Gazette says that the Sardinian Ambassador has delivered to the President of the Diet another note from his Court; that notes from several other courts are expected; and that if anarchy had prevailed at Lucerne, French and other powers would have entered Switzerland.—M. de Sausseure, the celebrated naturalist and chemist died at Geneva on the 17th inst., in his 77th year.

GERMANY.—The Mannheim Journal publishes a letter from Berlin, of the 7th inst., which states that much excitement prevailed in that city, in consequence of an attempt having been made by an individual, who has been arrested, to wound the King, by striking him with a stone when leaving his palace.—A letter from Leipsic states that the Ministry has refused Messrs. Brockhaus and Avenarius permission to publish a journal for the German Roman Catholic Church, on the ground that the Roman Catholic Church was alone recognised in Saxony. An autograph letter of the Emperor of Austria to his Minister has also been published, forbidding the name of German Catholic Church being given either in the journals, or any printed writings, to the body of which M. Ronge is the founder.—The papers state that the greatest inundations of which Germany has during two centuries preserved the recollection were those of 1655 and of 1784; nevertheless, neither of those events was so disastrous as the inundations of the present year. The entire Germanic confederation, a part of Austria, and of Poland, have been literally under water since the 20th March. The Rhine, the Maine, the Neckar, the Danube, the Elbe, and the Vistula, have in succession overflowed their banks, not in a day, but in an hour. Frankfort, Mentz, Cologne, Dresden, Prague, and a number of other towns, and several thousand villages, were covered with water. Part of the magnificent bridge of Dresden has been carried away, and many edifices destroyed. In the midst of the general desolation, public charity has not remained inactive. Committees have been formed in the cities, and assistance has been afforded in every direction. At the head of the committees are inscribed the names of kings, princes, ministers, generals, provincial governors, and bishops. One committee collected at Berlin, between the 1st and 7th April, 10,000*l.* British.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople, of the 17th ult., state that the question of Lebanon had been finally arranged, and that Sir S. Canning had completely succeeded in carrying out his own views by a skilful modification of those of the Porte, in spite of the manœuvres of the French Ambassador to obtain a show of influence at the expense of England. The Ambassador of the Khan of Bokhara, at Constantinople, wishing to proceed to England, Sir S. Canning has refused to give him a passport, observing that his Sovereign would not receive him at her Court.

INDIA AND CHINA.—By the overland mail we have accounts from Calcutta to the 8th ult. There was an absolute dearth of news. Not a movement had taken place in the Punjaub, and all was likely to remain quiet until next cold season. The Scinde campaign, under Sir C. Napier, appears to have been at an end, and Beejar Khan, the only malcontent, had offered to surrender on condition of his life being spared, and some land given to him. The war in the Mahratta country seemed to have exhausted itself. There was no domestic news. Sir H. Hardinge was still at Calcutta, and his interest on the education question seemed to be undiminished. The chief event had been a numerously attended meeting, for the purpose of thanking Her Majesty for the gift of her portrait and that of Prince Albert, which she has presented to her loyal subjects of the Ditch at the instance of Dwarkanauth Tagore. An address was voted, which is to be signed by the sheriff for the inhabitants, and to be presented by Dwarkanauth, who leaves India by the Bentinck. By the same opportunity Dr. Goodeve returns to England in charge of four Hindoo medical students, who are to complete their professional education in the London hospitals, two of them at Dwarkanauth's expense.—The latest news from China is to the 14th January, but is not of much importance. The Chamber of Commerce at Singapore has been exerting itself in the way of memorialising to obtain a steam communication between that settlement and Point de Galle. Their wishes have, however, been anticipated at home, for the Peninsular and Oriental Company will have two steamers on the line between Ceylon and China in August next, and they will, of course, touch at Singapore, and perhaps also at Penang.—Prince Waldemar, of Prussia, Lad been received with great ceremony at Nepaul, and was probably on his way back to Benares. The Bishop of Calcutta, whose health has long been in a precarious state, intends going home on furlough by the May steamer. The Bishop of Madras is to officiate as metropolitan during his absence.—A letter from Aden, dated March 29, says that the attack threatened by the Arabs has not taken place. They had assembled in force to the number of 20,000, but, as usual, they quarrelled amongst themselves, had a fight, and the whole force may be said to be broken up.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The Marquis of NORMANBY laid on the table a Bill for extending the elective franchise to all persons paying the Income-tax. He proposed that those persons paying the Income-tax who resided in cities and boroughs should have votes for those cities and boroughs in which they resided, and that those who resided elsewhere should have votes for the county.—Lord STANLEY, on the part of the Government, protested against its being inferred that by allowing the Bill to be read they acquiesced in its principle, and said that by this measure the Income-tax, the payment of which was to be the necessary qualification, would be rendered perpetual.

Monday.—The House was occupied for some time in receiving a multitude of petitions against any increase of the grant to Maynooth. Lord RODEN, in presenting some petitions upon this subject, urged that before consenting to the second reading of the proposed measure, a committee should be appointed to inquire into the tenets taught at Maynooth. If any improper doctrines were there inculcated, it was but just that they should be exposed, instead of being taught at the public expense: but if there was no reasonable ground of complaint, the college should be freed, as it would be by the committee's report, from the imputations which were now generally cast upon its teaching.—Lord BROUGHAM gave Lord Roden credit for entire honesty in his opinions, but taunted both him and those whose prejudices he had so long represented, with inconsistency in now vigorously opposing the mere increase of a grant, while they had 50 years since admitted the principle on which the grant was made. He denied that the increased grant was in any sense an endowment, and felt humbled and degraded at the "furious nonsense" with which so many of his countrymen were now misled.—Lord CLARE, in presenting some petitions which had been intrusted to the late Marquis of Downshire, passed an eloquent eulogium upon that nobleman, whose sudden death he considered a great public and private loss.—Lord Lyttleton's Bill for giving compensation to the heirs or executors of those killed by accidents was read a second time, on the understanding that it should be referred to a select committee.

Tuesday.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE moved the third reading of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill.—Lord BROUGHAM objected at great length to the constitution and conduct of the railway committee of the Board of Trade, as to the hurrying through Parliament, in the course of one session, upwards of two hundred Railway Bills, and proposed the insertion of a clause to prohibit railway companies from deviating more than 20 yards from each side of the line authorised by their respective Acts.—Lord DALHOUSIE vindicated the conduct of the Board, and contended that, under present circumstances, the power of reasonable deviations from the proposed lines was necessary to the formation of railways. Lord ASHBURTON suggested that the provisions of this Bill should be made applicable to existing railways as well as to those to be hereafter formed.—The Duke of BEAUFORT condemned the constitution of the railway committee; and said, that there was no doubt that, in consequence of certain reports by the Board, speculation had much increased.—Lord WINCHILSEA defended the decisions of the Board, and Lord CAMPBELL suggested another Bill to remedy the tyranny of the great companies.—After a second speech from Lord BROUGHAM, the Bill was read a third time. His lordship then moved the clause limiting the deviation from the proposed line, and another relative to compensation by railway companies to turnpike trusts. Both clauses were rejected without a division, and the Bill was passed.—The Railway Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Bill were read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—The royal assent was given by commission to the Sugar Duties Bill, the Glass Duties Bill, the Customs Export Duties Bill, the Marine Mutiny and the Mutiny Bills, the Thames Navigation Bill, and Britten's Divorce Bill. In reply to the Marquis of NORMANBY, Lord STANLEY explained the circumstances under which an officer of the Irish constabulary had, on a late occasion, been present when the "glorious, pious, and immortal memory," was toasted at the table of the high sheriff of Armagh, for which the officer had been removed to another part of the country, and reprimanded.—The Earl of POWIS announced his intention to withdraw the Bill he had introduced for repealing so much of the Act as provides for the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph, and to substitute in its place a Bill to enable Her Majesty to make certain provisions for preventing the union of these dioceses, and also for providing for the Bishop of Manchester. He had framed his Bill in that form to obviate the objections that had been made to the exercise of the royal prerogative.—The first Bill was withdrawn, and the new one read a first time.

Friday.—Numerous petitions for and against the Maynooth grant were presented.—The Duke of NORFOLK took the opportunity of saying that he sincerely thanked the Government for having brought forward the measure.—Lord COTTENHAM laid on the table a bill for consolidating the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Wales. The learned Lord said the Bill was exactly the same as the one settled in the year 1836, in pursuance of the report of the select committee which was appointed to inquire into the subject. The Bill was read a first time.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition complaining of the operation of the 20*l.* clause in the Bill for the abolition of imprisonment for debt. A great many faults had been found with the measure, but the principal complaints were made against that clause. He had come to the conclusion that something ought to be done during the present session, and he intended to introduce a measure on the subject, if his noble and learned friend on the woolsack would not undertake the task.—Lord COTTENHAM said the great evil of the Bill was that it had abolished imprisonment for debt without substituting any other remedy. He was glad that Lord Brougham had taken up the matter.—The LORD CHANCELLOR regretted that his noble and learned friend had not given him notice of his intention to mention this important subject. He submitted the clause to the committee which was appointed to inquire into the subject, and they adopted it. Perhaps the best course would be to reappoint the committee.—Lord ASHBURTON believed that the general tone of legislation on the subject of the abolition of imprisonment for debt had shown a great want of consideration for the unfortunate creditors.—The LORD CHANCELLOR intimated that if they had gone too far on the subject, the better way would be at once to retrace their steps. (Left sitting).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—The adjourned debate on the Maynooth Bill was resumed by Mr. S. CRAWFORD, after an immense number of petitions against it had been presented by hon. members on both sides of the House. Mr. Crawford opposed the Bill because he was the advocate of the voluntary system. He was hostile to the principle of an established Church, but he would not take the revenues from one established Church to establish another. Lord C. HAMILTON supported the Bill, and deprecated the agitation which had been got up against it on the false pretext that the Church was in danger. He was convinced that the bill involved no danger to the Church, but, on the contrary, was calculated to mitigate the feelings of hostility which had hitherto prevailed against it. He supported the measure, not only for the benefit which it would confer on the Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland, but also for the generous spirit in which it was conceived.—Mr. MUNTZ had heard and seen many strange things in that house; but he had heard and seen nothing so strange as the change which had taken place in the opinions of certain noble lords and gentlemen who had crossed from the Opposition to the Ministerial benches. The vote of want of confidence in the late Administration turned upon this question of concession to the Roman Catholics: and yet the present Government now came forward to make a far greater concession to the Roman Catholics than any ever contemplated by the Whigs. He objected to this measure, because there was no principle in it, but mere paltry expediency. He had hitherto always declared that it was quite indifferent to him whether Sir R. Peel or Lord J. Russell was in office; but he now thought that Lord J. Russell stood out in very favourable relief when compared with Sir R. Peel, as the noble lord had never been guilty, like his great rival, of deliberate deception. Considering this measure to be an act of gross deception on the part of Sir R. Peel, and to be at the same time a grievous insult to this nation, he for one should never place any confidence in Sir R. Peel again. Lord Stanley had once said that Sir Robert was the best hand in the world at making up a case: he would add that he was also the best hand in the world at baiting a trap. Mr. NEVILLE, Mr. BELLEW, Sir F. TRENCH, and Mr. COBDEN, followed in favour of the Bill, and Captain TAYLOR, and Mr. FERRAND against it, the latter concluding a very energetic speech by declaring that, if the Government should prevail on the Queen to give her assent to this Bill, they would cause her to sign away her title to the English Crown.—Mr. SHEIL asserted that whereas the Established Church of England had upon that question shown itself the friend of civil and religious liberty, the Dissenters had proved themselves, as they ever had done, to be fiercely anti-Catholic and anti-Irish. That the Scotch Church should have entered itself into this debate excited his surprise. He declared that should Ireland be transferred from the dominion of the great and proud aristocracy, who now ruled her, to the bitter and unrelenting tyranny of Methodists, Baptists, Wesleyans, whom the Catholics had relieved from the Test and Corporation Acts, there would be men found who would tell the Irish people that it would be better to perish in the struggle for an independent Parliament than submit to such degradation. It would be unbecoming in him, as an Irish Roman Catholic, to take the course pursued by many on his side of the House, and to avail himself of this occasion for purposes of crimination against the Minister who had conferred such signal benefits on himself and his co-religionists. It would be more useful for him to exhort the right hon. baronet to persevere in the useful course upon which he had entered. He had heard with pleasure the speech of Sir J. Graham last night, in which he had retracted an expression which had given offence in Ireland. He had no doubt that after that palinode, Sir J. Graham would be welcomed by the Irish people, in case he should accompany his Royal mistress on her visit to Ireland. He had likewise heard with pleasure the declaration that this Bill had been introduced with the full consent of Her Majesty. He owned that he had always associated with the virtues of his Sovereign the happiness of his country, and he rejoiced to have an additional reason for such an association. He then passed a most eloquent eulogium on the many virtues of Her Majesty, and concluded with an ardent prayer that her visit to Ireland might endow that unhappy country with perpetual peace, and might make reparation for all the calamities which it had endured, for all the tears which it had shed, for all the agonies through which it had passed, and for all the wrongs which it had been the fault of their fathers to inflict, and which it had been the misfortune of this generation to continue.—Mr. LAW, the Recorder, denounced in the strongest terms the unaccountable use made of Her Majesty's name by Sir J. Graham, on Thursday night, and at considerable length, and amidst a very unusual course of interruption from the Opposition, stated his strong objections to the Bill.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE expressed his regret that Mr. Sheil had spoken in terms of such unmeasured severity of the Protestant Dissenters of the three denominations. He had done them gross injustice. They had objected to this grant, not on account of any tenets of the Irish Roman Catholics, but on account of its being a Church endowment. To all Church endowments those Dissenters were conscientiously opposed, and being so opposed, he hoped that they would continue, and be successful in their opposition to this measure, especially as Lord J. Russell had said that it was only valuable as the precursor to the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy.—Lord J. RUSSELL would have been content to give a silent vote in favour of this measure, had it not been for his regard to the petitions of the people. He could not concur in the censure which Mr. Sheil had cast upon the petitioners of the three Protestant denominations, for he recollected how deeply the country was indebted to them in all its past struggles for civil and religious liberty. They had taken up the question of Church endowments very strongly, and were animated by warm prejudices in favour of the Protestant, and against the Roman Catholic religion, but he expected that on further consideration they would see that it was necessary that the House should proceed in some shape or other to remedy the grievances of Ireland. He defended the Roman Catholic Church from the charges of idolatry and un-Christianity, showed that the Bishops of the English Church in 1829 had admitted it to be part of the universal Church of Christendom, and proved on the authority of our first prelates, that the Church of England must trace its own authority to its existence. Though the feelings which dictated these declarations had come down to the petitioners, he could not on that account yield to their prayers on this occasion. We had engaged at the time of the Union to treat Ireland on terms of perfect equality, and we had therefore no right to say that we considered our religion so exclusively true that we would show no favour to the religion of the people of that country. Intolerance had come down to us from the Reformation, and unlike the rusty spears and helmets of ancient civil wars described by Virgil, the arms of religious controversy were maintained bright and sharp now as in the days of persecution. It was his opinion that, unless they were prepared to carry into effect liberally, and in a friendly spirit, the compact made at the Union if they were determined to maintain the strict religious principle of the Established Church, they must consent to the Repeal. The rejection of this Bill would be received by the Irish people as an argument that, if on so small a question the whole prejudices of Great Britain were arrayed against them, they would have no hope of obtaining justice upon the British connexion. He would not accept it as the last of a series: for he maintained, that with respect to the civil and religious privileges of the inhabitants of that country, the House had yet much to do—much more than had been stated by Sir J. Graham in his admirable speech of the previous night. A large Church endowment for a small minority of its people was a subject which Parliament must speedily consider; and either by supporting the motions of others, or by bringing forward some motion of his own on that subject, he would attempt to gain for the people of Ireland that modification of that endowment which justice required. After showing how every Administration had been rent to pieces by these Irish questions, from the time of Mr. Pitt's Ministry in 1800 down to the present day, he proceeded to show how immeasurably the strength of the empire would be increased, if we could come at last to some settlement of them.—Sir R. INGLIS called attention to the singular fact, that every speaker on the opposite side had considered this measure, not as valuable in itself, but as valuable in being the precursor of other similar measures. He took a rapid review of the observations of every member of Her Majesty's Government upon that point, although some of them had turned away from it, as if they had seen a snake in the grass; and he inferred from that review that all their vague and indefinite phraseology was rendered perfectly clear by coming to the conclusion that, not perhaps this year, nor next, but four or five years hence it was the determination of Government to propose a State endowment for the Roman Catholic Church of Ireland. Such a measure according to the Journal des Débats, would be the greatest revolution in the policy of England which had been made since the Reformation. He fully concurred in that assertion, and so did the petitioners against this measure. He then asked Sir R. Peel to answer before the close of this debate, whether this measure was intended as an end, or as a beginning, and whether for the education of 500 priests for Ireland, or for the endowment of the whole Roman Catholic Church? He asked him further, whether, if such endowment was not immediately within his contemplation, it was consistent with his principles that a Roman Catholic Church should be endowed, as such, by a Protestant State? The House had been warned of the consequences of rejecting this measure; let him warn it of the consequences of carrying it. Already they had alienated from them the Protestant feeling of the country; and by so doing had lost the power of governing it with effect. Let them beware lest, by losing the confidence of their subjects at home, they impaired the source of their strength abroad, and so sunk rapidly in the estimation of foreign nations.—Sir R. PEEL observed, that all the feelings which had been excited in his mind during the course of this protracted debate were now merged in the all-absorbing hope that the House would not reject this measure, whatever might be their opinion of Ministers in proposing it. He then proceeded to congratulate their motives in determining on this measure, the ulterior objects which they hoped to accomplish by it, and the effects which it was calculated to produce on the mutual relations of Ireland and England. He showed that the question of Maynooth had been forced by circumstances upon the consideration of Government, and that the Government had determined in consequence to increase the grant to that institution in a liberal spirit. For the interest of peace, good order, and even of the Protestant religion itself, he believed that it was more important that he should commit the youth of Ireland to men who were contented with the liberality of the State, than to men who were disgusted with its institutions, because they were dissatisfied with its illiberality. He had been asked by Sir R. Inglis whether he had brought forward this measure as a part and parcel of a preconcerted system to facilitate hereafter the endowment of the Roman Catholic religion as a State establishment in Ireland. To that question he replied by stating that this measure was brought forward singly and on its own merits—that it was not part of a preconcerted system—that it was not designed to facilitate the endowment of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland—and that he had entered into no communication with the recognised authorities of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland or elsewhere, either directly or indirectly, upon that subject. He believed the Roman Catholic clergy were themselves averse to any such endowment, and he was confirmed by recent occurrences that the British palate were also averse to it. As to Sir R. Inglis's question, whether at any future time, under circumstances which could not be foreseen at present, he would consent to the endowment of the Roman Catholic Church, he replied that he would not hamper any future Government by a declaration that he believed that there were insuperable difficulties in the way of such an arrangement. Sir R. Inglis had further asked him whether he did not think that there were religious objections to such an endowment? He could not say, for the sake of temporary popularity, that there was any decided religious objection to it. He could not conceive it to be an offence in the eye of God to contribute to the support of a religion from whose tenets he differed. He did not see in what way Sir Robert Inglis could get over the arrangements which existed in our colonies for the support of a religion which differed from our own, and especially in Canada and the island of Malta. He thought that the religious principle for which Sir R. Inglis contended was a dangerous one to establish even with regard to the Established Church of this country; for he should like to know how he would apply it to the payment of Church-rates by Dissenters, and to his own favourite scheme for Church extension. He then proceeded to state that he believed this particular measure to be just to the Roman Catholic population of Ireland, and to violate no principle of the Protestant religion. As to its effect, he hoped that from the willing acquiescence in the vote now proposed, it would produce a kindly feeling in Ireland. It had been received with a grateful spirit in that country; indeed, he hardly expected in his most sanguine expectation that it would produce the effect which it had already accomplished. Every feeling in his bosom was on this occasion subordinate to his one great wish that this measure should not be rejected. He believed that it could not be withdrawn at present without wounding the feeling of every Roman Catholic in Ireland. He would not now defend it on the ground of compact—he would rather defend it as being in itself a wise, just, and amicable measure. As a Minister responsible for the public peace, he said that it was necessary to break up that formidable combination which at present existed in Ireland against the British Government. He did not think that that combination could be broken up by force, but he did think that it might be subdued by kindness, forbearance, and generosity; and it was essential that it should be subdued if we wished to cement the union between the two countries, and to increase the strength of this united empire. When he first thought of proposing this measure to Parliament, he had no anticipation of any interruption of the relations of amity between this country and any other. But on a recent occasion Lord J. Russell had considered it to be a duty to raise the veil which concealed the distant future. On that occasion, said Sir R. Peel, "it became my duty, in a quiet, but at the same time in a significant manner, to express my anxiety for the pacific adjustment of those difficulties: but at the same time I added, that if your rights—the undoubted rights of this country—were invaded, that this country would be prepared to vindicate and support its rights. I must own that when I was called upon to make that declaration, I did recollect with satisfaction that the evening before I had sent a message of peace and conciliation to Ireland. The hon. member for Canterbury, who had spoken on the previous night, had also thought it not impossible that a time might come when this country would be called upon to summon all her energies to vindicate her rights. For my own part, I heartily deprecate that any such calamity should arise; but, if it should come, no matter in whose hands the vindication of the honour of the country may be placed, I shall be found taking my place beside them, or offering every support that I can give in a just and honourable cause. I hope, if ever such a calamity should arise, that we shall find a common empire united in defence of a common interest. I hope that should any such event arise, that the valour, fortitude, and perseverance of every part of this empire will be united in defence of its interest; and I cannot fear that such a combination must necessarily secure the success of a good cause."—The House then divided, when there were, as stated in our last—For the second reading, 323; against it, 176: Majority for Ministers, 147.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply pro formâ, in order to have the committee on the money part of the Maynooth Bill fixed for Monday.—Sir R. INGLIS objected to proceeding at so rapid a rate, and divided the House on the motion. There were—For the motion, 61; against it, 25; Majority, 36.

Monday.—Several Railway and private Bills were forwarded, and the members were cautioned to attend punctually the railway committees upon which they were appointed to sit, upon pain of being themselves committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved a resolution to rescind the eleventh section of standing order No. 87, which requires committees on Railway Bills to make a special report of the reasons which induce the committees to adopt or reject the recommendation of the Board of Trade. He accused the railway committee of the Board of Trade of having neglected its duty, and of having acted the part of partisans, and expressed his opinion that their reports were unworthy the consideration of committees of the House on railway Bills. A long discussion on railway affairs and on the Board of Trade ensued, in which Sir G. CLERK, Mr. LABOUCHERE, Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. GISBORNE, Col. SIBTHORP, Lord G. SOMERSET, Mr. G. BANKES, Sir G. STRICKLAND, Mr. B. DENISON, and other members took part, all except Sir G. Clerk condemning the Reports of the Board of Trade. An amendment was then moved by Mr. BERNAL, that "an address be presented to the Queen, requesting her Majesty to order all papers laid before the Board of Trade on the subject of railways to be presented to the House, and that all parties interested might, at their own expense, be furnished with copies of such papers." This was seconded by Lord HOWICK, and agreed to. Mr. Duncombe having previously withdrawn his motion.—Mr. LAW gave notice that, in committee on the Maynooth Bill, he should move that the sums proposed to be paid to the College of Maynooth should not be charged upon or payable by the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury out of the Consolidated Fund.—Sir R. PEEL having moved the order of the day for going into committee to take the money vote for the Maynooth grant.—Sir R. INGLIS objected, it being at the time past 10 o'clock, to proceeding with such important business at so late an hour.—Sir R. PEEL said he did not wish to leave it in the power of any hon. member to charge him with hurrying forward precipitately the Maynooth measure: at the same time he was resolved to make use of every exertion in his power to promote its ultimate success. He would not bring forward any Government business that was not absolutely necessary until this measure had passed the House. He then fixed Wednesday for going into committee on the money vote for the grant, and promised to state on Friday the outline of the measure in contemplation with reference to banking in Scotland, on the understanding that no discussion should take place—the committee on the Maynooth Bill to follow that statement. This arrangement was adopted by the House, and the members who had motions on the paper for Wednesday signified their intention of waving their precedence, and allowing the Maynooth grant to come on first.—The Customs Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.

Tuesday.—The House sat for about an hour.—Mr. BAINES took his seat for Greenock.—Some railway business was transacted, and many petitions were presented.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD gave notice that, in committee on the Maynooth Bill, he should move that the expenses of the extending, improving, and furnishing the College, including the vote of 30,000*l.*, be deducted from the revenue arising from Crown lands of Ireland received by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

Wednesday.—The Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY presented a petition signed by English Catholics of London, Liverpool, York, Cheltenham, Leamington, Bristol, Bath, Manchester, Norwich, Newcastle, Brighton, and Preston, in favour of the grant to Maynooth. The petition had attached to it 10,000 signatures, covering 26 sheets, and was 212 feet in length. Petitions with a similar prayer were presented by Mr. Ross, from Carrickfergus and Belfast, Mr. WAWN, from Sunderland, and by Mr. DAVISON, from a place in Surrey. Lord J. RUSSELL presented a petition very numerously signed by the three denominations of Protestant Dissenters resident within a circuit of 12 miles round London, praying the House to agree to the increased grant. Sir R. PEEL presented four petitions in favour of the measure, one from a body of English Presbyterians, another from the ministers and elders of the Old Presbyterian Church of Antrim; the third from the Presbyterians of Armagh; and the fourth from the congregation of Eustace-street Chapel, Dublin. An immense number of petitions were presented against the grant.—The Statute Labour (Scotland) Bill was read a second time.—In reply to Lord ASHLEY, Sir R. PEEL stated that before the third reading of the Maynooth Bill he or some other member of the Government would give to the House a general outline of the further measures relative to academical education in contemplation for Ireland.—On the motion for going into a committee of the whole House on the money grant for Maynooth, Mr WARD moved as an amendment, "That it is the opinion of this House that any provision to be made for the purpose of the Maynooth Bill ought to be taken from the funds already applicable to ecclesiastical purposes in Ireland." The honourable Member said that it was time to do away with the Established Church in Ireland, which only remained there as the monument of England's conquest and Ireland's disgrace. He wanted to see the Parliament of England fairly embarked in a new course; and he believed that his motion was calculated to produce that effect. The sum wanted fell short of 56,000*l.*, and fell short of that which was provided by Lord Morpeth's Bill for suppressing the revenue of those parishes in Ireland where there were less than 50 Protestants. He then showed that the whole income of the Scotch Church, which had 3,000,000 souls to provide for, was 200,000*l.*, and that the income of the Church of Ireland, which had only 800,000 Protestants to provide for, was 650,000*l.* He argued that by a re-distribution of this property an arrangement might be made for the erection and endowment of this College of Maynooth, without injury to any interest whatsoever. He then showed that there were 860 benefices with less than 50 Protestants in each, that their income amounted to 58,000*l.*, which sum was available for this endowment, without having recourse to any taxation on the people of England and Scotland. The Bishop's lands, too, were another fund. They had been formerly frittered away under the management of trustees; but now that the income derivable from them had been raised from 16,000*l.* to 200,000*l.* a-year, the House would be responsible for the mismanagement of them, if some portion were not applied to educational purposes. He denied that there was any obstacle to such an appropriation in the 5th article of the Union with Ireland. He thought that Sir R. Peel's speech on Friday must have made a bad impression in Ireland, as it led to the conclusion that England's weakness was Ireland's strength, and that we would yield to force that which we would not grant to justice. He said that in bringing this amendment forward it was not so much on account of the money as of the principle affirmed in it. If Sir R. Peel would give him the principle, he would give him in return unlimited credit on the Consolidated Fund, until the reconstruction of the Church property was completed. In conclusion, he called on the House to concur with him in his amendment, as it would remove many of the objections to this measure, and would be indicative of the future course of the British Government.—Capt. M. BERKELEY seconded the amendment.—Sir T. FREMANTLE said there were religious, political, and technical objections to the resolution. By the Act of Union the Protestant Established Church had been fundamental and perpetual in the Constitution, and the property of the Church had been held by prescription for 300 years; and it could not now be disturbed without shaking the foundation of every description of property in Ireland.—Sir WALTER JAMES said that, considering the solemnity of the Act of Union, he was not prepared to interfere with the compact then made; but admitting that there were many great objections, both on technical and constitutional grounds, he, at the same time, thought that before long they would have to take into consideration the entire question of the Protestant Church in Ireland.—Mr. M. GIBSON supported the resolution, and Sir J. WALSH opposed it.—Mr. MACAULAY said that it appeared to him that the motion of the hon. member for Sheffield would open up a great question. The hon. member asked only for 26,000*l.* a year for the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, but his motion was something like an ejectment for a single farm, which, in reality, involved a question of the entire title to the estate. He thought that nobody could be prepared to vote for the motion without being prepared to go further, and, in like manner, everybody who would vote against it ought to be prepared to see in it an attack upon the Protestant Church. The right hon. gentleman then proceeded to assert that the Irish Church was a nuisance which should be abated—an evil that should be abolished—the most monstrous institution in the world, and one that should be immediately destroyed. The reason of Sir R. Peel's concession was too apparent—that Mr. Polk and Mr O'Connell had, between them, contrived to make Government uneasy. Now, he [Mr. Macaulay] had once thought Mr. O'Connell, and those who acted with that gentleman, were very culpable in refusing to attend their places in Parliament. But when he saw that policy of deference to agitation practically assumed by Government he was really tempted to doubt whether the place where an Irish representative could best serve his country were not, after all, Conciliation Hall. He would appeal to Conservative members themselves to say what would be the end of this policy of yielding nothing to principle and everything to fear. He and his hon. friends around him were, many of them, throwing away their seats rather than not support this grant to Maynooth, which they thought a just and wise measure. He would support the repeal of the clause of the Established Church. But to that fatal step, the repeal of the Legislative Union, he and those who thought with him would never consent. Never would they consent to it, whatever the danger, whatever the emergency, though Europe and the world were again combined against us—though another Boulogne should have assembled an invading army at Boulogne—they would never consent to it till all had been staked and all lost, and all the world had been convulsed by the struggles of the people of England. The truly wise policy was, what we granted to grant frankly and willingly, and what we withheld to withhold resolutely so that men might cease to hope and ultimately to wish for what could not be conceded to them. Certain he was that when the proposed grant was carried some months could not elapse ere the same machinery which had exerted Catholic Emancipation would again be at active work, and if the present Administration should be in power a few years, and we should then be at war with France, America, or any great power, Ministers would abandon their position on the Irish Church question, and the Prime Minister himself bring in a Bill framed in the very spirit of the motion now proposed by Mr. Ward.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he, too, was of opinion that Repeal should be resisted to the utmost. He denied most positively that the Maynooth measure had been conceded to agitation, or to a fear of war; it had been announced and was matured and prepared without reference to recent events. Fear had no part in inducing the Government to the concession they had resolved in making to the Irish Roman Catholics; it was a free, spontaneous, uncalled-for act of conciliation and justice. He would not for a moment admit that the Church was an evil in itself which ought to be abolished; and, after the deepest deliberation, he was confirmed in his previous opinion that it is the duty of this country to maintain the Protestant Established Church in Ireland. Any attempt to destroy the Irish Church would, he felt convinced, be resented and resisted by the people of England. He could not conceive any circumstances which would justify the extreme measures recommended by Mr. Macaulay, and, after Lord J. Russell's former declarations, he could not conceive how he could assent to them. He was prepared to give his decided opposition to Mr Ward's amendment, for he viewed the property of the Irish Church as trust property in trust for certain uses, and consistently with the principles of truth, he could not consent to divert that property to any other than its established uses.—Mr. ROEBUCK denounced the Irish Church as "the ecclesiastical enormity of Europe." He taunted the Prime Minister with having, on Friday night last, reiterated the very words of Mr. O'Connell, that, with agitation in Ireland, and the shadow of a shade of war in the distant horizon, concession to Ireland was to be obtained.—Sir R. PEEL protested against the "misconception or misconstruction of the equivocal expressions" used by him on Friday last. He deprecated the failure of the Maynooth measure as one that would be most disastrous, and admitted that to the support of hon. gentlemen opposite it would owe its success. He did not arrogate to his Government the credit of the measure; he conceded that it might have been better had it come from that party which had been the constant friends of the Irish Roman Catholics; he likewise avowed that he knew that many of those who supported it, coming as it did from their political opponents, would thereby forfeit the confidence of their constituents; nevertheless, so anxious was he for its passing, that he threw aside all considerations of party, and called on hon. Members generally opposed to the Government to assent to the Bill. He called on them to visit their displeasure on Ministers if they pleased, but only to pass the measure first. Instead of having conceded the Maynooth Bill to agitation and to the fear of war, his statement on Friday last was to the opposite effect. His statement then was, that having combatted agitation by law, and agitation being suspended, this measure was announced and prepared. Mr. O'Connell, in Conciliation-hall, had never asked for an endowment for Maynooth, but the Bill was framed more in deference to the opinion of those who had abstained from the Repeal demand than to those who had engaged in it. As to fear of a war with America, the measure was actually in print before the President's address had been known in this country. He felt no humiliation in having proposed this measure. He should, indeed, have felt humiliated if he could have shrunk from proposing it, for fear of being charged with inconsistency. With respect to Mr. Ward's motion, a substantive motion would have been a better way of testing the opinion of the House on the question at issue. As to the motion put on the notice paper by Mr. Law, it appeared to him to be framed expressly for the purpose of inviting support from all those who wish to take the funds from the Established Church, and from such a combination of gentlemen holding opposite principles no good could come.—Lord J. RUSSELL declared his intention of supporting Mr. Ward's amendment, and of giving to Mr. Law's amendment a decided negative. He would go further, if the House did not concur in Mr. Ward's amendment, he did not know that there was any subsequent amendment to the Bill to which he should give his support. He should then consider it his duty to forward this Bill to the best of his power, believing that it possesses the merits and advantages which the Government attributes to it. He would not be satisfied with the Irish Established Church remaining as it is; it should be reduced, and made suitable to the number of Protestants in Ireland. His lordship proceeded to say,—"My opinion is, that a Protestant establishment ought to be maintained in Ireland; it is not only a matter upon which the Act of Union speaks; but I think that the actual and practical union of the two countries is favoured by that establishment. But what I wish to see is, a Church Establishment suited to the numbers of the Protestants—and likewise an establishment suited to the Roman Catholics. How that is to be brought about is a question too large to be discussed now; but, at all events, I think that the maintenance of any such establishment ought to be furnished by Ireland. As England supports the Church Establishment of England, and Scotland that of Scotland, so Ireland should support any Church Establishment which might be conferred upon it. In providing for such an establishment I would consider whether there were not surplus revenues in the present Church of Ireland which might be applied to those purposes—for where I see a Church Establishment provided for two or three individuals, not unfrequently for a single house in a considerable district—that does seem to me a case where the principle of reduction may be applied. Without, therefore, attaching any great importance to the question whether this 26,000*l.* is to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund or out of the revenues of the Church, I wish to show by my vote that I am satisfied that the mere granting 26,000*l.* for the education of priests in Ireland will not be sufficient to settle the affairs of Ireland as to ecclesiastical matters. Whether there will be any future discussion upon these matters I know not, but if there should be, it will then be my duty to contrast the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite from 1836 to 1841, and from 1841 to 1844, with that which they at present pursue: in so doing, I must suppose either that they exhibited the greatest blindness and want of foresight during the period from 1835 to 1841; and, in that case, I can have no opinion of their wisdom, I must suppose them to be Ministers most wanting in capacity: or if I refuse that conclusion, and say that they are men of great abilities and sound judgment, then I must deny that they have acted with any sincerity during the whole course of their political career."—The debate was then adjourned.

Thursday.—A resolution proposed by Lord G. SOMERSET, instructing committees on railway Bills to fix the tolls and maximum rate of charges, was agreed to, after considerable discussion.—Colonel VERNER inquired if the Government meant to take any steps with respect to the contemplated "monster" meeting at Dundalk, on the 1st May.—Sir T. FREMANTLE had no information on the subject, but was sure that whatever was requisite would be attended to by the Lord Lieutenant.—Mr. HUME, understanding that there was to be a "monster" meeting in London, of delegates from all parts of the kingdom, for the purpose of overawing the members of the Legislature as to their votes on the Maynooth Bill, asked what course Government meant to take.—Sir R. PEEL, amidst much laughter and cheering, replied that he had no information on the subject, but he hoped that Mr. Hume did not contemplate the proposed meeting with alarm.—Colonel Wood gave notice that, on the 8th May he should move an address to the Crown, praying that the Woods and Forests might be directed to plant and ornament the land in the front and at the rear of Chelsea Hospital.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr COLQUHOUN, who, in arguing against the bill, said he questioned not the sincerity of Sir R. Peel in bringing it forward. Neither the sagacity of Sir R. Peel in bringing it forward. Neither threats in Conciliation Hall, nor war with the United States, should lead us to abandon fixed principles. Believing the bill to be subversive of established principles, as well as of institutions, he and those who thought with him would meet it at every stage by the most strenuous opposition, but that opposition would not lead them to form a junction with Mr. Ward, considering as they did his amendment to be as destructive, though not so insidious.—Mr. BATESON, Captain GLADSTONE, Mr. F. BARING, Mr HAMILTON, Lord BERNARD, and Sir H. W. BARROW opposed Mr Ward's resolution. Mr. BERNAL, Capt OSBORNE, Mr E. ELLICE and Mr. E. B. ROCHE supported it.—Lord HOWICK felt that both the occasion and the form of the amendment were inconvenient. It interfered with the progress of an important Bill, and it did not fitly raise the great question involved. In his opinion, the Church of Ireland was an institution opposed to policy and justice: it had been the chief obstructor of the propagation of Protestantism, and was the main cause of all the misgovernment and evil which the country had endured. Had the principle of "appropriation" been adopted in 1835, they might have put off, for their time at least, all danger to the Protestant establishment in Ireland. But now compromise was impossible; and he, for one, would never be a party to any future scheme of incomplete reform. They must go to the root of the matter—place Catholics and Protestants on a footing of perfect equality, and review the whole establishment, saving existing interests, with the view of adequately providing for the religious instruction and education of the Irish people. He would place the entire property of the Church in the hands of commissioners, and regard the Catholic clergy as having the first claim on the fund. Opposed to the voluntary principle, he felt it to be the duty of the state to provide for the religious as well as the moral welfare of the population: and he did not think that a state endowment for the Roman Catholic priesthood would be refused, if made in a becoming manner. All the Ministerial language about conciliation, and sending messages of peace, was a virtual confession that our whole past policy was wrong. He enforced, at considerable length, the necessity of entering on a new course, guided by defined principles; and concluded by declaring his intention of supporting the amendment, as a means of asserting the views he had propounded.—Lord PALMERSTON considered that no man who had voted for the Church Temporalities Act could hesitate as to the power of Parliament over the ecclesiastical property of Ireland, with the view of rendering it more available as a fund for the religious instruction and education of the people. Looking to the disproportion in numbers of Catholics and Protestants, and the necessity for conciliation, he entreated the Government not to halt in their career, but to bring forward their other measure as speedily as possible.—Mr. SYDNEY HERBERT remarked that the "appropriation" clause had embarrassed and delayed measures of great importance. The present Bill had not been extorted by fear, it was the voluntary act of the Government, announced last session, agreed upon as far back as November last, and brought forward now, not as a bribe, nor under the threats of Conciliation-hall, but from a conviction of its justice. This course they would pursue, undeterred by the clamours of Exeter-hall, or the more brilliant vituperation of Mr. Macaulay, believing as they did that their policy would conduce to the tranquillisation of Ireland. The House then divided, when there were, for the motion to go into committee, 322; against it, 148; majority, 174.—The House then went into committee, but the Chairman immediately reported progress; and an understanding was entered into that the Chairman should sit again on Friday evening, provided that the Premier's statement relative to the Scotch Banking measures, and the remarks which might arise from it, should be terminated at 9 o'clock.—The Infeftment (Scotland) Bill and the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Bill were read a third time.—The report upon the Museum of Arts Bill was brought up, and the third reading fixed for Monday.

Friday.—Sir P. EGERTON moved that the Birkenhead, Manchester, and Cheshire Junction Railway Bill be permitted to proceed, the promoters being required to introduce clauses preventing them from taking the property of Mr. James Stanton, in the parish of Runcorn, without his consent, and from taking any property in the parish of Ince, for the purpose of constructing the branch railway from Elton to Upton. He considered the Bill to be one of great importance, and therefore trusted his motion would not be opposed.—Mr. ESTCOURT said, the effect of the motion, if agreed to, would be to overturn a decision of the Standing Orders Committee, and therefore he felt bound to oppose it. A discussion ensued, in which Mr. TOLLEMACHE, Mr. M. GIBSON, Mr. V. SMITH, Mr. T. EGERTON, Mr. W. COLLETT, Lord R. GROSVENOR, Mr. J. JERVIS, Mr. T. S. DUNCOMBE, Mr. AGLIONBY, Sir G. GREY, and Mr. GRIMSDITCH took part, after which the House divided, when there appeared—For the motion, 66: Against it, 81: Majority against the motion, 15. A number of petitions against any further grant to the College of Maynooth were presented. The House divided on the motion for the second reading of the Agricultural and Commercial Bank of Ireland Bill, when the second reading was carried by 69 to 58.—Mr. MUNTZ gave notice that in committee on the Surgery Bill, he should move a clause that all medical practitioners be compelled to write their prescriptions in plain English, and also label their bottles, pots, and jars, in plain English.—Mr. Serjeant MURPHY gave notice that on the 1st May he should call the attention of the House to the subject of Ministers' money in Ireland.—On the motion of Sir R. PEEL, the House went into committee on the Banking (Ireland and Scotland) Act. The right hon. baronet commenced by taking a very long review of the present system of banking in Ireland and Scotland, but he had not stated his propositions, and the alterations he intended to make, when our Paper went to press. [Left sitting.]

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols for the account closed at 99; Reduced Three per Cents, 97⅛; Three-and-Quarter, New, 100¾; Bank Stock, 209½; Exchequer Bills, 58*s.* to 60*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY.—BANKRUPTS—T. H. WILLIAMS and W. C. STANES, Chelmsford, auctioneers—J. PHILLIPS and T. PEARSON, Finsbury House, Southplace, Finsbury silk dressers—T. HOMEWOOD, Hillingdon, licensed victualler—H. T PEBBLES, the Crown, Thanet-street, Burton-crescent, wine merchant—T. MORRIS and W. WOODWARD, Burslem, Staffordshire, drapers—T. ARNOLD, Shrewsbury, veterinary surgeon—J. LAMB and T. LAMB, Kidderminster, engineers—SARAH WILCOCK, Warrington, Lancashire, innkeeper—G. SHAW, Oldham, Lancashire, cotton spinner.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. FRAZER, W. FRAZER, and A. FRAZER, Inverness, smiths.

FRIDAY.—J. PLOWMAN, Oxford, ironmonger—F. PAGE, Northam, Southampton, builder—G. PEACOCK, St. George's-road, Southwark, corn-dealer—J. U. WARREN, Ramsgate, hotel-keeper—G. G. TOTTEN, Crescent-place, Fulham-road, watchmaker—E. NEWNES, Newton-by-Middlewich Cheshire, brewer—J. JOHNSON, Nantwich, Cheshire, druggist—W. WALKER, Eastwood, Staffordshire, dealer in potters' materials—J. LOWTHIN and R. J BAILEY, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, printers—J. NICHOLSON, Blackburn, Lancashire, linen and woollen-draper.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—N. GRUT, jun., Edinburgh, insurance-broker—A. MENNIE, Inverness, blacksmith.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Queen's Visit to the Great Britain.—On Tuesday afternoon Her Majesty and Prince Albert paid their contemplated visit to this extraordinary vessel. The day was remarkably fine, and many thousands of persons assembled, both at Greenwich and Blackwall, to await the arrival of the royal party. Her Majesty and the Prince embarked at Greenwich in the Dwarf steam-tender, and was received on their arrival by the Lords of the Admiralty and the authorities of the Hospital; the pensioners and boys being drawn out in array for the occasion. Upon the Queen's arriving on board the Great Britain, her commander, Lieut. Hosken, R.N., was presented to Her Majesty by Lord Hawarden, and conducted the royal party through the vessel. Her Majesty appeared amazed at the enormous length of the ship, which was one-third longer than any line-of-battle ship in the service, being 322 feet in length, while the Queen, 120, which Her Majesty visited when at Spithead, is not above 210. The Queen and Prince inspected every part of the vessel, and were conducted over the engine-room by Mr. Guppy, the constructor both of the engines and vessel. Mr. Brunel explained to Her Majesty the mode of working the screw, and Mr. Smith, the inventor of the screw-propeller presented a very beautiful model in gold, in an appropriate case, of the propeller that he has recently applied to Her Majesty's new yacht Fairy, which has recently obtained such a rapid speed as to surpass all other steamers on the river. Her Majesty was pleased to accept the model, and on leaving the vessel, Prince Albert called Capt. Hosken to him, and requested him to convey to Mr. Smith Her Majesty's thanks for the model of his screw. Her Majesty, just previous to her departure, addressed Capt. Hosken, and said, "I am very much gratified with the sight of your magnificent ship, and I wish you every possible success on your voyages across the Atlantic." Prince Albert asked when it was intended to start on the voyage, and upon Capt. Hosken informing his Royal Highness that it would be either the latter end of July, or the beginning of August, the Prince remarked, he supposed that Capt. Hosken wished to save the equinox; Capt. Hosken replied that that was not so much the object as to make one or two voyages as speedily as possible, in order that the public may be perfectly convinced of the safety of the ship. After remaining on board about three quarters of an hour the royal party returned to Greenwich, and left immediately for Buckingham Palace. The Lord Mayor preceded the yacht on both occasions in his state-barge, as conservator of the river, but did not go on board the steamer during her Majesty's visit, but remained at a little distance off. The vessels at Blackwall were gaily dressed in colours, and the river during the afternoon presented a very animated scene.

Her Majesty's Visit to Drury-lane Theatre.—Her Majesty paid a state visit to this theatre on Thursday night; and as it is some time since such an event has occurred, the eagerness of the public was so considerable as to have afforded an abundant harvest to the agents for the disposal of seats and boxes. The house was crowded to excess, and presented a most animated and elegant appearance. The royal party arrived at the theatre shortly after 7 o'clock. The moment Her Majesty and Prince Albert appeared in the royal box, applause broke forth from every part of the house, and continued until the curtain was raised for the national anthem. Both Her Majesty and the Prince appeared in excellent health and spirits, and took evident interest in the performances, which consisted of William Tell and Clari. M. Duprez exerted himself to the utmost, and being in fine voice, the exhibition of his great talents are said to have given her Majesty much pleasure. The Royal party remained until the conclusion of the entertainments, and, both on leaving the box and driving from the theatre, were cheered enthusiastically by the crowd. It is understood that the receipts of the evening amounted to upwards of 900*l.* The cost of the fittings of the royal box and apartments exceeded 170*l.*

Re-interment of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex.—The Gazette announces that on Tuesday, at 11 o'clock, the Lord Chamberlain, Earl Delawarr, and the executors of his late Royal Highness, attended by several of the directors of the Kensal-green Cemetery, superintended the removal of the coffin containing the remains of his Royal Highness from the catacomb in which it was originally deposited to the mausoleum just erected for its reception. The ceremony was strictly private, and everything was conducted with becoming solemnity.

Library of the Duke of Sussex.—On Tuesday the sale of the fifth portion of this library was commenced. The present portion consists of the Latin Classics, the Drama, Poetry, the Belles Lettres, Biography, &c. The number of lots disposed of this week have consisted of some rare first editions of the Latin Classics, which fetched extraordinary high prices. The sale of this portion of the property will last 12 days.

London Art Union.—The 9th anniversary meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday, in Drury Lane Theatre. The Duke of Cambridge presided, and expressed his gratification that during the last year the subscriptions and contributions to the objects of the institution were increased upwards of 600*l.*, and that the whole amount subscribed was 15,400*l.* Mr. G. Godwin read a long report, after which Mr. Uwins, R.A., moved, and Mr. Cooper, R.A., seconded a vote of thanks to the committee. The drawing of the prizes then commenced, and continued for some hours.

The Grant to Maynooth.—Notwithstanding the majority in favour of the second reading of the Maynooth Bill, meetings in opposition to the measure continue to take place. What is denominated "an aggregate Protestant meeting" was held on Tuesday evening at Exeter Hall, the Marquis of Breadalbane in the chair. After letters from the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, and other gentlemen, apologising for their absence, had been read, four resolutions were proposed and seconded by the Rev. T. Robinson (rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn), Rev. A. Tidman, Rev. C. J. Goodheart (of Reading); Rev. Edward Baines, jun. (of Leeds, a Dissenter). Mr. Cummins, the Rev. T. Mortimer, Sir C. E. Smith, Bart., Rev. W. Chalmers (a minister of the Free Kirk of Scotland), Rev. Dr. Bennett (Wesleyan minister), Rev. J. Burns, Mr. Fox Maule, &c. The resolutions expressed surprise and indignation that the House of Commons should have agreed to the second reading of the Bill in spite of the public opinion shown in the numerous petitions against the measure; declared that the persons composing the meeting, though differing on other important subjects, were unanimous in opposing "the endowment of Popery, as at once involving guilt and peril;" approved the step taken by the Central Anti-Maynooth Committee, in calling together the London Protestant deputations from all parts of the United Kingdom, in order to take measures for defeating the Bill; and offered the acknowledgments of the meeting to those Members of Parliament who formed the minority on the division of Saturday morning. Some of the speakers indulged in considerable violence of language; and Mr. E. Baines expressed himself with great indignation against Mr. Sheil, for that gentleman's late attack on the Dissenters. Mr. J. D. Paul, in seconding a vote of thanks to the Marquis of Breadalbane, read a few words extracted from a sermon, said to have been preached by Friar Jennings, in August, 1844, before the Archbishop of Tuam, in which, after exclaiming violently against the people styled bible-readers, and against all Bible Societies, and after exhorting his flock to beware of them as likely to lead them into sin and corruption, Friar Jennings is said to have wound up with the declaration that the reading of the bible by his flock would only lead them to destruction. Upon this there occurred a tremendous uproar, the two parties present at the meeting being evidently determined neither of them to stop first. Dr. Grey, editor of the Freeman's Journal, who was present on the platform, asked of Mr. Paul the name of the printer and publisher of the pamphlet from which the words read were said to have been extracted, but the only answer received was, that Mr. Paul did not recollect the publisher's or printer's name, but Dr. Grey could have the pamphlet if he liked. The Marquess of Breadalbane was about to declare the meeting dissolved, when, at Dr. Grey's request, he said that he had been requested by that gentleman, an Irish Protestant, to state that he denied, from a knowledge of the parties alluded to, that any such sermon had ever been preached. Dr. Grey then made an attempt to address the meeting, but could not obtain a hearing.—On the same night, there was a meeting of the London Baptist Association, at the chapel in Eagle-street, Holborn. Mr. Pewtress was called to the chair, and addressed the audience against the measure, as a step towards the endowment of the Roman Catholic priesthood. Several other gentlemen spoke, and resolutions in opposition to the grant were passed.—A third meeting took place at Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent-road, at which Mr. D. W. Wire presided. Several speeches were delivered, and resolutions and petitions were adopted against the passing of the Bill.—On Monday evening a lecture, on the subject of the grant to Maynooth, was delivered in the Assembly Room, at Kensington, by Mr. J. T. Perceval, a son of the late Right Hon. Spencer Perceval.

The Merchant Seamen's Church.—A church for the sailors of the port of London is about to be established. The First Lord of the Admiralty is to fill the chair at the meeting to be held in the city, and the Bishop of London will propose the first resolution. The church is to be built near the London and St. Katharine's-docks, where there are throughout the year a daily average of 500 sail of vessels; and though their crews do not live on board, yet hundreds of them board and lodge in the immediate locality. The sittings will be entirely free.

Artists' General Benevolent Fund.—The anniversary dinner of this institution took place on Saturday in Freemasons' Hall, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, M.P., in the chair, supported by about 150 gentlemen. The amount of subscriptions announced was 473*l.*

Return of Dr. Wolff from Bokhara.—On Sunday morning a sermon was preached at Trinity Church, Gray's Inn-road, by the Rev. Dr. Wolff, who has within the last few days arrived in England from Bokhara. The rev. gentleman preached to a congregation, consisting of at least 2000 persons, on behalf of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, and also for the Society for Promoting the Employment of additional Curates in populous places. At the conclusion of the service, and as the rev. gentleman took his departure from the church, a great number of persons collected round the doors, anxious to pay their respects to him.

Military Funeral.—On Monday morning the remains of the late Colonel Clive, of the Guards, were removed from the residence of the gallant officer's father, E. B. Clive, Esq., Grafton-street, Bond-street, for interment in the family vault at Whitfield, Hereford. The funeral procession was met at Cumberland-gate by the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, by whom, with drums muffled, it was escorted to the Paddington railway station. The coffin was carried by reliefs of privates from the regiment. Mr. Clive, the magistrate, was chief mourner.

The Cleaning of St. Paul's.—On Friday the Archdeacon and other officials of St. Paul's Cathedral ascended the scaffolding erected under the portico of the edifice, to inspect the progress of cleaning the sculpture, &c., which has been carried on in the most satisfactory manner. The masonry is perfectly sound, and the figures perfect; but they are thickly incrusted with dust and smoke as black as coal, and so hard that it requires iron-wire brushes to get it off. The Archdeacon expressed his approbation of the manner in which the work was done, and intimated to the contractor that, in consequence of the experiment answering so well, the other portions of the edifice should undergo the same process.

The Case of Mr. Monckton.—The Bishop of London has suspended the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Monckton from officiating as a clergyman for the space of 12 months.

